Mrs. Ada H. Kepley is editing a temperance paper in Effingham county, Ill., and her aggressiveness has gotten her into trouble. Her paper is called the Friend of Home. She has published each month a list of those seen drunk on the streets of Effingham between the date of each issue. One man whose name appears in the black list in the last issue claims he was not drunk and had the editor arrested. Mrs. Kepley appeared before the Justice of the Peace in her own defence, but a fine of $5 was imposed upon her. She appealed the case, and the trial promises to be more exciting in the higher courts than it was before the Justice of the Peace.

Osmi Martin is the name of a 16-year-old girl forger, who has been astonishing commercial and detective circles in Detroit. Her forgeries were of small cheques, which she had cashed at various places. She was a type-writer for an advertising agency.

A. J. Drake, of Palatka, Fla., has a vest of homespun that was worn by his grandfather during the Revolutionary war. It is in an excellent state of preservation, and Mr. Drake frequently wears it on state occasions.

CAUGHT IN A TIGHT PLACE.

He Furnished the Rope for a Raving Maniac Who Desired to Commit Suicide.

A number of detectives in the Central Bureau were talking of the peculiar freaks of insane prisoners whom they had had in charge in times past, when Detective Frank Blakely said:

"When I was a turnkey at the jail some years ago, an insane woman was brought there who was constantly harping on suicide. One couldn't talk with her two minutes but she would make the assertion that she would kill herself the first chance she got, and once upon that theme she would talk about nothing else. I got so tired of her at last, that to vary the monotony and try to get her mind in a different channel, I said I would help her carry out her purpose. She seemed pleased at the idea and I asked her how she wanted to go, by poison, hanging or the pistol. She chose hanging, and I provided her with a nice new rope. I went to the corridor where she could see me, made the noose, gave her full instructions how to tie it, throw the rope over the top of the cell door, get up on a chair, adjust the noose and then kick the chair away. I watched her carefully all the while I was talking, but she did not weaken. Then I bade her good-bye, saying:

"'I'll be back in half an hour, cut you down and put your tongue back in your mouth. You know, when people hang, their tongue runs out about a foot.'

"'Well, it never phased her. It was the most horrible thing I could think of, but she never said a word. Then I went out. Just as I descended the stairs two prisoners in one of the lower wards were fighting, and one was likely to kill the other. After twenty minutes' hard work I got the fighters separated and locked in their cells. Then I went into the jail office and sat down. In about five minutes I remembered the crazy woman and the rope, and my hair fairly stood on end! I had intended when I left her to go only to the foot of the stairs, remove my boots, and tip-toe back in my stocking feet and watch her. As it was, fully half an hour had elapsed! 'My God!' I thought, 'If that woman has hanged herself I am her murderer!' I mounted the stairs and, with a sickening sensation at the heart, entered the corridor. There lay the rope on the floor, untouched and just where I left it, and the woman was seated in one corner of her cell, with her hands over her eyes. Well, boys, I am not a praying man, but I don't believe any mortal ever thanked God with more genuine gratitude than I did at that time. It broke the woman of her insane desire for suicide, and you can bet it broke me of ever trying anything so foolish again."—Detroit Free Press.

Things to be Avoided.

An argument in "company."

Fault-finding, though gentle criticism is in good taste.

Avoid beginning a conversation by an allusion to the weather.

Avoid talking to any one person in the presence of others in a language not understood save by the two persons using it unless addressing a foreigner in his own tongue, and then others should be made aware of the topics of conversation.

Avoid using the word "she" or "he," accompanied by a nod of the head or a jerk of the thumb in the direction of the person spoken of, but speak the name of the lady or gentleman.

Avoid all remarks intended to have a double meaning.

Do not betray egotism.

Do not be satirical save in defence of yourself against impertinence.

Never show that you notice any error in language, either of punctuation or grammar, on the part of those with whom you are conversing.

Do not whistle, loll about, scratch your head or fidget with any portion of your apparel while in conversation.

Be alert to avoid absence of mind.

Do not ask to have a sentence repeated unless you actually failed to hear it. Many persons have contracted the careless habit of saying "What?" "Eh?" and the like.

Never interrupt the person who is speaking.

Marking Goods at Odd Prices.

It has become a frequent custom among dealers to mark their goods at some odd prices, such as 23, 47 or 98 cents. Said a Broadway dealer the other day: "You'd be surprised to see how much of an inducement these markings are to purchasers. The return of two or three cents in change seems a small matter, but long observation has taught me that many a person will buy an article for 23 cents, for example, which he would not buy if it were marked 25 cents." The principle also extends to comparatively high-priced goods, which are often marked a certain number of dollars and an odd number of cents. The odd price is almost invariably so fixed as to be slightly less than the value of some coin in common use, the idea being to tempt the purchaser by the return of the small amount of change.—New York Sun.

The Tramp's Expedients.

HE TRIED DISSIMULATION.

Tramp—Say, boss, won't yer give a feller a few cents to buy a loaf of bread?

Stout party—Look here, young man, you don't want that money to buy bread; you want it for rum. Now if you had told me the truth I might have given you a quarter.

Tramp resolves to play the truth racket in the future.

HE TRIES THE TRUTH.

Tramp—Say, Cap'n, won't you give a poor feller suthin? I want to get a glass of gin.

Solemn party—Ah, poor fellow! So degraded and yet so honest. It does my very soul good. Here, my friend, is a tract, and a word of welcome to our meetings for reformed drunkards.

A Pleasant Surprise.

A couple of lovers came together for the first time in a long while:

She—Why, George, you have grown a moustache since I saw you last.

He—Yes, my darling, I have let it grow in order to give you a pleasant surprise on your birthday.

Henry V. Perrine, a wealthy and eccentric merchant who died at Dayton, O., recently, had never drawn a check in his life although engaged in many daily business transactions. He paid all of his bills in cash.

"I'll Beat You Up To-day."

Oh, tell me what's become of you, pretty Nelly Martin,
Little Nelly Martin, with your golden yellow hair
That glistened in the sunshine of the bright, unclouded morning,
And was blown in fluffy ringlets by the wild plum-scented air,
As you stood there in your "nighty"—it was warm and nice in May,
And shouted from your porch to mine: "I beat you up to-day-ay-ay!"

Like a baby saint you seem to me as I look back with yearning,
Little Nelly Martin, with your eyes so big and blue,
To the days when hearts were pure and clean beneath our gingham aprons,
And the only bit of rivalry that came between us two
Was in getting up o' mornings—I can almost hear you say,
In that gay, triumphant voice of yours: "I beat you up to-day-ay-ay!"

I wonder where I'd find you now, little Nelly Martin,
I wonder if your hair is yet that pretty golden brown;
Is that baby love of ours by you, too, unforgotten?
Mayhap you have your little ones a-clinging to your gown,
But, though you be a matron and your locks be sprent with gray,
You're still the little girl that sung: "I beat you up to-day-ay-ay!

WATER TELESCOPE.

How to Make an Instrument by which to See Under Water.

No doubt a good many of our boys and girls are ignorant of the fact that they can with very little trouble and at almost no expense construct an instrument with which they can plainly see what is going on under the water over which they sail their boats. The very idea of such a thing is attractive, and we propose to tell you how the thing is done. The water telescope may be made of wood or tin, whichever you prefer, and we will describe both. The tin is better because it is lighter and more easily handled. Its manufacture is very simple. Get a tinsmith to make for you a funnel-shaped tin horn about three feet long. It should be eight to ten inches in diameter at the bottom and broad enough at the top for both eyes to look into. In the bottom put a piece of glass cut to fit and make it perfectly water tight. Leave the top open. The inside should be painted black to prevent the reflection of the light upon the surface of the tin. Around the outside of the bottom solder on several sinkers to offset the buoyancy of the air in the water tight horn, and make it easier to submerge. If it is not convenient to get a round piece of glass, have the large end made square and use square glass. That's all there is of it, and when you sink the instrument down into the water and put your eyes to the small end of it you will be perfectly astonished at the plainness with which you see all kinds of fish and water animals swimming around in a state of nature. A wooden water telescope is made of a long, square, wooden box ten inches square at the large end and four or five inches square at the other. Make all the seams water tight by means of putty and paint. Put a piece of glass in the large end and leave the small end open to look into, as you do with the tin instrument. A great many of you will go on boating and picnic parties this summer, and you can imagine how much such a contrivance would add to your amusement and pleasure, to say nothing of the instruction derived from studying the inhabitants of the water at home. Using the principle of the water telescope, a well-known naturalist had a boat made with a glass in the bottom, through which he could see every movement of thousands of fish as they swam along through the clear water. Fishermen in Norway use the water telescope at their work with the best results, sometimes discovering a new kind of fish that might otherwise have escaped the notice of man.—Philadelphia Times.

Some Queer Negro Names.

The negroes of the Bahama Islands dearly delight in fine names, and ransack their memories in order to christen their children with sufficiently high sounding ones. The author of "The Land of the Pink Pearl" says that in the Bahama Islands there are innumerable "Prince of Waleses," "Prince Alberts" and "Prince Alfreds." There is a man named Tiberius Gracchus, a boy called Thaddeus de Warsaw Toot, and a sergeant, Duke of Wellington. They now have begun christening children Randolph Churchill. It is also a common practice to call them after the month or day of the week on which they were born or christened, as March, July or Monday. Scripture names are very common, as are others descriptive of a class, such as Evangelist, and I have heard of parents who wished to have their children christened Iniquity, Misere Lizzie and Solomon's Porch. One may also find Brinhilda, Clotilda, Cassandra, Sarelita, Malvira, Eulalia, Denisia, Daphne and a host of others, religious, classical, ordinary and Spanish, but every one of them high sounding.—Youth's Companion.

From a Climatic Standpoint.

Everybody, they say, has a mental estimate of his own of heaven and hell. My estimate of the former place is an October morning on a cliff of golden furze that fronts a shining sea, with nothing but a soaring bird between me and the crystal brightness of the sky, and a friend within arm's reach. Of the latter place I seek no drearier prototype than to be one of a perspiring crowd of people not yet educated up to the bath reform on a day like this in a Chicago West Side street car. For the imp to poke up the flames of my torment, let the car be an open one, and let my back to back neighbor be a lout clad in a greasy coat and last year's underclothing.—"Amber" in Chicago Journal.

The Times Against Him.

Tramp—I know it, ma'am; I'm always out of work, but it's all my cussed luck.

Woman—How is that, po r man?

Tramp—I'ts this way, ma'am. In the winter I feel like mowing lawns, and in the summer I just actually crave to shovel snow, and nature continually balks me. Have you such a thing as a pie in the house?

Then Come What May.

Niagara Falls Landlord (to guest)—Shall I have your bill made out, sir?

Guest Ah, no, not yet, not yet; let me have one more look at the Falls!"—Epoch.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Shelter Belts and Pear Trees.

Additional evidence is continually coming to our knowledge of the value of timber screens for fruit trees in exposed localities. A two-acre orchard of the Lawrence pear, planted on a modern slope facing the west, was exposed to the strong west winds. A double line of Norway spruce was planted on the west side of the orchard, about the same time that the youngest pear trees were set out, or a few years sooner. They afforded an excellent screen to the pear trees for eight or ten rods, while more remote from the screen the trees were much exposed, and showed less vigor in growth. Strong, healthy trees will withstand disease better than feeble ones, and when the blight swept through the country very few of the pear trees in this orchard perished where they were well sheltered by the screen; but, of the less vigorous trees more remote from it three-fourths perished by the blight.

Wild Mustard.

The above weed is becoming very common in many parts of this country. In Ops, near Cunningham's Corners, whole fields are one mass of yellow; in Emily in places it has a firm footing, while few districts are entirely freed from it.

The farmers should "get up and get" rid of it in some way, else the record here will be the same as elsewhere—a great depreciation both in the annual crops and in the value of the farm.

Let the Farmers' Institutes take up such questions as "How to destroy wild mustard," and dabble less with factious politics, and every one will be more benefited.

Meantime, the appearance of many farms from wild mustard is disgraceful.—Victoria Warder.

Seldom Lie Down to Sleep.

It is a fact not generally known that at least four out of every ten horses do not lie down to sleep. The horse that sleeps in a standing position rests one leg at a time, depending on the other three to sustain the weight of his body. The habit is a very dangerous one for the equine as well as the human somnambulist. Only last week a fine horse in the stables of a big manufacturing concern in the city went to sleep while standing in his stall and fell heavily to the floor, breaking one of his legs. A great many horses are permanently injured as a result of somnambulism, and there is no way of curing them of the disease.—"A Horseman" in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Shade for Poultry.

Poultry, as well as other kinds of farm stock, require shade in the extremely hot weather. If they are allowed their liberty, as they are upon some farms, they can secure this themselves; but if they are confined to yard and henhouse they are liable to suffer from extreme heat. To remedy this it is a good plan to set one or two shade trees in the fowl yard that will furnish the desired shelter from the sun. For this purpose the fir tree possesses some peculiar advantages. It is a rapid grower, the lower branches are wide spreading and droop to the ground in such a manner that the tree, though trimmed to the height of three or four feet, forms a perfectly shaded bower, under which the hens will rest in comfort. Another thing, the tree being green and of thick foliage also affords protection from winds in winter, furnishing a lee in the sun, in which fowls will stretch themselves with a great degree of comfort.

Value of Woodlands.

The Pennsylvania Forestry Association, in a recent publication, desires every farmer and every owner of woodland to know:

That his wood lot contains a valuable crop, which it will pay him not only to cut down and slaughter but to manage and utilize judiciously.

That it is possible to utilize the old trees in such a manner that a new, valuable crop is produced, instead of the inferior crop which now so often takes the place of the virgin forest after indiscriminate cutting.

That, as an intelligent manager and husbandman, he would do better to see to a natural reproduction of his wood lot, to cut with regard to the spontaneous young growth, rather than to clear indiscriminately.

That the time has come when forest destruction must give way to forest management, for timber is becoming more valuable every year as it grows scarcer in the country at large.

That in the woodlands in proper proportion lie to a large extent the conditions of a favorable climate and successful agriculture.

That upon forest growth depend healthfulness and equableness of climate.

That the forest breaks the force and tempers the fury of the northern and cools and moistens the breath of the southern wind.

That by its own cooler and moister atmosphere in summer and warmer atmosphere in winter it tends to equalize temperature and humidity over the intervening fields.

That while the open, treeless, heated prairie prevents the fall of rain, allowing moisture-laden clouds to pass over it undrained, we must thank our forest-clad hills and mountains for our more frequent, more gentle, more useful showers, and, above all

That the forest cover of the mountains preserves the even water flow in our springs, brooks and rivers, while its destruction or even deterioration increases the danger of floods, washes off the fertile soil, and then brings down unfertile soil into fertile valleys, lowers the water level, and, in general, throws out of balance the favorable conditions for agriculture.

That while we advocate the cutting and using of the wood crop as we need it, we must not any longer, as we have done, squander and waste it; we must not clear where clearing produces danger to the surrounding country.

Other Farm Notes.

A correspondent tells of a farmer of his acquaintance who sows parsley seed with his clover and timothy for hay and pasture. His sheep and cattle are very fond of the parsley, and he thinks they thrive the better for eating it. Too much of it will render sheep so fat that they will not breed. It gives an aromatic odor to the hay and makes it more palatable.

A cow should be milked out in five to eight minutes. It is hard work on the wrists and muscles, but it must be done or the cow will get a habit of dribbling the milk, which is very tiresome. To cure this habit, which has been brought on by slow milking, the milking should be done more quickly, and in time the trouble will disappear.

I feed mangels principally to hogs, says a writer in the Ohio Farmer, and can winter a sow in good enough breeding condition on four quarts of cut roots, with one pint of meal, twice a day, and when thus fed hogs require no water. Taking one year with another the expense of this ration is about 2½ cents a day per hog; and if any one knows of a cheaper food I would be pleased to hear from him.

Professor Maynard, of Amherst, according to the Michigan Farmer, finds that pyrethrum applied to trees and vines at the rate of 1 pound to 100 gallons of water will destroy many small young insects and paralyze the old ones so they will fall from the trees. Canker-worms or other insects which crawl may then be kept from returning to the trees by bands of tarred paper wrapped around the trunks.

Animals cannot thrive their best on dry food alone, however rich and plentiful. Such food cannot keep the system clear and in free, wholesome action. Animals so fed may take on fat very readily. The most clogged and diseased system tends to that excess, as we frequently notice in diseased corn-fed hogs. The rapid taking on of fat is no indication of health and thrift—quite the contrary.

The farming of the future must be gradually contracted in the number of acres. Higher cultivation, more remunerative crops. Less hard work over broad fields and closer attention to special paying crops on the fields that surround the house. More pasture, more stock and plenty of ensilage—this ensures the purchase of less commercial fertilizers and the very best results from the contents of the barn-yard.

Several New England co-operative creameries have reduced the cost of butter-making to about 3 cents a pound, and last year returned their patrons an average price of 25 cents a pound.

Care of a Cold.

A cold is a departure from health, and should really be attended to at once. Do not let it cure itself. Get rid of it soon. Do not feed it, though, but starve it. One cold after another nearly always ends in thickening of the mucous membrane of the bronchial tubes, and before you are aware of it you become the victim of a winter cough. The morning tub (cold, I mean) is a very sure preventive of colds. Never overclothe nor overheat yourself. The neck should be kept cool. Keep away from fires indoors if you are subject to colds. Cough, if not the result of simple laryngeal bronchial catarrh, may mean a very serious departure from health, and the sooner one sees a doctor in such a case the better. Do not be afraid to consult him. Remember, it is only those that delay who suffer in the end. I do not advise you to rush away to a physician with every trifling ailment, but—it is better to be sure than sorry. Many people would benefit much by taking cod-liver oil for a month or six weeks about the changes of the season. Probably the diet would have to be lowered a little and an occasional mild aperient taken. Getting thin is another serious departure from health. One generally does lose weight in winter, and regain it in summer; but a slow and steady decrease in weight calls aloud for medical interference. Want of sleep and restless nights are symptoms which cannot be overlooked. The cause must be found and removed. The trouble may certainly arise from overwork and worry combined, but in most cases the stomach and digestive system are the roots of the evil. Nervous people worry most, but they also work most. Well, the question one is inclined to ask himself when he feels something wrong with himself is: "Am I overworking myself?" I would answer thus: If you really enjoy working it cannot injure you very much; but, on the other hand, if it is force work, and you find little pleasure in it, then it will tell on your constitution. But many people cannot afford rest. Well, but wonders can be done by taking exercise; by breathing only fresh air night and day, indoors and out, and by careful regulation of the diet. In conclusion, let me entreat of you, as you value your happiness, not to neglect first departures from health. The story of the reservoir has really a moral for every one of us.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

Elephants Playing Ball.

The elephants had their bath and game of ball at the Zoological garden yesterday. Empress and Jennie with shrill trumpetings jumped into the big pool and enjoyed themselves like two school boys out for an afternoon swim. Empress was the first in the water and Jennie soon jumped in after her companion. They rolled over and over, climbed on each other's backs and plunged together below the surface, coming to the top with snorts of delight and shooting out from their long trunks great streams of water. Keeper Pendergast stimulated the sport by casting two inflated bladders into the pool with which the elephants sported for a long time, catching them and throwing them at each other's heads. When the keeper thought the fun had continued long enough he prodded the unwilling beasts out with a long pole. Then he threw a score of inflated bladders on the brick pavement surrounding the pool which the elephants pounded with their feet till all of them had been exploded, a proceeding in which they seemed to see almost as much sport as in their bath.—Philadelphia Record.

Shadow and Substance.

The Quakers have many habits and customs that "worldly" people would profit by imitating, says Fibre and Fabric. They do nothing unnecessary, and save labor and wear and tear of mind whenever they can. When tools are hung up against a wall, there the shape of a tool is painted against the wall, so that when a tool is removed and not returned the silent monitor remains. When a hammer, saw or monkey wrench is hung up there its shadow is painted, so that if the real hammer is gone, the painted hammer remains to remind the owner that the borrowed tool has not been returned.

A Blow for Protection.

Citizen (to leader of a street band)—Why do you play that big horn?

Band leader (winking slyly)—Vell you see, dose blayers in mine band ish ferry bad. I blays der pig horn and drowns der whole caboodle. Ef it vasn't for dot der beebles would lynch us pooty quick out. I knows mine pisiness, ain't it?

SOME SUMMER DRINKS.

Zinc and Citric Acid Don't Go Well Together.

"Wait a moment, doctor; let's have a glass of lemonade."

A large crowd was pushing and elbowing its way toward the grand stand at a near-by resort when the above remark was made to a tall, fine-looking man who seemed to be suffering from the excessive heat. His shirt-collar was unbuttoned at the throat, his cuffs were turned back over his wrists, and his appearance was that of a man in the last stages of "wilt." The invitation to partake of lemonade seemed agreeable to him, but he no sooner got to the stand where light beverages were dispensed than he gave a gasp and started back, saying: "None for me. I admit I am thirsty and a glass of lemonade would be very refreshing, but look—that settles it."

With the handle of his palm leaf fan he pointed to the huge lemon squeezer made of galvanized iron.

"Why, dear, that's all right. They make the drink to order. That won't go off—it's only a lemon squeezer."

"The law should prohibit its use. Rather than drink lemonade made by that machine I would drink the water from yonder horse trough. That lemon squeezer is made of galvanized iron or iron coated with zinc. Every time a lemon is squeezed by it the citric acid of the lemon coming in contact with the metal dissolves the zinc and forms an unwholesome and poisonous salt. Zinc is a metal which is readily attacked by the weakest acids and no article of food or drink should ever be allowed to come in contact with it. Find me a place where they use the old-fashioned wooden squeezer or where the lemon is macerated in a procelain or glass vessel and I'll gladly join you in a glass of lemonade, but here, where they use the death-dealing zinc machine—never!"—New York Mail and Express.

VAST VARIETY OF COLD DRINKS.

"How many kinds of drinks do you sell, anyhow?" asked a reporter of a druggist.

"I can serve you now with 136 different cold drinks," said the druggist, "and 20 hot drinks, and won't charge you over 25 cents for any."

The reporter looked upon this as a skillfully served hint, and modestly called for a pint glass of lemonade—5 cents.

"Guess how much of that lemonade I have sold in a day?" said the druggist, taking a turn at questioning.

"About 300 glasses."

"Way off. Why, on a warm day I empty that vessel, well, a dozen times, and it holds 150 glasses. Then orange phosphate comes next, and after that vanilla soda, of which I sell about 100 glasses a day."—New York Sun.

"Smelt Like a Bar-Room."

The young woman who determined to shame her husband by taking to tippling, says Neal's State Gazette, began operations on Wednesday by setting out an exceedingly vulgar, red-labelled bottle on the back parlor table in the most unostentatious way. About the hour her husband was expected home she took a good gulp of the liquor, and when she heard what she supposed to be his footsteps on the stoop she drank another finger of it, and, putting some more in her hand, rubbed it over her lips. Then she flied up to her room to wait for him. She was intensely gratified by the consciousness that, as she expressed it, she "smelt like a bar-room." To her surprise the door-bell rang, and she went to the head of the stairs and peered over the rail to see who had come in place of her husband. It was her mother, her father and a cousin or two from the country. The old lady spied her, and there was nothing to do but come straight down and kiss and be kissed all around. She was mortified, for her parents are very straight-laced, pious folks, and could not help but smell the gin with which she had perfumed herself so liberally. Worse still, while she was assisting her father to rid himself of his overcoat the rest of the party filed solemnly into the presence of the red-labelled bottle in the back room. Nothing was said about the odor of the bottle, and she was too proud to try to explain what looked so badly for her. She told her husband, however, and he was so impolite as to throw himself on the bed in convulsions of laughter. She was so angry that she theatened to leave him. "You can't," said the monster, "your folks would not receive you. The most they would do would be to put you in the inebriate asylum."

Curved Caterpillar in the Air.

There was a waterspout over Witenham woods, Dorchester, yesterday. A line black clouds hung about 30 degrees from the horizon, and depending from it was a funnel-shaped cloud of the same color about 8 degrees in length and about 2 degrees in apparent diameter, tapering to a point. Soon the funnel assumed a wavy form and its diameter at the top lessened in about four minutes it looked more like a curved caterpillar than anything else, with a well defined head at the lower end of what had been the funnel, and in length, if straightened, about 10 degrees. Then it faded, leaving the head for a longer time visible, as a separate speck of blackness on a gray background. A thunderstorm followed, which continued throughout the day.—London Star.

A Very Cruel Man.

Judge (to prosecuting witness)—"Have you any real cause of complaint against your husband?"

Wife—"Yes, sir. He refuses to buy me a new bonnet, and I haven't had a silk dress for two years."

Judge—"But I thought he came home drunk and beat you over the head with a chair?"

Wife—"Well, he did; but I wouldn't count that if I could get the dress and the bonnet."

A bear was shot up in Bay county the other night as it was trying to lug off a 200-pound hog, and the body of the bear was found to weigh only 194 pounds. It is conceded that the bear was the biggest hog of the two.

In the vicinity of Montreal the depredations committed by the sparrows have arrived at such a pitch that the farmers of the neighbouring municipalities have banded themselves together into an extermination society.

STORIES OF PICTURES.

Some Exceedingly Interesting Things Seen in Europe by Bishop Beckwith.

Among the many beautiful things brought from the other side of the world Bishop Beckwith has the photograph of an old picture in one of the art galleries, which represents the "Last Supper." The original has a history, which is this: A monk was incarcerated in prison for some grave offiance, and doomed to die upon a certain day. If he could paint the "Last Supper" in a certain length of time he would receive his freedom. If he failed, the following night he would die. The monk worked upon his canvas, putting heart and soul into his work and wasting away as he did so, until he became weak, nerveless and perfectly prostrated. The day before the expiration of his sentence the canvas was complete with the exception of the face of Judas. Try as he would, no inspiration came to him for that face. In the same prison was another monk who hated the artist. On the last day he entered the cell and asked the poor, nerveless, trembling, almost dying man if his picture was done.

No, he could find no face for Judas, he was answered.

The monk, exultant because of the artist's failure and the certainty that he would die, turned with a look of demoniac exultation and left the cell. As the artist watched his face he sprang up in ecstatic excitement, rushed to the canvas, painted the face of the vanishing monk, and so regained his liberty, and at the same time gave to the world one of its grandest pictures.

Bishop Beckwith says one of the finest pictures he ever saw was in one of the picture galleries in Italy, and was "Napoleon in Hell." Napoleon wore the same frown as in life, and the devil, the most conspicuous figure on the canvas, was represented as having the most strikingly beautiful face imaginable. In the background were figures and faces of women taunting the great emperor with having bereft them of their loved ones, while he, cowering 'neath the guilt of uncontrolled ambition, was suffering remorse in the nether regions.—Atlanta Journal.

The Honey Extractor.

A foreign paper notices the death at Venice, Italy, of Major Von Hruschka, the inventor of the honey extractor. He was a retired Austrian officer, and the invention of the honey extractor occurred in this way: His apiary was in Italy, and one day when he was in his apiary his little boy came there. The boy had a small tin pail tied to a string, which he was swinging in a circle, holding the end of the string in his hand. The indulgent father gave the youth a small piece of comb filled with honey, putting it into the little pail. The boy after a while began to swing the pail again as before, with the honey in it. A few moments after he became tired of that amusement and put the pail down to talk to his father, who took it up, and, by chance, noticed that the honey had left the comb and settled down into the pail, leaving the comb perfectly clean that had been on the outside of the circle when the boy was swinging it around. The major wondered at the circumstance, and turning the comb over bade the boy swing it again, when to his great astonishment the other side of the comb also became perfectly clean, all the honey being extracted and lying at the bottom of the pail. During the following night Maj. Von Hruschka, after going to bed, commenced to think the circumstance over. On the morrow he commenced a series of experiments which resulted in his giving to the world the first honey extractor, which by whirling, something like his son whirled that little tin pail, gave him the pure liquid honey, extracted by centrifugal force, leaving the honeycomb entirely free from the liquid sweet, which he gave again to the bees to fill, allowing him the pure honey for making wine, mead and metheglin or honey cakes as desired, without employing the troublesome and primitive method in use up to that time of mashing up the combs containing the honey, pollen, and sometimes brood, too, to let the honey drain through the cloth in which it was placed, giving what was formerly known as "strained honey."

Too Much Proverb.

While the prisoners in the Austin jail were out in the yard a few days ago, two of them who were under sentence to the penitentiary were heard comparing notes about as follows:

"I don't believe in proverbs," said prisoner number one; "it is believing in proverbs that brings me here."

"How so?" said number two.

"Well, you see when I was a boy I often seen folks pick up pins, and when I asked them why they did it they said:

If you see a pin and let it lay
You will have bad luck all the day.

"Yes, that's so. I've heard that myself."

"Well, it don't work. I have picked up a pin, and I've had bad luck ever since. I was arrested the very same day, and now I've got to go to the penitentiary for three years."

"What has that to do with picking up pins?" asked number two.

"Well, you see the pin I picked up was a diamond pin worth $150. I believed in the proverb about having good luck, so I picked up the pin in a show case, but they telephoned for a policeman, and here I am," and he winked at the jailer.

The other prisoner thought for a moment and then he said:

"When I come to think of it, proverbs are what have brought me into this fix."

"How so?" asked the man who had picked up the pin for good luck.

"Well, I had heard about horseshoes bringing you luck, so I picked up horseshoes. Horseshoes are my weakness."

"Them horseshoes you went off with were fastened onto another fellow's horse, weren't they?" queried number one.

"Jess so."

"When I get out I'm not going to tamper with any more proverbs," remarked number two.

"Me neither," responded number one.

"Fall in, boys," said the jailer, and they went back to their cozy retreats on the inside of the jail.

Mme. Janauschek's repertoire for next season will consist of "Mary Stuart," "Macbeth," "Guy Mannering" and "Mother and Son."

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

HEARD'S
Carriage Works,
FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

THIS SILVER-PLATED INSTRUMENT

Can be used by any member of the family from Infancy to Old Age with perfect safety.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age.

Price - - $3.

ORIENTAL

CATARRH IMPOSSIBLE UNDER ITS INFLUENCE

The only catarrh remedy ever offered to the public on 15 days trial; a written guarantee given with each instrument, W. T. Baer & Co., 156 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

ACTINA

THE GREAT EYE AND LUNG RESTORER

Actina is not a medicine or a disgusting lotion or powder ball, but a Self-generating Vapor, easily and pleasantly applied at all hours, times and places.

Actina No. 2.—Quickly relieves and thoroughly cures all Throat and Lung diseases.

Actina No. 3.—Positively cures all diseases of the Eye, Cataract Granulated Eye-lids, Inflamed Eyes, near and far sightedness. The Eye treated while closed.

The Actina is sold under our written guarantee on 15 days trial. Enclose stamp for handsomely illustrated book and health journal. W. T. BAER & CO., 156 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

MEDICATED ELECTRIC BELT

Medicated for all diseases of the blood and nervous system. Ladies' Belt $2 for female complaints it has no equal. Mens' Belt $3, combined Belt and Suspensory $5.

CURES Seminal weakness, errors of youth, lost manhood, nightly emissions, Etc. The only appliances giving a direct current of Electricity to the parts. Can be worn night or day without inconvenience. Hundreds of Testimonials on file from those cured of female diseases, pains in back and hips, head and limbs, nervous debility, general debility, lumbago, rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, sciatica, disease of the kidneys, spinal disease, torpid liver, gout, leucorrhœa, catarrh of the bladder, sexual exhaustion, seminal emissions, asthma, heart disease, dyspepsia, constipation, erysipelas, indigestion, impotency, piles, epilepsy, dumb ague and diabetes. Send stamp for handsomely illustrated book and health journal. Correspondence strictly confidential. Consultation and electrical treatment free. Agents wanted everywhere. Pat. Feb. 26th, 1887.

Cures Guaranteed

Medicated Electric Belt Co., 155 Queen St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

Symptoms for which No. 8 should be Used.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Miss Mary Johnston and Mr. J. Roseborough, pupils of the Owen Sound Collegiate Institute, are spending their vacation with their parents here.

There will be no service in the Methodist church here next Sabbath owing to the Quartely, meeting which will be held in Durham.

There has been a great deal of anxiety here about the dry weather, but haying is about over and the hay has been an average crop.

At the recent sale of cheese made at the Victoria factory, 8½ cents per pound was realized.

Quite a number of people from around here took advantage of the excursion to Lewiston and Niagara last Thursday. Your corr. also took in the pleasures of the day. The sail on the lake was very pleasant, and the fine weather throughout the day made everything go off jovial.

The remedy which most successfully combats malarial disorders, is Ayer's Ague Cure. It is a purely vegetable compound, and contains neither quinine nor any other dangerous ingredient. Warranted to cure chills and fever.

W. C. T. U.

IS IT RIGHT.

Is it right to licence a man to make drunkards and then punish the drunkard. Licensed Bar-rooms are neither a benefit in village or town they neither tend to man's improvement mentally or physically. The tendance of the Bar-room is to make a poorer class of Citizens, a poorer class of workmen—less valued Friends and less valued neighbors. Then we say emphatically,—Away with the Bar-room.

The Temperance Tree.

"Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine and men of strength to mingle strong drink."—Isaah, 5th c., 22nd v.

What a mighty tree thou hast grown
Since long years ago thy seed was sown;
Sown in his hearts of men by hand divine,
In days of old, look thou not upon the wine.

Thy root is is deep within the soil,
Around thy trunk no serpents coil;
No fear from thee of adder's bite,
Thou dost protect and aid the right.

Thy branches reach across the sea
All looking, reaching, up towards Thee;
Though not alike, yet joined in heart,
Of the grand old tree a part

To guard the home they all agree,
Like children of one great family;
A refuge from the serpents power,
Thou art growing stronger every hour.

Think not it can e'er be slain,
"Truth crushed to earth will rise again,"
And right shall ever conquer wrong,
Though the strife be fierce and long.

Thy foes have tried, but all in vain,
To stay thy branches, rend thee in twain;
Yet all united thou still dost stand
For God, and home, and native land

ELLEN AGNES MARTIN.
Bruce, Brookings Co., Dakota.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket, with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

A Physician

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

NOTICE.

To the Ladies of the County of Grey.

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED TO VISIT

CLIMO'S STORE IN FLESHERTON

and bring your Produce and ask to be shown the beautiful PRINTS suitable for any wearing. We have beautiful Satteen Prints at from 10c. to 14c. per yard—such values you have not been offered before.

Highest Price allowed for Eggs, Butter and Wool.

The best way to destroy Beetles is to sprinkle Paris Green and Water on the Potatoe Vines. You can get the Sprinklers at Climo & Co's which are cheap and good. Only a few on hand.

Yours Truly,

CLIMO & CO.,

Wright's Old Stand, - Flesherton.

I have received a Very Large Assortment of

BOOTS & SHOES!

Several Hundred Pairs of Mens', Womens' and Childrens' which I am offering

VERY CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - - FLESHERTON.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO.

Also TRIMMINGS in great variety. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Special Attention given to Contracted or Tender Feet.

D. McTAVISH. R. P. LEGATE

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FARM for SALE

BEING Lot 6, Con. 7, Osprey, half mile from Maxwell, 100 acres, 60 acres cleared, well watered, and under good state of cultivation. Well fenced. Large frame barn and stable, frame house. For further particulars apply to JOSEPH RADLEY, 179 Spadina Avenue, Toronto.

345-371.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Try The Advance one year for Six months for 50 cts.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 373. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, AUG. 16, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

The Most Beautiful

And Select Stock of

WATCHES

CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, SPECTACLES

and EYEGLASSES,

Between Shelburne and Owen Sound is to be found at

Russell's

Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Call and look at our Fine Watches, bearing from 3 to 5 year warrants. We sell them so much cheaper than you can get them elsewhere that it will pay you to come twenty miles and buy from us. Our stock of

18 K. WEDDING RINGS---GEM RINGS,

IS SIMPLY IMMENSE. If you want a wedding ring it will pay you to go to RUSSELL'S, as you can do better there than elsewhere. Just try and see for yourself and remember that the only place to get your watch or clock repaired properly is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

School commences on Monday

Priceville baseball club plays Dundalk on Saturday.

The first load of stone for the new bridge across the Boyne was delivered on Tuesday.

Rev. Mr. Shilton gave an interesting and eloquent sermon on Sunday evening last upon the subject of Prayer.

We had a call from Mr. S. A. Stinson, of Collingwood, on Monday. He pronounces that town as prosperous.

For Sale, or will exchange for stock—A Melodeon, Rosewood case, excellant tone and in good order. This is a chance for someone; don't miss it. For particulars enquire of R. P. Legate Flesherton.

Young, old, and middle aged, all experience the wonderfully beneficial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young children, suffering from sore eyes, sore ears, scald head, or with any scrofulous taint, become healthy and strong by the use of this medicine. Six bottles, $5

The editor of this paper went picking berries the other day. He saw sixteen partridges, heard an imitation wildcat and had his pants torn. And yet he grumbles because he didn't get a chance to grapple with a bear. Some people are never satisfied!

Wanted.

A good weaver, or a smart girl willing to learn. Apply at Flesherton woollen mills.

Departure.

Mr. A. R. Fawcett, late proprietor of this paper, left for his new home in Streetsville this morning. May success perch upon his banner.

Presentation.

On Saturday evening last Miss Wood, on behalf of the Flesherton Station Baptist congregation, presented Rev. T. Watson with a well-filled purse.

Left Over.

Two communications have reached us with reference to the formation of Farmers' Institutes at Maxwell and McIntyre. They arrived too late to be available, but will appear next week

An Interesting Trip.

Mr. Joseph Blackburn left on Tuesday for a trip to Gorrie. He arrived home last evening, accompanied by the late Miss Ella Ayres, with whom he has formed a life partnership. Mr. and Mrs. Blackburn have our very best wishes for their future happiness.

Dumped.

Charlie Sargeant, butcher of Markdale, had quite a funny accident on Tuesday He was driving over the bridge at that place, when his horse drew the cart, meat and baskets over the bridge. It is said there was a muchly mixed turnout about that time, but that nothing was damaged. "A wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse," but it seems neither of them availed in this case.

A Social Gathering.

A very pleasant social gathering was that held over Medical Hall on Saturday evening last by the S. O. T. It was called together for the purpose of tendering publicly to Mr. Fawcett, who is leaving this community, the heartfelt wishes of the society for his future welfare. Mr. Fawcett has for a long time been identified with the temperance movement in this place, and temperance workers generally feel that they are losing a strong ally in Mr. Fawcett's removal. A number of speeches were made. Miss Carrie Davis gave a ricitation in excellent style. Dr. Christoe presented, on behalf of the Society, a beautifully engrossed and framed address to which Mr. Fawcett replied very gracefully, yet with deep emotion. After refreshments had been served and a little social chit-chat indulged in, the gathering dispersed.

Personal.

Master Ed. Strain returned home from his trip to Manitoulin Island.

Mrs. Cuthbert and two daughters, of Toronto, are visiting at Mrs. Campbell's.

Mr. Fred Leitch is home visiting his parents here. He looks hale and hearty.

Mr. Joseph H. Strain, of the firm of Strain Bros., merchants at Minot, Dakota, is home on a visit to his parents here.

Sudden Death!

Mr. T. H. Carr, lumber buyer for McCraney, McCool & Wilson, of Toronto, while assisting to load flat cars on Friday last at Flesherton station, was suddenly seized with an attack of heart syncope and fell from the car to the ground so violently as to sustain a fracture of the skull. Death was instantaneous. He was unmarried. The body was sent to Allandale. Mr. Carr was a man of about 38 years of age

An Improvement.

The recent improvement in the front of Mr. P. N. Munshaw's premises is a new departure in the higher style of architectural adornment. In addition to a neatly constructed stone wall, fronting on Peter street, surmounted by an iron fence in the Graeco-Roman style of architecture, the grounds are in course of preparation to make it an attractive feature in the ornamentation of our town

The Hired Man.

A gentleman in this town told us a good story of absent mindedness the other day. He had a hired man who was very absent-minded indeed. One day this individual had occasion to drive a cow some little distance to water. After starting on the return journey he fell to musing and jogged along behind the cow with his head down. On arriving at the stable he looked up, but the cow wasn't there. She wasn't anywhere, that he could see. She has not turned up yet, and that was ten years ago. That cow disappeared as mysteriously as the "Lost Sir Massingbird," but she left her tale behind her.

Garden Party.

The garden party at the Station on Wednesday night of last week was a very pleasant and successful affair. Mr. R. Cook and Mr. J. McMullen spared no pains in preparing the school grounds for the occasion. The school itself is a credit to the section, the grounds are well-selected, and the tastefully planted trees all seem to be doing well. The lady friends, led by Miss Wood, provided an excellent tea and served it in a pleasing and attentive manner. Lemonade, cordials and ice cream were also provided. After enjoying the ample repast, pleasant conversation and several games, the company was called to order. T. Granger, Esq., presided, and filled the position very acceptably. His encouraging remarks, his friendly spirit and kindly, suggestive criticisms of the various items of the program were very timely and well received. Miss Sproul and Miss Irwin, from Markdale, rendered most agreeable aid by singing and playing. The Flesherton brass band inspired enthusiasm by the several pieces they gave, and by the cheerful way in which they responded to the invitation. Miss Rutledge gave a recitation, and Mr. Wilson sang a song that recalled many sweet associations of other days and distant lands. Mr. Parker, son of Rev. Mr. Parker, late of Priceville, gave an earnest, friendly speech. Mr. Ingham, of Toronto, gave "the speech of the evening," and Rev. T. Watson gave an explanation of the principles on which the Christian mission at the Station is worked, showing that the mission is wholly in the hands of and controlled by the Station community, and that people of every name, and no name at all, are there enabled to work together in the Redeemer's cause, with no other bond than that of mutual confidence and oneness of aim. The singing of the National Anthem, led by the band, thus brought the proceedings to a close. Near midnight the band marched into Flesherton in martial order, with even step and burning lights, and played one of their finest selections on the village square.

Priceville Items.

From our own Correspondent.

The rain storms of late have just saved the green crops from being a failure. Everything is growing nicely now, but some people are complaining about the rain spoiling their small potatoes—making them grow into larger ones.

The Eletric Fluid played a bad prank on the 3rd inst. by passing through the gable of an unoccupied house owned by Mr. J. McDougall, and reducing it to ashes in the midst of the heavy rain. A number of fruit and ornamental trees were broken by the wind, on the above date, in this neighborhood.

There has been a good deal of talk lately in scientific circles about eclipses, transits of certain stars, black specks in the sun's face, etc., but some of our citizens, a few days ago, observed a "Black" without specs passing across the surface of our town. The astrologers pronounce said phenomena to be the anual transit of a certain Bunnessan star passing through this portion of the atmosphere, and that said transit is always accompanied by more or less noise It was also visible at the station, only with the difference that said movement or noise was more distinct and prolonged.

Two young Pilgrims, one hailing from Irish Lake, and the other from Flesherton station, came into town a few days ago to try the stimulating "waters" at the shrines of "Tom" and "Duncan" They acted something like the turkeys that ate the fermented cherries, but the boys didn't pluck their feathers off, or put them under the pump.

WHAT THEY SAY.

17 to 6 at Flesherton, and our boss pitcher didn't play either—B. B. Club

Keep Miss S. Henderson on the alto—congregation.

Don't you want to join the Agr. Society—J. McArthur.

I know how to buy groceries now—Jim.

TO

OLD

PATRONS

AM OBLIGED FOR

CONTINUED CONFIDENCE

AND PATRONAGE.

Will be with you again next week.

JEWELER BROWN.

MARKDALE.

FEARFULLY FATAL FIRE.

Seventeen People Burned to Death in a New York Fire Trap.

ALL ESCAPE CUT OFF.

Men, Women and Children are Fairly Roasted Alive.

A last (Friday) night's New York despatch says: Thirteen people were burned to death in a six-story brick building in the rear of 197 Bowery this afternoon. Six more, burned so badly that they will probably die, were removed to various hospitals. The house was a ramshackle hidden in the middle of the block, the only entrance to it being a narrow alley from the Bowery. In front of it runs a four-story building, on the first floor of which was a saloon called the White Elephant. Adjoining this is Harry Miner's People's Theatre. In the rear of the burned building were two houses hemming it in on the Christie street side. In this caged-in building lived about 150 people. Each of the six floors was occupied by a single family, the head of which was a tailor, who made clothing for the cheap wholesale clothing houses and employed from fifteen to twenty men and women and children, in addition to his own family, in making up the clothing. They were all Polish Jews and the employers and employed worked, ate and slept in the rooms of the dingy tenement. The tenants who rented the apartments were O. Corn, S. Graft and Marks, S. Harris and H. Levine. About 4.15 o'clock this afternoon, while all the occupants of the building were busily at work in the closing hours preceding their Sabbath eve, flames broke out in the lower floor. Fire had already gained such headway that it was in full possession of the stairway, and escape by it seemed impossible. Many of the frightened inmates, however, rushed through the flames into the narrow court with clothes ablaze. Six of them were so severely burned that they were taken to the hospital and may die. There were fire escapes in front and rear of the house, but before any of the inmates had time to escape by them the flames had ascended through the house and were rushing from the windows so that descent by the fire escapes was impossible. One man, already half burned to death, escaped from a fourth-story window and fell, a mangled mass of flesh, in the little courtyard. Others jumped from the second story windows and escaped with bruises. A. H. Sheldon, manager of the People's Theatre, on discovering the fire, sent out an alarm and the firemen responded, but when they arrived the flames already had complete possession of the house and nothing could be done to save it and little to save its inmates. Charles W. Norman, property man of the theatre, with several of his comrades, ran to the roof of the theatre, carrying a ladder, which they stretched over to a window of the burning building. A woman with her hair and clothing already ablaze appeared at the window and Norman called to her to cross over the ladder. She cried back that she could not leave her two children. Norman tried to cross over on the ladder, but the flames drove him back and he could not save her. Afterwards the charred bodies of the mother and two children were found in the building. Three men, however, availed themselves of the ladder and escaped to the roof of the theatre. When the firemen had at last drowned the flames so that they could enter the house they searched floor by floor as they ascended and on the third floor they found the burned bodies of a man, a woman and a boy. On the fourth floor they found five bodies so badly burned that it was impossible to tell whether they were men or women. On the fifth floor no bodies were found, but on the sixth there lay on the floor five more bodies and they also were burned so that it could not be told whether they were men or women. This made thirteen bodies found in the building. That of the man who escaped from the fifth story window increased this list to fourteen, while it is feared the deaths of some, if not all, those in the hospitals will make this number greater. While the firemen were searching the ruins, the cry came that the roof was falling in, and the crackling of timbers was heard. The firemen did not desert the building, but ran to the windows, where they awaited orders. They shouted to Chief McGill, who was on the roof of a lower house. He climbed a ladder and saw the roof sagging in, and gave orders to prop it up. All the bodies had not been taken down and until this was done the firemen would not desert the place.

The list of the dead as far as known is as follows: Adele Graft, aged 28, with her new-born babe and two children, aged 7 and 4; Philip Laloph, aged 23, killed by jumping from the sixth story; Henry Schwartz, tailor. Ten men and one woman are at the morgue burned beyond recognition. Six were seriously, and in most cases fatally, burned or injured and several others slightly. Six others are missing. The missing are believed to be among those burned beyond recognition. The death of Isaiah Spennett at the hospital at a late hour this evening makes the seventeenth death to midnight.

One of the most pitiful incidents of the terrible calamity was the death of Mrs. Graft. In the awful panic she gave birth to a child and the mother and babe were burned to a crisp. Her two children were victims by her side.

Beer is King in the Motherland.

According to the latest Parliamentary returns, $7,500,000 was received for beer licenses in England last year, and as an indication of where the profits go it is announced that Lord Lansdowne has just sold three of his finest pictures, two Rembrandts and a Cuyp, for $250,000, to Sir Arthur Guinness, who has made his money in brewing beer.—Boston Herald.

Husband (to wife)—Do you believe in the theory that the greatness of a father often proves a stumbling block to the advancement of his son in life? Wife—I certainly do. I am thankful, John, our boy will never be handicapped in that way. Husband—Oh

CUPID'S VICTIMS.

The Dowager Duchess of Montrose's Third Husband—Other Matrimonial Ventures.

A London cable says: On Thursday the young curate of the church at Fulham, under a special license, quietly married the Dowager Duchess of Montrose, known on the turf as "Mr. Manton," to her third husband, a brother of Lady Durham. Not a whisper of the event had been heard previously, for the secret was well kept. It has been the social sensation of the week. The groom was Marcus Henry Milner, a young man of 22, while the bride is in her 71st year, and she has been married twice before, the first time in 1836. No woman in London society has a wider or more peculiar reputation. She does and says things which nobody else would venture upon. Her anecdotes and her jokes are generally better suited to the smoking than the drawing room, and she is very apt to stagger the most hardened man of the world by what some of her friends call her "emancipation from conventionalities." Other people may be hampered by the rules and obligations of ordinary life, but the Duchess of Montrose acknowledges no such restrictions. Everybody knows that the old Duchess takes a great interest in racing, and is indeed the proud owner of a stable, her horses running as "Mr. Manton's." She likes play actors and everybody, provided they are young and do not belong to her own sex. Naturally, therefore, she generally has a young man or two in her train, and one of them she has chosen for her husband. There is a matter of nearly fifty years' disparity in their ages. But what of that? The Duchess has fully £20,000 a year, and is nice and lively as a cricket. Crabbed age and youth can live very well under such circumstances. Mr. Milner is not the first young man who has married for money.

The Dowager Duchess of Montrose was born in 1817, and at the age of 19 married the Duke of Montrose. When he died on December 30th, 1874, at the age of 75, the Duchess was well advanced in years, and had borne the Duke six children, the first of whom was born in 1845 and the last in 1872. Within thirteen months of the Duke's death Duchess Caroline married W. S. Stirling Crawfurd, of Milton, the celebrated owner of successful racers. The Duchess, in retaliation for the criticisms of the Montrose family, took every opportunity to display her preference for her second husband.

A social sensation was caused by the announcement that the Duchess had secured one of the most valuable and interesting pieces of burial ground in all Great Britain for the remains of her second husband, who died in 1883, paying $150,000 for the ground alone, and invited from the best architects of Europe plans for a mausoleum of classic style and unprecedented grandeur. The Duchess declared that this sepulchre would exemplify her affection for Crawfurd, and that it was her ambition to excel the effort of Artemisia.

Miss Violet Isaacson, daughter of the great dressmaker, Madame Elise, was married to Lord Beaumont in London on Saturday.

The Duke of Aosta, the ex-King of Spain, and his niece, Princess Letitia, the only daughter of Prince Napoleon and Princess Clotilde, will be married in Turin in September.

REMARKABLE FAITH CURE.

Mrs. Hamel Miraculously Recovers the Use of Her Leg.

A Lowell, Mass., despatch says a miraculous and well attested instance of faith cure has occurred in this city and excited the wonder of all who know the circumstances. Twelve years ago Mrs. Charles Hamel, of this city, then a little girl, contracted a severe cold which settled in her right knee. Since that time she has been unable to step without a crutch. The best physicians have treated her in vain. During her married life she has worked hard in domestic duties and reared four children. She is of a very religious nature, and has regularly attended the services of the Novena this week at St. Joseph's Church, of which she is a member, going to the church in a hack. Thursday was the last day of the services, and she attended high mass with a determination to end her sufferings by prayer. She used her crutch on going to and returning from the communion table, and then knelt in her pew and prayed for relief. At the close of the service she arose from her knees and, leaving her crutch in the pew, walked to the door without assistance. Since that time her limb has been apparently well and strong. Her case has created great astonishment, and hundreds of people have called upon her to hear her story. The crutch has been hung in front of the altar of the church.

It Was a Long Walk.

A Parkersburg (W. Va.) despatch says: It is rare, indeed, to record an elopement on foot, but such a case has just occurred in Jackson county. Miss Hester Tyre, 18 years, in spite of the opposition of her parents, decided to marry George Fineld, 19 years. He was a farm hand, and between them they only had $1.25. Last Friday they met by appointment and walked fifty miles to the Ohio River, taking three days for the journey. Crossing the river, a justice united them. The appearance of the groom and that of his blushing bride betrayed their poverty, and the justice declined the piece of silver offered as his fee, and gave the happy young woman a blessing, which he sealed with an official kiss, and bid them go, and saw that they were ferried back to West Virginia for nothing. When on this side, after another fifty miles' walk, the home of her parents was before them. They footed every step of the way, happy in their new relations, and reached the old homestead this morning to find father and mother, who thought their daughter lost, waiting a blessing and a welcome.

He Would Try.

Proud Father (displaying twins to Mr Oldboy)—What do you think of them, old fellow?

Mr. Oldboy (who doesn't care for babies) Not bad, Jinks, not bad. Er—are you going to try to raise 'em both.

The Prince of Wales is going to Dublin. It is said that Mr. Gladstone has made him a good Home Ruler.

DAYS AND NIGHTS OF AGONY.

John Anderson Tells of His Dreadful Experience in the Well.

A Johnstown, Neb, despatch says: John Anderson, who was imprisoned in a well nine days and was released on Saturday, says that when the boards and sand closed in over him he was crowded into a box about two feet square and with not enough room for him to stand erect. He could not get on his knees or sit down, but had to stay in a crouching position during the whole of his imprisonment.

About the first three days," said Anderson, "I got along very well, but after that I began to want water badly. The fourth day when it rained I heard what I thought was water slowly dropping. Feeling around I found it, and holding my mouth open managed in this way to get about a dozen drops of water, which gave me much relief. I had no difficulty in breathing until the well below me came so near being filled by sand occasionally coming in, caused by the diggers above. I had breathed the air over so much that it had become impure, causing me to feel a smothering sensation, but about this time the rescuers got near enough to let in air from above.

"By having a good supply of chewing tobacco I did not suffer so much for food as might have been expected. From the beginning I could hear considerable that was said and done above. I heard the waggon when it started to town for lumber and heard some one say the man is dead and the order given to try and pull my box out. When they began to pull I knew there was great danger of the boards giving way and crushing me, and for my own safety and to give evidence of being alive, I cut the ropes and heard the exciting talk that prevailed when it was discovered that I was alive. It was music to me and from that time on I was hopeful of being rescued.

"About the sixth day I felt something crawling on my hand and found it to be a fly. I thought by this that an opening had been made from above. I was correct, for soon a wet rag was passed to me. In reaching it to me it became covered with sand, but no honey ever tasted better than that wet rag. Soon a bottle of water and a piece of bread were given me and I was truly thankful.

"From this time on I began to gain strength, and by helping my rescuers the time passed quicker than one would suppose. When my feet, which are badly swollen, are better, and I dare eat a square meal, I will be all right."

THE PARTHIAN'S PASSENGERS

Transferred and Sent to Boston From Cottage City.

A Cottage City, Mass., despatch says: The schooner which collided with the steamer Parthian was the Ayr, Captain Fowler, of St. John, bound for New York with a cargo of lumber. The weather at the time of the collision was foggy, and Captain Fowler, of the Ayr, mistook the position of the steamer when she whistled, and headed directly for her. The next instant the Ayr's bowsprit struck the steamer, snapped and fell off. The Ayr rebounded, struck again and again. At the third time she struck the Parthian just at the water line, making a ragged hole about four feet in diameter just amidships in the engineers' compartment. In a moment every one was on deck, and the wildest confusion reigned for a short time. Capt. Nickerson and First Mate Lane showed wonderful coolness, checked the prevailing excitement and controlled the crew. On their assurances of safety, the passengers soon calmed themselves, and nearly all had retired within an hour after the collision. Captain Nickerson headed for Vineyard Haven, where the Parthian was run aground about 11 o'clock. This morning at 10 o'clock the tug Confidence and lighter Oak, of the T Wharf Company, of Boston, transferred the passengers and baggage to Oak Bluffs wharf, Cottage City, and left here on the steamer Martha's Vineyard at 4.45 this afternoon.

SAVED BY PRESENCE OF MIND.

A Mother's Careless Act Atoned for by Her Bravery.

A Chicago telegram says: Mrs. J. Norman attempted last evening to replenish the fuel in her little oil stove while the wick was still aflame. She allowed the oil to run over and it ignited. The flames reached to the ceiling, and Mrs. Norman seized a pail of water to quench them. This only tended to make matters worse. The blazing oil ran in streams about the floor and ignited Mrs. Norman's dress. She hastily rolled herself in a blanket and extinguished the blazing garments before she was severely burned. Little Clara Norman, who attempted to put out the fire, also had her clothes ignited. She seized her baby brother in her arms and was about to rush out with him. The flames had communicated to his clothes and the two would have been burned to a cinder had not Mrs. Norman caught and wrapped them in the same blanket which had saved her. She then smothered the flames from the burning stove and fell to the floor exhausted with her efforts. Fortunately all three escaped with a few slight burns, which will soon heal.

FOUGHT FOR THE MOON.

Wild Indians Badly Frightened by the Eclipse.

A Muskogee, I.T., telegram says: Four thousand blanketed Comanches, Kiowas, Cheyennes, Arapahoes and Delawares were at the Anadarko agency last week to get their rations, when the total eclipse of the moon occurred. The savages were filled with alarm and became very demonstrative. The principal chief ordered them to shoot at the "evil thing trying to harm the moon," and the entire force of Indians opened fire in the air, keeping up the shooting for upward of an hour and until they were out of ammunition. When the moon appeared in full, after the eclipse, wild whoops went up for what they believed to have been their victory.

It is related among other exploits of the desperado Ike Lambert, who was recently arrested in Alabama for killing three men, that he once compelled a young lawyer to pick a banjo all night for his amusement, keeping him covered the entire time with a loaded revolver.

A MYSTERIOUS CONCERN.

Its Proprietor Says he Coins Money from Dirt.

A Boston despatch says: There is a man in Melrose who claims to have discovered the art of coining money out of dirt, and he has been doing it some time. The business has been conducted in such a mysterious manner as to attract the attention of the secret service officials, but they have left his retreat mystified, but satisfied that he is not breaking the laws. The man's name is C. H. Washburn, and his inventive genius has enabled him to manufacture aluminum from ordinary clay. He keeps the method a profound secret, yet the facts have leaked out. For two years this mysterious work has been conducted at Red Mills, but none of the town's citizens have obtained the slightest hint of what is going on. Those in charge of the experiments are extremely reticent. It may be spoken of, however, as the "atomic theory," or the disintegration of one substance and the formation of another by a new combination of atoms. This combination has been secured by the action of certain chemicals. To purchase these chemicals without betraying the secret, and transport them to the factory, has been one of the most difficult features of Washburn's secret, yet he has done it successfully, and only the capitalists backing the inventor know how it is done. This mysterious shipping of chemicals and boxes with their unknown contents attracted the attention of the Government officials who are on the lookout for counterfeiters. Detective Canton was the first outsider to force his way within the barred door, and he found nothing, as Washburn and his assistants were engaged in a legitimate experiment. The Government agent, after a careful examination, concluded there was no cause for him to interfere. Mr. Washburn is 40 years old. After five minutes' conversation one is unlikely to soon forget him. "People think all sorts of things of me," he said. "Some imagine I am a counterfeiter, others that I illegally carry on a still. You might go to my laboratory now, and you would see nothing to shed light on what I'm doing. The secret is not to be discovered, but it is big enough to revolutionize commerce by and by. Why, I use water for fuel, and that is only one of many wonderful things I can do. It's too early to say anything yet. In two months I expect to have all in readiness, and then the public shall be enlightened." Washburn has the backing of prominent capitalists in Boston. He was formerly in charge of the Government secret service.

A CORNER ON HYSTERICS.

Sixteen Silk Mills Employees Make an Exciting Scene.

A Wilkesbarre despatch says: The silk mills in South Wilkesbarre were the scene of an unusual and exciting incident yesterday afternoon. One of the young women employed there was taken with an epileptic fit. She fell to the floor and the other girls gathered around and became most alarmed and excited. Suddenly one of them gave a wild shriek and fell over in violent hysterics. The excitement increased, and in a minute or so another young woman was seized with hysteria. The girls were now almost wild with nervous excitement, and one after another was seized with hysteric convulsions. Their cries and struggles as they lay quivering on the floor combined to make the scene an extraordinary and exciting one. Sixteen of the girls were thus prostrated. Medical aid was summoned, and the girls were revived and sent home.

A MASONIC ASYLUM.

The Munificent Gift of John Hodge, of Lockport, to the Order in New York.

A Lockport, N. Y., despatch says: Junior Grand Warden John Hodge, of the State Lodge of Masons, has donated the old Gov. Hunt place in this city, valued at $50,000, to the State Lodge for an asylum. The estate consists of a beautiful stone mansion on an eminence, with lodge, acres of lawn, barns, summer-houses and conservatories. There are 80 acres of land. The name of the place is Wyndham Lawn. This munificent gift of Mr. Hodge will be greatly appreciated, and may bring the State Asylum to Lockport.

Royal Blushes.

The Queen of Italy on recent occasions received guests seated in the chair of state just under a picture of her husband, the king. She was dressed in a severe robe of black velvet, which showed off her magnificent pearl necklace to the greatest advantage.

When the Princess of Wales opened the royal naval and military bazaar she was dressed in navy blue silk, with three bands of scarlet on the bodice and some touches of red visible on the skirt. The young Princesses Victoria and Maud, simply dressed in brown tailor-made costumes, were with their mother.

On the recent 70th birthday of the King of Denmark his daughter-in-law, the Princess Waldemar, presented to him a piece of embroidery made by herself representing in heraldic fashion the coats of arms of the principal members of the imperial and royal families of Russia, England, Hanover and Orleans, who have become united to that of His Majesty.

The King of Sweden was on his last birthday the recipient of a pretty little letter from a Swedish girl 6 years of age, who, beginning her epistle "Dear King," informed him that as his birthday coincided with her own she had written in order to congratulate him, particularly as she "loved her dear king so very much." He wrote back: "I thank the little Miss S. A., 6 years of age, for her letter of congratulation on my birthday, which is also hers. May she become a good woman, and thus afford pleasure to her King Oscar." The letter was accompanied by a handsome gold bangle.

A curious story anent the Japanese Emperor's opinion of dancing is told by the Tokio Dempo. That journal relates that recently a minister of state, while in audience, touched upon the subject of dancing, whereupon his majesty expressed the opinion that the prevalence of such a voluptuous custom was a sure indication of the decay of the nation. The State Minister in question, hearing his majesty express such strong views on the subject, upon retiring from his presence immediately gave private orders to those engaged in the construction of the new palace to dismantle the dancing saloons in the new building, which was already completed.

WHOSE SWEETHEART?

I had always been led to think that my sister Kate would marry Bert Evarts, for he was in the habit of running in to see us at all hours of the day, and they were together a good deal.

That was before Mr. Hope began to call at the house. He had been very kind to us after father died. Found work for us both and made presents to mother, but it made me uneasy to see him so much around my sister. I thought she was not behaving right toward Bert. It never occurred to me that she did not return his love.

One day Kate comes to me in a great state of excitement and lays a letter in my lap. I see that Bert has spoken at last, and my other suspicions are stilled. I open the letter and find an offer of marriage, signed "Mortimer Hope," requesting that if her answer is favorable his heart may be gladdened on his return by seeing his betrothal ring on Kate's finger.

"Kate," I exclaim, "I didn't think you could marry an old man for his money?"

"For his money!" she stammers, "why, I have been in love with him all along. Where have your eyes been?" looking at me in astonishment. Where have they been, indeed? I kiss her silently and steal into the garden, wondering how Bert will take the news. He is just coming in the gate, and a smile crosses his frank face as he sees me. The smile changes to gravity as I tell him of Kate's engagement. That is the only sign he gives that what I say has power to move him. After a while he says:

"Bonnie Kate—hers should be a happy fate. I hope and trust that it may be."

We walked along silently together for a while, then he said abruptly:

"Margaret, I am going away for a while. I came to-day to bid you all good-bye."

Ah! the brave fellow! As if I did not see through his transparent ruse. But not for worlds would I have him suspect that I know what is passing in his mind. So, carefully schooling my tones to quiet friendliness, I utter a few commonplaces of regret, and in a short time we are at the house.

Bert goes, and after a while Mr. Hope returns. We see him very often, and it is not long before I acknowledge to myself that notwithstanding he is 40, while Kate is but 18, her love and pride in him are only equalled by his adoration for her.

As I watch the lovers an intense longing comes into my heart to be loved myself—even as my sister is. But my glass shows me a pale, plain face and a small insignificant figure, and the conviction is forced upon me that not for such as I are this world's richest blessings.

One afternoon when Mr. Hope and Kate are out driving I wander down to the beach and clamber up the cliffs to the narrow ledge of lichen-covered rock, which is my favorite seat.

I sit and think, regardless that the moments are flying, and that before a great while to remain will be fraught with danger. I think of the past and of the future and of how lonely I shall be when my sister shall have gone to make the light of another home, and then my mind turns on Bert, struggling with his disappointment.

I draw my shawl closer around me and rise to go, but I find that while I have been thus absently musing, with noiseless, insidious approach the treacherous tide has risen.

In an instant a full realization of the terrifying truth bursts upon me. The water had covered the narrow foot-path by which I came, and is even now licking with hungry tongues of foam the rocks beneath me.

On my knees upon the cold stone I sink, and with upraised hands pray as I never have before. I am so young to die: "Oh Father in Heaven, have pity!"

Then I call aloud for help; it is my last hope and a feeble one, for I know that if they have not missed me no one could hear my voice above the roar of the elements.

The waters rise still further, until a wave sweeps its chilling embrace over my feet. Another; one more cry: "Help! help!"

A voice answers me; surely I recognize it.

"Margaret is that you? Where ——" The wind takes the sound away, but I know that God has heard my cry, and that deliverance is at hand.

Over the heaving waters to the jagged ledge of rock upon which I stand comes a boat. Then I feel myself snatched from my perilous position and strained for an instant close to a warmly beating heart, while Bert cries:

"Saved, my darling? Thank God that I was not too late!"

Then I know no more till I wake to consciousness, to find myself wrapped in my mother's and sister's loving embrace.

So it is that I find that it is little, plain I that Bert loves after all, and has loved all along, though, thinking from my habitual calmness of manner toward him (he attributed it to indifference) that I did not care for him, he had never dared to put his hope into words.

He had returned just as the storm had arisen, and I had been missed, and, knowing my fondness for the ocean, had sought me with a heart torn with anxious apprehension.

"All's well that ends well," and that it is well with Kate no one can doubt who sees her in her stately home, its beloved mistress and sovereign; while that it is also well with me I can safely affirm, since do not I reign a queen, too, in one noble, loving heart?

She Only Wanted Tea.

It seems that Catharine Gafney, who fell heir to $100,000 by the death of her bachelor brother in Chicago, was in the Blackwell's Island (N. Y.) Almshouse when found.

"Is there anything you want?" asked the lawyer when he had informed her of her good fortune.

"Yes," she answered quickly; "some tea. I only want plenty of tea."

"Well, you shall have all you can drink," said Mr. Stillwell, handing her $5.

"Oh, no; not all that. Fifty cents will be enough," she said, pushing the money away.

"Then," said a Boston reporter in his fine Athenian style, when reporting the laying of a corner-stone, "the holy priest, with impressive ceremony, blessed the stone in a solemn manner, which was 31 inches long, 17 wide and 13 deep."

"The Guest of the Evening."

Good acts are a fruitage ripe and rare
That bears not fingering. Let me then beware
To touch with venturous hand this curving branch,
Nor lean too heedlessly against the tree
Thus at its prime o'erladen heavily
With golden harvest of a stock so stanch,
Lest I by some rude shock at this light hour
Bring down the Virtues in a mellow shower.

To drop the figure, friends—let's be content
The guest shall fancy less than we have meant.
Speak not too closely of his special good:
That we are here tells more than trumpets could.
Our friendship holds its merits as the light
Holds the hid rainbow; storm that makes them bright.
The modest veil they wear I may not raise,
Lest he should blush to hear, and I to praise

NINETY-FIVE WORDS A MINUTE.

Extraordinary Type-Writing at Cincinnati—Result of the Competition Between Experts.

An extraordinary type-writing match which occurred at Cincinnati last week deserves the attention of all who are interested in rapid writing. The contest was between Frank E. McGurrin, of Salt Lake City, and Louis Traub, of Cincinnati. The match was for a purse of $500, one-half of which was put up by each contestant.

The conditions of the match were that the whole time to be occupied in writing was an hour and a half, forty-five minutes of which was devoted to writing from dictation, and forty-five minutes to writing from copy read by the operator. It was agreed that the matter to be written should be ordinary court proceedings selected by the judges and new to both operators.

The Cincinnati Enquirer thus describes the contest: Mr. McGurrin won the choice and chose dictation first, while Mr. Traub, who was in a separate room, wrote from copy. The judges also acted as time-keepers. Mr. McGurrin used a Remington machine, while Mr. Traub operated the caligraph. It was a brilliant performance on the part of both men. It was evident that Mr. Traub could operate faster than his machine would respond, and he was to that extent placed at a disadvantage.

Owing to the compactness of the Remington keyboard Mr. McGurrin was enabled to copy without looking at the keyboard at all, and he could have taken the dictated matter nearly if not as well blindfolded. He displayed marvellous speed, and won the purse, although Mr. Traub proved himself a worthy competitor.

During the contest Mr. McGurrin rested fourteen minutes and Mr. Traub fifteen minutes, the time allowed by the conditions of the match. The men finished at twenty minutes of 12. At the end Mr. McGurrin had written from dictation 4,294, or 95.55 words per minute; from copying 4,415 words, or 96.11 words per minute, making a total of 8,709 words. Mr. Traub wrote from dictation 3,747 words, or 83.26 per minute, from copying 3,191 words, or 70.91 per minute, his total being 6,938 words. Mr. McGurrin beats Traub on the whole time 1,771 words, or 25.38 per cent. An analysis of McGurrin's work shows that he made over seven and one-half strokes per second on an average. Traub's matter contained a considerable number of mistakes, while McGurrin's was comparatively free from errors, the majority of them trivial. The extent of McGurrin's wonderful performance will be better understood when it is stated that he wrote in an hour and a half as many words as would compactly fill four columns of the Enquirer.

Underground Pipes for Large Cities.

The increasing requirements of modern civilization are well illustrated by the extent and variety of underground pipe systems now employed in large cities. Thus there are in actual operation:

1. Pipes for conveying and delivering illuminating gas.
2. Pipes for conveying and delivering fuel gas.
3. Pipes for conveying and delivering drinking water and for fire purposes.
4. Pipes for conveying salt water for street sprinkling and for fire purposes.
5. Pipes for draining and carrying off sewage and surface water.
6. Pipes for delivering hot water under high pressure, for heating purposes and power.
7. Pipes for delivering cold water under high pressure, for power.
8. Pipes for delivering live steam under pressure, for heating purposes and power.
9. Pipes for delivering compressed air, for purposes of power and ventilation.
10. Pipes for producing power where required, by vacuum or suction, and for ventilation.
11. Pipes for conveying letters and packages, by compressed air and vacuum.
12. Pipes for regulating clocks, by compressed air.
13. Pipes for conveying mineral oils.
14. Pipes for electrical wires for electric lighting, electric railways, telephones and telegraphy.
15. Pipes for power ropes for driving machinery, moving street railway cars, etc. —Scientific American.

How to Live Long

"Storage of Life as a Sanitary Study" was the title of Dr. Richardson's address at the recent annual meeting of the Sanitary Institute. It cannot have been particularly comforting, even to the members of the institute itself, who may be supposed to act up to the level of sanitary laws. Dr. Richardson agrees with the old saw which links together the two ideas of a merry life and a short one. Everything, he thinks, which quickens the action of the heart beyond its natural force and speed is a stimulant, and must therefore lessen the vital force or "storage of life." Clearly the man who would outlive his fellows must abstain from most of those things which make life enjoyable. He may not even dwell in the unruffled calm of a luxurious ease, for all luxuries are bad, and shorten the natural term of life. The probable duration of this term, supposing the ideal sanitary life is lived, is to be ascertained, according to Dr. Richardson, by adding up the parental ages for three generations back, and taking their average by dividing by six.

If love laughs at locksmiths, he just "snickers right out" at bail bonds. Two eloping couples have jumped heir bail and gone on with their surreptitious honeymoon during last week.

Jawkins is a mean man. He says all the vacation he wants is—for his wife to go away on hers.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Where the grape vines refuse to grow cut them back late in the season and allow a new shoot to come up from the ground.

Prof. Henry, of Wisconsin, has found that a cow can be fed for 17 cents per day in that State, while the income from the butter made varied from 34 to 50 cents per day.

The farmer who thinks that to make money he must go where land is cheaper should consider well if he would not make more money by making the land deeper and richer.

London Garden says that the hybrid white Rosa rugosa, named Madame Georges Bruant, is semi-double and white in color. The expanded flowers are not so pretty as those of the parent.

Do not mistake copperas for sulphate of copper. The sulphate of copper is blue vitriol; copperas is sulphate of iron, or green vitriol. The copper sulphate is that used as an insecticide.

Cucumber vines should be made to trail on a bush, as the cucumbers can then be more easily picked, and they also grow long and of better shape than when the vines are left on the ground.

It is necessary in order to become a successful fruit grower that the person should observe the progress made by all plants in his section, and then endeavor to select from the best varieties.

It seems to be admitted that one can breed for eggs just as one can breed for milk or butter. An egg from a good layer will be more likely to produce a good layer than an egg from a poor layer.

Is it advisable to color butter in order to give it a marketable appearance? Is it not better to sell it on its merits alone, in order to induce a better feeding and secure quality as well as natural color.

Many farmers who have planted orchards on hill-sides have spent much time resetting and doctoring. Able writers say that a side hill where the water runs off quickly is the very place for the worms to hatch their young.

Animals appreciate a clean bed at night. It is not to their comfort to allow straw that has been saturated with urine to remain in the stalls. The best bedding is cut straw at present. Later on leaves can be used to advantage.

To secure good corn for next year the farmer should begin while the corn is growing to make observations. He should note and mark all prominent stalks, as the maturity, vigor and prolificacy are as important as the germination of the seed.

Skim-milk is excellent for pigs at all seasons. They will grow upon such diet when everything else fails. Give them all they will drink, and then if allowed root in the clover field after the crop has been cut they will need but little grain of any kind.

It is claimed that a good cow should give 6,000 pounds of milk per year, and that when she gives only 3,000 pounds she is kept at a loss. The 3,000 pounds represent about five quarts per day for 300 days. Every quart over that amount lessens the cost of the whole.

When cultivating on both sides of the hedge the hiding places of many weeds are destroyed. Hedges should be cultivated and kept clean the same as crops, as the cultivation not only permits of keeping them in better shape but increases in thickness and utility.

The Breeders' Gazette remarks that it is a pleasant reflection for the breeder of improved cattle that he is engaged in a business that cannot be, to any considerable extent, overdone, and that the growing requirements of the country will constantly outrun his efforts.

Many people believe that corn fodder has a higher nutritive value if cut when the grain is well formed. Dr. Collier has made more than 100 analyses of corn fodder in all stages of growth, which prove that the fodder actually increases in nutritive value until the ears become ripe.

Peter Henderson says that after the cabbage maggot (Anthomya brassicæ) is once developed no application will kill it that will not at the same time kill the plant. Drawing the earth away from the stems, thus destroying the eggs before they hatch, if carefully followed, will save the crop.

A corner of the barn, or an outbuilding devoted to the purpose of a workshop, in which a bench can be placed, will enable the farmer to do many small jobs that otherwise entail loss of time in sending to the woodworker or blacksmith. Only a few tools are required, and the cost will be but a small sum.

If the pear trees bear spotted or cracked fruit, the New York Tribune recommends a liberal dressing of wood ashes as a remedy. It should be scattered around the trunk and as far out on the ground as the branches extend. The trunk should be washed with strong soap suds.

Sow oats and peas together, and turn the crop under as soon as it covers the ground. A large amount of green manure may be grown and ploughed under in this manner, as it is not necessary to secure heavy growth. As fast as one crop is plowed under seed down to another.

When raising calves to be your future milch cows it is not necessary to keep them fat, but they should be made to grow as rapidly as possible. To do this give them the use of a good pasture as soon as they are weaned or old enough, and allow a good mess of ground oats at night. The shelter is also very important, as they should not be exposed at any season of the year.

Don't let your manure heap fire-fang during warm weather. When the interior has heated and the contents decomposed turn the heap over, throwing the coarser materials in the centre. If it is necessary to prevent over-heating before the heap can be handled make several holes in the centre with a crowbar and pour on quite an amount of cold water.

The younger an animal the greater the proportionate gain for the food consumed. When an animal matures it gains very slowly, and as it does not then grow the gain is in fat only. A young animal gains in meat, bone and fat. There is a point reached when the animal can be sold to the best advantage, but the farmer must keep a record of the cost, weigh his stock from time to time, and learn when to dispose of his stock.

Poultry that have the range of the farm after the crops are off really cost but little, and the eggs pay a fair profit, even when prices are low. It is not economical to keep the hens confined in summer. They can, by liberal feeding and good management, be made to pay well in confinement, but they should be made to utilize the food that would otherwise go to waste, which they will do if allowed to forage.

The digestive organs soon get out of order when grain is fed to the exclusion of grass or bulky food. This is true of all classes of stock and also of poultry. It is better to feed hay alone than to allow a surfeit of grain, especially in summer. A variety of food promotes digestion and prevents disease. It is also more economical to give a variety, as less food is then required.

The good points of an ox: A broad, intelligent face, with head up; small neck and horns; length of body; straight back, heavy shoulders, with full brisket, broad loins, hips and stifle; well thighed and flanked down; medium stomach; straight leg and rather short; heavy arm, wide gambrel joint, a good foot and small tail.

One of the principal causes of heaves in horses is the feeding of dirty or dusty hay. Ordinary clean hay can always be fed with safety if properly cut up, moistened and mixed with ground grain, but to feed the musty or dirty sorts is very injurious. Clover, owing to its liability to crumble, often gets dirty, even after storage, and should never be fed without being previously moistened.

The various elements of plant food found in the earth are attracted to the surface in the greatest quantities by keeping the soil mellow to a good depth, and this is done by deep plowing and sub-soiled. Besides the plant food contained in the earth, there is also stored in the air large amounts of plant food, the use of which by plants is greatly facilitated by keeping the soil loose and moist. Deep plowing, therefore, favors the appropriation of plant food under all possible conditions of soil and air.

The Rural New Yorker has been trying to ascertain among the correspondents what the three most popular grapes are. For the best three white grapes, Niagara received 12 votes out of 16; Lady, 10 votes; Empire State and Pocklington, 5 each; Duchess and Martha, 4 each; Hayes, 3, and twelve others one or two votes each. For the best red grapes Brighton stood first, Delaware second and Ulster Prolific third. For blue or black, Worden stood first, Concord second, Wilder third and Moore's Early fourth.

"Sheep," said a member of the New York Institute, "should be bred to that type that will yield the greatest quantity of wool. In 1840 the average weight of fleeces was less than two pounds, now many flocks average five to six pounds. Much improvement had been made from 1840 to 1860, but still greater ones since. The sheep which have been celebrated for giving the heaviest fleeces have been among the most wrinkly and greasy. A sheep having a good constitution, large carcase, close wool and oily fleece is my 'ideal.'"

The Farmers' Magazine says: The special food to cause hens to lay are secret preparations, but the following is considered a good formula. Two pounds each of bone, linseed cake, dried meat, oats, oyster shells, all finely ground; one ounce of sulphur, two ounces of red pepper, four ounces each of common salt and copperas and one ounce of bread soda. Mix the whole thoroughly, and allow a tablespoonful of salt three times a week to each fowl. As the cost of these substances will be but little, quite a large quantity can be made at once.

Household Hints.

To cleanse a soured sponge, use lemon juice and lukewarm water.

Oil of lavender sprinkled around a room will rid it of fleas.

Tubs and pails well rubbed with glycerine will not shrink.

Never feed a baby starchy food unless you desire to kill it.

See that all food is well cooked, eat plenty of ripe fruit, but not to excess, and if you travel where typhoid fever rages, drink coffee or tea only.

Have the rooms well ventilated, let in the pure fresh air every day and you will be troubled no more with morning headaches and lassitude.

A cistern is purified by placing a sack of charcoal in the water; if the latter gets very low and is no longer wholesome, boil it before using.

During the summer months meat is not a necessity, and pork and corned beef should be left severely alone. Many persons eat these meats and drink ice water all day, then wonder "what makes them feel so queer."

Sprinkle camomile flowers in the beds and the fleas will leave. To drive away fleas from dogs and cats, saturate a string with oil of pennyroyal and tie it around them. By repeating this application every twelve or fifteen days the fleas will leave.

Cream for coffee may be manufactured, and the forgery seldom detected, by beating the yelk of an egg with one tablespoonful of cold water, heating the milk and pouring over the egg, stirring constantly, and still stirring when the boiling hot coffee is added.

A Work of Twenty-Five Years.

It is not from America but from France that the colossal proposal comes for preparing a catalogue of 2,000,000 stars. This bold conception emanates from Dr. Gill, whose astronomical observations at the Cape and elsewhere have produced some notable results and who has put forth his scheme for a star catalogue on this gigantic scale in the organ of the bureau of the permanent international committee for the execution of a photographic map of the heavens. Dr. Gill contemplates the establishment of a central office under the direction of a chief, with assistant secretaries and a staff of measurers and computors. The work, it is calculated, would occupy twenty-five years. Admiral Mouchez, who defends the proposal against some rather fierce opposition which it has provoked, says that the proposed catalogue would cost $4,000,000.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

A curious sight was witnessed the other night at Delvois' Opera House, in Elgin, Ill. Forty young ladies, all dressed in red, white and blue, recited "Sheridan's Ride" by pantomime.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Paris is the city where suicides are the most numerous. The proportion of suicides to the total number of deaths is: In Vienna, 1 to 160; in London, 1 to 175; in New York, 1 to 189; in Paris, 1 to 72.

Ruin by rabbits, wholesale and irreparable ruin, has overtaken several of the ranchmen in New Zealand, where their sheep died of starvation on wide ranges of pasture, everything green and succulent having been devoured by the rabbits.

Lord Lamington has introduced a bill in the British Parliament declaring that, in view of the deceit practiced in the sale of foreign meats, all persons selling meat raised elsewhere than in Great Britain and Ireland, or the Channel Islands or Isle of Man, will be required to procure licenses and to display a sign announcing that "foreign meats" are for sale.

Rev. Samuel Jones, who is a kind of religious blizzard, is very level-headed on the subject of matrimony. He remarked in a recent sermon that "the best thing on this earth is a happy marriage and the worst thing an unhappy marriage. Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder, but whom the devil has joined let them go to Chicago.

Congressman Wheeler, of Alabama, has introduced a Bill into the United States Congress directing the officer in charge of the eleventh census to ascertain, report and publish the birth rate and death rate among poor whites and among negroes and by birds of every description and character. The object of this is to see if the statement that the death rate among mixed races is greater than among those of pure blood is true.

Patterson's Salvation Army is the real stuff. Three women held the door the other night, like Horatio at the bridge, "in the brave days of old," while the leader gathered in one or two young disturbers. One of the two roughs jumped from a window to an awning and got away. His companion, with the leader after him, managed to reach the window and jumped, but the women seized hold of his coat tails, and he hung suspended from the window. Finally he was released and made his escape.

Rider Haggard, the thrilling narrator of many adventures, has now experienced one himself. The steamer on which he sailed for Iceland, to look for materials for a new novel, was shipwrecked off the Orkneys, and the passengers had to clamber up some dangerously-precipitous shores before they were all safe again, as at last they were, not a single life being lost. We can imagine Haggard at the height of the excitement, rushing wildly around from passenger to passenger, giving instructions in tattooing wills on the backs of wives, children and friends before they tied on their life-preservers.

The highest priced labor in Holland is the diamond cutter,-the most proficient earning $22 a week, working twelve hours a day. Average wages there are, however, only $8.70 a week, twelve or sixteen hours a day. Bakers are paid $8.84 a week, paper makers $8.60, sugar makers, $4.82, painters, $6, engravers, $11. Well, living as an effect must be cheap since the products of these Hollanders can be sold to advantage even in the United States, and manufacturers are prepared to abandon protection and all that it implies and locate in Europe. In Holland, men at low wages and with cheap living are better off than the Americans with high wages and dear living.

His Proposal Rejected.

Some months since a gentleman had the misfortune to lose his wife, a literary lady of some reputation. After grieving for a number of weeks, a bright idea entered the head of the widower. He thought he could do something to lessen his sorrow, and for that purpose he called upon a lady of his acquaintance and requested to speak a word with her in private. Thinking she was about to receive a proposal, the lady prepared to listen with becoming resignation.

Myrrha, said he, with downcast eyes, as he took her hand, you knew my wife?"

"Yes."

"It is not good for man to be alone."

"Perhaps not."

"Did you ever reflect upon that part of the marriage service which requires couples to cleave unto each other until death parts them?"

I have.

I have often reflected upon it myself. Now death has parted me from my wife and I feel very lonely.

"I should think it likely.

"I think I must do something to restore to me her kind consolations and the memory of her many virtues.'

He pressed the lady's hand and sighed. She returned the pressure and also suffered a sigh to escape her.

"My dear," he said, after a long pause, "I'll come to the point at once. I have a proposal to make.

"A proposal!"

"Yes."

"Ah!" she said, blushing and covering her face with her hands.

"I have concluded to write my wife's biography. Now, I have but little skill in literary exercises, and if you will correct my manuscript and write the headings of the chapters I will give you $5."

She sprang from his side and her eyes flashed with anger.

"I'll see you hanged first and then I won't, you—you—"

She left the room, not being able to express her rage. The widower sighed, took his hat and went home. —Detroit Free Press.

The Echo of a Dinner Bell.

Police Justice—Foolish man, why did you smash that plate-glass window, when you surely knew that you must go to jail for it?

Culprit (desperately)—Well, Judge, since the warm weather commenced I've been living in a fashionable boarding-house, and I'm just hunger-mad from a diet of napkins and silver. Please send me where I can get something to eat.—Puck.

An Allentown, Pa., firm of tailors employs a pretty young lady as collector. If a debtor murmurs something about being short of money and hints at "calling again" she smiles sweetly at him and takes a seat from which she seldom rises without the money due in her hand.

—Women who gamble might be appropriately called tiger lilies.

OUR LATE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The Officials Found Him a "Demon of Detail."

Lord Lansdowne, the late Governor-General, was a very punctilious man, and had quite a reputation for his mastery of details. He used to inquire very carefully into any account before him, and against every item that he disapproved of or did not understand down went a blue pencil mark. He used to have all his pencils sharpened for him. On one occasion the chief messenger neglected to perform this duty. The same morning the messenger was afflicted by a visit from the Governor-General, who held a pencil with a broken tip. "Sharpen that pencil," said he. The messenger did so, and never forgot his duties again. Lord Lansdowne had a specialty for criminal cases. He would inquire carefully into all applications which were forwarded for executive clemency, and when not satisfied would ask for further information. In this respect he was approached by Lord Lorne. It is related of the latter that during the time Minister of Justice Macdonald held office he recommended a case for mercy. The Marquis of Lorne was not satisfied with the bare recommendation, and sent back for further particulars. The whole of the facts had, therefore, to be forwarded. Lord Lansdowne used always to keep an arm chair on his right hand for the use of Ministers. Occasionally the caretaker in cleaning the room would disturb its position. The alteration never failed to be noticed by the Governor-General.—Ex.

Leasing Prisoners.

At the late meeting of the National Prison Association at Boston Rev. F. H. Wines, in the course of a paper on American Prisons in the Tenth Census said:

The leasing of prisoners to private persons for a pecuniary consideration is the greatest blot upon our American prison system. It is, in so far as it goes, a virtual abdication of the direct responsibility of the Government for the treatment to be accorded to convicts. The best that can be said of it is that the States which have adopted it do not know what better to do. The leased prisoners are all in the Southern States, namely: Georgia, 1,504; in Texas, [illegible]; in Alabama, 784; in North Carolina, 405; in Mississippi, 353; in Virginia, 918; in Florida, 185; in Tennessee, 154; in South Carolina 145, and in Louisiana, 72. Some of them are leased by the State authorities for graver crimes, and some by the counties for simple misdemeanors. Their condition is for the most part deplorable in the extreme, especially in the county chain gangs. Of this class of convicts 4,404, or nine-tenths, are negroes; and it is urged in extenuation of the system that the States named are unable to furnish suitable labor for negroes inside of prison walls. It is also said that the negro lacks pride of character, and that he does not regard confinement in a penitentiary as particularly disgraceful, nor does he dread it as white prisoners do. The system is, however, so inherently vicious—involving, as it does, an enormous death rate and an extraordinary number of successful attempts at escape—that it does not meet the approval of the better class of citizens in the Southern States, and it is undoubtedly doomed to speedy extinction.

The Cause of Cancer.

A paper on cancer in the Lancet, Dr. James Braithwaite, of Leeds, discusses the possible causes of proliferation, or rapid growth of the malignant cells. The great change in the habits of the population in regard to food seems to have some connection with the increased frequency of cancer. The whole population consumes more meat than it formerly did, and the upper and most of the middle classes dine late. In the case of the latter this implies the eating of meat three times a day. Dr. Braithwaite lays emphasis on the fact that cancer has nearly doubled during the last twenty-five years, whilst the mortality from consumption has become very much less. In the well to do parts of London the disease is common; in the poorer and hard working parts it is rare. It may be argued that in the poorer parts people do not live long enough to have the disease to which old age is undoubtedly predisposed; but to full a diet of meat does most harm in old age. Cancer is very rare in herbivorous animals and comparatively common in carnivorous animals. But besides this suggestion of cause there is another, that owing to greater anxiety and pressure in business life the resisting power to the change of tissue has been lowered. In limestone districts the mortality among farmers from cancer is less than in other districts, and it is suggested that the reason is that in limestone regions farmers are more prosperous, and so have less anxiety.

A Plague of Mice

Australia is suffering from a plague of mice. It is said that from Coomebarabran to Coolah there is hardly a residence that is not troubled in this way. The mice come in droves, and eat everything in the place. On one station, 2 shillings per 100 was offered for their destruction, and during a single night 2,000 were killed. The price then went down to 1 shilling. In one hotel in three nights 1,000 were killed with a mixture of flour and strychnine. At another place the mice ate the whole carcase of a freshly killed sheep in one night, leaving only the bones by the morning. At another station a man was kept whose sole duty was to keep the mice away from the provender during the time the horses were eating it, and this the man found a difficult task. The week before the races at Coolah the vermin got into the horse boxes at the station and actually ate the bandages from the legs of the racehorses. Sleeping people are said to have been attacked by them. The crops were being destroyed. The mice climbed up the stalks and ate the cobs. Many fields, acres in extent, had been abandoned, the corn being eaten completely away. People were at their wits' end to devise the best means for destroying the pest. The mice burrowed in the fields like rabbits in miniature warrens.

At Saratoga.

"Maw, how I perspire!"

"Dear me, Clara, don't let me hear you use that vulgar expression again.'

"Do you want me to say 'sweat?'"

"No, you wretched vulgarian; you must say you are bedewed with heat.' The first thing you know people will say we haven't got no style about us.'

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, AUG. 16, 1888.

OUR IMPRESSIONS.

We came to Flesherton with a knowledge of some of its people and of its situation, but without a deep insight into the grand possibilities in store for it in the future, or the real advantages which it enjoys in the present. In this matter we have been very agreeably surprised—in fact, astonished. It is pleasant to have this to say, and we say it in all candor. No one who has not lived here for some little time can properly understand this. Centrally located, in the heart of the county, it enjoys excellent facilities for drawing to it a trade unexcelled by any inland town in the county. It has good business houses and excellent thoroughfares leading to it; consequently it has the advantages of a first-class market. Since we first set eyes upon this village, over twenty years ago, it has grown out of all recognition. And yet, in looking over an old directory of the County, published in 1860, we notice the names and advertisements of some of Flesherton's prominent business men of to-day. Why is this? Simply because it has been and is a healthy place for business men to live in. Flesherton was not hatched in an incubator, and hoisted into its present position by a speculative mania. Its growth has been "slow and sure, but healthy, yer honor," like Pat's carbuncle.

It is a picturesque little town, too, looking at it from an artistic standpoint, with its pretty churches, magnificent school and neat streets, and can be made still more beautiful with little effort, as the population increases and grows wealthier. We are one of the Fleshertonians now, and after three weeks' residence we can say emphatically that we are glad of it!

CROP PROSPECTS.

Never howl—it is wolfish, not Christian. A few weeks ago there was scarcely an individual in our land who did not howl for rain. That Providence who ruleth all things has endowed the community at large with enough and to spare, notwithstanding our gloomy forebodings. Let us take a "cast" over our correspondence:

ARTEMESIA.

Hay, light; fall wheat, avorage, moderate, with some failures and some excesses such as Thomas Kells, Esq., and his neighbors, who will reap at least 35 to 40 bushels per acre. This shows that the glory of our country has not departed as a grain-growing district, but that a higher knowledge of tillage is the main requisite. Spring grains and root crops are all that could be desired.

GLENELG

The eastern part of Glenelg suffered from the drought, both in grass and cereals. However, as a cattle-producing township it has no superior; consequently its revenues will not fall short.

OSPREY.

This township, taken all through, has a fair average yield of farm products. Their hay crop was moderately good, and grain crops fair to full comes up with a good showing of both hay and grain. Fall wheat is successfully grown upon lands that a few years ago were thought to be worthless. Root crops are abundant.

PROTON

MELANCTHON.

The northern portion of Melancthon will apply to Proton in every respect.

EUPHRASIA.

In some portions of Euphrasia the wheat, pea and hay crops are considerably above average, and farmers as a general rule are well satisfied with their prospects.

A soap agent secured orders in Wiarton last week for $280 worth of soap. That is a dollar's worth for every man, but we guess they need it.

The Markdale Standard egotistically remarks that, as their band was at a garden party, is was impossible for them to be present at the band tournament in Walkerton to compete for the prize. We always thought garden parties were good for something, and now we know what it is. Walkerton people ought to present a medal to the thoughtful individual who engineered that garden party.

The election in Halton next Tuesday is expected to be a red-hot one. Halton was one of the first electoral districts to adopt the Scott Act, which it six months ago repealed. Whiskey now flows as free as water all over the county, but although Halton has repealed the Scott Act, Prohibition is one of the liveliest issues of the present campaign. Both of the candidates have sat in the House of Commons, and both have been unseated. Mr. John Waldie floats the Liberal flag and Mr. David Henderson, who held the seat during last session, but since displaced, nails his colors to the mast head of the Old Man. Mr. Henderson's majority over Mr. McLeod at the last election was 140. The coming contest will be a close one. Evidently it is a case of whiskey or no whiskey. Shall the people go dry or shall they permit the licensed vending of wet goods in their midst? If history does repeat itself, the inhabitants of Halton won't go dry; Scott Act or no Scott Act, Mr. Henderson has put himself on record as in favor of Prohibition, while Mr. Waldie won't declare himself.

BASEBALL.

The best game of baseball ever witnessed on the Flesherton diamond was played here on Saturday between the home and Priceville clubs. For the first four innings the score stood 2 to 2, and the playing was exceptionally brilliant for amateur clubs; in fact we have seen professional clubs play much worse. During the first half of the fifth inning the umpire gave an erratic decision and the visitors scored four runs with two men out. The umpire admitted his error, but it was too late to remedy it. This disheartened our boys, and they steadily fell behind, until, at the end of the ninth inning, the score by innings stood:

Flesherton.....1 0 1 0 1 0 1 1 1—6
Priceville.....2 0 0 0 5 1 5 4 0—17

Considering that our team has only been organized two weeks, the way they held the visitors down to so small a score was subject matter for surprise. We considered the game of Saturday a grand success, and predict a much closer one next time, when our boys have got their muscle up.

NOTES.

The game throughout was remarkable for the small number of hits got off either pitcher

Priceville has a good ball tosser, but Clark, of ours, throws much fairer ball.

There were only about three good hits made in the whole game.

Clayton's catch to right field, and Clark's at centre field were the features of the day.

Russell makes an elegant first base, but made one or two costly fumbles

Williams picked four fouls off the bat in grand style. He knows a thing or two about catching.

Flesherton did better work in the field than Priceville, but the latter got there all the same.

The game was put through in exactly league time—two hours.

A. Watson, of Priceville, met with a bad accident. He is quite willing to inform enquirers as to the nature of it.

Don't fill the system with quinine, to prevent or cure Fever and Ague. Ayer's Ague Cure is the specific for this disease, and leaves no poisons to produce dizziness, deafness, headache, or other disorders.

General News.

The Canghuawaga Indian murderer has been arrested.

General Sheridan was burried at Washington on Saturday.

A through line of railroad now connects Paris with Constantinople.

Hon. Wilfred Laurier spoke at the political picnic at Oakville on Monday.

Laborers on the South Norfolk railway struck for an increase of pay on Saturday.

Two hundred people were drowned at Valparaiso, Chili, by the bursting of a reservoir.

The children's jubilee tribute, amounting to £6,000, has been presented to the Queen.

Gendral Middleton goes to British Columbia about the latter end of this month.

Hon. John Haggart has been sworn in as Postmaster-General and is now in South Lanark.

Sir George Stephen has resigned the presidency of the C. P. R., and leaves this week, with Lady Stephen, for England.

General Middleton has received word from an officer in the Skeena expedition that the men are doing well and are likely to return soon.

John M. Thomas, a company hand, 80 years old, at work at the head of shaft No. 1 of the Susquehanna Coal Company at Nanticoke, Pa., Saturday, stepped from the platform upon which he was standing and fell headlong down the shaft, a distance of over 900 feet, to the bottom. Every bone in his body was broken, and the flesh was rendered as soft as jelly, making it impossible to tell the poor man's head from the trunk, so terribly was it mashed. He was to have been married on Sunday.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Anniversary sermons in connection with the Methodist Church will be preached here next Sabbath. There will be a tea-meeting on the Monday evening following.

Mrs. Chisholm, of Manitoulin, is visiting her parents here, Mr. and Mrs. H. Armstrong.

Farmers who have fall wheat in this vicinity say it is a good crop this year, and owing to the recent rains the other crops will be good.

Miss Lizzie and Maria Hutchinson are visiting friends in Berlin.

Last Monday night, about 10 o'clock, some person or persons unknown tried to set fire to Mr. C. Johnston's barn. Mr. McKay was the first to notice the fire. He immediately aroused Mr. Johnston, and they hastened to the barn just in time to quench the flames, which were rapidly spreading. Mr. Johnston tracked the incendiary for some distance, but so far no more trace of the party has been discovered.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 75 to	4 75
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 50	0 55
Oats	0 45	0 45
Peas	0 60	0 60
Butter	0 15	0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 15	0 15
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 50
Pork	6 50	6 50
Hay per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	19	23
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 60

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting Cornwells Improved Self fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CLAWSON AND SENECA

FALL WHEAT FOR SALE. Apply to
THOS. KELLS, Vandeleur.

OWEN SOUND

Collegiate Institute

WILL OPEN ON

Monday, 27th August, 1888

Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the

Best Equipped School in Ontario.

Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and law and Medical Examinations.

At the Examinations, 1888, all the University Matriculation Candidates were successful, four obtaining honors, and one a proficiency scholarship. The Candidates at the recent examination from this School obtained

The Largest Number of Teachers' Certificates in the Province.

FEES—Full Term, $3

Apply to
F. W. MERCHANT, Principal,
or D. R. DOBIE, Sec. Board of Education.
Owen Sound, Aug. 13th

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island, the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks; and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works, at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the St. Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE 25TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal And for the deepening and enlargement of the summit level of the Cornwall Canal The construction of a new lock at each of the three interior lock stations on the Cornwall Canal between the town of Cornwall and Maple Grove, the deepening and widening of the channel-way of the canal; construction of bridges, etc.

A map of each of the localities, together with plans and specifications of the respective works, can be seen on and after TUESDAY, THE 11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, at this office, for all the works, and for the respective works at the following mentioned places

For the works at Galops at the lock keeper's house, Galops. For deepening the summit level of the Cornwall Canal, at Dickenson's Landing, and for the new locks, etc, at lock stations Nos. 18, 19 and 20, at the Town of Cornwall. Printed forms of tender can be obtained for the respective works at the places mentioned

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same, and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $6,000 must accompany the tender for the Galops Canal Works, and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $2,000 for each section of the works on the summit level of the Cornwall Canal, and for each of the lock sections on the Cornwall Canal a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $1,000

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS cheques will not be accepted must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted. The deposit receipts thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender

By Order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 23 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts. 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's Building. Residence, Wm Wright's.

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.

PRICEVILLE

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, Munro's Hotel 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and fitted in the latest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON
A. A. CHESLEY Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co., and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.
On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAYCOCK,
Flesherton

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact every thing in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices

Miscellaneous.

Houses to Rent — or For Sale!

Two good Houses—one brick and one frame—with lots and fruit-bearing orchards, to rent or for sale cheap. Good brick Baker's Oven in connection with frame house. Both buildings lately repaired and refitted throughout. For particulars, apply at THE ADVANCE office or to the undersigned SAMUEL KINGSTON
311 Proprietor

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

FLESHERTON

Implement

Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broadcast Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Wagons,	Iron Harrows,
[illegible]	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Sleighs,	Plows,
Cutters,	Scufflers,
Fanning Mills,	Turnip Drills,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,	Land Rollers.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

NOTICE!

To Farmers and the public in general.

Now that the Public Schools are about to open, I would respectfully call your attention to our

Full and Complete Stock OF

SCHOOL SUPPLIES!

IN ALL CLASSES.

CALL AT

W. RICHARDSON'S

DRUG STORE

Also Lubricating Lardine Oils for Machines.

VOTERS' LIST,

1888.

Municipality of the Township of Artemesia.

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of "The Voters' List Act," the copies required by said sections to be so transmitted or delivered of the list made pursuant to said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipality at Elections for members of the Legislative Assembly and at Municipal Elections, and that said list was first posted up at my office at Flesherton, on the 4th day of August 1888 and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list and if any omissions or any errors are found therein, to take immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

WM. J. BELLAMY,
Clerk of the said Municipality.

Dated this 7th day of August, A.D., 1888.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne Ont.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Friday last was Durham's civic holiday.

Owing to drouth the fruit crop in the Parry Sound district is a total failure.

Chesley is to have a village bell to awaken the sleepy denizens in the morning.

Durham's band had the "gall" to compete at Walkerton in the second class band competition.

On Friday evening, Denis, the youngest child of Eugene Murphy, of Mt. Forest, was drowned in a cistern belonging to F. McCulloch.

Hutton & Carr's flour mill, and Mr. Jackson's residence, at Wingham, were consumed by fire last Wednesday. The loss is estimated at $38,000, with insurance of $12,000.

Mr. Thos. Kells, a leading farmer in Artemesia, had 16 acres of barley lying cut at the time of the heavy rain last Friday, which will depreciate its value fully twenty-five per cent.—[Markdale Standard.

Next week the World will not whirl. Farmers are too busy to read papers just now anyway, and we have some jobs on hand we'd like to hustle out before next spring. And hence the whyness.—[Beeton World.

A young lady named Annie Greer, 19 years of age, was brutally and criminally assaulted by two young villains at Mount Forest, a week ago last Sunday. The names of the young fiends are Alex. McCannell and Albert Hall. The latter has been arrested, while the former is still at large.

During the thunder storm of last Friday evening, the large frame barn on Mr. T. W. Myers' farm, Amaranth, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. About twenty tons of hay, a democrat waggon, one buggy, a pair of bob-sleighs, one cutting box, two fanning mills, &c., were also destroyed. Insurance about $500 or $600.—[Shelburne Economist.

Harry Kribbs, a four-year-old son of Mr. L. Kribbs, city editor of the Empire, and who is on a visit at his grandfather's, Mr. Cliff, narrowly escaped drowning last Saturday. He was playing around the pond at Crawford & McCracken's saw mill when he tumbled into the water and got under the logs. Fortunately another young lad named Willie Wills was at hand and he rescued the little fellow just in the nick of time.—[Durham Chronicle.

During the storm of Friday last a sort of cyclone passed over the corner of Collingwood township, carrying away all in its track. The width of the devastated district was not more than four rods, but the violence of the wind was very great. To those who saw it, it appeared like an immense black column marching across the country, tearing down buildings, rooting up crops, sweeping away fences and leaving ruin in its trail. On lot 16 on the 3rd con. of Collingwood township, it unroofed Mr. Code's barn, and Mr. Rock's house. On the next lot it carried the roof off a house belonging to Mr. Graham. It then struck into the swamp, twisting off trees and leaving the stumps standing about ten feet high. The crops were partially uprooted and tangled in every direction.—[Collingwood Bulletin.

Mr. C. Johnson's farm buildings, two miles north of this village, were set on fire by an incendiary last Monday night about 10 o'clock. Mr. McCrae who had been down to the cheese factory was returning to the house, when his lantern went out, and looking towards the barn he saw a light which at first appeared like a lantern inside. A closer inspection revealed the fact that the inside of the barn was in flames, and rushing to the house he awakened Mr. Johnston, who, with Mr. McCrae, rushed to the barn, with pails of water, not stopping to adjust his wearing apparel beyond his night clothes. On entering the barn they found a lot of straw in flames which reached the roof, but by dint of hard work, which was only just in the nick of time, they got the flames under control and found cloths steeped in coal oil where the fire originated. There were over 40 tons of hay in the building, which was joined to the driving shed, stables and other barns. The incendiary escaped by the back of the barns and owing to a very slight shower his tracks were observed in the dust. He was evidently a big man but has not been captured.—[Dundalk Herald.

Artemesia Council.

Council met in the Township Hall, Flesherton, on Monday, 6th inst. All the members were present.

By-laws 423, to levy County and Township rates for 1888, and 424, to levy school trustees' rates, were introduced by Mr. Sharp and passed.

Moved by Messrs. McArthur and Sharp—That this Council ask Mr. McKee to be present at next Council meeting to give a statement regarding the misunderstanding between Mr. McKee, as commissioner, and Geo. Boyce, contractor.

Moved by Messrs. Boland and Sharp—That the Clerk notify Glenelg Council of obstruction in the Saugeen River, on town line, Artemesia and Glenelg, in the village of Priceville, requesting them to appoint one of their Council to act with Mr. McArthur, who is hereby appointed to enquire into the same.

Moved by Messrs. McArthur and Sharp—That the Reeve issue his order for the following accounts: A. R. Fawcett, printing, $64.25; Wm. Davis, 107 loads gravel at 5c, $5.35; John Highgrave, 67 loads do., 5c, $3.35.

Moved by Messrs. Cairns and Sharp—That the usual grant of $25 be paid to the treasurer of the township agricultural society of Artemesia for the year 1888.

It was decided to offer a reward of $100 for the conviction of the person or persons who set fire to Mr. Hogg's mill.

This being all the business to be disposed of, the Council adjourned.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Harvesting has commenced in this section, but is said to be a very light crop. A meeting was called here on Saturday by a gentleman named Wallace, for the purpose of organizing a Farmers Institute and also a monthly fair for the purchase and sale of cattle, sheep, etc.

One of our merchants, who is noted for picking up and entertaining strangers, succeeded a few days ago in having a guest of a speculative nature, and sold him a quantity of spectacles and other small wares, to be paid for in a short time. The guest left with the goods. It then occured to the merchant that everything might not be all right, and after a few days he found his man at Singhampton and recovered what was unsold, and returned home happy.

The quarterly services in the Methodist church drew a very large attendance on Sunday last.

Rev. J. W. H. Milne is home on a visit to friends, and expects shortly to take charge of a congregation in Halton county.

John Clinton, of Manitoba, is visiting his friends here. He speaks in the highest terms of the prospects of his adopted home.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Photos,
Photos,
Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. We also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery, where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be obtained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON

HEARD'S

Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

THIS SILVER-PLATED INSTRUMENT

Can be used by any member of the family from Infancy to Old Age with perfect safety.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age.

Price - - $3.

ORIENTAL

CATARRH IMPOSSIBLE UNDER ITS INFLUENCE

The only catarrh remedy ever offered to the public on 15 days trial; a written guarantee given with each instrument. W. T. BAER & Co., 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

ACTINA

THE GREAT EYE AND LUNG RESTORER

Actina is not a medicine or a disgusting lotion or powder ball, but a Self-generating Vapor, easily and pleasantly applied at all hours, times and places. Actina No. 2.—Quickly relieves and thoroughly cures all Throat and Lung diseases.

Actina No. 3.—Positively cures all diseases of the Eye, Cataract, Granulated Eye-lids, Inflamed Eyes, near and far sightedness. THE EYE TREATED WHILE CLOSED.

THE ACTINA IS SOLD UNDER OUR WRITTEN GUARANTEE ON 15 DAYS TRIAL. Enclose stamp for handsomely illustrated book and health journal. W. T. BAER & CO., 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

MEDICATED ELECTRIC BELT

Medicated for all diseases of the blood and nervous system. Ladies Belt $4 for female complaints it has no equal. Mens Belt $3, combined Belt and Suspensory $5.

CURES Seminal weakness, errors of youth, lost manhood, night emissions, Etc. The only appliances giving a direct current of Electricity to the parts. Can be worn night or day without inconvenience. Hundreds of Testimonials on file from those cured of female diseases, pains in back and hips, head and limbs, nervous debility, general debility, lumbago, rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, sciatica, disease of the kidneys, spinal disease, torpid liver, gout, leucorrhœa, catarrh of the bladder, sexual exhaustion, seminal emissions, asthma, heart disease, dyspepsia, constipation, erysipelas, indigestion, impotency, piles, epilepsy, dumb ague and diabetes. Send stamp for handsomely illustrated book and health journal. Correspondence strictly confidential. Consultation and electrical treatment free. Agents wanted everywhere. Pat. Feb. 28th, 1887.

Cures Guaranteed

Medicated Electric Belt Co., 155 Queen St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8.

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER.

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

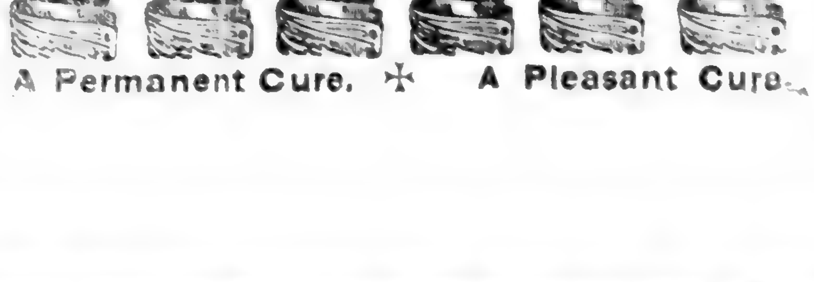
Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

[illegible]

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

Of Perfect Form.

(By Herman Meade.)

I saw her where the shadows lie
  Beside a shelvy stream;
Where the yellow bees go buzzing by,
  And starry daisies gleam.

Now filmy fabrics, furbelowed,
  Concealed her symmetry;
Her only gown the light, which showed
  Her perfect form to be.

Those shining limbs so fitly dressed,
  Those big brown eyes and hair,
Had foiled an artist at his best,
  And filled him with despair.

And her's, such quaintly, quiet ways,
  Illumed by soft alarms;
What could I do but gaze and gaze—
  And gaze upon her charms!

But why those chilling glances, love—
  That frown upon your brow?
You, surely, are not jealous of
  A first-prize Jersey cow.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

There was something unutterably touching to Guy Stuart in Hugh Glynn's expression when he looked at his wife, it was so full of passionate adoring love; but it had so much humility and reverence, such intense sorrow and compassion, that Shirley herself could hardly meet it with anything like composure; and Guy's lips quivered as he watched her trying to smile as she lifted Hugh's head and held the cordial to his lips with a pitying tenderness which was almost maternal in its deep compassion. She had never seemed so beautiful in the eyes of these two men, who had loved her with such a fatal passion, as now, when the lustre of her beauty was dimmed and faded by sorrow.

"I wish you would rest a little, Shirley," said Sir Hugh, entreatingly. "You are quite worn out. Leave me with Guy, dear, for a time. Do you know, old friend," he went on, "that I have been happier during the few days I have been concealed here than I have been for many a long year—except on that day which began so well and ended so terribly? If she had loved me as deeply as I loved her, she could not have been kinder and gentler. And yet," he continued, unsteadily, "it is but heaping coals of fire upon my head."

She touched his lips with her finger with a little entreating gesture, and he smiled slightly.

"Leave us, my dearest," he said tremulously. "Try to sleep for an hour. Ah, how many nights it is since you have had any rest!"

"Go, Shirley," Guy put in gently. "Remember how much depends on you keeping well just now—and even an hour's rest will refresh you."

She smiled faintly as she turned away and passed into the little sitting-room, where she sunk down into an arm-chair, far more exhausted even than she knew by the terrible anxiety she had undergone, and which seemed so wonderfully lessened by Guy's sharing it. For a few moments she leaned back, thinking of all the misery and suffering, and shuddering at the thought of what was yet to come; and her fatigue overcame her, her eyes closed, and she sunk into the heavy sleep of prostration.

Meanwhile, in the inner room, the two men who had been friends and bitter enemies, and were friends once more, were talking earnestly in low broken voices; and Sir Hugh was telling his story, with long pauses between, caused by the weakness; and Stuart listened with an aching heart, feeling that for every sin his companion had committed such misery must have atoned.

"You must let me begin at the beginning, old fellow," Hugh said, in his feeble voice. "It will avail nothing to hide any of my sin and shame from you, and perhaps it will make you excuse me a little; although, indeed, you, in your uprightness and honor, Guy, can hardly understand how low I have fallen."

"Can I not? Ah, you hardly know how low my anger made me fall, Hugh! I am a murderer in intention, although not in deed—for I could have killed you in my heart."

"No wonder!" Sir Hugh said sorrowfully. "But I loved her so madly, and I was so wildly jealous that you had succeeded where I had failed. It maddened me too to know that your love was so much purer and better than mine. I felt that had the cases been reversed, you would have gone away and left her to me, concealing your sorrow in order to spare her pain. Yes, beyond hatred, beyond jealousy, beyond every other feeling, was that awful sense of humiliation; it galled me into madness. Beside your love, mine looked so worthless. You would have given your life for her happiness; I would—and did—sacrifice her happiness to my passion. Ah, it is not only now that I see this, Guy; although now, when the end is so near, I see it yet more clearly! The sin stands out in all its blackness."

"Dear old fellow, do not think of me now," Guy pleaded gently, his eyes dim as he looked down at the pale face and emaciated form which had once been so handsome and strong. "Surely it is not necessary!"

"I should like you to know it. Guy; it will make you think more gently of me in the time to come, and you will much more readily forgive the sin against yourself."

"I forgave long ago, Hugh—fully and freely."

"Yes, I know you did," he answered, a faint smile irradiating his pallid face. "Still I want to tell you, so that you may know that, if I sinned, I have suffered. Even when I congratulated you on your engagement," he went on, after a pause, "I was resolved to steal her from you if I could, and I racked my brain to know how I could succeed. That very night I told her how madly I loved her; I fancied that my wealth—you were a poor man then, Guy, although you were rich soon after—would tempt her; that, like many other women, she was to be bought. I am afraid my previous experience of the sex had taught me to think of them as mercenary"—with a faint bitter smile; "but I do not know whether I hated or loved her most when she turned to me and said so proudly that you would not so betray your friend. Well, I tried to disguise my anguish; but Latreille—Heaven knows that I would not speak in anger now!—tempted me. He told me how Shirley's mother had been inveigled into a Scotch marriage, and how easy it was to steal a wife in Scotland; and from the time I heard that story, Guy, I never rested from seeking an opportunity of obtaining the same power over Shirley as another miserable traitor and coward like myself had obtained over her mother. And the opportunity soon came. You were called away, which removed one obstacle from my path, and then came her brother's letter, which she opened in my presence. Do you remember, old fellow, that almost your last words to her had been that she was to trust me? I reminded her of them, poor child, in her misery You know how I drove her to Dumfife and passed there as her husband; the little note which was such conclusive evidence in my favor she wrote me quite unaware how greatly it would tell against herself. I knew, and Latreille knew, that when we left the inn she was my wife by the laws of Scotland; but she, I need hardly tell you, was as ignorant as a child of what had been done. When I left her at the Court, I put my lips to her cheek with a laughing little speech which she did not understand; but she shrunk from me with a little cry of pain which made me feel ashamed and furious at once. Then I went away. The accident I met with prostrated me for weeks, and the preparations for your marriage went on; and, when I could spare Latreille to go and see what was doing, the wedding-day was fixed, and I had—Yes, I know that the rest need not be told. But, Stuart, if I could have undone it then, I would. Great Heaven, shall I ever forget Shirley's face when she shrunk from me? I think I saw then for the first time the heinousness of the sin I had committed."

He fell back upon the pillows, faint and exhausted, and Guy brought water and bathed his temples and raised him on his arm as tenderly as a woman would have done, and, as he revived, he looked up and smiled faintly into the grave face.

"Those were not happy years," he continued brokenly, "how could they be? How could the poor girl be happy with a man whom she did not respect? She failed in none of her duties, but I know how she suffered. How often have I watched the misery on her face when she thought herself unobserved, and the tears which lay upon her cheeks when she had cried herself to sleep! Never, until you had spoken to her, had she treated me with anything but coldness, and I could not complain. I knew that I deserved even worse at her hands. My poor Shirley! And then you came back, Guy, and you forgave me so nobly and generously, and after a time you induced her to think more gently of me and to forgive me. That night at Easton—ah, shall I ever forget it?—she told me that she had forgiven me, that she would try—poor darling!—to be a better wife to me and I cried like a child to think that there might be happy days in store for us both—thanks to you."

"Dear old Hugh—poor fellow!"

"I had deserved to be miserable, Guy. Even now my punishment has not equalled my sin," he said pitifully. "Let me continue. I had dismissed Latreille as soon as Shirley came to Maxwell. She was ill for weeks, as you know. Think, old fellow, how sad it was for one who loved her to know that the illness was all caused by him. When she was better, we went abroad, I heard no more of Latreille for some time. I had paid him liberally for aiding and abetting my villainy—I must call it so, Guy—there is no better word—and he was spending the money and enjoying himself; but a couple of years after he reappeared, demanding, rather than begging, assistance. Several times I gave him sums of money; but at last, wearied with his importunity, I refused. He then threatened me; if I did not accede to his demands, he would publish the whole story of the Scotch marriage and my treachery, and disgrace me. I have always been a coward, then. Again and again I gave him money, at times large sums, and he grew more and more insolent when he saw the cowardly wretch with whom he had to deal. His letters and constant reappearance made my life miserable. I hoped that you, and perhaps Shirley herself, might be induced to think that the marriage had not been a voluntary act, and that I had been ignorant of what I was doing. I was maddened by the fellow's threats and insolence; and, when I told him to do his worst, the world would not believe him, he said that the world would believe you, and that you would make it public. It was just at this time that we went to Easton, and it was you who casually mentioned having seen him passing the hotel. I knew then that he had followed me. Late that night, when I was alone on the balcony, feeling grateful—Heaven knows how grateful—for the wondrous happiness which seemed to be opening for me, he passed again, looked up, and accosted me. I went down to him, and he renewed his entreaties and threats, and, fearing that my new-found happiness would be destroyed by his means, I agreed to meet him the next morning on the cliffs."

"Hugh, rest now," Guy entreated, as he saw the exhaustion and faintness which Sir Hugh struggled against so bravely. "You shall tell me the remainder another time."

"There may be no other time for me," he said sadly. "The best thing I can do is to die and leave her free, and perhaps Heaven will let me do it. No; let me tell you now; and then, when you know all, I will rest. You remember," he continued, after a long pause of weakness, "how we started together—shall I ever forget Shirley, as she stood on the balcony that morning?—and how, as we walked across the beach together, I tried to thank you for what you had done for me. I never loved you as I loved you then, Guy. Even in our boyhood, when we had been such friends, you had never been so dear to me; and I stood and watched you out of sight, and sat on the rocks waiting for him. When he came, I saw at once that he was prepared to be insolent, and I resolved to be firm with him. I had brought with me two hundred pounds in gold and notes that Pears had brought me down a day or two before, which I intended to give him as a last bribe. He was in a most insolent mood; he had left the inn in a neighboring village where he had been staying, saying he would not return, and he had made up his mind to speak to you. But even the taunting words and insults were no excuse for my anger. I turned upon him at last, and lifted the stick—your stick, old fellow, which I had asked you for a keep-sake—oh, how sorry I was for that afterwards!—and struck him. He fell immediately to the ground, and never spoke afterward. I had—oh, merciful Heaven, I had killed him on the spot!"

Sir Hugh covered his face with his trembling hands, and lay back, shuddering violently, the cold dews gathering on his forehead, his whole frame shaking with horror and anguish. Guy, scarcely less agitated, could hardly utter the few words of consolation he strove to speak; and there were a few moments of painful silence ere Hugh Glynn resumed the pitiful story.

"Heaven knows I had no intention to hurt him," he went on, with an accent of unutterable sadness; "and, when I saw him lying there, I had no thought but that he was stunned or had fainted. I knelt by him and did all I could to restore him, but, of course, in vain. Then, when I realized what I had done, when I found myself a murderer, with the stain of blood upon me, I went mad, I think. I had but one idea—to escape; and then a horrible notion entered my head. If I could disfigure him enough—Oh, Guy, Guy!"

For a few moments there was no sound in the room but the uncontrollable weeping which broke from the baronet and rent his weak frame with terrible sobs; Guy's face too was hidden—he was trying to shut out the awful scene which the words conjured up. It was indeed an awful one—the dead man lying with his face upturned, the sky overhead, the sea beyond, and the murderer trying to escape the results of his crime, if it might be so called.

"You know how well I succeeded," continued Sir Hugh, when he could speak. "I took off his coat and put mine on him; the clothes he was wearing had been mine once—I saw that directly. I put my ring on his finger, and all that I had about me which could lead to recognition I put into his pockets, and then I left him there. I never imagined but that it would be thought an accident; and I did it all with an awful calmness which I think of sometimes now and wonder at. My one thought was to escape. I shrunk with an unutterable horror from what was before me if I gave myself up, although now I can see that I ought to have done so. I had plenty of money—that was one difficulty removed; and I walked to the nearest station, carrying the bag Latreille had with him, and took a third-class ticket for London, which I reached late that night—that terrible night. Do you remember the storm? Will you ever forget it, Guy? The next morning my first action was to disguise myself effectually," he went on, after a long pause, "With money, in London, it was not difficult; and then I took quiet lodgings in a part of town where I had never been in the old days; and for a time I remained there, ill and weak with a nervous fever, during the continuance of which however I was never light-headed. Strangely enough, I had no fear of pursuit; I knew that the poor fellow would not be missed, and I felt sure that the body would be taken for mine. One day—the very first time I was able to read a newspaper—to my inexpressible horror, I saw what a mistake had been made—what a terrible mistake!"

He had become very faint and exhausted during the last few minutes, and his voice had sunk so low as to be almost inaudible; but he was so anxious to finish his story that Guy had not sufficient strength of mind to prevent him and make him rest. Raising him gently, he gave him some more of the restorative which the doctor had left with Shirley, and, supported in Guy's strong arms—for it was easier for him to breathe thus—he resumed his story.

CHAPTER XLIX.

"When I read that you had been arrested on the charge of having murdered the poor fellow," Sir Hugh went on, "I think I realized for the first time what a miserable coward I was. My first impulse was to go and give myself up at any cost; but my courage—bah, I had no courage, so I cannot say it failed me!—my cowardice conquered. Heaven only knows what I suffered during those days, Stuart—you in prison, and that poor broken-hearted girl did not suffer more—at least you were not tortured with remorse as I was. Again and again I lived those terrible hours on the rocks, in that awful solitude I had so dreaded being disturbed—again and again I saw in anticipation the trial, the crowds of accusing faces, the hooting multitude. How I shrunk from it all you may guess when I tell you that two or three times I went out to try to obtain poison, and that once I went down to London Bridge—Don't, Guy, dear old friend, don't grieve so—I have been a coward from the beginning. A coward's death would be a fitting end for my career. But I will not speak of it since it pains you," he added brokenly. "When the time of the trial came on, I went down to Exminster. I had no definite plan, except that, if you were convicted, I was determined to confess all, and—"

"Stop!" Guy said breathlessly, lifting his hand for a moment. "You were at Exminster. Then it was not a delusion—I saw you."

"You saw me! Where?"

"It was at night," Major Stuart said unsteadily. "I was leaning out of the window of my room at the hotel, and a man passed down the street—a man with a great dark beard, and—"

"You recognized me?"

"The face reminded me of yours; but I fancied it was a delusion—you were so much in my mind," Guy said tremulously; and Hugh looked at him in silence for a few moments.

"If I had recognized you, Guy," he faltered, "I think I should have told you all. Would to Heaven I had!"

"When I saw that you were acquitted, I went back to town," Sir Hugh continued, "and I lived there as long as my money lasted. After a time I got less fearful of recognition, and I used to go out and wander about the city, and I became familiar with all kinds of misery which I had never even suspected before; and when my money failed I got odd jobs—all kinds of work. I have driven a hansom for weeks, old fellow, and held horses, and—But I said I would not distress you," he broke off, with a faint smile. "Is it not strange?" he went on, in a moment. "When Shirley was in London, we could not have been far from each other, I feel so thankful now that we never met."

"Hugh, my poor fellow!"

"Have you any pity for such a mean, miserable, cowardly wretch?" the unhappy man said brokenly. "Heaven bless you, Guy. I might have known how you would have received me. I m ht of had faith in you; but, old fellow, m one consolation all this time lay in the thought that you and Shirley were happy together. Old fellow, why was it—"

The wistful eyes seeking Guy's face so inquiringly finished the question, and Guy answered it with a grave gentleness.

"She sent me away," he said with a slight smile. "Poor child, she feared that the—" He hesitated, knowing that his words could not but add to the suffering which Sir Hugh was already enduring; and the latter guessed the conclusion of the answer, even as Stuart divined the end of the question.

"I understand," he said. "Well, it was as well perhaps. Soon—very soon, old friend, she will be free indeed," he added feebly; "and I shall be truly glad to leave her in your care. Poor darling, how greatly she has suffered, and how nobly she has forgiven! Hers is a heart of gold, Guy, and you are worthy of each other. But, to end my story, I must tell you how I came here. Give me another mouthful of that cordial, old fellow—just enough to enable me to finish."

Guy did as he was requested.

"My health was failing me, and I began to long for a breath of fresh air again," Sir Hugh resumed. "The London fogs were killing me, and I thought it would be so terrible to die in the midst of all the filth and misery and degradation in which I had passed the last months of my life. So one morning I set off on foot and worked my way along the road, getting a few pence for an odd job here, or a meal there, and sleeping in a barn or wherever I could get shelter. I had no route to follow, I just went on and on, until the snow overtook me outside this village, and I lost my way in the fields on that Christmas-day. I had wandered about for over an hour, night was coming on, and I was weary and exhausted, when I saw a light in a window a little distance. I managed to struggle across to it; the curtains were not drawn over the window, and I could see into the room. A woman was sitting alone by the fire and I was just going to knock and ask her for shelter, when she rose and came to the window. The next moment I recognized her, and the surprise so overcame me that I fell forward on the snow, and lost consciousness for a few moments. When I recovered, I managed to creep round to the door. A numbness was stealing all over me. I felt that I was dying, and my one wish was to hear her forgive me before the end came. I tried the door; it was locked; and there was a sound of a dog barking violently. I remember dimly trying to pray, but even my senses were too dead for that; and then I recollect nothing until I found myself lying with my head on Shirley's knee, and her dear face bending over me, with Heaven's own pity reflected upon it. How can I tell you how good she was to me then, Guy—how she warmed and fed me? And, even when I told her what a guilty wretch I was, she did not shrink from me—she only hid her face for a moment, and let me keep her hands in mine."

He was silent; his wife's noble self-devotion and perfect forgiveness had touched all that was good in him; and there was a great admiration mingling with the sadness on his face as he thought of her. She seemed to him more than woman—better, nobler, holier; she was no longer the girl whose beauty he had coveted, and who had been his wife; she was an angel of goodness, of compassion and of mercy; and the halo which surrounded her in his thoughts surrounded Guy also. By their nobility he saw how high he might have risen; by it too he saw how low he had fallen.

Very wistful and entreating and sorrowful were the blue eyes now, which Guy remembered so gay and smiling, and, if it had not been that he feared to distress Sir Hugh, Guy could have hidden his face and wept like a child at the recollection of the past days and the knowledge of his companion's great suffering—a greater far than his or Shirley's since they had not the heaviest burden of all to bear—that of remorse.

He saw too that Hugh was very ill; not only was he weak and debilitated to a degree sad to witness, but he breathed with difficulty, and more than once his narration had been stopped by a fit of coughing which racked his weak frame with a terrible force. It was evident that even with care he could not last many months—even weeks; and Hugh, looking up into the grave pitiful face, read the thought, with quick intuition.

"Yes, I shall not last long now, old fellow," he said quietly. "And it is all for the best. These last days have not been unhappy, except when I saw how much anxiety I was causing that poor child. It was so pleasant—ah, so pleasant!—to be nursed by her, to feel her hand about me as gentle and tender as if I had not been the worst foe she ever had; to hear her voice with its pitying tones was sufficient to make me happy. At first I was too ill even to thank her, or to realize how terribly I was adding to her anxiety by my presence here; but I can imagine now what those days must have been to her, in her anxiety for me and her dread of discovery—a dread which my wild terror must have increased a hundred-fold."

"Hugh"—Major Stuart's voice was very grave and tender and compassionate—"I cannot let you talk any more now. You have talked more than you ought to-day. Rest a little, and when you are stronger we will consider what is best to be done. Ah, here is some one whose influence is greater than mine!" he added, smiling, to Shirley came in quietly and went softly as the other side of the bed. "Nurses' and doctors' orders are paramount, are they not?"

"Shirley knows that I shall rest all the better for the relief of telling you all this, Guy, and making you—selfishly—I confess—share my burden—and hers, poor child! Have you rested a little, dear?" he added wistfully.

Shirley forced a smile to her lips as she answered in the affirmative, and, sitting down by his side, took the attenuated hand in hers and held it between her own; and after a time, the weary, blue eyes which dwelt upon her with such love closed, and he fell asleep.

Gently and noiselessly Shirley disengaged her hand from his, and, with Guy, went into the other room. The day had worn on toward evening now, and the gray, wintry dusk was filling the little room, which looked drear and desolate without fire or lamp. For a few moments they stood in silence facing each other, both too deeply moved to speak; then Shirley said softly under her breath—

"Guy, tell me, what must we do?"

"I am almost too stunned to think," he answered. "It is a terrible position for you, my child."

"And for him! Oh, Guy, think of the consequences of discovery!"

"You trust me, Shirley?"

"Fully," she answered, looking up at him with steady eyes but quivering lips.

"Will you let yourself be guided by me in this?"

"Oh, so gladly, Guy!"

"Dear, will you let me trust Oliphant?" he asked, very gently.

"If you think it best, Guy," she answered faintly.

"I think it is our only course, Shirley," he said, with the same extreme gentleness and pity. "Already Hugh's presence is suspected here, and only the people at the Hall can do away even in a measure with the suspicion. Besides, we must find some way of removing him to safer quarters."

"Removing him!" she repeated, with frightened eyes. "He is so weak, Guy."

"Yes, poor fellow, and we must wait for a day or two. Let me ask Oliphant's advice: and, dear child, it will surely be a comfort to you to trust Lady Oliphant?"

"Lady Oliphant?" she repeated shrinkingly. "Oh, Guy, must I? She was very cruel to me to-day."

"My child, think under what impression she labored when she spoke to you. Believe me, it grieved her to the heart."

"And—and—and you think it best, Guy?"

(To be continued.)

Stage Gossip.

There are signs of a decadence in the popularity of amateur theatricals in Brooklyn. The scandals that have arisen in these silly organizations within recent months have opened the eyes of prudent parents to the dangerous allurements of Thespian dilettanteism. The tragical story of the downfall of Miss Murphy, who was one of the favorites of the amateur stage in Brooklyn, has capped the climax. A record of the domestic disasters growing out of this fribbling in dramatic art would be surprising as well as interesting.

Mr. Herbert Gladstone has felt called upon to make a formal and even official denial of the report published in this country that he was to marry Miss Ulmer, the comic opera songstress. This act was pronounced a brutal cut by the little brunette's admirers and one of them declared himself quite ready to call Mr. Gladstone out for it. Word to this effect was carried to the Premier's athletic son and in reply he returned a message stating that his footman would be pleased to attend to any gentleman who might call in the capacity of second to Miss Ulmer's champion. That ended the twaddle about a duel.

London gossips are puzzled over the identity of a completely pretty girl who drives in Rotten Row in carriages emblazoned with the crest of the Duke of Portland. It might ease their anxiety to know that the fair-haired beauty is none other than Miss Jennie McNulty, who played ducks and drakes with dudish hearts when with the Adonis company at the Bijou. Josie Hall, wedded to a German baron, Miss McNulty sporting the arms of the House of Portland, Adelaide Detchan whistling her way into the company of lords, the gypsy-like De Lussan carrolling a career for herself among the belles and blades of Belgravia, Mary Anderson declining coronets as disdainfully as though they were stale buns, Martinot snubbing princes from the door of her Paris salon—what a great people we are, to be sure!—American Exchange.

All the Passengers Etherized.

A very peculiar accident that set a whole railroad car full of passengers in a state of intoxication occurred on Sunday last on the North Pennsylvania Railroad. Dr. Ott, of Pleasant Valley, got on the train at that station to go to Quakertown to perform a surgical operation on a patient. The doctor took with him a large bottle of ether, which he laid on the seat beside him. The jolting of the train agitated the potion to such an extent that the bottle exploded, and in a moment the atmosphere was laden with the drug. The male passengers in the car made a dash for the door, but many of them could not get out, and, together with about a dozen ladies, were overcome by the ether. When Conductor Hammond went into the car to take up the tickets he, too, was overcome before he could retreat. The brakeman missed the conductor, and on looking into the car saw him, with the others, laughing and grimacing. As soon as possible the windows were thrown open and the passengers revived.—Philadelphia Record.

Why We Keep Cool.

Prof. Archibald is a leader of physical meteorology in England. He has been interviewed on the ice question. Asked why it is so cold, he replies after a natural and rational fashion, and his theory, stripped of its scientific jargon, is as follows: "The late winter in the region of the north pole was one of abnormal severity. Vast icefloes and icebergs were carried far to the south. These deposits, breaking up in the usual manner, have detached and sent off frozen emissaries to prove once more that in years of great abundance of floating ice in the north Atlantic the month of June and the summer generally have been abnormally cold." In America, so far, the effect of the Archibald theory has been to give us an abundance of moisture and weather which, especially for small grains, cannot be bettered.—Chicago News.

Post-Office Scarcity.

Ecuador, with about one million inhabitants, has only 47 post-offices, but they are so widely distributed that it requires a mail carriage of 5,389 miles to reach them all—72 miles by canoes and 5,317 by horses and mules. About 500 miles of the seaboard is also covered by foreign steamship mail service. Between Quito and Guayaquil there are two mails each way weekly by couriers—the usual time one way, travelling day and night, being six days. Other sections of the country are less favored, the receipts and departure of mails ranging from once a week to once a month, as people happen to be going.

"I don't see," said Mr. McGuire, as he sat in the stern of the vessel, "how the captain can find his way across the ocean. If he was going the other way all he'd have to do would be to follow that white streak behind there, but in front there is nothing to point that way."

A SECRET TOLD.

"Well, how did you like Miss Preston?" said Susan Lowry, as she walked around the ball-room on Reginald Payn's arm. He had been away from home several years and she was telling him the news.

"She is a very attractive young lady," he murmured, looking in the direction of a beautiful girl who was dancing.

"Arthur Ringgold found her more than that," said Miss Lowry. "I am told she is a terrible coquette."

Reginald's face clouded over. He had heard the terrible news of the day of his return that his dearest friend, Arthur Ringgold, had taken his life, and the reason for the act was unknown.

"He was my dearest friend," he said sadly. "I would give anything to know why he was a suicide."

"I can tell you," said Miss Lowry "for I am one of the few in the secret. Arthur was deeply in love and became engaged to a certain young lady. One day she wrote him a cruel letter breaking off the match without any word of excuse. The shock of this rejection so unsettled his mind that he killed himself."

"I should like to know that wretched woman's name," said Reginald, gritting his teeth savagely.

"I will tell you if you give me your word of honor to keep it secret," said Miss Lowry, looking around uneasily.

"I promise," he said in a low voice.

"It was Kate Preston!" she whispered in his ear.

"And I am engaged to dance in the next set with her!" he replied, with a shudder of disgust.

"Then keep your engagement or it will excite suspicion," and Miss Lowry glided away into the crowd.

Reginald Payn had hardly time to recover his composure when the next quadrille was called. With studied politeness he led Kate Preston to her place, and, in the intervals of the dance, addressed to her the customary commonplaces in a manner so little indicative of his real feelings that he was amazed at his own hypocrisy.

"Can it be," he could not help saying to himself, as, from time to time, he stole glances at his partner's face, "that treachery can lurk beneath a look so guileless?"

And well might he ask the question, for marvellous as was Kate Preston's beauty more than half its charms lay in the expression of truth and purity which shone in every feature.

For days afterward Reginald was haunted by two thoughts. One was Kate Preston's surpassing beauty; the other, of Susan Lowry's plan of punishment. The more he dwelt upon the former, and felt its power, the more resentment drove him to brood over the latter.

Which had most to do with impelling him to continue his acquaintance with Miss Preston it is hardly likely he could himself have told. At any rate the acquaintance grew and ripened, while every day revealed to Reginald some new grace and charm, whose influence he might have found it difficult to resist but for the antidote of Susan Lowry's secret.

To add to his perplexity, he fancied he could perceive growing indications of interest, on the part of Kate, in his companionship. Was she really beginning to care for him, or was she practicing the same deceit that had lured his friend to destruction?

More than once Reginald was on the point of casting aside Susan Lowry's story and judging Kate for himself. One thing alone restrained him. Inquiry had confirmed Susan's story by placing the fact beyond question that a close intimacy had existed between Kate and Arthur Ringgold for some time before the latter's death.

One day Reginald lost his self-command, and uttered words—wild, passionate, incoherent words—that drove the blood from Kate Preston's cheeks, and then brought it back again with a burning rush. The next thing she knew her hand was clasped in his as she leaned sobbing on his shoulder. Reginald was conscious that he had her love, and that in spite of himself he had given her his. The moment had come when, at the cost of a pang to his own heart, he might crush the deceiver of his friend. Should he strike or forgive?

"You say you return my love," he murmured, in a voice shaken with emotion; "the same was said as earnestly, no doubt, to Arthur Ringgold, by one who broke her troth and drove him to despair and death!"

Kate looked up wonderingly, and drawing back, said, with calm dignity:

"Doubt me, if you will, but cast no reflection on the memory of the dead. The woman who pledged her faith to Arthur Ringgold, and kept it to the last, was my cousin, Hester Lisle. The relative with whom we both lived was Hester's guardian, who, having planned for her a different match, would never have consented to her marrying Arthur; so, to enable the two to meet, it was arranged that Arthur should pretend that his visits were meant for me, which gave rise to a rumor, I have heard, that he was my suitor instead of hers.

"One day Hester received a sealed packet containing all her letters to Arthur. Among them was one in a hand resembling hers, but which she had never written. It professed to be a withdrawal of her plighted troth. For a moment she seemed stunned as by a sudden blow.

"'Come?' she cried, as soon as she recovered speech, 'let us go at once and set right this cruel deception.'

"At the same moment came the terrible news of her lover's tragic death, and before many weeks she had followed him to the grave. Hitherto I have kept her secret, and would not now divulge it, but to protect her memory."

"Thank God!" Reginald exclaimed, clasping Kate to his breast, for he knew her words were true.

"But how came Susan Lowry," the reader will ask, "to know of the forged letter?"

For the best of all reasons; she had written it herself—her motive being jealousy, she having long secretly loved Arthur Ringgold, and having divined, with her woman's wit, the truth as to his relations with Hester Lisle. Susan's subsequent conduct is explained by the hatred she bore Kate Preston for the latter's share in Arthur's and Hester's courtship.

All the Pope's Jubilee wine is to be distributed among the hospitals.

PALATE-TICKLING DAINTIES.

With a Pleasing Preliminary Pen-Picture to Warm the Imagination.

"How insignificant and tame," exclaims a writer in the New York Evening Post, "seem the entertainments of the present day in comparison with those of the past." Then he cites this curious example:

When Queen Elizabeth paid her second visit to the Earl of Leicester, in 1775, a temporary bridge of 70 feet in length and 20 feet wide was thrown across a valley to the great gate of the castle, and on each side stood columns hung with the offerings of seven of the deities to Her Majesty. Slyvanus offered two cages of wild fowls, Pomona two large silver bowls filled with apples, pears, oranges, lemons and pomegranates; Ceres presented two silver bowls containing barley, wheat and oats. Bacchus gave "two silver lyvery pots" filled with wine and grapes in clusters—both white and red—as his offering. Neptune presented a large plate strewed with fresh grass and containing various sorts of sea fish. Mars offered the habiliments of war, and Phœbus gave musical instruments of various descriptions. During the seventeen days of the Queen's stay at Kenilworth, to prove the Earl's hospitality "the clok bell sang not a note while Her Highness woz thear; the clok stood also still with all; the hands stood firm and fast, always pointing at 2 o'clok," which was the banquet hour. It is impossible to describe all the festivities, but it may be added that the quantity of beer drunk amounted to 320 hogsheads.

There is much similarity between ancient and modern convivial customs; our manner of filling glasses, pledging present and absent friends, the distribution of different wines, do not differ so very much from the ancients. Generally at entertainments among the French wine has an admixture of water, excepting immediately after soup, when it is drunk pure. Liquors may be regarded as identical with the goblet or cup of sweet wine introduced at a Greek feast. Pineapples steeped in arrack impart an exquisite flavor to the spirit, and by age it becomes a delicious liquor, which is unrivaled for making nectarial punch. Little fancy biscuits—and their name is legion—such as wine, Zwieback, walnut, spice nuts, cream leaves, Brunswick and a host of others, are appropriate to serve with wines of all sorts.

One of the most important things in serving fish for the first course at dinner is to see that it is hot and served immediately when ready. The addition of salt to water in which fish is boiled seasons the fish and at the same time hardens the water so that it extracts less of the nutritious part of the fish. A baked salmon, trout or pickerel should be placed upon something raised from the bottom of the pan to prevent burning, such as a piece of perforated tin or muffin rings. Frequently fish is baked to form a ring, cooked slowly, and basted frequently with melted butter and a little water. A large coffee cupful of cream, adding to it two spoonfuls of boiling water, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and a little bouquet of parsley, must be stirred in, the whole heated together in a basin of boiling water, and then poured over the fish which is in the hot dish. Served with lobster or shrimp sauce or plain melted butter with fresh sprigs of parsley boiled for a few minutes in it greatly adds to its flavor.

A marrow pudding is made with half a pound of lady's finger cakes, a quarter of a pound of beef marrow chopped fine, a quarter of a pound of well-cleaned currants, half an ounce of candied lemon peel, a little dash of nutmeg, a tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a saltspoonful of salt, and a wineglassful of wine or brandy; put these on a dish and fill up with custard, having previously put a border of paste on the edge of the dish. It will be ready to serve in half an hour.

For the dessert, fruits-frappee may be made of vanilla ice cream lining the mold. Fill the centre with fresh berries or fruit cut in slices, cover closely and put it in the freezer for half an hour, with ice and salt packed closely around it. Strawberries and ripe peaches are very good prepared in this way. The fruit must only be chilled, not frozen.

Coffee should always be made at home, if possible, meaning by this to grind it at home and keep it in a jar closely sealed. Soyer's method is excellent: To make a pint, put two ounces in a stewpan, set it dry upon a moderate fire, stirring with a wooden spoon continually until the coffee is quite hot, but not the least burnt. Pour over a pint of boiling water, cover close, and let it stand by the fire, not to boil, for five minutes; then strain it through a cloth or piece of thick gauze, rinse out the stewpan, place the coffee again on the fire, and, when nearly boiling, serve with hot milk, if for breakfast, but with a drop of cold cream or milk if for dinner. French fashion orders a pint of coffee made as directed, then add a pint of boiling milk, warm both together until nearly boiling, and serve. This is for breakfast. Black coffee without milk is preferred after dinner.

Curious Ignorance.

In a case recently tried before Lord Coleridge, and involving the old Protestant-Catholic quarrel as to the right to the custody of children, the evidence was curious because exemplifying the vagueness of many poor persons in their notions of religious observance, if not of religious belief. The mother of the children was brought up a Wesleyan Methodist, but she occasionally attended a Catholic chapel, and she had sent for a priest on her deathbed. By the oldest child's own admission, all her brothers and sisters were baptized as Roman Catholics. Yet some of them went to the Wesleyan Sunday school. The father knew that they went there, and himself occasionally dropped in at the parish church, while the mother and elder sisters took their choice of the Wesleyan chapel or the barracks of the Salvation Army. Another sister, the oldest child, a member of the Salvation Army, sometimes attended the Roman Catholic service, and sometimes Wesleyan, and while showing great solicitude for the "Protestant religion," admitted that she had never heard of the 39 articles. Another witness, when asked whether he was a Roman Catholic or a Protestant, said he did not belong to either Church, but he was a Protestant "as far as that goes." All this would seem to show that, in matters of religion, many humble souls are a good deal more solicitous about things than about names.

ITS TOUCH IS DEATH.

The Terribly Venomous Serpent That Lurks in the Tropics.

There are eight varieties of him (the fer-de-lance), the most common being the gray speckled with black, precisely the color that enables the monster to hide himself among the roots of the trees by simply coiling about them and concealing his triangular head. Sometimes he is a beautiful flower yellow; then he may never be distinguished from the bunch of bright bananas among which he hangs coiled; or he may be a dark yellow or a yellowish brown, or the color of wine lees speckled with pink and black, or a perfect ash tint, or black with a yellow belly, or black with a rose belly—all hues of tropical mould, of old bark, of putrefying trees, of forest detritus. The iris of the eye is orange, with red flashes; at night it glows like incandescent charcoal. And the fer-de-lance reigns absolute king over the mountains and the ravines: he is lord of the forests and the solitudes by day, and by night he extends his dominion over the public roads, the familiar paths, the parks and pleasant resorts. People must remain at home after dark unless they dwell in the city itself; if you happen to be out visiting after sunset, only a mile from town, your friends will caution you anxiously not to follow the boulevard as you go back, and to keep as closely as possible to the very centre of the path. Even in the brightest noon you cannot venture to enter the woods unescorted; you cannot trust your eyes to detect danger; at any moment a seeming branch, a bunch of lianas, a pink or gray root, a clump of pendant yellow fruit, may suddenly take life, writhe, swell, stretch, spring, strike. Then you will need aid, and most quickly; for within the space of few heart-beats the stricken flesh chills, tumefies, softens, changes color, spots violaceously and an icy coldness crawls through all the blood. If the physician or the pousseur arrives in time and no artery or vein has been directly pierced there is hope; but the danger is not passed when the life has been saved. Necrosis of the tissues begins; the flesh corrupts, tatters, tumbles from the bone, and the colors of its putrefaction are frightful mockeries of the hues of vegetable death, of forest decomposition, the ghastly pinks and grays and yellows of rotting trunks and roots melting back into the thick fetid clay that gave them birth. You moulder as the trees moulder: you crumble and dissolve as dissolves the substance of the balatas and the palms and the acomats—the Death-of-the-Woods has seized upon you. And this pestilence that walketh in darkness, this destruction that wasteth at noonday, may not be exorcised. Each female produces viviparously from forty to sixty young at a birth. The haunts of the creature are in many cases inaccessible, inexplorable; its multiplication is prodigious; it is only the surplus of its swarming that overpours into the cane fields, and makes the high roads perilous after sunset, yet to destroy three or four hundred thanatophidia on a single plantation during the lapse of twelve months has not been uncommon. The introduction of the mangouste (the ichneumon) may, it is hoped, do much toward protecting the workers in the cane fields and on the cocoa and coffee plantations, but the mangouste's powers are limited, and the ocean of death is illimitable.—Harper's Monthly.

The Husbands They Look For.

How women do differ in regard to the kind of men they want to marry. Indeed, there seems to be very few who have succeeded in getting the one fancy had painted for them. No doubt they all had their minds made up to marry an ideal, but when their fates came along the ideal was forgotten, and is only recalled as an idle fancy. With some it may be more serious. For instance, those who abandoned their ideals and married rakes or worthless creatures in the guise of men. These unfortunates often recall the husbands they had in the mind's eye or the worthy young men whom they had snubbed because they were poor. "I am an old maid," writes a correspondent, "or at least I am classed with this set. My years fully justify the younger public in giving me a back seat.

"I had an ideal. So fully was I impressed with the idea that a tall, dark-haired, handsome man would come to me that I would not allow myself to care for any one of the many gentlemen who were anxious to become my suitors. Well, he came one day, and I was certain that he had been sent by my good angel. I loved him at sight, and would have married him within a month. It was not long, however, until I found that he drank and gambled and did many other wrong things. Then I gathered all my strength and said no. He promised to reform for my sake, but again I said no. If he would not reform for his own sake and from principle he would not reform permanently for me. He did these things because it was in him to do them.

"I take no stock in these sentimental reformations. They seldom outlast the honeymoon. My ideal was not long in finding another angel, for whose sake he reformed. A year after their marriage she was the most miserable creature I ever knew. He died a gambler and she a sorrow stricken wife and mother. I would say to all young ladies: Have no ideals, but resolve to marry none but honest, industrious, sober, manly men. Study to make yourselves fitting companions for such men, and you will have no trouble in finding such. My ideal man haunts me still; yet when I see one that resembles him I shudder and shut my eyes. So great was my surprise, and so bitter my disappointment when my ideal vanished, that I never have had the heart to thank again of marriage."—Cor. Pittsburg Gazette.

And She Does.

May—Don't you dislike to have a man talk shop when he comes to see you?

Jennie—Indeed I do! Who's been talking shop to you?

Mary—Oh, my young man. He's street car conductor, you know, and nearly every time he comes to see me he gets off his shop talk.

Jennie—What does he say?

Mary—Sit closer, please!

A New Sensation.

Milk Inspector (taking his vacation on farm)—"Ha! That's a fine drink Glorious! What is it made of, madam?"

Farmer's Wife—"That's milk."

A CANADIAN MILLIONAIRE.

How He Married a Squaw and Became Owner of Silver Mines.

The story of Mr. Oliver Dannais, who lately purchased the Hon. Mr. Thibaudeau's residence at Longue Pointe, Que., is a most interesting one. When quite a young man he left his little place, Sorel, and went out west with a view to make a fortune. After several adventures he fell in with a tribe of Indians at the foot of the Rockies, and noticed that they used silver nuggets for loading their guns. They refused at first to let him know where the ore came from, but through perseverence and by marrying a girl of the tribe, he became possessed of the secret and afterwards got a patent to explore these rich mines which are now known under the name of the "Beaver Mines." Later on Mr. Dannais settled at Port Arthur, where he now owns valuable real estate. By a second marriage Mr. Dannais has a family of seven children who, with their mother, will come to Montreal in October next. Mr. Dannais' fortune is said to be worth $2,000,000.

There's a blessing in the bottle on whose label we can read
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the woman who has need
Of a remedy for troubles none but women ever know
'Tis their best and truest friend and happy thousands call it so.
As they think of years of suffering that was theirs before it came Bringing them the balm of healing and they bless the very name of this wonderful and deservedly popular remedy for the various ills woman is heir to. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for woman, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

A Timely Warning.

Young Precocity (to Oldboy, who has the misfortune to be very bow-legged)—Oh, I say you ought to come away from the fire.

Oldboy—Why, my boy?

Young Precocity—Can't you see how your legs are warping?

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Domestic Discipline.

Father—"The boys are in a fearful rage. What have you been doing to them?"

Ugly aunt—"I didn't do anything to them."

"But you must have done something to them."

"I didn't do anything except give each one of them a kiss when I arrived.

"Well, don't do it again. If the children are to be punished, let me know it and I will attend to them."

"Death Has So Many Doors to Let Out Life."

Sang an old-time poet. In those days they had not discovered remedies that shut these doors. How different is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery from the old-time doses. Consumption, or lung-scrofula, is one wide door that it shuts, if taken in time. Don't waste a moment then, lest life slip through that open door.

A Mere Trifle.

Mamma—What's the matter, precious? Mabel, you naughty child, what have you been doing to your poor little sister?

Mabel (virtuously and defiantly)—Nothing.

Mamma—You have! I know you have!

Mabel—I only told her she's got to die some day, and she says she won't.

Don't Do It. Do Not Wait.

If suffering from pain, but go at once to the nearest drug store and buy a sample bottle of Polson's Nervilene, the great pain cure. Never fails to give immediate relief. Nerviline is endorsed by medical men everywhere. Don't wait a single hour without trying Nerviline. The best medicine in the world to keep in the house in an emergency. Ten and 25 cents a bottle.

A Dangerous Sense of Humor.

Charlie (dejectedly)—Say, Tom, I've lost my best girl.

Tom—No? How did it happen?

Charlie—Aw, I was altogether too funny for her.

Tom—Too funny? What do you mean?

Charlie—Well, you see, she was crazy to have a pet dog, so I gave her a pug and told her I selected that kind because it matched her nose so perfectly. See? Confound a funny man, any how.

Having But Little Fun.

Pretty Sunday-School Teacher (at picnic—You don't seem to be having a very pleasant time, Mr. Sissy. You have sat here quite alone for a long time.

Mr. Sissy (in a low, guarded tone of voice)—Yes, Miss Maude, and I shall have to remain here until all have departed. I accidentally sat down on a custard pie.

One of the Parisian fads is to wear ears of corn on the head. The style elsewhere is to wear the ears on the head and the corns on the feet.—Philadelphia North American.

The Great Dismal Swamp

of Virginia is one enormous quagmire of decayed vegetation, a region of gloom and desolation; but not more so than the system when blocked up by decayed animal matter, which poisons the blood and brings gloom to an otherwise happy household. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets remove all waste matter, and give nature a chance to build up.

Sir Charles Dilke is taking the baths at Baden, in Argau, Switzerland.

All Americans Know Him.

"One of the most comical things I've ever heard was told me in the Caucasus," said Dudley Winston, the young man who accompanied his father on the mission to Persia. "It was in Tiflos, the capital of Georgia. You know, there's an American store there—a big place of business, where all sorts of 'Yankee notions' are dealt out at enormous profits to the natives. I dropped in there. One of the objects of interest to which the Russian salesman directed my special attention was a patent potato peeler. 'Dees instrument,' he said, 'eese medd by ze faymoos 'ouse of Pat Aug.' I was astonished. 'What house did you say?' 'Ze faymoos 'ouse of Pat Aug.' 'Never heard of it,' I said; 'I guess you are mistaken.' 'Meestaken? No sare. I have often heard of ze 'ouse, and I have often seen ze name of ze 'ouse. I will show him to you now. Oh, it is a firm which enjoys great fame here.' And with that he looks for a specimen potato-peeler and brings one out. 'Zare, sare,' he says, 'eese ze name engraved in ze metal. See.' I burst out laughing until my sides ached. There was the legend, 'Pat. Aug. 17th, 1873.' And the 'Pat. Aug.' part of it he had taken to be the firm's name. I found that this potato-peeler was famous under the name of 'Pat. Aug.' all over the Caucasus."

WHY?

WHY do I have this drowsy, lifeless feeling? WHY do I have Backache? WHY Neuralgia and Rheumatism? WHY does Scrofulous taint and Erysipelas show itself?

BECAUSE your blood is filled with Poison, which must be Completely Eradicated before you can regain health. You must go to the root of the matter. Put the Kidneys—the great and only blood purifying organs—in complete order, which is complete health, and with and WARNER'S SAFE PILLS your Cure is Certain.

Warner's Safe Cure

WHY do we know this? BECAUSE tens of thousands of grateful ones in all parts of the world have voluntarily written us to this effect.

There is no stand-still in disease. You are either growing Better or Worse. How is it with YOU!

WHY not to-day resort to that medicine which has veritably Cured Millions, and which will cure you if you will give it a chance?

All of Warner's preparations are Purely Vegetable. They are made on Honor. They are time-tried. They are No New Discovery. Untried and Worthless; on the contrary, they have stood the test—they have proved their superiority. They stand alone in pre-eminent merit and YOU KNOW IT.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems. Cure of mind wandering. Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit, 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington, 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc., etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Judge GIBSON, Dr. BRANDES, E. H. COOK, Pres. N.Y. State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS Generally

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

for us. Cash Furnished on satisfactory guaranty. Address, C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N. Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U. S. in the Hide line, have sent their representatives to investigate Mr. Page's business, and after a thorough examination and comparison the Reporter gives him this endorsement:

"We believe that an extent of tight sought raw material collected and carried, Mr. Page holds the [illegible] in this country.

And the Review says:

"After a most thorough investigation of Mr. Page's business as compared with others in the same line, we have become fully satisfied that in the [illegible] of quality he is confessedly at the head.

QUERY. If Mr. Page's business is the largest in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more Skins than any of his competitors in the same lines?

DON'T BE DECEIVED.

COOK'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

GREAT

REDUCTIONS

In Every Line of Goods at

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Come in and see for yourself. We will give from

20 TO 40 PER CT. DISCOUNT!

Don't fail to see our 35c

CASHMERE

we are now selling for 22½c. yd.

EMBROIDERIES,

All prices, from 1c a yard up. Regular prices from 5c a yard up.

CRETONNES,

Just see them. Beautiful 22c goods for 13c yd.

BOOTS,

Of every description, AWAY, AWAY DOWN.

Now, if you want a Tremendous Bargain in a first class staple article, just call and try J. G. Anderson's

We are giving 5 lbs of our famous 30c Tea for $1.

TEAS!

All other lines equally reduced. Come at once, as our stock is not extra large, and we are Bound to Sell at Some Price.

Butter and Eggs

AS GOOD AS CASH.

AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Jim Gordon's' Handsome Wife.

AN OLD MINER'S TALE.

'Twuz in the year of '49, when western gold wuz free
Fer them ez had the hardihood to penetrate the land
Where it wuz sed the rivers rollin' down oward the sea,
Gleamed red with golden nuggets, set in beds of golden sand.

Our claim we named "Aurora," and its owners numbered ten—
That is, not countin' on Jim Gordon's handsome wife.
She kem from no one knew jest where, ner how, ner why; but then
'Twuz no consarn of ours what made her choose a miner's life.

She wuz the only woman the Aurora ever knew,
And 'mong the men she held a sway despotic as a queen;
Though some of us far in the east hed wives, and famblies, too,
Yet all agreed that never yet wuz woman fairer seen.

But there wor one among our crowd—I hate to say his name,
Fer he wuz lazy oz a snail—we called him Lazy Mat.;
He hung around Jim Gordon's house, and talked to Gordon's dame
While Jim he grinded at the rocks er sifted on the flat

Then one day Jim come missin', and the camp it struck 'ith gloom:
We found him at the bottom of a canyon, stiff and cold,
And buried him where white-capped mountings towered above his tomb—
A victim to the fatal fire, the burnin' thirst for gold

The manhood in our hearts went out to Jim's poor widder, then,
Fer she wuz left in circumstances most uncommon poor,
And couldn't leave the diggin's fer her childhood's home agon—
At least she sed so, and her grief it 'peared quite good and pure.

And so we jined our heads and hearts, and laid a quarter toll
On all the dust and nuggets thet we washed out, day by day,
Till we hed saved enough to fill a good-sized sugar-bowl
Enough fer all Jim's widder's wants, of heavy, shinin' clay.

That is, jest eight of us chipped in, for Mat wuz loafin' 'round,
"Perventin' of the widder bein' lonely," as he sed,
"Fer she wuz fraid of sperits, and the mountings, she hed found,
Wor jest like fallin' tombstones, now thet Jim wuz lyin' dead.

And so we helt a meeting jest in front of Gordon's door
One 'evenin' when the sun dropped low behind the mounting peaks,
And gave her all the gold, and sed we'd like to give her more
Then she broke down, and tears jest ran like rain across her cheeks.

Perhaps you think my story, somehow, ought to bout here?
Well, I hev jest a little more, and then my tale is through:
Next day two folks wuz missin' from the diggin's, and 'twuz clear
The widder and the gold hed skipped, and Mat hed dug out, too!

And that is jest 'bout all my tale; some swallowed their disgust,
But more dumbfoundered miners never drew the breath of life.
And some of us we ripped and tore, and some of us we cussed,
For bein' so magnannymus to Gordon's handsome wife.

And then suspicious thinds crep out—we satisfied our minds
Thet all wus not jest on the squar when Gordon met his doom.
We'll only know, for sure, some day when Gabriel's trumpet winds,
And breaks the shackles of the dead—the secrets of the tomb. —W. H. T.

Flesherton, Aug. 10, 1888.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B. SLOAN,
Eugenia.

NOTICE.

To the Ladies of the County of Grey.

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED TO VISIT

CLIMO'S STORE IN FLESHERTON

and bring your Produce and ask to be shown the beautiful PRINTS suitable for any wearing. We have beautiful Satteen Prints at from 10c. to 14c. per yard—such values you have not been offered before.

Highest Price allowed for Eggs, Butter and Wool.

The best way to destroy Beetles is to sprinkle Paris Green and Water on the Potatoe Vines. You can get the Sprinklers at Climo & Co's which are cheap and good. Only a few on hand.

Yours Truly,

CLIMO & CO.,

Wright's Old Stand, - Flesherton

BOOTS & SHOES!

ALWAYS ON HAND.

A LARGE VARIETY

TO CHOOSE FROM AT

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO.

Also TRIMMINGS in great variety. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Special Attention given to Contracted or Tender Feet

D. McTAVISH. R. P. LEGATE

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

THE OINTMENT

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FARM for SALE

BEING Lot 6, Con 7, Osprey, half mile from Maxwell, 100 acres, 60 acres cleared, well watered, and under good state of cultivation. Well fenced. Large frame barn and stable, frame house. For further particulars apply to JOSEPH RADLEY,
179 Spadina Avenue,
345-371. Toronto

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

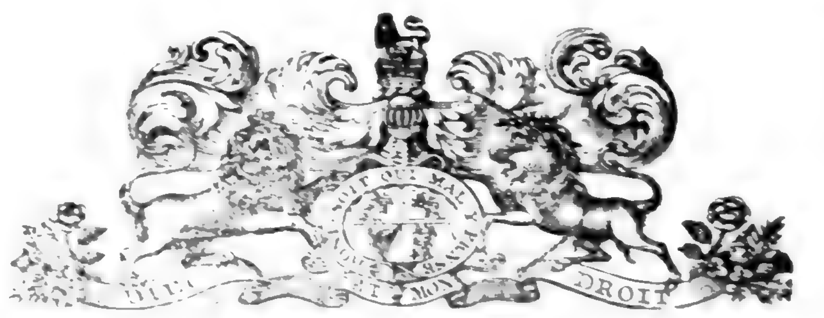
☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 374. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, AUG. 23, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, [illegible]



The Most Beautiful

And Select Stock of

WATCHES

CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, SPECTACLES

and EYEGLASSES,

Between Shelburne and Owen Sound is to be found at

Russell's

Noted Jewelry Store, FLESHERTON.

Call and look at our Fine Watches, bearing from 3 to 5 year warrants. We sell them so much cheaper than you can get them elsewhere that it will pay you to come twenty miles and buy from us. Our stock of

18 K. WEDDING RINGS---GEM RINGS,

IS SIMPLY IMMENSE. If you want a wedding ring it will pay you to go to RUSSELL'S, as you can do better there than elsewhere. Just try and see for yourself and remember that the only place to get your watch or clock repaired properly is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

6 lbs. fine uncolored Japan tea for $1 at J. G. Anderson's.

Mr. Geo. Keefer advertises a fine property for sale in this issue.

Rev. Mr. Wilson was inducted into his new charge at Charleston on Tuesday.

Don't miss seeing those lace curtains J. G. Anderson is selling at 75c. per pair, regular price is $1.

Go to J. G. Anderson's and get a nice Hyson TEA AT 10c. [illegible] Price 25c. lb.

Rev. Mr. McLeod of Priceville [illegible] ed the pulpit of Chalmers church [illegible] on Sunday afternoon last.

We have received a neat [illegible] programme of the Southern [illegible] held at Brampton Sept. 11th [illegible]. The list of attractions is [illegible].

Mr. Thos. Henders[illegible] [illegible] and 3 [illegible] look after [illegible] member the date.

1000 doz. Buttons at J. G. [illegible] regular prices from 10c. to [illegible] selling at 5c. doz. Come at once if you want to secure Bargains.

Remember the big reduction [illegible] line of goods at J. G. Anderson's. Now is the time to buy goods at just about half price.

We have received the prize list of the Great Northern Exhibition, to be held at Collingwood Sept. 25, 26, 27 and 28. It is neatly got up, and published by the Enterprise book and job office.

If you want to secure some of J. G. Anderson's Famous 30c. tea at an extra reducted price, come at once. You can get 5 lbs. for $1.

The best medical authorities acknowledge the value of Ayer's Pills, and prescribe them with the utmost confidence as the most effectual remedy for diseases caused by derangements of the stomach, liver, and bowels.

Booth, the boss barber, sharpens razors. He will shave you, or sharpen the instrument and let you shave yourself. He's a little shaver, but stands high in the profesh.

A garden party will be held to-night, Thursday, at Maxwell. Young man, go and take your best girl. Elderly people, go and enjoy yourselves. Rev. Mr. Leggott will be glad to receive you.

If you desire to possess a beautiful complexion take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses and purifies the blood, and removes blotches and pimples, making the skin smooth and clear, and giving it a bright and healthy appearance. Take it this month.

We had a pleasant call last week from Mr. John Clinton, of Winnipeg, who has been home on a visit to his parents in Artemesia. Mr. Clinton teaches a school near Winnipeg. He pronounces the crops of that vicinity as good, and the prospects bright.

The Flesherton Ladies' Aid Society intend holding a garden party on Thursday evening of next week, on the grounds of Mr. Bentham. When the ladies engineer a garden party it is bound to be a success. Go. Admission only 15c. and 10c.

Wednesday and Thursday last were big days in Owen Sound. A number went up from Flesherton and returned with awe still stamped upon their countenances at the wonderful leap of Prof. Hogan with his parachute. He was the attraction. The races and other things were a secondary consideration.

Married.

In Flesherton, on the 20th inst. by Rev. T. Watson, Mr. A. McGillvray, late of Proton and Meaford, to Mrs Sarah Smith, of Flesherton.

Personal.

Mr. and Mrs. Page, of Welland, are visiting at Mr. Dundas's and Mr. Munshaw's.

Mrs. W. Irwin is visiting friends in Leamington and [illegible].

Mr. W. Irwin, principal of our public school, attended the Provincial Teachers Association [illegible] pleased with the [illegible].

Notice.

Having secured the services of a first-class hand [illegible] [illegible] weaving done [illegible] carpet weaving a specialty. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

Handsome Presentation.

[illegible] Thursday [illegible] a number of [illegible] friends of Rev. Mr. Wilson Presbyterian minister [illegible] waited upon [illegible] a gold watch. [illegible] substantial way [illegible]

The Dog Dealer.

Mr. Fawcett of Flesherton last week [illegible] [illegible] arrangements had been entered into with the railway company for his safe transport. He was placed in the baggage car and [illegible] But he wouldn't [illegible] He took a bee line for the [illegible] and stopped not until he arrived at this office. We are detaining him on probation. If he is a good "sticker" we may keep him; if otherwise our [illegible] will probably be that Streetsville needs him more than Flesherton.

A Heavy Loss.

On Thursday evening last, after the heavy storm had passed, the light from a burning building was noticed towards the northeast. It proved to be the barns and sheds belonging to Hector Kennedy, of lot 30, con 8, Artemesia. This added one more to the long list of casualties by lightning which have occurred of late in this vicinity. Mr. Kennedy lost his barn, a fine shed, [illegible] a threshing machine, fanning mill, twelve pigs, and a [illegible]. He saved a valuable stallion and a wagon. His loss will be very great, as he was insured for less than $500.

A Social Gathering.

A very pleasant social gathering was that which met on Friday evening last at the residence of Mr. Thomas Kess, Artemesia. There were refreshments and games. Flesherton brass band furnished good music, and the beautiful grounds of Mr. Kess were enjoyed by moonlight. The proceeds, amounting to twelve dollars, were presented to Rev. Mr. Wilson's good lady by the indefatigible workers who got up the entertainment. Several went out from Flesherton and enjoyed themselves thoroughly. The band returned about 1 a.m. and "made Rome howl" around town with their little toot toot. It was very nice, though, and we'll take some more, gentlemen.

Matrimony and Presents.

Wednesday evening of last week was a very important evening in Flesherton for at least two persons. On that evening Mr. Joseph Blackburn returned with his bride. They were met at the station by our brass band and escorted to the neat residence on Toronto street, where the ladies had made all preparations to receive them. Shortly after these arrival, Mr. Blackburn was presented with a valuable easy chair by the Oddfellows, of which society Mr. Blackburn is a member. He also received from Mr. M. Richardson a very handsome marble clock, and from Mr. Richardson's employes Mrs. Blackburn received a very pretty sett of china. A number of presents, more or less valuable, were received from outside friends.

The thunder storms which [illegible] Flesherton and vicinity last Thursday have seldom been surpassed in fury. The heaviest portion of the storm was felt just to the north of and east [illegible] where [illegible] stories of extraordinary [illegible]. The hail did not do any very [illegible].

Electric Philosophy.

Two farmers from near Dundalk [illegible] on Collingwood street the other day [illegible] were heard to remark as follows:

[illegible]

Charivari.

[illegible]

Valuable Property for sale in [illegible] Village of Flesherton. For particulars apply to A. R. Fawcett, [illegible] office, Streetsville, [illegible] J. W. Armstrong, Flesherton.

Notice.—All accounts due me for Printing and advertising must be paid to J. W. Armstrong as soon as possible.

A. R. FAWCETT.

[illegible] Office, Streetsville.

TO OLD PATRONS.

AM OBLIGED FOR CONTINUED CONFIDENCE AND PATRONAGE.

[illegible] be with you again next week.

JEWELER BROWN.

MARKDALE.

The Weary World.

Far down the winding lane of years
The weary world is slowly wending;
From walls of fate and gates of tears,
To weary prayers no answer sending,
Yet through it all sweet spirits call,
Through lonely days of grief and aching,
"Hope's roses blossom on the wall
To keep the world's great heart from breaking."

Across the sobbing sea of doom,
The weary world is slowly drifting;
Eyes wet with tears pierce thro' the gloom,
But see no signs of rest or rifting.
Still angels bright from some far height,
Repeat thro' hours of weary waiting,
"Hope's sunlight shines thro' darkest night,
To keep the world's great heart from breaking."

O'er troubled ways, by paths of rue,
Faint souls press toward the land of pardon,
Burdened with crosses, wet with dew
From far Gethsemane's lone garden.
Yet to and fro, now high and low
A voice is sweetest music making—
Hope singing on thro' pain and woe,
To keep the world's great heart from breaking.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

"Yes, Shirley. And there is Jack you know."

"Poor Jack! He will be sorry he ever came home," she sighed.

"Jack will look upon his visit to Erindale as the most fortunate thing which ever happened to him," he answered cheerfully. "One thing more, Shirley. You are not equal to any more of the fatigues of nursing alone, and I will bring Daunt to you."

"Daunt?" she said questioningly.

"Yes, my faithful soldier-servant and friend. He is a first-rate nurse, and you may trust him as you trust me, Shirley. I am more than thankful he is with me at the Hall. And now, dear, are you sure that you believe I will do all I can for him?'

He had taken her hands in his, and was looking down at her with earnest eyes, which were as frank and friendly as if he had not loved her with the one great love of his life; and Shirley answered with equal earnestness—

"Yes—oh, yes! I trust you, Guy; and—and I cannot tell you what a relief it is to me to know—"

"I can guess that," he said gently, as her voice failed her; "you have borne it alone too long as it is. And now, dear, I must leave you. I will send or bring Daunt to you as soon as I can—although perhaps it will be better for me not to be seen coming here again to-day. Do you expect Mr. Litton?"

"No, not again to-day."

"Then trust to me, dear; I will do all that is best for you. Heaven help you, poor child!"

As he left her, she sunk upon her knees by the table and hid her face in her hands, for a few moments in uncontrollable weeping, although the tears had lost much of their bitterness and the throbbing heart was much lighter. Her husband's voice, calling her gently from the other room, made her spring to her feet and hastily dash away the tears, while she closed the shutters and drew the curtains over the windows ere she answered his summons. The fire which she had lighted in his room was burning dully, and she coaxed it into a blaze ere she went to the bedside and bent over the wasted form propped up upon the pillows.

"You want me, Hugh?"

"When do I not want you, Shirley?" he said, smiling faintly. "Were you resting?"

"No. Can I do anything for you?"

"Not just now, dear. I want to tell you something."

She knelt down beside him and took his hand in hers; and, as his eyes rested on her face, he saw the traces of tears.

"My poor Shirley!"

She smiled at him bravely.

"I am so much happier now, Hugh," she said softly—"so glad that you had more faith in Guy than I had."

"If the secret had been yours only, you would have trusted him, dearest child; but I know why you feared, Shirley. There is no nobler man on earth than Guy Stuart."

A light and warmth came over her face for a moment, and she bowed it upon the clasped hands to hide it from him; but he saw it and smiled sadly.

"Shirley," he said, after a moments' pause, "do you know what Guy would do if he were here in my place?"

"He would try to sleep," she replied with a faint little smile, "as I hope you will do, Hugh. Your hands are very hot and your temples throb. Let me bathe them for you."

But this weak detaining clasp was on her hands.

"Not just yet, my darling. Let me say to you what I have to say to you first. Raise me a little, Shirley; I cannot see your face now. Ah, that is better!"

She had raised his head upon her arm, and had brought her face on a level with his, and his eyes rested upon it with inexpressible tenderness and pity and love.

"Shirley, you have not answered me," he said softly, in a moment.

"Answered you?" she replied, looking bewildered.

"Yes, my question—what Guy would do if he were here in my place."

"I did answer it, Hugh," she said, smiling slightly; and the smile seemed to pain him, for he closed his eyes for a moment and his lip quivered.

"You cannot imagine Guy placed in such a position as mine," he said presently, with an intense sadness and self-contempt. "I cannot either, dearest, because, if—if—"

"Hugh, I cannot let you talk any more," she said earnestly. "Mr. Litton will be angry when he comes."

"No, he will not; he will understand, Shirley. I have been thinking that, if I had not committed that dreadful deed, and if we had lived as we had been living," he said, unsteadily, while she bowed her head not to see the tears in his dim eyes, "if I had been dying I should not have been so blessed as now. Ah, my darling, you would have been kind and pitiful, I know—it is not in you to be otherwise; but you would not have tended me as you are doing now, you would not have let my head rest upon your breast, Shirley, and held my hand in yours. Do you know, my darling injured wife," he added with sudden passion, "that your forgiveness and his—Guy's—seem an earnest of Heaven's pardon and mercy? I shall die happy now."

Her tears were falling fast as she listened, and with tender fingers she softly put back his hair from his brow.

"You have no thought of bitterness in your heart against me?" he said tremulously.

"Oh, Hugh, how could I have? I can only remember now that you loved me far, far more than I deserved, and that you have so much to forgive in my hardness and coldness for so many years. Hugh, do you ever think of them now?"

"Never, my darling—how could I?'

He rested his head against her shoulder, and, as he went on, although he took her hand in his, he did not look upon her face.

"I never think of the past now, Shirley," he said softly. "It is always with the present my thoughts are occupied—with the present, and—and the future."

"The future!" she repeated, in a startled voice. "Let us think only of the present, Hugh—of your safety and—"

"I have been a coward long enough, dear," he said, in a tone of such extreme gentleness and pity that Shirley's heart sunk with a new dread and pain. "Darling, in the light that is shining on me now—the light of the other world which I am nearing so quickly—I see things so much more clearly. I see not only that all my life, even before I knew you was selfish and worthless, but I see that—"

"Hugh, you are not feeling worse to-night; you are not suffering no more pain than usual?"

"No—oh, no! Does it hurt you to hear me talk thus? Ah, don't let it, my dearest! I am almost happy to-night, although my Shirley, I feel your tears upon my forehead."

"They are not tears of sorrow, Hugh. I, too, am comparatively happy to-night!"

"Then will you forgive me for making you sad again?" he said wistfully. "My darling, this—what I am going to tell you—has been in my heart for days; but Guy's face to-day told me that I was right. Love, when I asked you a few minutes since what Guy would do in my place, you did not answer. You felt in your heart, Shirley, that Guy, had he committed a crime, would have been brave enough and honest enough to bear the consequences from which I shrunk with so much cowardice. Shirley, must I tell you, dear, what I have been thinking of, lying here?"

She had sunk down upon her knees by his side, and hidden her face: they were both too deeply absorbed to hear the door opening from without—the door which she had left unfastened after Guy's departure—and stealthy quiet steps in the adjoining room. Shirley was too full of anguish at the thought of what he was going to say to heed anything else; Hugh was too grieved at the pain he must give her.

He put his trembling hand gently upon the bowed head, as it rested upon the counterpane.

"Darling," he said very softly, "do you know what Guy would have done in my place?"

"Oh, Hugh—hush!"

"It will be easier and best in the end, my child," he answered. "Guy Stuart would have given himself up, and I—"

"Oh, Hugh—Hugh!"

"And I will give myself up!" he said steadily.

A cry rose to Shirley's lips, but died away unuttered when she saw that two strange men were standing in the room, looking down at them with something like pity in their stolid faces; and the firelight, as it danced up cheerily, fell ruddy and glowing on some bright steel implements which one of them held.

Shirley knew that what she had dreaded had come. There was no need for Hugh to give himself up.

CHAPTER L.

"And they will not accept bail?"

"No. We offered any sureties they liked to ask; but they were refused."

"Monstrous," exclaimed Sir Oswald Fairholme indignantly, as he paced with hasty steps up and down the room. "To have taken him to prison at all in such a condition as you describe was already cruel enough, but—"

He broke off with a gesture of pain and anger, and Guy Stuart's eyes followed him, as he went restlessly to and fro, with great sadness, in their depths.

They were together in a sitting-room of the County Hotel at Adinbrooke, the nearest assize-town to Erindale, whither Sir Hugh Glynn, in no fit state for either fatigue or agitation, had been taken, charged on his own statement with the murder of Edwin Latreille.

As Guy said, every effort to induce the magistrates to take bail had been vain. Perhaps the case was too grave to admit of their doing so; perhaps too they felt that the sacrifice of a few thousand pounds in order to effect his escape would be little considered by Sir Hugh Glynn's friends. In any case, they refused, and, after the magisterial inquiry, he had been conveyed to the Adinbrooke jail to await his trial.

It was Daunt who, going to the cottage that night, and finding what had happened, had brought the tidings to the Hall, where they were received with a burst of horrified pain and almost incredulity. Major Stuart had told Sir Frederic and his wife the story of the woman who had lived among them for the last six months as Mrs. Grant, and all their sympathies had been aroused for poor Shirley in her anguish. Of course Jack Ross had been summoned to receive the news which was of such importance to him; and Madge, whom it had been deemed wiser to keep in present ignorance, was somewhat startled by her lover's face when she saw it after the conference. But, when the arrest became known, all further secrecy was out of the question. Shirley had been brought back to the Hall, to be tenderly soothed and cared for by Lady Oliphant and her daughter, while the three men exerted themselves to the utmost for Hugh. The best legal advice was telegraphed for from London, and everything was done—but in vain—to induce the magistrate to accept bail; and Guy's heart was heavy within him for Hugh and for Shirley, on whom this trial must fall so heavily.

"But how did they discover him?" Sir Oswald said, presently—he had come from Fairholme, travelling night and day to be with his cousin in her distress, "I thought every trace had been followed up minutely and they had always failed?"

"Yes; we had even desisted from further inquiry; but something aroused Clarke's suspicions, it seems. He was at the public-house at Westbury when poor Hugh passed, and he thought he was a suspicious character. You know Clarke was the detective employed in the case, and since then he has been actively employed in hunting up every clew."

"Employed by whom!" Sir Oswald asked, quickly.

"Your sister's lawyer," Guy answered, with some reluctance.

"Ah, I thought so!" exclaimed the baronet, a flush of pain rising in his dark cheek. "So, it is to Alice that poor Glynn owes his arrest?"

"Indirectly; and, of course, she thought she was hunting that poor wretch who—"

"Even then," said the other, quickly, "such persistent vengeance is unwomanly to a degree!"

"No one will regret Glynn's arrest more than Lady Eastwell," said Guy, gently. "You must not feel anger against her, Fairholme; she has been terribly deceived."

"It has been a horrible business from beginning to end—and we are not at the end yet," Oswald rejoined, wearily, as he threw himself into a chair. "What a life he has led, poor fellow, all this year and more! And Shirley too—how has she lived through it?"

"I think it has almost killed her," was the unsteady answer.

"And no wonder! The thought of it is terrible! What must the reality have been? Guy, I cannot tell you how deeply I feel all this; and the worst is that one feels so powerless to do anything to help any of you."

"Every one is powerless!" Stuart said, sadly. "And there are nine long weeks before March, Oswald."

"Nine weeks—yes; but—"

The baronet broke off suddenly, and their eyes met—the same thought was in the mind of each, but neither gave it utterance.

"Heaven be merciful," Oswald said unsteadily then—"merciful to them both. She can hardly bear much more."

"I think Heaven will be merciful," Guy answered, in a low tone of pain; and there was a short silence.

"You found him worse, Stuart?"

"Not suffering more, but weaker, and so anxious about Shirley that his anxiety was doing him serious injury. I promised that he should see her to-morrow."

"Will she be equal to it?"

"Yes. She is anxious also to see him. Oswald, I think, had it not been for this, they might have been happy together at last. I think she might in the time to come have grown to love him."

"Through her great pity?"

"Yes."

Oswald shook his head; and Guy went on eagerly.

"You know that pity is akin to love," he said, earnestly; "and she pities him so truly, poor child! Heaven help her and give her strength for what she has to bear yet!"

And indeed, if ever a poor weak woman needed strength, Shirley did then. She had struggled bravely against her terror and misery at Sir Hugh's arrest, she had let him go with dry, tearless eyes that had a look in them which hurt him more than any tears could have done; but, as soon as all necessity for bearing up was over and her eyes could no longer rest on the haggard face, she had broken down completely, and for three days she had lain in a semi-stupor of weakness and exhaustion. At the Hall, Lady Oliphant and Madge had been her constant attendants, although at first poor Madge had been so broken-hearted at the sad story she had heard and the misery in Jack's blue eyes that she had been fit for little; but, when she saw how much her sorrow added to Jack's distress, she made a brave stand against it; and Madge's face, tender and anxious, but smiling, was almost the first thing Shirley's weary eyes rested upon when she awoke from the exhausted slumber into which she had fallen, and Madge's presence was a great comfort to her in the dark days which ensued.

Shirley's meeting with her brother was a terribly trying one. By Mr. Litton's advice, he had not been allowed to see her until the first shock of Sir Hugh's arrest had passed; but, when the young surgeon—who was indeed a friend in this season of distress—had given permission for them to meet, Jack's anguish at the change in her was so intense that he broke down and cried like a child upon her breast, so that it was Shirley who was the comforter then.

But even his love for Madge Oliphant and his engagement to her, to which Sir Frederic and Lady Oliphant had given a cordial assent, could afford poor Jack but little consolation in those days. In after years, looking back at them, he felt that, but for Madge's love and her tender sympathy, his reason would have failed him at the thought that this greatest misery was also to be laid at his door, while the girl herself felt, what every true woman feels, that, if love brings joy in his train, he also brings much anxiety and sorrow, and that the deeper the love the greater the anxiety.

While Guy Stuart and Sir Oswald were at Adinbrooke, Lady Oliphant and Shirley and Madge were together in one of the pretty luxurious sitting-rooms at the Hall, waiting with what patience they might for the return of the two men, who had gone over in the morning to Adinbrooke for the magisterial inquiry.

It had been a long day to all three; longer, far longer, to them, waiting in the quiet house, with every luxury around them, than to those who were going through the pain and excitement of the proceedings at Adinbrooke and listening to the inquiry taking place there. It was not a long one; there were no witnesses against Hugh; the deed he had committed among the rocks at Easton had no human witnesses. But there were certain formalities, questions of indentity, et cetera, to be gone through, and the magistrate was inclined to be dilatory. Even when it was over, and Hugh had been taken back to prison, Sir Frederic had waited, in the hope that bail would have been accepted; and Guy had received permission to exchange a few words with the prisoner, whom he found perfectly calm about himself, but dreadfully anxious about Shirley.

Thus it happened that the shades of evening were drawn over the little county town as Guy and Oswald started homeward; and Madge, who had been sitting waiting for them on the terrace, turned away with a little sigh, and went back into the firelit room where Shirley and her mother were seated.

"Tired, Madge?" said Shirley's low, sweet voice as she looked up from her sofa and held out her hand to the young girl as she entered.

"No—oh, no!" Madge answered, forcing a smile, and kneeling down on the rug before the fire, to which the sofa was drawn up. "But—it has been a long day, Shirley."

"Yes, dear," Shirley replied gently, with a little tremor in the voice she tried to render firm. "And I am sure it has been a very long day to Jack too."

She smiled a little as she saw how the pretty color rose in the girl's fair face; and Madge lowered her hot cheek and rested it against the gentle hand which held hers, and they were silent for a space, while Lady Oliphant went on busily with her crewel-work by the little table on which a reading-lamp was burning, and tried to seem quite calm and at her ease, and to ignore the quick throbbing of her heart at the thought of the sorrowful tiding Sir Frederic might have in store for Shirley, who had not doubted for a moment but that bail would be accepted.

The pretty room was very still, and the firelight fell upon the two girls—Shirley was little more—as they sat there, with their hands clasped, and Madge's golden head resting against the cushions on which Shirley leaned. They made a pretty picture in their attitudes of unconscious grace, and with the great sadness on each fair face—a sadness so much the greater on Shirley's. Madge wore a soft clinging dress of some rich dark blue material, and the fire gleamed ruddily on the silver necklet and waistband that she wore, while Shirley's dress of black velvet was merely relieved at the throat by a profusion of black Spanish lace fastened by a gold brooch—for Mrs. Grant, the village schoolmistress, with her simply homely attire, had disappeared, and Lady Glynn had come back in her stead.

It was to please her brother that Shirley had put aside her black serge dress and resumed her former graceful attire; and Madge did not wonder, as she looked at her, that the two men—Guy Stuart and Sir Hugh Glynn—had loved her so deeply. Greatly as her beauty had been impaired by trouble, she was wonderfully lovely still, all the lovelier perhaps, for the deep sadness in the hazel eyes and the pain lingering round the sweet pale lips; and, as she crouched by her side, Madge thought she had never seen a lovelier face.

They were both silent and thoughtful as they sat in the firelight. Shirley's thoughts were with Hugh at Adinbrooke, and her heart was heavy and anxious; but Madge's had wandered back to the first time she had seen Shirley, and the intense attraction and fascination the latter had always possessed for her. She was recalling their first interview in the little, ivy-grown lodge, and how, the next day, Shirley had at first refused and then accepted her offer of the situation of village schoolmistress; and she remembered that it was only after she—Madge—had told Mrs. Ford that Guy was going abroad that she had accepted it. Poor darling, Madge thought pitifully, with a closer grasp of the frail fingers, how she must have suffered!

Shirley felt the caress and smiled. It was very pleasant to her, after shutting herself out so long from human sympathy, to be surrounded with such love and care and tenderness, and she put her hand caressingly on the golden hair and smoothed it with tender fingers.

"What should I do without you, Madge?" she said, fondly.

"Am I indeed any comfort to you?" the girl asked, eagerly.

"I could not tell you how much, my child. From the first time I saw you you have helped me, and what we should have done without you now I hardly dare to think. But it is a sorrowful beginning to your engagement, dear."

"Not at all sorrowful, Shirley," the girl answered, wistfully. "It has not made me love Jack the less because he is in trouble.'

"And I think it has deepened, if it be possible, his love for you, Madgie. Your happiness and his, my child, seem like a little streak of golden sunlight peering through our dark clouds."

The sound of a horse's hoof on the frozen ground without made Madge start up; but it was only Mr. Litton, who came in presently in his riding-dress, bringing with him a breath of fresh air from the outside world. Shirley's face brightened as she saw him, and she held out her hand to him with a smile.

"How are you, doctor?' she said, as, having shaken hands with Lady Oliphant, he passed on to her sofa. "You are fagged and tired, I am afraid."

"Mr. Litton is just in time for some tea," said Lady Oliphant cheerfully, as a footman appeared with the tea-equipage; and Madge, jumping up, insisted on passing the cups, and on the young man's resting in the comfortable arm-chair which she pushed forward him.

"I came over thinking I might—But I heard from Peters that they had not returned yet," he said, rather disjointedly. "Are you better this evening, Lady Glynn?"

"I am very well," she answered, gently. "But, Mr. Litton, there is something troubling you—can you not tell me what it is?"

He laughed slightly, then, with a sudden impulse, drew his chair nearer to her sofa, and said, in eager but lowered tones;

"Lady Glynn, I have to thank you for a letter you kindly wrote on my behalf. It was so very good of you to think of it in all your trouble."

"I could not forget," she returned gently, "that through your great goodness to me, Mr. Litton, you brought sorrow upon yourself."

"The letter was far more generous than I deserved," he said rather unsteadily, as he touched the hand she held out to him with such frank cordiality; "and—and—"

"Has the letter done what I wished it to do?" she asked earnestly. "You must not say that it was more generous than you deserved: it could not be. We can never forget how good you were, Mr. Litton, and I am grieved that your goodness should have given you any pain. You have heard from Miss Venn?" she added softly.

"Yes."

"And she is penitent, I hope?" Shirley said smilingly.

"She is very penitent," he answered.

(To be continued.)

Henry Villard is at the head of a South Pole expedition.

Rev. Dr. Frank L. Norton, of Lynn, Mass., is probably the richest clergyman in the country.

Jesse D. Carr has been ordered by a Government agent to remove a stone fence which he has built around 40,000 acres of Government land in California.

ON TOP OF SINAI.

The Mountain on Which the Glory of the Lord Rested.

It does not seem high, because it was yet half hidden from our view by the intervening hill. As soon as this hill was mastered the plain of Er Raha, or "Plain of Assemblage," came into full view, with the Sinai range at its southern extreme. The combination was satisfying—convincing. Here was the one great feature, the want of which prevented Mount Serbal from contesting for the honors of Sinai. There is no plain in the vicinity of Serbal extensive enough to accommodate an assemblage as large as Moses led. But here is a vast plateau of sufficient extent, and, as we shall presently see when we view it from Mount Sinai summit, so located that Moses could overlook it all when he read the law. This must be the "true Sinai," the very mountain upon which the glory of the Lord rested in the sight of the people. When facing its awful, stately grandeur, I felt as if I had come to the end of the world. How many pilgrims had come from all parts of the earth to this very spot to reverence, to sacrifice, and to worship! I dismounted to contemplate the sublime panorama, and Elihuel, my camel driver, sat down beside me. He hardly seemed to understand my actions and at last interrupted my reverie by exclaiming as he pointed to the lofty group, "Jebel Mousa—Tayeeb!" "Mountain of Moses—good!" He also reverenced it, for he was a Mohammedan. What impresses the American traveller most sensibly here is the fact that, although mountains abound and stream beds are more plenty than in our own White Hills, a cascade or water fall is never heard. When the rains fall the water rolls down these bare, rough diagonals uninterrupted and empties into the wadies, which in turn impetuously roll the torrents into the sea with great speed before the parched earth has time to absorb more than a mere surface supply. What a surprise, then, when arrived at the highest ridge of the vast plateau of Er Raha, to see a bright oasis full of trees laden with the blossoms of spring backed by the strange, contrasting, gloomy walls of the convent of St. Catherine. No location could be more charming—in the narrow valley, nestled at the feet of the closely protecting mountains. Upon the highest ramparts are set both the cannon and the cross. It was both castle and convent we were approaching. More than once the inmates have been obliged to defend themselves against the marauder. At one time every monk was massacred. Since then more care has been exercised. We were obliged to prove our friendship before we could gain admittance. We could not even encamp in the neighborhood until our credentials were examined and approved. Arriving at the convent wall we sent up a shout to the top. In the course of time the voice of a monk sent down a squeaky response. To a point near the top of the wall a tiny structure shaped like a dog kennel is attached. From this a small rope was let down, to which we attached our firman, or letter of introduction, obtained at the branch institution at Suez. This was hauled up slowly and soon answered by a great noise in the aerial kennel. Then a thick cable was lowered to us and we were asked to "get in and come up." But the low gate in the wall was swung open at that moment and we chose to enter the convent by it rather than go up by cable. When we arrived at the quarters of the Superior we saw that the cable was not let down hand over hand, but that a clumsy windlass, worked and turned by Bedouin serfs, was the power behind the throne. The combination is believed to be the first passenger elevator in the world. It seems as though no semblance of humanity should remain in a place made sacred by so many holy associations, but the convent is inhabited by about sixty monks, varying in grades of sanctity. Nine of them yielded to our camera. A beardless youth afforded us considerable amusement. Repeatedly he came to me, with tears in his eyes, and begged for some recipe to make his beard grow. He said that he would not be allowed to read chapel service until he had a beard; that nearly all the monks but him had beards.—Century.

Millais and His 5,000 Guinea Fee.

Sir John Millais allows nothing to interfere with his summer holiday. Last year, when he was on the eve of leaving for Scotland, a card was brought to him on which was printed "Mr. Jehosaphat Smith, Chicago." The gentleman was shown in, and Sir John asked his pleasure. "Wall, said the American, "my wife and three daughters are waiting in a cab, and I want you to paint us straight away." Sir John politely explained that he was just leaving London and could not undertake the job. "It's pretty hard if you won't," pleaded the gentleman from Chicago; "we've come over from America on purpose to be put on canvas by you, and I don't mind giving 5,000 guineas for the job." Sir John Millais hesitated—5,000 guineas is a large sum to throw away—but the moors and his fishing rose before him, and he still refused. "You must call again next year," he said, as he showed Mr. Jehosaphat Smith (of Chicago) to the door.

Quick Witted Maine Girl.

A poorly-clad little girl came into the store of one of our stationers recently. She wished to buy some writting paper, and finally was shown some for 5 cents a quire. "How much will half a quire be?" she inquired in a half-fed, plaintive little voice. "Three cents," replied the clerk. "If you please, I'll take the other half," was the quick response.—Augusta Journal.

Stanley and Frechette.

The Quebec correspondent of the Empire is right in saying that His Excellency the Governor-General is generally esteemed in Quebec. But he is wrong in accusing Mr. Frechette of lauding rebels, etc. These are tactics which are unworthy of a respectable paper. At the present time Mr. Frechette is engaged in literary work, not politics.—L'Electeur.

Lady Canvasser (with patent medicine, to stout gent)—I assure you, sir, it's an A No. 1 article. I know many who praise it to the skies.

Stout Gent—No, doubt, madam, for it has sent many to the skies to praise it.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Interesting Items for the Agriculturist, Gardener and Housekeeper.

If grape vines are growing too fast and slender, pinch off the ends.

It is stated that over 500,000 rose plants are annually imported into America from England, France and Holland.

Use a mason's trowel to scrape the moss or loose bark off the stems of fruit trees, taking good care not to injure the inner bark.

A poor tool on the farm imposes a tax upon the user every day it is employed, often greater in a year than the whole price of a good tool.

After careful experiments a dairyman concludes that bran is profitable for the milkman, but that oats are much more profitable for the buttermaker.

The old advice to treat a cow as a lady is first-class advice. If anybody cannot do that, and milk rapidly and thoroughly, better not attempt to milk at all.

Hay contains the largest amount of nutriment per acre when somewhat past the bloom, but the proportion of nutriment per ton is greater when cut at an earlier stage.

Whenever boughs of trees or vines become troublesome, lop them off, no matter what time in the season. Cut smoothly; don't mangle or tear or skin the parts which are left.

No aged sow that has proved herself a good breeder and sucker should be disposed of to make room for young and untried sows as long as she will raise large litters of good pigs.

A prominent dairyman says to prevent blackleg give a mixture of four parts of saltpetre, three parts sulphur and two parts copperas once or twice a day during spring and fall.

Whenever you see little holes in the currant and gooseberry leaves the best thing to do is to apply white hellebore, dusting carefully over the leaves. If the work be done carefully the remedy is almost certain.

Take a bushel of air-slacked lime, ten pounds of sulphur and about four ounces of crude carbolic acid, mix thoroughly and scatter anywhere in the poultry house. This is a perfect specific against all manner of vermin.

Considerable of the work of pruning next year can be avoided by going over the trees and rubbing off all the shoots and water sprouts that have started up where they are not wanted. This ought to be done before the wood hardens.

A remedy for ants in the lawn is to dig to the bottom of the nests as soon as they are discovered. Throw out the loam and then cover the bottom to the depth of about ten inches with coarse salt; fill up with soil, and usually the ants will not trouble any more.

Add to the capacity of your farm by adding to the strength of the soil. Many farms of fifty acres produce more and are more easily cultivated than other farms of one hundred acres. If you can double the productiveness of your farm you will more than double its value.

The weighing of the milk, testing of the cows, and knowing to a dollar what one is doing, is a great help to the dairy farmer. It enables him to get rid of poor milkers and replace them with good ones, and the latter cost no more to keep and handle than the former.

A 2-year-old steer requires in his daily food, to enable him to make an even, well-developed growth, about one pound of flesh-forming food to eight pounds of fat and heat-producers, and this is about the proportion in which these two classes of nutrients are found in good timothy hay.

Not only should skim milk be warmed when it is fed to calves but it should also be warmed when it is fed to young pigs. The fact is that cold milk is just about poison to the bowels of any young animal that it is fed to. Not only should it always be warm when it is fed but it should invariably be sweet.

In using kerosene or coal oil in an emulsion for destroying insects considerable care should be taken to keep it thoroughly mixed. If allowed to stand even a few minutes the oil and water will separate and often considerable damage will be the result, as the oil alone will injure the trees and plants quite seriously if applied to them.

There are so many beautiful annuals that blossoms if early sown, from the early spring until frost comes, that the succession can be easily kept up, and one need never be without them. It will require but little time to cultivate them, and the vigor gained from the outdoor exercise will compensate for its outlay even if the flowers yielded no other returns.

No implement needs better care than those that are costly or difficult to construct. Some of them are used but a short time during the year, such as harvesters. They should be well cleaned, and every part subject to rust given a brushing over with kerosene. If convenient, expensive machinery should be covered, as during the winter there is always an accumulation of dust that does more or less damage to implements.

The potato field should not be allowed to grow up in grass after the crop is off. To allow weeds and grass to take possession is simply allowing the field to be seeded with such pests for next season, thereby doubling the amount of work during the busy period. Sow the potato field to some kind of crop, rye being excellent for that purpose.

To make blackberry wine: Measure your berries and bruise them; to every gallon add one quart of boiling water. Let the mixture stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally; then strain off the liquor into a cask; to every gallon add two pounds of sugar, cork tight and let it stand until the following October and you will have wine ready for use without further labor.

Small potatoes are very nice cooked in this way: Peel them and boil in salted water; do not let them boil until they get soft. Beat one egg, and have ready some fine cracker crumbs; roll the potato in the egg and then in the cracker and fry in butter until a light brown, turning frequently that the color may be uniform; or the potatoes may be dropped into hot lard. In this case a cloth should be laid over a plate and the potatoes should be drained for a moment in this before sending them to the table.

In fruit growing remember that fruits are like grain and vegetable crops in this, that they must have manure to keep up the fertility. Unlike vegetables and grain, however, their feeding roots are mostly at the surface. It is best, therefore, annually to top-dress fruit trees. If manure cannot be had, any fresh earth from ditches or roadside spread half an inch or so under the trees will have a wonderful effect. Indeed, we do not know but that for the pear tree a thin layer of road sand is one of the best of manures. We have seen apples thrive amazingly with a coating of coal ashes.

A large English farmer says that his manure which is taken from the stables and piled up under a shed all winter is worth in the spring four times as much as that which has been exposed to the weather. This is undoubtedly nearly correct if the exposure be a bad one, such for example as throwing the manure out of the stable window and letting it rest in a pile against the side of the stable exposed to the rain dripping from the roof. In this way most of the fertilizing salts are drained out of it into the earth below the heap or are washed away in the overflow of the yard, and the manure is left of little value.

Entire wheat muffins.—For a dozen muffins there will be required a cupful and a half of entire wheat flour, a cupful of milk, one-third of a cupful of water, an egg, a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, half a teaspoonful of soda, half a teaspoonful of salt and two table-spoonfuls of sugar. Mix the dry ingredients and sift them into a bowl. Beat the egg until it is light, and add the milk and water to it. Pour this mixture upon the dry ingredients, and beat them quickly and vigorously. Pour the batter into buttered muffin pans and bake for twenty-five minutes in a rather quick oven. The batter will be thin and will give a moist muffin, but that is as it should be Batter pudding.—Mix smoothly one tablespoonful each of flour and sugar, with a pint of milk and a pinch of salt. Pour it into a well-buttered pie-dish and leave it in a slow oven till set. It must not boil.

Cornstarch cake.—Two cups of white sugar, one cup of butter, the whites of five eggs beaten to a froth, one cup of sweet milk, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two cups of flour and one of cornstarch. flavor to taste.

Amouretten.—Steep some neatly shaped slices of bread, without crust, in a custard of egg, milk and a little sugar, well beaten together. Fry a golden brown and serve very hot, with a squeeze of lemon and sifted sugar over them.

Pearl barley pudding.—Simmer a tablespoonful of pearl barley till thoroughly swelled in milk. Lay it in a pie dish, pour in the milk and a little sugar; place some tiny pieces of dripping (well clarified) on the top and bake.

Tapioca and apples.—Core the apples and stew them, well covered with water, either whole or in quarters, with sugar to taste, till tender. Boil three or four ounces of tapioca till liquid, pour it on the apples and bake half an hour. Serve with a jug of milk.

Cup pudding.—Mix carefully one cup each of flour, ground rice, finely chopped suet, milk and raisins, with a tablespoonful of soda, the same of ground ginger (if liked) and a tablespoonful of vinegar. Boil four hours and serve with sweet sauce; but it is very good without.

Marmalade pudding.—Five ounces of bread crumbs, four ounces of suet, two ounces of candied peel, one lemon, one egg, three tablespoonfuls of marmalade. Chop the suet very finely, shred the candied peel, grate the rind of the lemon; put these ingredients with the crumbs into a basin, and mix with them the marmalade and egg. Well grease a basin, turn in the mixture, cover with greased paper and steam four hours.

Floating island.—Beat the yelks of three eggs until very light; sweeten and flavor to taste; stir into a quart of boiling milk, cook till it thickens; when cool pour into a low glass dish; whip the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth; sweeten, and pour over a dish of boiling water to cook. Take a tablespoon and drop the whites on top of the cream, far enough apart so that the "little white islands" will not touch each other. By dropping little specks of bright jelly on each island a pleasing effect will be produced. Also by filling wine-glasses and arranging around the stand adds to the appearance of the table.

A desirable dessert.—Sponge cream furnishes a very delicate and easily made dessert. The ingredients are: One pint of fresh milk, three tablespoonfuls of gelatine, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, three eggs. Put the gelatine into cold milk, let it stand for a little while; put on the stove and bring the milk to a boiling point; then add the sugar and yelks of the eggs, which have been well beaten together. Remove from the fire and stir in the whites, which have also been beaten stiff. Add a little salt, flavor to suit and pour into moulds wet first so the cream will turn out easily

Velvet cream.—Two tablespoonfuls of strawberry jelly, two tablespoonfuls of currant jelly, two tablespoonfuls of pulverized sugar, whites of two eggs beaten stiff; then whip the cream; fill a wine-glass one-half full of the whipped cream, and fill the glass with the above mixture beaten to a cream.

Tomato Savoy.—Four pounds of tomatoes, one pint of vinegar, two pounds of sugar, cinnamon, cloves and mace. Peel and slice the tomatoes, adding the vinegar, sugar and spices. Boil half an hour and bottle, corking tightly to exclude the air. If not exposed to mold this will keep for years in a dry closet.

The Danger of Travel.

Charlie—Harry, do you know that I don't like to travel on the railroad on Monday.

Harry—Why?

Charlie—Because there's always a wash-out on the line.

The Hat Went With the Boy.

At the Mountain Resort.—Fond Mamma (whose son had just been rescued by De Jones from a watery grave)—"Thank you ever so much, Mr. De Jones, but you've forgotten to get Tommy's hat."

VASTNESS OF INDIA.

A Populous Nation With Great Cities and a Future.

For 80 years at least writers have endeavored to bring home to the outside world a knowledge of the vastness of India, but so far as can be perceived have failed. The average man, says the Fortnightly Review, reads what they say, learns up their figures, tries to understand their descriptions, but fails, for all his labor, to realize what India is—a continent large as Europe west of the Vistula, and with 30,000,000 more people, fuller of ancient nations, of great cities, of varieties of civilization, of armies, nobilities, priesthoods, organizations of every conceivable purpose, from the spreading of great religions down to systematic murder. There are twice as many Bengalese as there are Frenchmen; the Hindostanees, properly so called, outnumber the whites in the United States; the Mahrattas would fill Spain, the people of the Punjab with Scinde are double the population of Turkey, and I have named four of the more salient divisions. Everything is on the same bewildering scale. The fighting peoples of India, the men are as big as ourselves, as brave as ourselves, and more regardless of death than ourselves, number at least 120,000,000, equal to Gibbon's calculation of the population of the Roman empire. There are 400,000 trained brown soldiers in native service, of whom we hear perhaps once in ten years, and at least 2,000,000 men who think their proper profession is arms, who would live by arms if they could, and of whom we in England never hear a word. If the Prussian conscription were applied in India, we should, without counting reserves or land vehr or any force not summoned in time of peace, have 2,500,000 soldiers actually in barracks with 800,000 recruits coming up every year—a force with which not only Asia but the whole world might be subdued. There are tens of millions of peasants whose hoardings make of India the grand absorbent of the precious metals, tens of millions of peasants beside whose poverty fellahs or Sicilians or Connaught men are rich, millions of artisans, ranging from the men who build palaces to the men who, nearly naked and almost without tools, do the humblest work of the potter Every occupation which exists in Europe exists also in India. The industry of the vast continent never ceases, for India, with a population in places packed beyond European precedent, imports nothing either to eat or drink, and but for the Europeans would import nothing whatever. She is sufficient to herself for every thing save silver. Amid these varied masses these 250,000,000, whose varied descriptions would fill volumes, the tide of life flows as vigorously as in Europe. There is as much labor, as much contention, as much ambition, as much crime, as much variety of careers, hopes, fears and hatreds. It is still possible to a moneyless Indian to become vizier of a dynasty older than history, or finance minister of a new prince whose personal fortune in hard cash is double that of the late Emperor William, or abbot of a monastery richer than Glastonbury ever was, owner of an estate that covers a county, head of a firm whose transactions may vie with those of the Barings or Bleichroders. One man, Jute Pershad by name, fed and transported the army which conquered the Punjab.

How Americans Look.

Frederick Barnard, the illustrator, surprised me a little the other day when he said: "You Americans are not a bit like the English in your appearance. In the course of a century or so you've changed from the English type altogether. The voices of your women have grown loud and shrill, and your men have got darker faces and keener eyes. I've got so now that I can tell the New-Yorker pretty well by his eyes wherever I find him. They are sharp eyes and are set near together, as though their owner had brought them close to his nose by poking that organ into very narrow places where it was necessary to see at the same time. You look like a lot of ferrets. Then the eyebrows, instead of going straight across the face slope downward at the outer edge and come rather close together above the nose. That not only makes you look shrewd, but it makes you look bored and tired and dragged out, as I suspect most of you are. A great many of you look like actors. Boston people look somewhat different from New Yorkers, as they ought to, for they live in a more Christian town than this. Your eternal jumping and rushing in this city make me tired, as the boys say."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Cruise of a Bottle.

Captain Gleadell, of the steamer Germanic, reports that a bottle thrown overboard from the Celtic two years ago, in latitude 49 degrees 31 minutes north, longitude 30 degrees 45 minutes west, was picked up recently at Rivadeo, on the north coast of Spain. The bottle had travelled 1,050 miles east-southeast, half east, at the rate of nearly 3½ miles per day. This is a very slow rate of translation for any drift matter in the current between the points named. A bottle thrown into the Sargasso Sea, on its northeast margin, has been known to reach Cuba, a distance of 3,300 miles, in 437 days, making an average daily progress of more than 8 miles. This is about the speed made by other like waifs in the Atlantic Equatorial current. The cruise of the bottle reported by Captain Gleadell must have been apparently much longer than a great circle drawn between the point at which it was thrown out and that at which it was picked up. It cannot indicate the rate of the ocean currents, but it shows very clearly their general direction in the higher latitudes of the North Atlantic.

In a "Smoking Car."

Funny doctor (with cigar, to individual smoking foul pipe)—You should really take care. I'm a medical man, and I can assure you, my dear sir, that 99 per cent. of the cases of throat disease arise from the smoking of foul pipes." Individual: "Humph! And do you know, doctor, that 99 of the cases of black eye are caused by not minding one's one business?"—Moonshine.

W. H. McBean, a young man of good family, was arrested at Winnipeg on Saturday night on a charge of outraging an Icelandic servant girl in his father's family. He asserts his innocence, and says it is a case of blackmail.

A STEER CLEARS A STORE.

It Begins With Cabbages and Ends With Red Peppers.

As a drove of steers was passing the grocery store of Wm. Peters, at the corner of Hancock and Jefferson streets, last evening, one of them with a mind of an inquiring turn walked into the open door and started on a tour of investigation through the store. The place was filled with customers, who fled precipitately at the steer's approach. Those who could not reach the door crouched under the counter in an agony of fear. His bullship leisurely proceeded to inspect the cabbage pile, and, after munching contentedly at it for a few moments, turned his attention to a basket of red peppers that lay within tempting reach. After a sniff he concluded they were edible, and taking a good mouthful began to chew. No sooner had he broken the skin of the red-hot vegetables than the fire began to burn, and he stamped around the store in agony, bellowing with rage and pain and threatening to demolish everything within reach. Spying a crate of eggs he made a plunge for them and emerged from the box with his head coated with egg yelks. After stamping around the store for a short time he escaped and joined the herd. An immense crowd had gathered around the store, and a Tenth district policeman was considering the best means of ending the show, when the steer rushed into the street.—Philadelphia Record.

A Western Unique.

"Away out on what is known as the south branch of the Union Pacific Railway, in Gunnison county, Col., is a station called Parlin. There is nothing of the place except a depot and a post office, and every train must stop there five minutes, whether it is a passenger or a freight train. Not many feet distant is the house of John Parlin. The house is made of logs and is on the side of a hill which stretches back and hitches itself to a mountain that raises itself up until its snowy summit touches the blue sky. The waters come down the mountain side in a silvery laughter, and all day long make music within a stone's throw of John Parlin. The acres of foliage, the pastures green for miles about belong to John Parlin. The herds of blooded cattle on the hillsides and in the valleys are John Parlin's. Near the station and in the middle of as limpid a stream of water as ever charmed a fairy is a dairy in which are crocks and crocks and crocks of milk from John Parlin's Holstein herd.

"Here in this secluded spot, remote from the contentions of this busy world, came the railroad engineer running his line. John Parlin took him in and gave him of his cheer in a hospitable manner that would inspire an American Walter Scott. The engineer went away, and later on came other railway men—some of them magnates—and John Parlin furnished them food and rest and plenty of milk. Then they told him they wanted 1,500 acres of his land and asked him to name his price. The old man, in his generosity of heart, in his nature which partook of the freedom of his home and its picturesque surroundings, said to them: 'You can have 1,500 acres if you will put a depot over there near the dairy and make all of your trains stop there five minutes. The road was built. The agreement was kept, and is till this day. And John Parlin sits in the doorway of his log house and sees the trains come in and stop. And the passengers and the engineers and the firemen and the conductors and the brakemen leave their trains and go over to the dairy and partake of John Parlin's Holstein cows' milk, fresh and cooled by the mountain stream, free of charge. Then they return to the train and it speeds away, and John Parlin stands in his doorway and waves his hand and his children shout in nature's grasses at the departing scene."—Chicago Times.

Mrs. H. B. Stowe Sadly Altered.

After the death of Professor Stowe the eyes of the twin daughters of Mrs. Stowe, who were her inseparable companions, detected a change in their mother, and have courageously admitted of late that the wonderful personality of Harriet Beecher Stowe is sadly altered. At times, it is true, she is her old self—a woman of tremendous force of will, unfailing common sense and a mind remarkable for vigor and quality.

In her times of clouded mentality she will deny acquaintance with her oldest and best friends, and forget facts as familiar to her as the fingers on her hand; again, she will stop strangers in the street, question them, and, as in the case of an Italian peddler whom she recently confronted on the sidewalk, she will berate them soundly for imaginary offences. But she is so slight and frail in appearance, so gentle and winning in manner, ordinarily that every one realizes that something is wrong with the little woman, and they treat her as they would a child. Her neighbors were long ago made aware of the fact that, like Emerson, she is failing at the top, and with a great tenderness and thoughtfulness they speak of her as of one who has made a long and useful sojourn here and who is now living in two worlds at one and the same time. Occasionally she seems so like her own strong self that those about her hope she is recovering, but the condition is temporary, and the delightful conversationalist and practical woman is gone, and with the eclipse of the former individuality the beautiful eyes look vacantly upon well known faces and familiar scenes, and she is merely a memory of her other self.—Laura C. Holloway in New York Graphic.

Mr. Thistle's Mistake.

"Papa," said a beautiful girl, "young Mr. Thistle has written me a note in which he asks me to be his wife."

"Written you a note? Why in thunder didn't he come himself?"

"It would have been pleasanter that way no doubt, papa, but I suppose he feels a little timid, and besides, papa think how much more binding the note is."

A wheat crop of 30,000,000 bushels up in Manitoba offers a rather floury prospect.

Sarah Bernhardt is to return to Paris from England on Friday of this week. She will rest throughout August, and then will take steamer for India and Australia, to be gone seven months—time enough for the claws of her pet tiger to grow into good-sized scratchers.

GORGEOUS FLOWER BEDS.

What a Skilful Gardener Has to Show in Boston.

Thousands of visitors have been to the Danvers hospital grounds the past few weeks, says a Boston letter, and the horse cars carry great loads daily, extra trips being made on visiting days—Mondays and Wednesdays. The main object held in view by the many strangers is to see the marvellous flower beds designed and arranged by the florist and gardener, Ettore Tassinari, which are now in prime condition, and rival anything of their kind in the United States. The largest design is a Chinese pagoda, 17 feet high, with a dome supported by six pillars, and archway beneath them high enough to pass under without stooping. There are three fountains and thirty varieties of plants in portable boxes, and the back of a shield, flags and draperies. Florists from far and near have pronounced this design the best they ever saw. A solar clock or sun dial attracts much attention, as it accurately tells the time of day by a shadow cast by a pole of growing plants placed at an angle of 47 degrees, and pointing to the North star. The shadow falls on floral numerals in the rim of a horse-shoe shaped bed of plants. There are numerous beds of lesser note, and several photographs have been taken of the principal ones.

Regular Hours for Sleep.

The final word of physiology to the student is not to turn night into day, and to never subtract from a due measure of sleep. No one needs regular and full hours of sleep more than the brain-worker. I believe we lose nothing by taking nine hours of sleep; no one can do sound and bountiful thinking with less than seven or eight hours. We are creatures of habit. It is all important that the young be taught the need of regularity. We become sleepy at regular hours, if we habitually take sleep promptly when the hour comes. Sleeplessness is brought about by irregularity. So, again, if we deduct from the regular hours given to sleep, it becomes difficult to sleep at all. Drugs compel it for a time, but no drug exists which gives normal sleep, or fails in time to make us its slave. Natural sleep can come only by a natural process. Night, let it be understood, is not, and is never, the time for study.

The very best rule is to study in the morning, before breakfast, before noon; and again, if necessary, before the third meal, but never in the evening. The later hours of the day should be given to sport, to light reading and to those occupations that relax the nerves. Let no temptation whatever induce you to return to writing or study, or even letter-writing, or to anything annoying or exciting, after 4 in the afternoon. Defer all matters liable to arouse and intensify attention or anxiety until morning. If you have a worry let it alone till the early hours; and so with any problem that taxes the brain. Children should be forbidden their books in the evening. We shall be driven to reverse the prevalent fashion of turning night into day. The night has the advantage of relative quiet, but the disadvantage of being the true time for sleep.—M. Maurice, M.D., in Globe Democrat.

Fall Shades in Millinery.

Millinery Trade Journal

The syndicate of Paris manufacturers have adopted the following as among the leading colors for the coming season:

Emeraude—a deep, rich, emerald green.
Scarabee—a dark, yellowish green.
Couroncon—a shade lighter than scarabee.
Feupliere—a shade lighter than couroncon.
Nil—a light, watery green.
Coquelicot—a rich, blood red.
Cardinal—a dark scarlet.
Boulanger—a bright, live-blood red.
Bouton d'or—a golden yellow.
Mais—a straw yellow.
Volcan—a reddish terra cotta.
Alezan—a dark, reddish brown.
Pactole—a light, golden brown.
Oxide—a dark slate.
Lionceau—a dark fawn.
Heron—a gray drab.
Luciole—a gend'arme blue.

Curious Relics.

In searching some old clothing which belonged to the late Archibald Hall, Sprague's road, in one of the pockets were found two 50 shilling notes of the Bank of British North America, of a very ancient date and style. They had evidently been in possession of the old gentleman for some years previous to his death, put away and forgotten, only to come to light when the clothes were being ripped up for some household purposes.—Galt Reporter.

Druggist (excited)—Run and overtake Col. Bourbon, James. I've made an awful mistake in his prescription! James (seizing his hat)—Wh—what's the mistake! Druggist—The prescription called for spiritus fermenti and aqua. I gave him all aqua. The dose will kill him

MARVELOUS
MEMORY
DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, E. H. COOK, Pres. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from
PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DON'T BE DUPED

DOWN'S
BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, AUG. 23, 1888.

A CRITICAL PERIOD.

The mining commission, appointed at last session of the Ontario Legislature, have now been at work some time, taking evidence as to the mineral wealth, and the extent of mineral-bearing rocks in Ontario. This work is one of vast importance to our Province. It is an undoubted fact that we are more wealthy in minerals of many kinds than has hitherto been dreamed of. Gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, asbestos, mica—in fact all the valuable minerals—are to be found in the neighborhood of that vast rocky expanse of highland which forms the watershed between Hudson's Bay and the great chain of inland lakes. The Canadian Pacific railway has made this field of wealth easy of access, and afforded an answer to the enigma of how to develop those resources. Upon this stretch of country, lying to the north of us, the United States is gazing to-day with a jealous eye. She sees that Canada in the near future will be able to produce her own wealth, and become entirely independent of the source from which she has heretofore drawn to a large extent. She sees a rival nation growing and expanding on her northern border, with all the concomitants that go to make a powerful people. The United States has attained her growth in area, and begins to feel Mexico crowding her upon the one side and Canada upon the other. The amount of bragadocio and bluster indulged in by members of the American Senate during the last two or three years give us substantial proof that Canada is a very large thorn in the Americans' side. They would like to annex Canada to-day—three years ago they would not accept her as a gift.

And what has brought about this remarkable change of front? Simply the fact of Canada jumping suddenly into the position of a commercial competitor and a dangerous rival to American interests on this continent. We consider this to be a critical period in Canadian history. Overtures have come in a friendly guise from across the border for commercial union. Commercial union, forsooth! when Canada is just beginning to feel her power among the nations of the world! Even the purblind Globe has at last withdrawn from its former position in this matter.

Canada's wealth in mines is a new surprise, being now made public through this mining commission. Her forests are the grandest on the continent, her highway from ocean to ocean is a marvel to the world, her grain-growing qualities are not excelled. The American people are long-headed. We thank them for their tardy appreciation, but we appreciate ourselves sufficiently to uphold the dignity which is justly ours, and work out the grand destiny which is surely in store. And we intend to do it.

Friend Spurr of the Dundalk Herald had a giant mushroom handed in last week by Mr. T. Ladings, of Dundalk. Bro. Spurr straightway expressed the lion's share of the big fungus to the Empire, Toronto. He retained a small portion for himself, but forgot his next door neighbor to the north. Not that we are hungering for mushrooms. They are not a necessity to our corporeal welfare. In fact we wouldn't have eaten it anyway, for it requires butter to fry mushroons, and our cow is dry. But we would just have liked to "throw ourselves" on a botanical diagnosis of this genus of the fungi tribe. The following interesting description, from the Empire, will be easily translated by our readers with the aid of a botanical text book and Webster's unabridged

"This remarkable fungus, while possessing may of the characteristics of the agaricus campestris, is yet more likely a cantharellus cibarine, that great English rarity, and which has hitherto not been known to Canadians, though somewhat plentiful in North Carolina. Were it not for the short stem it is exactly the shape of a marasmius arcades. In this specimen the pileus is some 44 inches in circumference, while the stem, above the plainly marked annulus, is quite a foot in circumference. The volva is of a somewhat dun color, while the hymenium is particularly well developed and of a tawny chocolate. The height of this agaric is about eight inches."

The motion to ratify the Fishery Treaty was lost in the U. S. Senate yesterday by 30 to 27.

Written for the Advance.

The Man I am Looking For.

My dear sympathetic readers! Did you ever try to pass a man on the street who would not be passed? Not a dun, or anything of that kind; ah, no; one of those uncommon, once-in-a-long-while individuals who seems possessed of your mind—tries to pass you on the same side that you try to pass him; then when you decide to try the other side he concludes that your scheme is a good one and does the same? He would keep this up all day if you didn't stand stock still and allow him to go his way and hunt for some one else to butt against. Do you recognize him? Then if you do you know the man I am earnestly in search for. I want to find him. I have a chunk of iron in my coat sleeve, and I'm going to knock seventeen different kinds of rheumatic pains into his left arm when we collide.

The other day I was running to catch a train. I had to pass a telegraph pole, and in rounding it I met this individual face to face. We both recoiled and tried the other side. Then we backed up, each with the idea that the other would stand still, and came together like two billy goats. We butted, and jammed, and rammed each other on both sides of that pole until I got faint and had to hug the post until my assailant had veered out into the street and got past. When I gathered myself together my train had disappeared, and so had the man.

Then, just last week, when it was raining and blowing great guns, I was walking down street with my umbrella pretty low over my face when I was jabbed in the pit of the stomach with an umbrella held by this same individual as he was hustling along with his umbrella held away down to keep the rain off his vest. I sat down on the pavement. Couldn't help it. And when I had got up and wring out the most uncomfortable portion of my pants, the man was not in sight.

As I said before, I am now hunting for him, and there will be a real nice little job for a surgeon when we meet. The great trouble is that I never come across him excepting when I am in a hurry. At other times he keeps mighty scarce. My wife suggests very slyly that perhaps I am, like Stockton's "Hundredth Man," the one I am looking for, myself. If I thought I was I would stand up before a looking-glass and bang him until there wasn't a piece of him left large enough to feed a crow. SAM STUBBS.

General News.

Hon. John Macdonald is at Halifax.

A young son of Edward Haulan was burned to death in Toronto last week.

Hon. Mr. Chapleau was robbed last week, at the St. Louis hotel, Quebec, of a gold watch and chain valued at $600, and a considerable sum of money. The thieves escaped.

A terrible ocean steamship collission is reported from New York. The Thingvalla and Geisar, of the Danish steamship line, collided in mid ocean, the latter sinking within five minutes and taking down with her 117 human beings. The passengers on the Thingvalla were taken off and brought to New York by the Wieland.

The G. T. R. station at Omemee was burned on Saturday morning.

R. J. Creighton, agent of the New Zealand Government, says that a mail line between Vancouver and Brisbane will probably be established.

A terrible murder was committed near Consecon, Prince Edward County, on Saturday. The murdered man was Leslie Church, and the murderers, who have been jailed, are Peter Loveless, aged 55, and his sons, John Loveless, aged 23, and Wellington, aged 19. The latter is charged with firing the fatal shot. He is the youngest son and looks a raw country youth rather than a murderer. It was a neighborly feud of long standing.

It is reported that Premier Greenway's deal with the Northern Pacific for the running of the Red River Valley railway has fallen through.

On Thursday night a fearful storm raged through part of Eastern Ontario and part of Quebec. In the Valleyfield district 25 lives are said to have been lost by lightning strokes and the blowing down of houses.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

A severe thunder storm passed over this section last Thursday. The rain fell in torrents and was accompanied by hail in large quantities. There was a fierce wind at the same time, which did considerable damage to standing grain and fruit trees.

A garden party was held at the residence of Mr. T. Kells last Friday evening, and was well attended. The Flesherton brass band was present, and as usual their music was well appreciated. The proceeds, which amounted to about $12, were presented to the Rev. Mr. Wilson as a token of respect.

During the holidays a new floor has been laid in the school house by Mr. Wm. Hutchinson.

School commenced on Monday.

Mr. J. Brodie and daughter, Mrs. S. Warling, were down to Brampton on a visit to friends a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. James Sparling was here last week fitting up his threshing engine for the present season's campaign.

Mr. Yorke Richardson, of Chatsworth, was here last week sinking a well for Mr. J. Warling.

What has become of the Meaford Road baseball club? Have they died a natural death?

Kimberley.

Miss E. J. McConnell, of this place, was married on the 1st inst. to Mr. John Butson, of Muskoka. The bride was the recipient of a large number of valuable presents. The happy couple left for their future home on Monday. May joy be with them.

This village has become a musical centre, surely There are nine instruments within a radius of a quarter of a mile. One house monopolizes no less than three of them.

Berries have been plentiful this year, but will soon be things of the past.

Our new school teacher entered upon his duties here on Monday.

Our farm crops are nearly all good.

MELL O'DEA.

Died.

At Flesherton, on the 21st inst., Audrey Alice, daughter of W. Booth, aged 1 month and 2 days.

TO THE DEAF. A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 23 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 75 to 4 75
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to 0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 50	0 55
Oats	0 45	0 45
Peas	0 60	0 60
Butter	0 15	0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 14	0 14
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 50
Pork	6 50	6 50
Hay per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	19	23
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 60

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and that, on its way, it makes bone and muscle, brain and nerve, and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it,

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: "For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine

in use. "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

does sell." Prepared by

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,

Or to J. GEO KEEFER, Forest, Ont

CLAWSON AND SENECA

FALL WHEAT FOR SALE. Apply to

THOS. KELLS, Vandeleur.

OWEN SOUND

Collegiate Institute

WILL OPEN ON

Monday, 27th August, 1888

Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the

Best Equipped School in Ontario.

Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and law and Medical Examinations.

At the Examinations, 1888, all the University Matriculation Candidates were successful, four obtaining honors, and one a proficiency scholarship. The Candidates at the recent examination from this School obtained

The Largest Number of Teachers' Certificates in the Province.

FEES—Full Term, $3

Apply to

F. W. MERCHANT, Principal,

or D. R. DOBIE, Sec. Board of Education.

Owen Sound, Aug 13th.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's Block. Residence, Wm Wright's.

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of '88

WILL VISIT FLESHERTON, Monday in each month. Teeth extracted without pain. Teeth filled in the highest style of the art, and at moderate rates.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, Flesherton.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Dundalk.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office Thursdays as noted above.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Real Property.

S. DAMUDE,

Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

DEPUTY CLERK ORTONVILLE.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGENT, &c.

DEEDS MORTGAGES LEASES &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

Houses to Rent or For Sale!

Two good Houses one brick and one frame with lots and fruit bearing orchards, to rent or for sale cheap. Good brick Baker's Oven in connection with frame house. Both buildings lately repaired and refitted throughout. For particulars, apply at THE ADVANCE office or to the undersigned. SAMUEL KINGSTON,

371-4. Proprietor

THIS PAPER may be found on file at the [illegible] Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

Call And See PARLOR SUITES

[illegible] SHOWN A[illegible]

Flesherton Furniture Warerooms.

[illegible] prices lower than cheap, trashy goods that have been offered by country [illegible].

A Large Stock of

Cane and Perforated Chairs

In a variety of styles, at from

60c EACH.

Beautiful Cane Seat with carved backs, $1 each.

Ladies' Rockers, perforated, $1.35

Our stock of Bedsteads, Cots, Cribs, Cradles, Cupboards, Bureaus, Tables, in fact every line, has been still further marked down. Our premises are large but our stock is larger.

BOUGHT CLOSE!

AND

Well Selected.

A few Children's Carriages to be sold at a small advance on cost. One or two more Express Wagons at cost.

OUR

UNDERTAKING

Establishment

We are striving to bring to the very front in the County, and is acknowledged to be the lowest in price.

SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned [illegible] Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office [illegible] on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October [illegible] for the formation and construction of a [illegible]

The works will be let in two sections, one of which [illegible] the formation of the canal [illegible]

A map of the locality together with plans and [illegible] on and after TUESDAY the 9th day of [illegible] next, where printed forms of tender [illegible] Manual [illegible] relative to the works can be seen at the [illegible] in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

[illegible] that tenders will not be considered unless [illegible]

[illegible]

A. P. BRADLEY.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Notice to Contractors.

[illegible] will be received [illegible] until the arrival of the eastern [illegible] on TUESDAY THE 25TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, for the construction of two locks [illegible] deepening and enlargement of the entrance of the Galops Canal. And for [illegible] of the Cornwall Canal. The construction [illegible] lock at each of the three interior lock stations on the Cornwall Canal between the town of Cornwall and Maple Grove; the deepening and widening of the channel way of the [illegible]

A map of each of the localities, together with plans and specifications of the respective works, can be seen on and after TUESDAY, THE 11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, at this office, for all the works, and for the respective works at the following mentioned places:—

For the works at Galops at the Lock-keeper's house, Galops. For deepening the summit level of the Cornwall Canal at Dickenson's Landing, and for the new locks, etc., at lock stations Nos. 18, 19 and 20, at the Town of Cornwall. Printed forms of tender can be obtained for the respective works at the places mentioned.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same and further a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $6,000 must accompany the tender for the Galops Canal Works and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $2,000 for each section of the works on the summit level of the Cornwall Canal; and for each of the lock sections on the Cornwall Canal a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $[illegible]

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted. The deposit receipts thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

A. P. BRADLEY,
[illegible]

FLESHERTON

Implement Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.

Binders, [illegible], Mowers, [illegible], Wagons, [illegible], Scuffers, [illegible], Fanning Mills, Spring Tooth Cultivators, Grain Drills, Broadcast Seeders, Spring Tooth Harrows, [illegible], Two-Furrow Gang [illegible], [illegible], Turnip Drills, Land Rollers.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries established over 40 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS COMPANY, Nurserymen, [illegible]

County and District News.

[illegible] Columns of Our Ex[illegible]

[illegible]

Donald McFadden, Durham, got his leg broken by a tree falling on him.

E. A. Wood, of Collingwood, dropped [illegible] runaway horse.

It is estimated that the late storms have done $[illegible] damage to roads in the township of Mulmur.

In the band tournament at Walkerton last week, county list, Hanover took 1st [illegible]

"Doc" Symes, a son of Dr. Symes, well known in Meaford some twenty years ago, met with an accident in that town last week, which resulted in his death.

[illegible] tournament in Durham [illegible] says The Review [illegible] Flesherton [illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. Thos. McGirr [illegible] of Euphrasia has a [illegible] over nine feet in height. It is of the "Sweet Southern" variety. This [illegible] story for Mr. McGirr [illegible]

[illegible] nine feet [illegible] forward. Meanwhile Mr. McGirr takes the cake.—[illegible]

Mr. Bell, of [illegible] lakes, recently [illegible] which measured two feet from the point of its ugly nose to the tip of its horny alligator-like tail. The genial Mr. A. S. Cochrane, now in this vicinity in charge of the Government and Natural History Survey, happened at Mr. Bell's and after calmly feasting his artistic and scientific eye upon the huge reptile for one blissful moment his active brain told him that his turtleship would be a good representative for Glenelg at Ottawa and do honor to his constituents as well as credit to himself, so he purchased him of Mr. Bell, and after stall-feeding him on proto-oxide of hydrogen and [illegible] soup served with "aqua a la mode" for two days, shipped him to the above department at Ottawa. The turtle will be skinned and stuffed and placed in the museum along with thousands of others curious specimens gathered throughout the length and breadth of this vast Do[minion]. [illegible] estimate the age of this turtle at [illegible] years.—Markdale Standard.

To Assist Nature

In restoring diseased or wasted tissue is all that any medicine can do. In pulmonary affections, such as Colds, Bronchitis, and Consumption, the mucous membrane first becomes inflamed, then accumulations form in the air-cells of the lungs, followed by tubercles, and, finally, destruction of the tissue. It is plain, therefore, that until the hacking cough is relieved, [illegible] have no opportunity to heal.

Soothes and Heals

the inflamed membrane, arrests the wasting process, and leaves no injurious results. This is why it is more highly esteemed than any other pulmonary [illegible]

L. D. Bixby, of Bartonsville, Vt., writes: "Four years ago I took a severe cold, which was followed by a terrible cough. I was very sick, and confined to my bed about four months. My physician finally said I was in consumption, and that he could not help me. One of my neighbors advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and before I had taken half a bottle was able to go out. By the time I had finished the bottle I was well, and have remained so ever since."

Alonzo P. Daggett, of Smyrna Mills, Me., writes: "Six years ago, I was a traveling salesman, and at that time was suffering with

Lung Trouble.

For months I was unable to rest nights. I could seldom lie down, had frequent choking spells, and was often compelled to seek the open air for relief. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which helped me. Its continued use has entirely cured me, and, I believe, saved my life."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1, six bottles, $5.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

[illegible] in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

[illegible]

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON

HEARD'S

Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON.

— MANUFACTURERS OF —

[illegible] Wagons, Lumber Wagons, [illegible]

[illegible]

The Greatest Discovery of the Age.
Price - - $3.

ORIENTAL

CATARRH IMPOSSIBLE UNDER IT'S INFLUENCE

The only catarrh remedy ever offered [illegible] a written guarantee given with each instrument. W. T. BAER & CO. 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

ACTINA

THE GREAT EYE AND LUNG RESTORER

Actina is not a medicine or a disgusting lotion or powder ball, but a Self-generating Vapor, easily and pleasantly applied at all hours, times and places. Actina No. 2 quickly relieves and thoroughly cures all Throat and Lung Diseases.

Actina No. 3. Positively cures all diseases of the Eye, Cataract, Granulated Eyelids, Inflamed Eyes, near and far sightedness. THE EYE TREATED WHILE CLOSED.

THE ACTINA IS SOLD UNDER OUR WRITTEN GUARANTEE ON 15 DAYS TRIAL. [illegible] stamp for handsome [illegible] W. T. BAER & CO. 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

MEDICATED ELECTRIC BELT

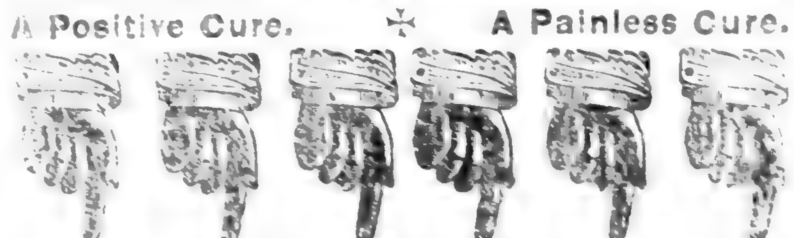
Medicated for all diseases of the blood and nervous system. Ladies' belt $4 for female complaints it has no equal. Mens Belt $5, combined Belt and Suspensory $5.

CURES Seminal weakness, errors of youth, lost manhood, [illegible] emissions, Etc. The only appliances giving a direct current of Electricity to the parts. [illegible] without inconvenience. Hundreds of Testimonials on file from those cured of female [illegible] nervous debility, general debility, lumbago, rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, sciatica, disease of the kidneys, spinal disease, torpid liver, gout, leucorrhœa, catarrh of the bladder, sexual exhaustion, seminal emissions, asthma, heart disease, dyspepsia, constipation, erysipelas, indigestion, impotency, piles, epilepsy, dumb ague and diabetes. Send stamp for handsomely illustrated book and health journal. Correspondence strictly confidential. Consultation and electrical treatment free. Agents wanted everywhere. Pat. Feb. 25th, 1887.

Cures Guaranteed

Medicated Electric Belt Co., 155 Queen St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.



FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8.

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER.

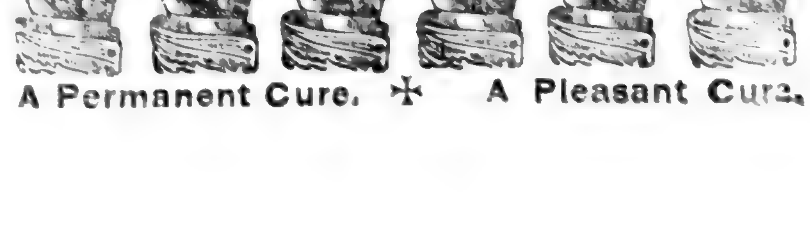
[illegible]

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

[illegible] the effects of abuse [illegible] weakness [illegible] No. 8 [illegible] Want of energy [illegible] aversion to society, want of confidence [illegible] inability to fix the attention [illegible] of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability [illegible] emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart [illegible] acquired. In short, the spring [illegible] function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and [illegible] to the effects of self abuse [illegible] notice. If you are [illegible] the enjoyment of life [illegible] advice. If you are advanced in years No. 8 will [illegible] broken down, physically and morally [illegible] send your address and 10 cents in stamps [illegible] Book Form on Diseases of Man. [illegible] communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

THE DARK SECRET AGAIN.

Capt. Andrews and His Little Dory Pushing Across the Atlantic.

A New York despatch says: Captain Andrews, who sailed from Boston, July 4th, in his little dory, the Dark Secret, on his perilous and adventurous voyage to Queenstown, was seen Aug. 1st by the people on board the steamship India.

Capt. Jameson, of the India, reports that he spoke the Dark Secret on the morning of Aug. 1st, about 864 miles out from Boston. Her position when last seen was a little to the southwest of the great banks and, as pleasant and favorable weather has prevailed since the India passed the dory, Capt. Jameson considers it most probable that he has succeeded in passing this region of dangerous mist in perfect safety. The India is the third transatlantic steamer that has spoken the Dark Secret since she started.

Captain Jameson, when he arrived yesterday, gave a World reporter the following graphic account of his passing Captain Andrews and his little stanch craft:

"It was," he said, "about 7.30 on the morning of August 1. The previous night had been very stormy, but when the morning dawned it began to clear, and the sun slowly crept through the vapory mists. All was quiet and placid, the sun shining brightly on a smooth and almost unruffled sea, when Second Officer Kean, who was in charge of the bridge, directed my attention to what he thought was a small ship's boat some distance off on our starboard side. I slowed down and waited the boat's approach. As the little latten-rigged boat, its mutton-leg shaped sail closely reefed, came skimming along, mounting the billows, I soon perceived that the lonely occupant was not a shipwrecked mariner and that he did not wish any assistance. Wrapped in his oilcloth suit, holding the tiller of his little dory, the sole occupant of the boat, his eyes bright and cheerful, a ruddy, healthful-looking glow suffusing his whole countenance, looked 'monarch of all he surveyed.'

"When I hailed him he replied: 'This is the Dark Secret, Captain Andrews, from Boston to Queenstown. I am well. Please report me when you arrive in New York.' I was astonished at his courage and daring, and before I had time to say anything more the Dark Secret and its bold commander was continuing on its long voyage. Captain Andrews was in the best of spirits, and, judging from his looks and actions, has not suffered any hardships, although he is making but slow progress. He has plenty of provisions—at least he did not wish any from me. Although I saw the captain but for a few minutes, I can tell his friends that he is still strong enough to shave himself. He was perfectly clean of all beard and had the appearance of being shaved but a short time previous to our meeting him."

DINING WITH THE LORD MAYOR.

Lord Salisbury Speaks of Ireland, Egypt, Bulgaria and Peace.

A London cable says: The Ministers were banquetted by the Lord Mayor last evening. Replying to the usual toast, Lord Salisbury said the great curse of Ireland was poverty. The Government, he said, was not able to diminish poverty or to enrich men, but they could enable men, without interference, to enrich themselves. The Government had been successful in lessening the tyranny which an association had exercised over the Irish people, and had increased the sanctity of contracts. If the Government of Ireland, he declared, was administered with the same judgment and firmness as now for a few years longer, the liberty and prosperity of the country would be restored. In Egypt, Lord Salisbury said, the expectations of the Government have been exceeded. When Egypt should be able to deal with her foes without help Great Britain would gladly leave that country absolutely. As to Bulgaria, he hoped that the statesmen of the Continent were being convinced that it would be best to leave her to herself. He believed that the Emperor of Germany appreciated the value of peace, especially to Germany. Nothing, he believed, was more desirable for the peace of the world than that the policy of Russia should become more parallel with the policy of Great Britain. All that occurred in Europe recently had been in the direction of peace, and England's efforts were always in the same direction.

The Great Lone Land.

A Winnipeg despatch says: Private advices received in the city to-day from Edmonton, N. W. T., state that James Hyslop and E. Nagle, who wintered on the Athabaska River about 30 miles south of Chipewayan, arrived at the Landing on July 13th. Lord Lonsdale was at Chipewayan on May 22nd, going north. Last winter was very severe at Lake Athabaska, stormy and cold, at times forty below, with a hurricane blowing. On account of the severe weather the Indians were frequently unable to hunt, and as rabbits were remarkably scarce they suffered greatly from hunger. Nineteen out of one camp of twenty-three Indians died of starvation at a point about four days' travel northeast of Chipewayan. The Hudson Bay Company sent out provisions to the camp and brought in the survivors. About fifty Indians, so far as heard, starved to death in this district last winter. Two wood buffalo were killed at about sixty miles off Chipewayan. The band out of which they were killed numbered about sixty. Buffalos are also found on the Birch Mountains, west of Fort McMurray, on Salt River and near the Great Slave Lake. The beaver are reported to be dying off in great numbers in the region from Fort McMurray southward, from causes not given.

C. P. R. surveyors are in the vicinity of Battleford, spying out the land. It is not known what their intentions are, but it is generally thought the company intends building a branch from the main line to the North Saskatchewan.

'Since I broke my funny-bone my arm has filled with humor," wrote a patient to his doctor the other day. "How would you treat it?" "As a joke," answered the doctor, facetiously.

London has fewer inhabitants to the house than any other of the great cities of Europe. Vienna has the most persons to the house, having five times as many as London.

THE RED FLAG.

Collisions With the Police and Military and Riotous Demonstrations at Paris.

A Paris cable says: Fifteen thousand persons marched in front of the hearse bearing the remains of General Eudes, the ex-Communist. They wore bouquets of red immortelles. M. Basley, member of the Chamber of Deputies, was present, and he and M. Rochefort were greeted with cheers and shouts of "Vive la Revolution" and "Vive la Commune." The procession started at 11 o'clock. The pall-bearers were MM. Vaillant, Lefrancois, Arnold, members of the Commune of 1871, and M. Ostyn. Louise Michel marched after the hearse. A brigade of police headed the procession. Large bodies of workmen and strikers followed quietly. The waiters and hairdressers in the line were noisy and demanded that the red flags which were carried covered be unfurled. The crowd along the route shouted "Vive la Commune" as the hearse passed.

When the procession reached the Boulevard Voltaire three red flags were unfurled. A commissary of police attempted to seize one, when some one in the crowd fired a revolver at him, but the bullet went wide of its mark. Another commissary was beaten with sticks. M. Rochefort was set upon by an Anarchist, who handled him quite severely. The police seemed powerless before the menacing attitude of the mob. The gendarmes made a charge in front of the Prince Eugene Barracks, striking in every direction with the butt ends of their muskets. They succeeded in releasing the police who had been surrounded by the mob, and captured the red flags. When the procession arrived at the Mairie of the Eleventh Arondissement a revolver was fired and a bomb thrown close to the police station, but the bomb did not explode. The police reserve left the station and charged upon the crowd with drawn swords, wounding and taking into custody many persons. The procession continued on its way to the cemetery, but grew smaller as it progressed. A number of orations were delivered at the grave amid cries of "Vive la Commune," "Vive la Revolution." The gathering then dispersed. The police did not oppose the display of red flags in the cemetery.

BRITAIN'S NAVAL WAR.

The Sandfly Surprises a Cunarder and Captures Her.

A London cable says: The British squadron off Bantry Bay and Queenstown harbor is causing much excitement. The fast cruiser Sandfly, 5,255 tons burden and 300 horse-power, belonging to the British squadron, which escaped from Bantry Bay to this harbor, proceeded to sea yesterday morning, and after capturing two steamers, sighted the Cunarder Samaria from Boston with 107 passengers aboard, about four miles southwest of the harbor. Immediately the Sandfly dashed at full speed at the liner, steaming at the rate of 21 miles an hour. Attacking the liner, she fired at her repeatedly, and at length succeeded in capturing the steamship after a hard engagement, causing great excitement among the passengers of the liner, who knew nothing of the naval mobilization. The Allan liner Caspian, from Liverpool, en route to St. John's, with 200 passengers, was also captured of the port, after which the Sandfly returned into harbor, and is now making preparations for the capture of the Britannic and Nevada, both due off the coast to-morrow from New York.

LUCKY EXCURSIONISTS.

A Michigan Central Train Wrecked and Nobody Hurt.

A Detroit despatch says: About 12 o'clock yesterday a train of nine cars from Columbus, Ohio, bringing about 450 excursionists to Detroit, jumped the track, about 20 miles from the depot. It is thought a loose rail was the cause. The engine went off, taking with it the tender and three or four cars. The first, a baggage, was turned on its side in the ditch. The next, a passenger coach filled with people, was completely upset. The end and platform were smashed, but luckily not a soul was seriously hurt. Several were scratched considerably and all thoroughly scared. Those in the rear cars were quite badly shaken up. It is a strange thing that there was not a terrible loss of life, as the train was well under way and every car was filled with people. Those in the first coach were piled in a promiscuous heap. Word was sent to Detroit from the nearest station and a train sent to bring the passengers up, after a delay of six or seven hours. The wrecking train is at work at the scene of the accident.

A Very Clever Trick.

A saloon-keeper tells this story: A neat trick was played on me the other day by an old toper. The old fellow brought in a black bottle and called for a pint of whiskey. I filled the bottle and kept it while he went through his pockets for the change. Presently he put on a look of dismay and said he had lost his money. "All right," says I, and, turning out the whiskey, gave him the bottle. He took it and went away, saying he would come back after the liquor presently. He did not come, however, but five minutes later I found him sitting on the stoop around the corner poking in the bottle with a stick, and after every poke turned out a thimbleful of whiskey into a cup. I seized the bottle and made an investigation. What do you think I found? Why, the old rascal had forced a sponge as big as my fist into it, and this had soaked up a good glassful of my whiskey when I filled the bottle.

Sound Rules for a Woman's Life.

A New Hampshire woman, who recently celebtated her 80th birthday, having prepared every article of food with her own hands, upon being asked how she kept herself so vigorous, replied: "By never allowing myself to fret over things I cannot help; by taking a nap, sometimes two, every day of my life; by never taking my washing, ironing and baking to bed with me, and by oiling all the various wheels of a busy life with an implicit faith that there is a brain and heart to this great universe, and that I could trust them both." Sounder rules could not be framed. Many a woman would be happier and live longer through adopting them.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

A temperance advocate says: "Avoid alcoholic drinks and be cool."

A FIENDISH ASSAULT.

Brutal Villains Horribly Mutilate an Old Woman Whom They Hated.

A New York despatch says: A case in which the most fiendish brutality is exhibited was unearthed by Detective C. A. Oliver, of New Brunswick, N. J., at South Amboy yesterday.

The detective was engaged in picking up clews in the Griffin murder case, when he incidentally learned of a horrible assault having been committed upon an old Polish woman, Rosella Wysocks, by George Grabosh and Abraham Snyder, in a disreputable quarter of the old town. He found the apartment of the woman, where a horrifying spectacle met his gaze.

The woman lay upon a ragged pallet breathing faintly. Bending over he was startled upon beholding that her lips had been torn from her mouth, and that the teeth of both jaws were visible where the cheeks had been torn in a horrible manner. Her gray hair was matted with blood, and several gory wounds appeared in the skull. She was unconscious. From the Poles living in the neighborhood a reporter learned the story of the crime.

Some days ago Mrs. Wysocks, who is a widow 50 years old, incurred the enmity of Grabosh and Snyder, the latter being her stepson. On Monday, while the old woman was alone, these men entered the dining apartment with the evident intention of murdering her. Grabosh seized a hammer and beat her over the head, while the brutal stepson fastened his teeth to her lips, biting off one at a time, and ejecting them upon the floor, where they were subsequently found lying beside the blood-stained hammer. Although the outrage was known at South Amboy within half an hour of its occurrence, there was not a physician who would volunteer to go to the victim's aid. The county physician, who lives at Milltown, a suburban village of New Brunswick, took the case in charge, and found her in almost a dying condition. He said last night that she might recover with careful nursing, although it was not probable.

After a search Dectetive Oliver succeeded in capturing the fiends who committed the outrage. They were handcuffed and taken to New Brunswick, and finally committed for trial. When the full details of the crime were known at South Amboy there was some talk of lynching the brutes, but they were then far out of the reach of an angry mob which had clustered about the house of the unfortunate woman.

BRUTE BOHAN'S VICTIM.

The Rockaway Beach Sufferer Nearing her End—Peritonitis has Set In.

Mrs. Kate Bohan, of Fairview avenue, Rockaway Beach, lies at her home hovering between life and death. Her brute of a husband, William Bohan, who plucked both her eyes out, will be brought before Justice Healy at Far Rockaway to-day. Mrs. Bohan, who is suffering intense agony, is under the treatment of Dr. Philleo, who said yesterday that peritonitis had set in, and that he was afraid it would soon reach the brain and cause death.

On the strength of this statement Cronin took the poor creature's ante-mortem statement, which is horrifying in its details. She said she was married to Wm. Bohan, her second husband, on December 9th, 1883. He time and again assaulted her, and two years ago plucked out her right eye. When she returned from the hospital she wore spectacles, but her husband used to hide and break them. He frequently threatened to kill her. On July 30th he succeeded in gouging out her remaining eye. "I think it was with his thumb, I am not sure."

"I screamed," continued Mrs. Bohan, "and the cook came in and took my grandchild, who was in my arms. Then I felt something on my cheek and I could not see. I asked the cook what was on my face, and she said blood. Then I said, 'My eye is gone.' Then I felt my eye lying on my cheek. I was in such a condition I don't know whether my husband said anything or not. I think I felt something touch my eye when he put his hand on my face."

The attention of the Grand Jury, which meets in September next, will be called to the case. Justice Healy to-day will undoubtedly hold Bohan to await the action of the Grand Jury.—N. Y. Herald.

HYPNOTIC HALLUCINATION.

The Result of an All-Absorbing Expectation.

One of Charcot's disciples in France, Dr. Luys, writes W. A. Croffut in the "North American" for August, has experimented with medicines with hipnotic patients, and has caused much excitement by his proclamation that medicines would operate without being administered at all. He declares that a corked vial of laudanum laid upon a patient's neck induced sleep, although the patient did not know what it was; that a vial of valerian, similarly brought in contact with the person, was followed by deep dejection; that hasheesh caused hilarity and buoyancy, etc. I have repeated these experiments, but do not obtain any of the alleged results. If the responsive does not know what is said to be in the vial, no result whatever follows; and if he knows or believes some particular medicine to be in the vial, and knows the effects which follow the use of that medicine, he will have those external symptoms, whether that medicine be actually there or not. Hypnotic hallucinations are the result of an all absorbing expectation. If the responsive thinks he is drinking too much whiskey, he will become helplessly inebriated; if he thinks he is at sea in a storm, he will be afflicted with violent nausea, enough to convince any sceptic of the genuineness of the emotion; if he thinks he has swallowed laudanum, he will fall into a sleep. How far this delusion will go in physical repairing or impairing I do not know, but I should not like to give a gum drop to the most sensitive of mesmerized ladies, and afterward tell her that she had swallowed strychnine

Miss Frances Wetmore, who has been appointed Government Physician for the Island of Hilo, makes her visits on horseback and answers every call.

Queen Victoria has invested in an Italian villa, having purchased the villa Palmiero, at Florence, which she once occupied, paying for the property £24,000.

THE CORPSE RAN AWAY.

Henry Graham's Great Act in Running Away After Having Been Hanged.

That the bodies of the dead, even a lon time after the moment of death, do perform actions which have all the appearance of volition are instances familiar in literature. Physicians, it is true, assure us that in these movements volition does not enter; and they have given to this muscular movement the name of "reflex action," and this, apparently, we are expected to accept as a perfectly lucid explanation of a phenomenon which without the name would be obscure. Enlightened by the term "reflex action," it must be discontented and exacting curiosity that would not rest and be thankful.

At Hawley's Bar, a mining camp near Virginia City, M. T., a gambler named Henry Graham, but commonly known as "Gray Hank," met a miner named Dreyfuss one day, with whom he had had a dispute the previous night about a pack of cards, and asked him into a bar-room to have a drink. The unfortunate miner taking this as an overture of peace gladly consented. They stood at the counter, and while Dreyfuss was in the act of drinking, Graham shot him dead. This was in 1865. Within an hour after the murder Graham was in the hands of the vigilantes, and that evening at sunset, after a fair, if informal trial, he was hanged to a limb of a tree which grew upon a little eminence within sight of the whole camp.

The original intention had been to "string him up," as is customary in such affairs, and with a view to that operation the long rope had been thrown over the limb, while a dozen pair of hands were ready to hoist away. For some reason the plan was abandoned, the rope was given a single turn about the limb at a suitable distance from the noose, the free end made fast to a bush and the victim compelled to stand on a horse, which at the cut of a whip sprang from under him, leaving him swinging. When steadied his feet were about eighteen inches from the earth.

The body remained suspended for exactly half an hour, the greater part of the crowd remaining about it. Then the judge ordered it taken down. The rope was untied from the bush, and two men stood by to lower away. The moment the feet came squarely upon the ground the men engaged in lowering, thinking, doubtless, that those standing about the body had hold of it to support it let go of the rope. The body at once ran quickly forward toward the main part of the crowd, the rope paying out as it went. The head rolled from side to side, the eyes and tongue protruding. With cries of horror the crowd ran hither and thither, scrambling, rolling over one another, cursing. In and out among them, over the fallen, coming in collision with others, his direction governed by blind caprice, the horrible dead man 'pranced,' his feet lifted so high at each step that his knees struck his breast. The deepening twilight added its terror to the uncanny scene, and brave men fled from the spot, not daring to look behind.

Straight into the confusion from the outskirts of the crowd walked with rapid steps the tall figure of a man whom all recognized as a master spirit. This was Dr. Arnold Spier, who, with two other physicians, had pronounced the man dead, and had been retiring from the camp. He moved as directly toward the dead man as the now somewhat less erratic movements of the latter would permit, and seized him in his arms. Encouraged by this, a score of men sprang shouting to the free end of the rope, which had been drawn entirely over the limb, and laid hold of it, intending to make a finish of their work. They ran with it toward the bush to which it had been fastened, but there was no resistance; the physician had cut it from the dead murderer's neck. In a moment the body was lying on its back, with composed limbs and face upturned to the kindling stars in the motionless rigidity appropriate to death. The hanging had been done well enough; the neck had been broken by the drop. Dr. Spier knew that a corpse which, placed upon its feet, would walk and run, would lie still when placed upon its back. The dead are creatures of habit.—San Francisco Examiner.

Drop in a Nickel and Then Talk.

Glasgow has a system of automatic telephone call boxes. There are seventy-five of the boxes scattered throughout the city, and every subscriber has a key to them. A non-subscriber wanting to use them must first ring up the exchange and ask if the connection he desires can be made. If it can he drops the fee, which is either three pennies or six, according to the distance he wants to talk, into a hole in the box. The pennies as they fall break a circuit and ring a bell at the central office. When the bell has rung the required number of times the central office marks the connection. At the end of three minutes allowed for conversation the connection is broken automatically. The average time to put two persons in telephonic communication in Glasgow is 35 seconds; in Birmingham, 40; in Liverpool, 33, and in Dundee, 20. This was ascertained from the results of 10 calls in each town.

She Bites Her Finger Nails.

The wife of a very well-known iron operator of Pennsylvania is now stopping at a fashionable hotel near Long Branch, says a correspondent of the New York Sun. She is beautiful, witty and accomplished, but she bites her finger nails. She says she cannot help it. She acquired the habit in childhood, and has tried every means to break it up, but without success. At times she succeeds in resisting the inclination until all her finger nails are triumphantly long, but invariably they disappear as if by magic the first time she is disturbed, annoyed, or rendered nervous. She does not know when she bites them. She suddenly finds them all gone. Her doctors tell her the habit is incurable except for very strong-willed, phlegmatic persons.

This is the time of the year that a woman packs her husband's coat, containing the book of tour tickets, in the bottom of the trunk that starts just ahead of them.

It is announced that the Emperor of Germany, the Czar of Russia and the Emperor of Austria will meet at some point on the Austrian frontier in the autumn.

HOW FREAKS ARE MADE.

Manufactured by Wholesale from Various Commonplace Materials.

"Did you know that the finest artist in the world in the manufacture of freaks and curiosities is an Alaskan?" asked an expert in the show business of a New York Graphic reporter. "It's a fact. I was surprised myself, for I always supposed that he would be a Yankee. He was away when we called, but his assistant was there. They were making Egyptian mummies that day, a full line of them for a museum in Paris. They are made of plaster of Paris and boiled in tobacco juice, and they are stunners when they are done. It is a curious yarn how the reporters got on to his place. He occupies a place under the roof and dries his curiosities on the flat roof in the sun. The elevated railroad pushes along over the city here, and some travellers by the morning train saw a curious sight out on one of the roofs. It looked like a collection of dead bodies drying in the sun, and a conglomeration of hideous monstrosities and blood-curdling freaks of nature. Of course somebody investigated it, and as a result the birthplace of the freak was found.

"I wish I could give you that Alaskan's name, but I can't. It's a stunner in length, and he is an artist of as distinguished talents as his name is long. He made the man-ox that struck the professors of anatomy everywhere. He drew the skin over the ribs so adroitly that there seemed to be absolutely no fault in it, and it puzzled the scientists as well as the common people. There are two or three other freakmakers in the Bowery that we called on, but there are no others that approach this fellow. He is a jim-dandy, and no mistake. A mermaid is nothing at all for him. He can draw a chicken's skin over the skeleton as handily as you can draw on your glove, and no man can swear that it is artificial."

"Are none of these freaks genuine?"

"Mighty few that I know anything about are very genuine. Most of this man-ox, man-horse, mermaid, sea serpent, Egyptian mummy, royal anatomical marine museum stuff is manufactured. Of course, there are some freaks of nature in the way of monstrosities that are genuine. The India rubber man is a freak of nature, and I was in to see the centaur of a man-horse at the dime museum. That's genuine if you like it. It's a coon with his legs twisted out of shape. The poor cuss was marked in birth, and can't walk upright—a dead give-away of a fake that don't excite any particular interest. 'Australian children' are idiots. Circassian women can be made with ease and celerity. Bearded women can be found anywhere. The country is full of Albions, and if it were not, they can be manufactured to order any time.

"Do you remember that sea serpent that we exhibited at the State fair a year or two ago? It was 20 or 30 feet long, and was the queerest looking thing I ever saw. It had big chunks of bone on the side of it, and had a mouth big enough to take in a long boat. Well, this Alaskan made that. How did he make it? Blamed if I know. He's ahead of me on that. It was a good job. He made a sea serpent lately for Dr. Dee, and I ran across it at Exeter. One of the professors at Phillips' Academy went in and looked it over. He said he had doubts about its being genuine.

"Ha! ha! Well, I don't blame him. I had my doubts, too, but they were based on a different foundation—the difference between theory and fact, you see. The doctor had a mighty good lecture to go with his museum. He had one or two mermaids, and one of them he considered a particularly valuable specimen. He never failed in the course of his address to relate that this was positively the only mermaid ever captured alive. He said that she seemed to mourn for her home at the bottom of the sea, and to continually utter plaintive cries, and sung in a mournful heart-breaking key. They fed her everything in the line of fresh fish, but she pined away and died, and thus ended the existence of the only mermaid ever captured alive.

"The doctor had a bang up show on the outside. His pictures were very gorgeous and true to fact. In front of his mermaid he had a large patch of green grass and the green waves curling up.

"One day an old chap, with his town meeting hat on the crown of his head clear to his ears, came up and looked at the mermaid as she fluttered in canvas true to the picture of her home beneath the wave.

"As he gazed at her in rapt suspense and noticed that she was the only specimen ever captured alive, he looked up to the orator at the door and said, 'Say, mister, what do you feed her on?'

"There may have been truth as well as poetry in the reply of the doctor as he looked down and said: 'My dear sir, we feed her entirely on suckers. She has to have something very fresh.'

"By the way, you may quote mermaids this season as very cheap—anywhere from $5 to $35.

"I notice that our friends are from the suburbs to-day, getting their systems charged with electricity. Well, it's a good point. It won't hurt 'em any if they don't work the racket too strongly. This plunging at the electric battery to see how much you can stand don't pay for a cent."

"They Skun."

The story the other day about the pious little boy who tried to walk on the water in the bathtub recalls another of an equally pious little girl. She was eight years old, and lived in the country; she had started one day rather late for school with another little girl about her own age. On their way they caught a glimpse of a clock dial through an open door; it lacked five minutes of 9.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed the pious little girl, "it's five minutes to 9, and we'll be late to school."

"I'm afraid we will."

"Jennie," said the pious little girl, impressively, "I'll tell you what we must do; we'll kneel right down here and pray that we won't be late!"

"H'm!" said the other, "I guess that we'd better skin right along and pray as we go!"

They "skun," and got there.—Boston Transcript.

"Did you ever go to the circus, Jim?" asked one small urchin of another. "Not a real circus," said Jim, reflectively, "but I've seen my mother water the garden with the hose."—Somerville Journal.

BAD FITS OF THE BLUES.

The Growth of Selfishness—Why it Should be Struggled Against and Banished—Why People Ought to be in Society.

There is a mental condition with which we all become acquainted some time or other during our existence, which is neither ennui, discontent, temper, nor disappointment, but simply sheer depression of spirit; and, as a rule, we cannot altogether account for it even to ourselves—it is inexplicable to us, but the fact of its presence is undeniable, and it may be defined as temporary mental and physical collapse Weariness would generally have more raison d'etre, and be attributable, in the majority of cases, to overwork of various kinds, worry, or anxiety, either of which would suffice to cause it. But depression is somewhat different; it is insidious in character, while its origin is doubtful and sometimes unknown; it varies in degree from a sense of dulness to a condition approaching hypochondria.

And in severe cases, even when they are only of brief duration, the amount of despondency is so great as to make a person in easy circumstances, and without troubles, almost wish for death in preference to the distorted and gloomy views of life which are engendered by depression when it is suffered from in an acute form. An extraordinary fact about this is that in the case of pure depression the surroundings are not always effectual as a curative. For instance, one's dearest friend may be present, or one's self dining out, say, and yet it is only by a strong effort that a semblance of cheerfulness is obtainable, though if similarly situated when in one's normal condition much pleasure would be felt. People say the exercise of a rigid self-control would prevent, or, at least, greatly ameliorate, depression; but it would surely need an iron will to do this, as one may wish to be lively and talkative in the society of others, and still the feeling of utter despondency will conquer for the time.

The query naturally comes, why should a person be causelessly depressed to this extent? Well, the chain of evidence between cause and effect is not always so clearly defined; but dyspepsia would be conducive to depression—so would great monotony or a relaxing neighborhood—any of these three conditions would, in time, bring things to such a pass. A person under the influence of the "cerulean demons"—(an euphemism for a well-worn slang-designation) is certainly trying to the rest of the family, but it is undoubtedly worse for the individual. Imagine a morbid state of mind during which all desires have temporarily fled, and are replaced by a complete mental exhaustion and disinclination for either work or pleasure.

When one feels convinced of one's personal uselessness and inferiority to one's contemporaries and associates, a conviction increased by retrospection, then repentance and good resolutions both vanish—the former seems unavailing, the latter appear futile—and one concludes that life in general is a mistake, and one's own in particular a miserable fail ure. The foregoing paragraphs are an epitomized description of the feelings people are liable to when suffering from depression. Of course there are degrees of despondency, and in the milder forms or the commencement it is not very difficult to dissipate it. The study of self, if pursued con amore, is apt to become too engrossing (altogether it may be neither amusing nor profitable), besides which it creates or aids the acquisition of downright selfishness.

This is accompanied by self-indulgence to an extent which might in a measure justify the melancholy thoughts referred to above. Selfishness is of rapid growth, and, unless kept under subjection, becomes permanent, and it really does not answer. Look around on the most popular people of one's acquaintances, and it will be seen that the most worthy of affection and respect are those who study and contribute to the happiness and well-being of others more than their own. Such persons are not usually addicted to depression; they are too much engrossed with their associates to give time or thought to moods and feelings; consequently they are generally cheerful, and at least characterized by moderately good spirits.

The moral to be adduced is that selfishness is a mistake, for it grows on one with increasing years, and is therefore to be avoided and struggled against; while the more we occupy our minds and the faculties of brain and body the less we shall suffer from depression of spirits (unless from physical causes or trouble), which are fed by want of moral control and absence of congenial society or employment. London Queen.

The Lack of Smypathy.

We are a practical people, and we have no fiddle faddle sentiment about us. We have no real friendships nowadays. We must not get too deeply interested in anybody, or if anything happens to him or her we may perhaps suffer a little pain, and what's the good? Selfishness is the first law of our modern life. Self-sacrifice may still exist among women, but women are weak things at best. Charity? Give him $5; send him something to eat that is dainty; go and knock on the door and see how he is, and then go off to your fun. Affection? Say you are sorry he is sick, and forget all about him. Dead? "Poor fellow! He was a good fellow and I am sorry he's gone. What card was that you played?"

But perhaps, after all, there are some eyes that the tears come to; somebody's hand grasps the sufferer's and sends the comfort of true sympathy through his weakening frame; perhaps somebody sits in a chair by the fire in a lonely room, and fancies she sees him there, feels his arms about her, hears his voice and pays a tribute to him with a throbbing heart. Somewhere or another it may be, some merry laugh stops half uttered, and somebody rises from the joyous party and says: "I cannot play to-night; I am not well." But it is curious that the larger the world grows the smaller the sympathetic circle seems to get. The more friends a man has the less real friendship. To be happy? It is to have one woman who loves you to love, and one man who trusts you to trust. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Senator Sawyer says a man will never die as long as he walks about.

Dr. William A. Hammond asserts that the brain is not an organ absolutely essential to life.

DEATH DEALING WIRES.

They Kill a Lineman in Hoboken and a Boy in Atlantic City.

James O'Neil, a lineman employed b the Hoboken Electric Light Company, was instantly killed last night. He ascended the pole to arrange the lamp at First and Washington streets. He had barely reached the lamp when he fell lifeless to the sidewalk. The electric current had done its work quickly. The visible evidences of its force were his torn garments, which looked as if cut with a sharp edged knife. The flesh was lacerated at his right wrist and in his side was a wound eight inches long by an inch and a half wide.

O'Neil was 35 years old and lived in Brooklyn. The remains were removed to Coroner O'Hara's Morgue and the County physician was notified.

Atlantic City is having a surfeit of accidents and crimes. Drownings and murders were followed last night by the almost instant death of a boy from electric shock.

Little Louis Mund was the victim. He lived on first street, Philadelphia, in a house in which his father (now deceased) kept a saloon and in which the first American flag was made.

He with his brother, Collie Mund, aged 13, and Charlie Albrecht, aged 12, had climbed to the roof of the dressing room of Albrecht's summer garden. There they played until nearly 7 o'clock, when they were called down by Fred. Albrecht, an elder son of the proprietor. Collie Mund alone obeyed the summons. The other two waited some time and then Louis grasped the electric wire on the side of the garden to steady himself in his descent.

The current had just been turned on and the shock was instantaneous. The wire had been spliced and the point of the joint had not been covered. Little Louis staggered a few steps and then pitched head foremost to the ground, a distance of about fifteen feet.

Drs. Armstrong, Sanders and Wrath were quickly summoned, but all their efforts were without avail. Brandy was poured into him and other remedies were applied, but he was dead. The body was tenderly cared for and now rests alone in the music hall, where an inquest will be held by the coroner this morning.—N. Y. Herald.

Peculiar Contempt of Court Case.

The Representative says that while the sittings of the last Division Court were being held in Mount Forest, Judge Chadwick presiding, a peculiar case of what the judge termed "contempt of court" arose in this way: Opposite the court-room is situated the Vulcan Foundry; the running of the machinery caused a humming noise, which penetrated the court-room, disturbing the judge's equanimity to such an extent that he ordered the bailiff to notify the proprietors, Messrs. Snow & Blackwood, that the noise would have to be stopped. On receiving the judge's order the foundrymen, thinking it was a high-handed piece of business on the part of the judge to require them to stop their machinery and thereby suffer loss, returned answer that they would stop when their work was done. They were quickly replied to by the judge through the bailiff, that, unless the noise was stopped at once he would fine them $20 for contempt of court. The bailiff returned to the court room with a message from Snow & Blackwood telling the judge to fine away. Mayor Halstead then went over from court and advised the firm on behalf of the judge to stop their machinery, which was reluctantly done, the firm giving notice of their intention to send in a bill of damage to court, which they did. Messrs. Snow & Blackwood are former residents of Galt, and the outcome of the case will be awaited with a good deal of interest. Public sympathy is, of course, with the firm, whatever the law may be in the matter.

Cricket Extraordinary.

There is a small village, only a few miles from Berwick, where a cricket club has recently been started, and the members were glad to secure the services of the boots of the hotel, who had been a famous batsman in his day (at least, so he said) to coach them up in the game. Boots was never tired of recounting his prowess in the field and at the stumps, among other anecdotes telling of an occasion on which he played against an All-England Eleven an innings which lasted three days. This was disputed by a bystander, who declared such a feat impossible. Boots, however, declared he was correct, offered to "back his statement," did so for the sum of five shillings, and won it with the following explanation: The match in which he performed his exploit was commenced on a Thursday, and he was the last man to go in on that day, the stumps being drawn when he had only played one over. Friday it rained persistently, and there was no play. On Saturday morning he was bowled by the first ball he received, so that he actually stood up for three days, though whether his performances was a creditable one is a matter of opinion.

Reading Lessons for the Very Young.

The fly Oh, see the lit-tle fly! Does he not look fun-ny as he pran-ces Gai-ly over grand-pa's bald head? See grand-pa make a Grab for him! Ob-serve the qui-et smile on the Fly's face as he lights on another part of that massive dome of Thought. What did grand pa say? Did he re-fer to a mill-dam? No, he did not re-fer to a mill-dam; he re-fer-red to the Fly.

The cat—Get on to the Cat, children! All an-i-mals were made to serve some use-ful purpose, except the Cat he was made for Fun. Cats come in all the fash-ion-a-ble shades. Some of them sell for as much as twenty-nine dollars, but none of them is worth a cent. The Cat has a wild eye and a ten-or voice. He lives upon an-i-mal food and the back Fence. Is it wicked to shoot cats? No, it is not wicked to shoot Cats. No one ever objects, except the Cat.—Time.

It is said that the oldest man living anywhere is James James, a negro of Santa Rosa, Mexico, who was born near Dorchester, S. C., in 1752. He was with his master in the revolutionary war, was 40 years old when Washington was elected President, went to Texas when 101 years old, moved into Mexico five years later, and now, at the ripe age of 136, lives in a little hut, to which he is confined by rheumatism, and is supported by contributions from the citizens of Santa Rosa.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A YOUNG BRIDE ELOPES.

After a Two Weeks' Honeymoon She Runs Away with a Married Man.

There is a disconsolate husband in Dutch Kills, L. I., and his name is Anton Kasha. He is a tailor, who lives on Moore street, and does all the finer work for Brokaw Brothers, Devlin & Co., and other well-known clothiers of this city. He is only 26 years of age, but he has crowded into his life a great many love escapades. His first wife has been dead only since June, a year ago, and he has lost no time in wooing Miss Jennie Roessler. She is a handsome brunette and worked in the cigar factory of Robinson & Ries on Third avenue, between Eighty-second and Eighty-third streets. He met her first at Wiebeck's Hall at a ball held there on last Thanksgiving Day. After this he frequently visited her at her house. She was at first rather averse to receiving his attentions but was finally persuaded to marry him. A hall was hired for the wedding, an orchestra engaged and a supper served. The celebration was the talk of the neighborhood.

The young woman's affections were evidently fixed elsewhere. Alexander Ries, of the firm for whom she worked, was enamored of her charms. She received his advances and her companions in the factory noticed the friendly terms upon which they were and the matter became a subject of general discussion. Kasha was not suspicious. He placed every confidence in his wife. He told her that he desired her to give up work and attend simply to household duties. She explained to him most plausibly that her earnings would help to pay the expenses.

On Saturday last she told him she had some clothes that she wished to take to the laundry. She made up a bundle and left, as was her habit, to go to work. She did not return that night, but Kasha was not worried, thinking she had stopped with friends. Sunday passed without any signs of the appearance of the young bride. Then the husband became alarmed. He told her brother, Joseph Roessler, who lives opposite, and the two put their heads together. They went to the factory on Monday and saw Mr. Robinson. He told them that Ries, who has a wife and two children, had not been at the works since Saturday. Jennie left at the same time.

Ries is well-to-do, owns a few houses, and was regarded as a model man.—New York World.

ASMUS IS DEAD.

He Says He was Mad at Ida Morrison and so Swore She Shot Him.

Peter Asmus, the young musician who shot himself on Wednesday night at Mrs. Southwick's house of ill-fame on Potter street, died last night at 10 30 o'clock at the Emergency Hospital. The unfortunate girl whom he accused, in his dying statement, of firing the fatal shot was released from the custody of the Fourth-precinct police by order of Coroner Kenney as soon as Asmus confessed that he had done the shooting himself.

He stated yesterday morning that he made the false statement because he was mad at the girl.—Buffalo Express.

The Ruling Passion.

Jamie Anderson had returned from college, where he had passed a most successful examination, and brought with him a boxful of presents for the members of his family. These were as suitably chosen as a young man's taste could dictate, that for his aged grandmother being a bonnet of marvellous size, ornamented with many colored ribbons and flowers, with which the old lady was vastly delighted. Some hours afterwards the pleased recipient was missed for a while, and after a search was found sitting in a little-used room with the bonnet on her head. "Whit are ye daein' here a' alane?" she was asked. "Rin awa, dearies, rin awa?" was the quiet response. "I'm jist gettin' used to the braw thing, sae that I'll no' be thinking about it a' the time in the kirk the morn."

How to Secure Some of the Best Things in Life.

Some of the best things in life can be stored up only by the generosity which gives, asking for nothing again. Such are warm affections, kind feelings, benevolent dispositions. Every service willingly rendered, every help gladly given, every effort to encourage the disheartened, to teach the ignorant, to lift the fallen, not only perform their intended work, but even more surely react upon the doer. They may or may not bring him the love, respect and gratitude of those he befriends, but they will infallibly bring brightness and sweetness into their heart, increasing his power to do good, and storing up within him those dispositions which cannot fail to bless him while enabling him to bless others.

Two Hundred Miles Without a Curve.

The new Argentine Pacific Railroad from Buenos Ayres to the foot of the Andes has on it what is probably the longest tangent in the world. This is 340 kilometers (211 miles) without a curve. In this distance there is not a single bridge and no opening larger than an ordinary culvert, no cut greater than one meter in depth, and no fill of a height exceeding one meter. There is almost an entire absence of wood on the plain across which the western end of the road is located. This has led to the extensive use of metallic ties, which will be employed on nearly the entire road.

A Very Poor "Toun."

The burgh of Anstruther in Scotland is three centuries old. It is sixty-nine years the senior of Glasgow. Thirty years after being raised to the rank of Royal Burgh (in 1617) the town was called upon "to feed five oxen to banquet the King," but the Bailies pleaded poverty: "Our toun is ane very mean toun—yea, of all the burghs of the realm the meanest—neither is there ane flesher in oor toun, nor any other person that is accustomed with feeding of beef, we being all seafaring men and fishers."

Several years ago a valuable calf belonging to E. G. Bancroft, of Warehouse Point, sucked a diamond ring from his finger as he was teaching it to drink milk. The calf grew and became a valuable cow, and the other day died mysteriously. A post-mortem examination showed that the ring had recently become detached from the muscle, where it had hitherto remained harmless, and had been the cause of death.—Savannah News.

COOKS IN A STEW.

A Chef who Pines for the Fleshpots of Egypt—Mme. Diel's Weakness.

Two cooks—one Adrien Pierre Dournear, the chief cook at Delmonico's establishment at No. 411 Broadway, the other Ernest Diel, the cook of the Calumet Club—seem to have made a bad mess in getting married. The "fifth rib" was evidently too much for their capabilities.

There is, however, a difference in the two suits which came up for a hearing yesterday before Judge Beach, of the Court of Common Pleas. In the case of Delmonico's chef the wife is the complainant. According to her they were married in Paris on August 29th, 1868, just twenty years ago. They got along very well together—he as master of the "spit" and she as mistress of their household—until recently, when he succumbed, as she says, to the fascination of a Mrs. Philomena Glatezey, with whom she says he is now living at No. 107 Wooster street. On this charge she seeks an absolute divorce, and on application of M. Louis Mathot, her counsel, Judge Beach appointed Howard J. Foster a referee to take testimony in the case. Meantime the accused chef has put in no answer to the suit, thinking possibly that it might be jumping from the frying pan into the fire, though the probabilities are that in the end he will find himself done to a brown turn

The cook of the Calumet Club is the complainant in the second suit. He sues for a limited divorce. He and his wife have been married only some three years, and he declares that they have been living in hot water ever since. The testimony in the case was begun yesterday before Thos. V. Callahan, the referee. In response to questions by M. Louis Mathot, his counsel, Mr. Diel told a pitiful story of his matrimonial grievances.

"What's your wife's greatest fault," he was asked.

"Getting drunk," was the prompt response. "I have had to send her two or three times to Blackwell's Island on account of it. The worst of it was she would come to the club when she was drunk and raise terrible rows there, and I came near losing my place on account of it."

"Had she any other faults?"

"W-e-l-l, yes, if you call them faults—throwing flatirons at me and trying to carve me with a carving knife."

Mrs. Diel denies all the allegations against her except her commitments to Blackwell's Island for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.—N. Y. Herald.

In the Height of the Season.

The influence of locality on some of the ordinary affairs of life is simply tremendous.

Miss Daisy Buffinton, of Ripped Gap Station, Illinois, arrived at the Pequot House, New London, last week, and, taking a stroll the following morning, got into a pleasant conversation with a barnacled boatman on the pier.

"What a charming place this is," she remarked, as she gazed wistfully at the pretty little navy at her feet.

"It is pretty peart, ma'am, but you'd orter got here during th' height of th' season. Then you'd a seen."

"Isn't the month of July called the height of the season?"

"Bless yer heart, no," was the reply. "Yer see they git kinder soft like, an' them as gits inter shoal water gits kinder shore-touched, an' them that comes from outside is pow'ful touch, an' sorter dis'pated like, so's yer don't want ter 'sociate with 'em to enny great extension."

"I haven't been here long," exclaimed Miss Buffinton, "but if that is a fair description of the general run of the people here I think I'll go farther East," and she dodged a sculpin that the old merman pulled in with a spiteful jerk.

"People!" he said. "I warn't talkin' about people. I wuz a referrin' to clambs!" —Time.

A Little Fish Story.

A few days ago a travel-stained tramp entered a farmer's house just about an hour previous to dinner. He offered to chop some wood if he were given a square meal in return. The farmer's wife, being in need of wood for her stove, set him to work at once. When dinner time came she called him inside, and having fish for dinner, put one little smelt on his plate, while on her own and her husband's she had nice big ones, reserving more on the platter.

The tramp dubiously lifted his little fish on the fork, held it to his ear and returned it to the plate, repeating this several times. Being at last asked what he meant by doing this, he answered:

"A brother of mine crossed the sea about six months ago, but not having heard from him so far I thought I would ask the fish whether he could give me any tidings."

"Well, and what did the fish say?" asked the farmer's wife.

The tramp answered: "The fish told me he was too young to know much about the sea, but if I would ask one of the big fish on the platter he might be able to answer my question."

The Festive Carpet-Cleaner.

The first thing I do with the carpet reminds me of trusting. I hang it up.

The next thing I do reminds me of the Hamilton Baseball team. It's hard to beat.

The next thing I do reminds me of grasping an old friend by the hand. I shake it.

The next thing I do reminds me of an undertaker. I lay it out.

The next thing I do reminds me of election when every man who is nominated by one party is elected. A clean sweep.

While putting the carpet down reminds me of sailing against the wind. I have to keep tacking.

Nothing to Wear.

"I don't see how I can go," said Mrs. McStyle; "really, I have nothing to wear."

"Nothing to wear!" exclaimed Mr. McStyle; "where is your cream satin?"

"Why, John, how ridiculous you are! You know that is worn threadbare!"

"I don't see how that can be. You have not worn it above three times."

"Very true; but then, think of the times I had to try it on while it was making."

M. Manzen, a Norwegian athlete, is making a journey through Greenland on snow shoes, with the object of finding the Polar Sea.

TALK ABOUT TOBACCO.

Bits Which Lovers of the Weed May Also Love to Read.

Says Tobacco: During the past year many of our Havana importers who have had occasion to ship tobacco to Canada for the purpose of saving the 10 per cent. additional duty levied on goods which have been stored here for the period of one year have been the victims of thefts. Of late the pilferers have become more bold and now, instead of one or two carrots being taken, it is not an uncommon thing for a bale to be relieved of six or eight.

Says the Chicago Times: If a man goes to a cigar store where he is unknown and calls for a 10-cent cigar, unless he is an expert in selecting good tobacco, in nine cases out of ten he will have a 5-cent cigar thrust upon him. This is the verdict of a majority of the smokers in Chicago with whom I have talked, and I have been studying their opinions purposely for several weeks.

Says the West Key (Fla.) Equator: On the farm of W. H. B. Johnson, who lives six or seven miles west of Bartow, there is said to be tobacco three feet high. A single plant has twenty-five leaves to the stalk. One of the leaves is fourteen inches wide and twenty-two inches long. The tobacco was raised on common fine land which was cleared this year.

Women Who Go Fishing.

Mrs. Cleveland spent the anniversary of her wedding, June 2nd, 1888, fishing for trout. The President and his guide accompanied her. The first lady of the land has always had phenomenal luck in hooking the elusive trout and on this occasion her good fortune did not desert her. Mr. Cleveland considers himself quite a connoisseur at angling in mountain streams and he felt very particular that his beautiful wife should handle her rod with scientific grace. "Let me show you how to cast your line," he said. "Never mind, thank you," she replied with a smile of confidence, "I can do it." The President looked suspiciously on when Mrs. Cleveland waved her slender split bamboo over the crystal waters. There was a splash and a speckled beauty adorned the end of her line. She safely landed him and while the President lashed the waters his wife caught five more trout, all weighing fifteen pounds. "Do you wish to show me how to cast my line?" she asked throwing a sly glance at her husband. The President suppressed a smile and said not a word. He didn't catch a fish all day.

Aside from preparing one of those meals which give her husband so much delight, Mrs. Lamont's greatest pleasure is fishing for trout. Her husband taught her the little art, and not long ago they decided to try thir skill together. "I can't fish with you," said the colonel. "I'll go up the stream and you fish here. When I return we'll have fish for dinner, and you must keep still or you'll never catch one." As the private secretary disappeared on the side of the mountain his wife was gayly humming one of her favorite tunes. After awhile, about dinner-time, Mrs. Lamont heard a noise behind her, and a voice said: "Well, dear, I caught a fish."

"Oh, did you?" replied his wife. "I've caught three, Dan; just look."

The colonel was slightly embarrassed, but pronounced the fish beauties. They weighed in all nine pounds. The merry campers had fish for dinner, but for some reason Mr. Lamont neglected to relate one of his noted fish stories during the meal.

Gail Hamilton's first attempts at Walton's art was fishing for cod. Being unsuccessful she concluded to try trout. She chose a position by a dashing stream on White Mountain. "It must be a splendid place for trout, the scenery is so beautiful," she said. Her brother, to whom she spoke, made no reply, but seeing her wants well supplied, departed. A fish troubled her hook. The fair fisher began to get impatient. The waters were as clear as glass. "Why couldn't I peep over and see the fish swallowing my hook," she asked. Then she moved toward the edge of the stream and peered into the placid pool. A large speckled trout glided through the sparkling waters. She began to get excited. The fish touched her line. Swish! splash! "Help! Brother!" Miss Hamilton found herself in the middle of the stream. The rock she was sitting on had given way. The hook had caught on the limb of a tree. Her brother helped her to dry land and when she saw the bare hook she exclaimed, "Why, where's the fish?" "Still swimming, I suppose," replied her brother.

Harriet Hosmer is a splendid angler, having enjoyed the sport from girlhood. She never fails to catch a good mess every time she goes fishing. This story is told of her. One time she was on a train that was passing a lake where she had spent many happy hours hooking bass. The familiar scenes filled her with an irrepressible desire to cast her line. Running out on to the platform she secretly pulled out the coupling pin, and while the rest of the train went gliding on her car came slowly to a halt. Miss Hosmer had her fish, but it cost her father a neat sum of money.

Courtship a la Mode.

Reginald—Elsie, I love you. I—

Elsie (interrupting)—Really, Mr. Regin—

Reginald (interrupting)—Before you finish come out and have some wine jelly, ice-cream, cocoanuts, lemonade, fried oysters and a sherbet.

Elsie (fondly)—Reginald, I always loved you.

The Hartford Religious Herald tells this An old grandfather had become quite feeble and his hand shook so that he could hardly hold a dish. Frequently they slipped from his trembling fingers and were broken. His son harshly scolded him for what he called such carelessness. One day the latter's little boy came into the room, to find his father at work on a block of wood, and asked him if he was making another pig's trough. He replied: "I'm making a trough for an old hog to eat out of. The fact is, it is for your grandfather. He's broken so many dishes that I must stop it or we'll all go to the poorhouse. Now, my boy, you run awa and play." But the boy hesitated, and slowly said: "Father, hadn't I better stay and learn how to make it, so when you get old and break up the dishes I can make one for you to eat out of?" The rough wasn't finished.

GREAT
REDUCTIONS

In Every Line of Goods at

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Come in and see for yourself. We will give from

20 TO 40 PER CT. DISCOUNT!

Don't fail to see our 35c

CASHMERE

we are now selling for 22½c. yd.

EMBROIDERIES,

All prices, from 1c a yard up. Regular prices from 5c a yard up.

CRETONNES,

Just see them. Beautiful 22c goods for 13c yd.

BOOTS,

Of every description, AWAY, AWAY DOWN

Now, if you want a Tremendous Bargain in a first class staple article, just call and try J. G. Anderson's

We are giving 5 lbs of our famous 30c Tea for $1.

TEAS!

All other lines equally reduced. Come at once, as our stock is not extra large, and we are Bound to Sell at Some Price.

Butter and Eggs

AS GOOD AS CASH.

AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

THE FARMERS ORGANIZE.

A public meeting, in compliance with a requisition to Mr. Hector McDonald, President of the Farmers' Council at McIntyre, Osprey Township, was held here on Wednesday evening, Aug. 8, when a Farmers' and People's Institute was successfully organized, with Mr. Edward Potts, President; John McKinnon and Allan McLean, Vice Presidents; Samuel Scott, Treasurer; D. McDonald, Secretary; D. C. McIntyre, Captain; Duncan McIntyre, Lieutenant. A finance council of five, with an executive council of twelve, and two auditors were also elected, making twenty-six officers of this institute for s.s. No. 2 of Osprey Several speakers took part in discussing the propriety of petitioning county and municipal council boards, together with the Dominion and Provincial Governments, to unitedly work so as to establish a uniform method of public weighing at grain market places or where produce is sold and weighed at all railway stations, as with such a system of monthly public fairs for sale and purchase, or exchange of cattle, horses, and sheep, and an economical method of market-like accommodation, to admit of farmers receiving cash payments instead of truck trade for butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, potatoes, etc., if publicly established throughout market places and where necessary in the several counties of Ontario and other provinces of the Dominion of of Canada, certain progressive advantages must result to immensely prosper agriculturists and almost all other citizens, as claimed for in a petition presented by Mr. Lynn, deputy reeve of Sunnidale, to the County of Simcoe Council, whose committee reports thereon at their next session in November. It was also contended that as very few farmers had votes, or a voice, in the villages, towns or cities where markets are usually run to the detriment of farmers and most other citizens, it therefore became the interests of agriculturists, with villages, towns and cities, to unite as co-workers in making Farmers' and People's Institutes auxiliary colleges, educating institutions in all market towns, or school sections, and thus through union of action to bring influence to bear upon certain monopoly buyers, boards of trade, municipal and county council boards, together with our respective governments, not only public weighing markets but also many other public benefits must soon be forthcoming by securing legitimate relief from ring monopolists of our produce and other markets.

Among other business transacted, the Institute in session unanimously passed the following resolutions. "That monthly cattle fairs be held at McIntyre Corners, and that the first horse and sheep-selling cattle fair be held during October next, on same day on which the township annual show fair is to be held in said McIntyre

"That this Institute also recommends the general adoption of public fairs for the sale, or purchase, or exchange of cattle, horses and sheep on same day at all township, fall and spring show fairs, as most likely to be made practically beneficial to agriculturists, if published in posters of forthcoming township show fairs.

"That the Institute in session also recommends the general adoption of said public weighing markets as directly in the interests of agriculturists generally.

"That the public press may also be pleased to publish reports of said institute meetings and otherwise advocate the objects therein indicated."

H. D. McDonald, Secretary.

Maxwell.

In compliance with a requesetson to Mr. A. Wallace, of Stayner, organizer of Institutes, Farmers' Councils and monthly selling fairs, a public meeting was held here on Saturday, Aug. 11th, when a Farmers' and Peoples' Institute for the Village of Maxwell and adjacent country was successfully organized, with the following officers, viz: Thos. Gamey, President; W. Sproule and J. Gamey, Vic-Presidents; Dr. Scott, Secretary; W. Long, Treasurer; R. Coutts, Captain; H. Guy, Lieutenant. A Finance committee of five and an Executive council of twelve, with two auditors, were also elected. The meeting was well attended and a deep interest was manifested by farmers and citizens in discussing the necessity of establishing public grain-weighing markets, the formation of monthly selling fairs, and other matters which would benefit agriculturists and citizens generally. Among other business transacted, the following resolutions were adopted, Viz.:—That Monthly Public Fairs shall be held in the Village of Maxwell, under the auspices of said Farmers' and Peoples' Institutes, and that the first of said fairs will be held on Friday, Oct. 5th, and continue monthly thereafter on the Friday before Markdale fair, for the sale, purchase or exchange of horses, cattle, and other live stock, dairy and other agricultural products. The Institute repectfully recommends farmers and citizens generally to assist with the fair and to co-operate in petitioning the Township and County Councils and Governments to have public weighing markets, by public scales, and licensed weighers at said markets.

BOOTS & SHOES!

ALWAYS ON HAND.

A LARGE VARIETY

TO CHOOSE FROM AT

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF —

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO.

Also TRIMMINGS in great variety. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Special Attention given to Contracted or Tender Feet.

D. McTAVISH, R. P. LEGATE

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff oints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment.

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:FROM:—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

NOTICE!

To Farmers and the public in general.

Now that the Public Schools are about to open, I would respectfully call your attention to our

Full and Complete Stock

OF

SCHOOL SUPPLIES!

IN ALL CLASSES.

CALL AT

W. RICHARDSON'S

DRUG STORE

Also Lubricating Lardine Oils for Machines.

VOTERS' LIST,

1888.

Municipality of the Township of Artemesia, County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of "The Voters' List Act," the copies required by said sections to be so transmitted or delivered of the list made pursuant to said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipality at Elections for members of the Legislative Assembly and at Municipal Elections; and that said list was first posted up at my office at Flesherton, on the 4th day of August, 1888, and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list and if any omissions or any errors are found therein, to take immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

WM. J. BELLAMY,
Clerk of the said Municipality

Dated this 7th day of August, A.D., 1888.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 375. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, AUG. 30, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

SAVE MONEY!

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store.

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Streetsville needed the dog.

Economy is a great revenue. Save money by attending M. Richardson & Co's Midsummer Discount Sale of summer goods for the next ten days.

Malarial poisons can be entirely removed from the system by the use of Ayer's Ague Cure. This remedy contains a specific, in the form of a vegetable product, used in no other Ague preparation. Warranted.

Save money! Save money by buying your watches, clocks, jewelry, silverware, spectacles, etc., at Russell's noted jewelry store. 20 per cent. discount off all cash sales of $1 and over for the month of [illegible]

Scrofula, in the [illegible] corrupts and contaminates every tissue and [illegible] the whole body [illegible] whether at [illegible] in the form of [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Somebody passed through Durham with a load of blasting powder last week and the C. P. R. have replaced a rotten plank in the station platform. And still the march of empire moves along.

We had a call last Thursday from Mr. R. McFarlane, of Durham, who was taking a drive across country. "Bob" is an old friend, and we were glad to see him. He tried to instil a little enthusiasm into our baseball club in the matter of a tournament which is being agitated to take place in Durham. Whether he succeeded in convincing them that it was to their advantage to attend or not, we have not learned.

LATER.—The boys have enthused and intend going.

A Handsome Present.

Mr. Aikenhead, hardware merchant, of Toronto, has presented the Board of trustees of the Methodist Church, Flesherton, with six dozen iron pew plates. We thank Mr. Aikenhead, on behalf of the church members, for his handsome donation.

CHINA HALL. M. Richardson & Co's China Hall is again stocked full with a large new stock of new and handsome designs in Crockery and Fancy Glassware, and all goods in that line for fall trade. Call and inspect.

A Motto.

Sunday afternoon last a motto with a history was presented to the Methodist Sunday school here. The motto was begun by the late Mrs. R. J. Sproule, and completed by her daughter, Miss Ada Sproule. It was very neatly worked in berlin wool, and should be much prized by the recipients on account of the old associations.

A Baptism.

Mrs. Thos. Aikenhead, of Toronto, has been visiting at the residence of her father, J. W. Armstrong, for some time. On Saturday Mr. Aikenhead arrived by the noon train, and in the evening Rev. Mr. Shilton officiated at the [illegible] Mr. Aikenhead [illegible] daughter. Mr. A. returned to the city [illegible] Monday morning's train.

Bloody Dundalk.

The people of Dundalk are a cantankerous lot, anyway. Last week two of these harmonious denizens of the swamp had a law suit over a dead dog. The dog was passed back and forth across the line fence until there was simply the tip of the tail left. Then they went to law. And this week one Jean Criqui was fined $10 and cost for scaring another man with a toy pistol, while the magistrate intimated that he had half a mind to fine the complainant as well. Bro. Spurr is in clover. It reminds us of the gory, wild excitement of mark Twain's western journalistic career. Sick 'em on, brother, its news we are after.

Another car load of new filled Salt at M. Richardson & Co's.

Self-Binder Contest.

There will be a self-binder contest on the farm of Mr. George Stewart, near Flesherton, on Tuesday, Sept. 4th, commencing at 1 o'clock p. m. sharp.

HALF PRICE! HALF PRICE! HALF PRICE! Going at half price—Gloves, Hosiery, Gents' Ties, Parasols, 500 doz. or more of Fancy Buttons, at M. Richardson & Co's this week.

Notice.

Having secured the services of a first-class hand [illegible] happy [illegible] all persons requiring [illegible] Rag carpet weaving [illegible] satisfaction guaranteed. W. H. Fleshe[illegible]

Just see those beaut[illegible] G. Anderson is selling [illegible] yard. Regular prices from 1[illegible]

Sheep Worried.

There are two [illegible] given [illegible] Mr. Chas. Irwin [illegible]

[illegible] strychnine [illegible] interests [illegible]

M. Richardson & Co., having large consignments of fall and winter goods on the way, have decided to clear out the balance of their summer goods at a sacrifice. Decided bargains will be given.

Can Defy Starvation.

There was quite a heavy frost here on Tuesday morning, but it did not do much damage. The three editorial pumpkin vines are safe, and our potato tops died down long ago (bugs!); the two citron and cucumber vines came out unscathed; therefore we are in a position to defy starvation for another ten months, providing the cordwood trade is brisk this winter. This will settle the matter with our city cousins of the press, who have been wagering that this frost would knock us out.

Button, button, button, who has the button? J. G. Anderson has 1000 doz. buttons, which he is selling for 5c a doz., regular prices from 10c a doz. up.

The Patriarch.

An interesting communication from Mr. Wm. Purdy, of Winnipeg, was given in the last issue of "The Patriarch." In the same issue there appeared an original poem, by the same writer, which was much appreciated, and appears elsewhere. Mr. Purdy was ably introduced by Dr. Christoe, who testified to the fact that the writer was formerly an active member in the Sons of Temperance, and that though he is now weak and afflicted he still takes a deep interest in the welfare of the order and of the temperance cause generally. "The Patriarch," in answer to several questions, wishes to say that it does not generally appear in print, but as its full title indicates, is read from manuscript once a month at the regular meetings of the Sons of Temperance.

Bears.

As the bear story season has arrived, we have been keeping our eyes and ears [illegible] tendency that may [illegible] On Monday, during the course of our peregrinations in search of news we observed Mr. Bates Fawcett [illegible] a bear's head in his buggy. In answer to our inquiry as to the object, he simply remarked "bears." After some difficulty we gleaned from him the fact that bears had been committing depredations on the farm of Mr. Cunningham, two miles north of Flesherton, having killed a sheep for that gentleman. Mr. Fawcett cautiously lifted the robe from the buggy seat and displayed a trap, large and strong enough to hold a mastodon, with teeth of terrific length. The trap was attached by a cable to a baby sawlog. The bear is expected to walk into that trap without the least hesitation. Should he do so we will let the public know.

Personal.

Mrs. W. S. Copley, of Toronto, is [illegible] ing her mother, Mrs. Wm. Clark.

Mr. Newton Henderson, of the Dominion Bank, Toronto, is rusticating in Flesherton for a few days with his parents.

Mr. Wm. Fawcett, of Detroit, is on a visit to his parents in Flesherton.

Extraordinary bargains in Women's and Children's Boots and Shoes [illegible] clear out the line, at M. Richardson & Co's.

Fire At Priceville.

Mr. J. Brown's saw mill was [illegible] on Tuesday evening [illegible] the [illegible] Mr. Brown [illegible] garden party got up by [illegible] byterian young ladies on Thursday [illegible] was fairly successful [illegible]

1000 doz. Eggs wanted [illegible] prices paid in cash or trade [illegible] Anderson's.

Items From The Station.

Mr. R. W. C[illegible] has been ill [illegible] days, and is not much better yet.

The new station house is not visible except to the mind's eye.

Our school has opened again with every prospect of another successful term.

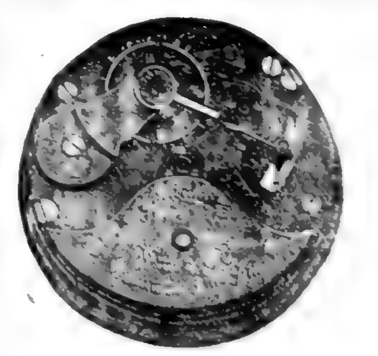
Mr. S. Muir's new house is getting towards completion, and by its neat design and commanding appearance breaks the monotony of the road towards Priceville.

T. T. T. J. G. Anderson is giving 1 lbs. of Young Hyson Tea for $1. Regular price 25c lb.

Valuable Property for sale in the thriving Village of Flesherton. For particulars apply to A. R. FAWCETT, Review office, Streetsville, Ont. or to J. W. Armstrong, Flesherton.

NOTICE.—All accounts due me for Job Printing and advertising must be paid in to J. W. Armstrong as soon as possible.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Review Office, Streetsville



TO

OLD

PATRONS.

AM OBLIGED [illegible]

CONTINUED CONFIDE[illegible]

AND PATRONAG[illegible]

[illegible] next week.

JEWELER BROWN,

MARKDALE.

DANISH STEAMERS COLLIDE.

Over One Hundred Persons Sent to the Bottom.

CONDUCT OF THE CRAZED PASSENGERS.

Arrival of the Steamer Thingvalla at Halifax.

A last (Thursday) night's New York despatch says: The steamship Wieland, Capt. Albers, from Hamburg Aug. 5th, via Havre Aug. 7th, with merchandise and 113 cabin and 455 steerage passengers, reports that on Aug. 14th, thirty miles south of Sable Island, at noon, she saw the Danish steamer Thingvalla, Copenhagen for New York, with signals of distress. The Thingvalla had collided on the 14th, at 4 a m., with the steamer Geiser, of the same line, from New York August 11th, for Copenhagen. The Geiser sank in about five minutes. Fourteen passengers and seventeen of the crew, among them Capt. Moller, are saved. Seventy-two passengers and thirty-three of the crew were lost. The steamer Wieland brought 455 passengers from the Thingvalla and those saved from the Geiser to New York. The Thingvalla will endeavor to reach Halifax. The Wieland is at Hoboken.

OCCURRED IN A FOG.

The Geiser left this port on August 11th bound for Stettin. The Thingvalla was on her way to this city, and was advertised to leave here on August 25th. A very heavy sea and a dense fog were experienced through the night and early morning of August 14th. It is said an object could not be distinguished 50 feet away. The Thingvalla struck the Geiser on the starboard side amidships about 4 o'clock in the morning. The ships then parted and within five minutes the Geiser sank. The crew of the Thingvalla did all they could to save the Geiser's crew and passengers while still in doubt whether the Thingvalla was not dangerously disabled, but owing to the heavy sea only 31 were saved. No other vessel was near at the time. The Wieland, on her way to this port, was 100 miles away. At 11.30 o'clock on the morning of the 14th the Wieland was sighted. Signals of distress were made and a transfer of passengers began. The sea was heavy, but no mishap occurred in the transfer. The officers of the company were unable to-night to give a list of the lost.

CAPTAIN ALBERS' STORY.

Capt. A. Albers, of the Wieland, tells the following story: At 1 o'clock on the morning of the 14th we passed some wreckage floating in the sea, and suspected that an accident had happened near us. A little later we sailed through a sea of oil, and sighted a broken boat of the Geiser's. About 11.30 we sighted a steamer to the northward about eight miles off, and seeing she had a flag of distress up we ran down to her. It proved to be the Thingvalla. Captain Lamb, of that vessel, came to us in a small boat and begged us to take off his passengers and those he had saved from the Geiser. He said his own vessel was so badly injured he expected her to sink at any moment. Her forward compartment had been carried away from halfway above the deck to below the water line. I sent the boats and the Thingvalla lowered two boats, and in five hours we had the saved passengers and crew of the Geiser on board. The sea was very rough, and the work of transferring the passengers was very difficult. The immense hole in the Thingvalla's bow was patched up as well as possible, and she started for Halifax. The collision, so far as known, was caused by the fog. The chief officer of each vessel was on deck at the time of the collision.

AN OFFICER'S ACCOUNT.

Third Officer Peterson told much the same story of the occurrence. He said—The fog was very dense. Through the night rain had fallen at intervals. The first we knew of the Geiser's approach was when she appeared on the starboard side, right upon us. The Geiser was struck opposite the engine-rooms amidship. The Geiser being heavily loaded was low in the water, so that the Thingvalla carried away her own compartment. The upper part of her bow ran over the decks of the Geiser. The Geiser's deck-houses were carried away and the state-rooms smashed in and the occupants killed. He first heard a bell ring in the Geiser's engine-room, but could not tell what the order was. He was on deck at the time. He then heard the bell again, this time to back, and the steamer had commenced to reverse when the Thingvalla struck her. The Geiser's whistle was blowing at the time. One of the Geiser's passengers was picked up with a broken leg.

As soon as the Wieland arrived in the lower bay Capt. Moller, of the Geiser, left the steamer on a revenue cutter. He went to the office of the company, where he was closeted a few moments with the agents. He only left word that the accident was due to the weather and went away without stating where he was going. The rescued crew of the Geiser were taken to the Hotel Denmark on the arrival of the Wieland.

BADLY INJURED.

The Thingvalla presents a strange spectacle, with nearly the whole of her bow torn away, leaving an immense hole exposed to view. A long piece of bow hangs over the hole, which reaches back into the sides of the ship over fifteen feet. The projecting piece hangs over the water like an outstretched arm, and shows where the powerful iron plates were broken through and snapped off like pipe stems. Crowds flocked to the wharf to see the steamer, and the wonder is expressed that she ever reached port. No one is allowed on board, and the only statement to be obtained is that of the captain. The steamer will discharge her cargo, be examined by the port warden, and be repaired here. She will be here probably for a couple of months. After repairing she is to reload her cargo and proceed to New York.

CAPT. LAMB'S REPORT.

Capt. Lamb has given the following statement of the disaster to the newspapers: It was just about 4 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 14th, a few minutes before the watch had been changed, and my second officer who was on deck came down, and I asked him how the weather was. He said it was raining, but not foggy. He retired a few minutes later. I heard the telegraph signal for the engines to reverse. This was the first intimation I had of any trouble. Leaping from my berth I ran for the deck. As I was hurrying up a collision occurred. It was a terrific shock, the steamers coming together with a frightful crash. Rushing forward I found the Thingvalla to be locked with another steamer, which I did not then know. As I approached I saw a man, whom I afterwards found to be the Geiser's second officer, jump on to our deck. My steamer had cut right through his room, where he was sound asleep, and he leaped out of his bunk on to the Thingvalla's deck. It may have been two or it may have been four minutes before the engines were reversed and we backed off. Without delaying a moment I went to quiet my excited passengers, who were crowded on the deck and shouting and crying with fear. At the same time I looked after the safety of my ship, not having any knowledge as to what was the extent of our damage. The officers were already engaged in cutting away and launching lifeboats. One of the Thingvalla's boats had just been lowered when the other steamer went down stern first. This scene was a frightful one. I cannot attempt to describe it. Some of her passengers were rushing madly about her deck, while others were crowded in several boats on the water. It turned out afterwards that the ship foundered. A number of the passengers must have been killed in the bunks by the force of the collision, and never knew what happened. As the steamer plunged beneath the water, carrying down those on board, she capsized the boats that had got away. The air was rent with agonizing shrieks and prayers. Most of the people probably went down with the Geiser, and were followed soon after by the ill-fated souls in the boat, who must have been sucked under as the ship sank.

RESCUING THE PASSENGERS.

Three of our boats were already launched and trying to save as many as they could from the doomed Geiser; but it was slow work, as comparatively few managed to keep afloat after the steamer's disappearance. Three boats were all I could get out in the time we had, and I did not know but what we might want the remaining ones for ourselves. The two vessels were not more than 100 or 150 feet apart when the Geiser went down. The screams of the drowning lasted perhaps two minutes, then suddenly all became quiet. Our three boats returned loaded with the saved who had been picked up in the water and off the bottoms of their capsized boats. I sent the boats back to continue their search for survivors, but they returned with only the corpse of a woman. We provided the survivors with dry clothes, hot coffee and wine and made them as comfortable as possible while attending to the injury to ourselves. The day was just beginning to break when the collision occurred. It was raining, as the second officer told me just before. It was not foggy. I heard the men around me say it was eight or ten minutes between the collision and the sinking of the Geiser; but I could not pay any attention to the time.

CAPT. MOLLER'S ESCAPE.

Capt. Moller told a most wonderful story of his escape. He was standing on the Geiser's bridge as the steamer settled down, and he jumped into the sea. He felt being sucked under by the ship, and while struggling to keep afloat he got his two legs entangled in a piece of wreckage. This turned him round in the water three or four times, and for some moments he was helpless, but finally succeeded in disengaging himself and managed to reach the surface again, breathless and almost exhausted. He then got on top of an upturned boat and held on till rescued by the men from the Thingvalla.

INJURY TO THE THINGVALLA.

After the Geiser disappeared we began jettisoning the cargo to keep the Thingvalla afloat. The crew and passengers worked side by side, throwing overboard what was brought out of the hold. What was jettisoned consisted solely of wood pulp and provisions. There was not much wind but there was a heavy swell. Between 9 and 10 o'clock we reached the forward bulkhead. We then stopped throwing the cargo over and got to work shoring up the compartment. We were leaking badly in the forehold, and we kept the pumps going all the time, so that the water had not time to gain on us. At 11 o'clock the steamer Wieland, for New York, hove in sight, and we transferred all the rescued passengers, as well as our own 450 passengers, to her. The Wieland proceeded about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, leaving us also steering for New York. We continued the work of shoring up the compartment, but after a while, on account of the wind and sea increasing, we found it impossible to keep on for New York, and decided to head for Halifax. At this time it still looked very much as if we might sink, and some of the crew refused to work, wanting to be transferred to the Wieland before she left us. We went as slow as two knots an hour, and sometimes found that too much. We just had to crawl, that was all. On Wednesday afternoon a fishing vessel hove in sight, and we bore down for her. She proved to be the schooner Capis, of Lahave, Capt. Cleversey, and I engaged her to stand by and accompany the steamer to Halifax, so as to be able to help us in case she should go down. Last night the sea was so heavy I had to turn the steamer around, running stern foremost and steering by the schooner, which was connected by a hawser with the steamer's bow. We ran against the wind this way all night.

The Danish Consul has concluded that the investigation of the cause of the collision between the steamships Geiser and Thingvalla will be held in Copenhagen. The survivors of the crew and such of the passengers as wish will leave to-morrow by the Savonia, of the Cunard line. The loss on the vessel is $350,000 and on the cargo $120,000. The insurance is not known.

A pretty design for a lace corsage has a yoke which is laid in fine lengthwise folds or tucks, the fulness below being laid in gathers, or large or small or side box plaits. The full sleeves are finished just below the elbows with frills of lace.

Mr. Chauncey M. Depew dined with Mr. Gladstone a few days ago and told him that if he would visit America he would get such a reception "as no one has received since Lafayette."

TO SEARCH FOR STANLEY.

A Lieutenant of the U. S. Navy Organizing an Expedition.

A Washington despatch says: Lieut. A. Mason Shufeldt, of the Navy, who has recently returned from China, is now here arranging for obtaining a year's leave of absence to go abroad, and will leave very soon, probably at the end of August, for Europe en route to Zanzibar to organize and lead an expedition in search of Henry M. Stanley. Lieut. Shufeldt is a son of Rear Admiral Robert W. Shufeldt, who made the treaty with the King of Corea, and is possessed of the same spirit of restless love of travel and exploration that has characterized his father. After accompanying his father in the cruise around the world at the time the Corean treaty was made, Lieut. Shufeldt obtained leave and went to Madagascar, which he thoroughly explored for the first time. His operations in that neighborhood took him to the Zanzibar coast also, when he became familiar with the language of the people of that part of Africa. In his researches there he was materially aided by Sir Henry Kirk, the British Consul-General on that coast, who is himself a well-known African explorer, having been a member of Stanley's expedition at the time the American found and brought back tidings of Dr. Livingstone. Sir Henry and Lieut. Shufeldt are firm friends, and the latter will proceed first to enlist Sir Henry's aid in organizing the proposed expedition. It will be necessary for Lieut. Shufeldt to be at Zanzibar in the first half of November, for during the latter part of that month the trading caravans that have come down from the interior to dispose of their skins, gold dust and ivory in exchange for goods are getting ready for their return journeys. The caravans that reach the coast go only to the western boundary of their own country and there turn over a share of goods to other caravans that have brought products across their own country, and these transfer again to tribes still further in the interior. By taking advantage of this annual trading custom Lieut. Shufeldt hopes to be enabled to make his hazardous journey at very much less expense than other such expeditions have done, and will utilize the return of the caravans next summer to enable him to return safely to the coast.

Shufeldt is just 34 years of age. He is tall and wiry like his father, and is possessed of an iron constitution. He proposes to bear some part of the expense himself, but a portion will be contributed by persons interested in the results to be obtained, and Shufeldt will utilize his experience in book form.

WARNED IN A TRANCE.

Singular Story of the Mysterious Cure of an Unknown Disease.

A Findlay, O., despatch says: In Marion township, this county, a young daughter of Henry Searfoss, a prominent farmer, had been ill for several weeks with a disease of which none knew the origin, and which completely baffled the skill of the attending physicians. Her malady was such that the body would at intervals grow as cold as death and be covered with green spots. On last Monday she lost consciousness, and for 36 hours was in a trance, the warmth of her body being the only indication of life. Tuesday night she was aroused from her slumber, and told a strange story of what had occurred to her during her period of unconsciousness, in which she said a man appeared to her, and with a buggy wheel showed her how her injuries came about; after which he brought a sheet, a bucket and three bottles containing wine, whiskey and alcohol, and explained how these might be used to effect a cure. If they were not used he warned her that at 7 o'clock on the morning of the next day she would begin failing, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon death's approach would be realized, and at 9 o'clock the next morning she would be dead. The family physician laughed at the whole thing and bade the parents pay no heed to the spirit injunction, which advice was followed, and at once the predictions of the vision began to come true, and the girl grew rapidly worse. The family, thoroughly alarmed, hastened to apply the treatment prescribed in the trance, and an immediate change for the better made itself apparent, followed by a steady improvement. Yesterday Miss Searfoss was able to be up and around, and is now as well as ever.

A BRIGAND ROMANCE.

A Balkan Chief Captures a Pretty Girl and Has a Mock Marriage.

A London cable says: A large portion of Turkey and the Balkan States is infested with brigands, and their number is rapidly growing. These outlaws, taking advantage of the absence of railway and telegraphic communication, become bolder daily, and the consternation of the better class of inhabitants is increasing to such an extent that many of them are leaving their homes, and taking refuge in the large towns. Recently a band of brigands invaded a small Roumelian town, and captured the daughter of a peasant, a young girl famed in that locality for her beauty. The chief of the band, wishing to make the girl his wife, had a mock marriage ceremony performed, one of the band personating a priest. He then sent a messenger to the village authorities informing them of the marriage and demanding that it be formally registered upon their books, a proceeding that would render the ceremony valid. The authorities refused to comply with the demand and the chief sent the messenger back with his ultimatum, which was that he would sack the village if his demands were not immediately acceded to. The officials are now endeavoring to gain time by parleying with the chief, hoping meanwhile to be able to recover the girl by stealth.

That Gilt Bible with Gold Clasps.

"Talking about swindlers," said old Deacon Blizzard, "about two years ago a book pedler came along, and, as we had no Bible in the house, I bought one with a pretty red cover, with 'Holy Bible' in gilt letters on the back, and clasps on to it, and I'm danged if we didn't discover last week that the book was a volume of census reports for 1870, with a bogus back; and maybe we'd never found out how we'd been cheated if my wife's sister, who had come to visit us, hadn't gone rummaging through the book, looking for a recipe for mince pies, which Amanda said she had mislaid somewhere."—Drake's Magazine.

LUNATICS LET LOOSE.

Crowded Into One Cell Four Madmen Try to Kill One Another.

The insane department of the jail was a perfect bedlam yesterday for a few moments, and the madmen confined there shrieked and gibbered like frightened monkeys. They startled the attendants with cries of "murder" and all was in the utmost confusion. Two of the crazy men were rolling each other over the floor and they were covered with blood. The only reason they did not murder each other was because they had no weapons. It all happened because four patients were placed in one cell for lack of room. They got along very well together until Edgar Simpson began to make one of his stump speeches. He has the idea that he is a great stump-speaker and that he must denounce every person he meets as a politician who is inimical to the interests of the people. He delights in "waving the bloody shirt," and began a vigorous tirade against the southern confederacy and all who were in its service. This was more than the military spirit of "Gen. Stonewall Jackson" could brook. He is a lunatic who claims to be the great general himself and he was ready to resent the personal insult given by Simpson. He waxed hotter and hotter, and when a colored patient and Charles Hobenreyser were introduced into the cell he was in a dangerous frame of mind. He made a rush for the stump-speaker and the two were soon pounding each other until their noses were fountains of blood. The colored lunatic became very excited and pushed Hobenreyser into a corner and held him there and butted him with his head. The noise caused all the other lunatics to become frantic and their shouts drowned the din of the combatants. Attendants, with great difficulty, separated the men and placed them in different cells. —Chicago Times.

WELLS COLLEGE SCANDAL.

A Professor Charged with Defrauding the College Out of $20,000.

An Auburn, N. Y., despatch says: The destruction of the main building of Wells College at Aurora last week turned public opinion towards that institution, and a discussion of its history and future prospects followed. This sudden interest has revealed the fact that Prof. Edward L. French, the registrar and instructor in physical and natural science, has defrauded the college out of $20,000, and that the college had secured a judgment against him for that amount. The judgment was filed in the office of the County Clerk in this city on June 9th last. The judgment has been returned unsatisfied. As Registrar French had the handling of all moneys received from the pupils in payment of tuition fees, it was his duty to deposit all receipts in the bank to the credit of the Treasurer of the Board of Trustees. For several years, it is said, French had appropriated $500 or $600 each year of this money to his own use. He had no difficulty in deceiving President Frisbee and the Board of Trustees, as there was no record kept of money received from the pupils. About a year ago French resigned and went West. In a short time he came back and again resumed his duties at the college. His dishonesty was accidentally discovered about six months ago by President Frisbee. French's wife is the only representative of the Wells family living, and out of consideration for her the trustees refused to prosecute French. When his shortage was discovered he was allowed to resign and go West.

HANGED TO AN APPLE TREE.

Mr. Silva, of Morgan Park, Chicago, Runs Across a Suicide.

"There were plenty of other apple-trees in the neighborhood," said C. P. Silva, indignantly, to an evening News reporter to-day, "and I don't think it was right in him to come and hang himself in my door yard."

Mr. Silva was speaking of the suicide of a German gardener, who used to work for him on his place in Morgan Park. The only name Mr. Silva knew him by was Adam, and that he once lived in Englewood; that he was presumably an unmarried man, and that he drank a good deal, are all the items in his past career known to Mr. Silva.

He had gone back and forth from his house to the chicken-coop several times during the morning without noticing the corpse under the apple tree, and it was not until Mr. Silva started for the train that he looked back and saw a man apparently kneeling under a tree. He turned and found it was Adam, with a clothes-line around his neck, and fastened to a limb of a tree, the body partly resting on the toes, and the clenched hands almost touching the ground. He had probably hanged himself during the night, as the body was cold and rigid.—Chicago News.

An Indian Elopement.

A St. Andrews correspondent of the St. Croix Courier writes: "The Indians at the point are intensely excited over the sudden disappearance of Horace Nicholas and his brother's wife. The latter has a dark bronze complexion, with features well defined, and is a typical Indian beauty; the former possesses no great attraction and is somewhat morose in disposition. It is a clear case of elopement, the two thinking that life could be made more enjoyable by living together. They selected a day on which the woman's husband was visiting the fishing and hunting grounds at Grand Manan. When last seen, the lovers were plying their birch canoe in the direction of Pleasant Point. It is said that they have pitched their tent there, and propose remaining as long as they possibly can do so undisturbed."

Initials by Telephone.

All people who have occasion to telephone names have had great difficulty in making initials understood. B, C, D, E, G, P, T and V sound so much alike that to distinguish between them is almost impossible, and M and N also sound very similar. A system used with very satisfactory results, when the person at the other end of the wire has understood it, is to give a word beginning with the letter that is the initial in question. For instance, suppose the name is B. P. Smith. A score or more of other combinations have almost the same sound, but if the sender says: "B. P. Smith; B for butter and P for pepper; B. P. Smith," there is no difficulty in understanding.—New Haven Palladium.

TWINS LIFT A DEBT.

A Fortunate Mother Wipes Out a Mortgage.

"If you make up the even two dozen children by next year I will lift the mortgage off the farm," said the owner of a piece of land in Montgomery county, a short distance from Pottstown, to Mrs. Nader, the mother of twenty-two children, as she was rocking the twenty-second child in a cradle upon the occasion of his visit. The man meant his offer as a joke—but——

The next year the owner was on hand promptly to collect the interest, when to his surprise the proud mother motioned him to the cradle, and lifting the coverlet, showed him fine twins, which completed the two dozen. There was nothing to do but grin and bear it. The owner lifted the mortgage, and said he believed in protecting home industry.

Mrs. Gilbert, who formerly lived at Franklin street and Fairmount avenue, proudly told her friends that she was the mother of twenty-two children, all in good health, and Mrs. Osler, who lives near the Market street ferry in Camden, is famed far and near as the maternal proprietor of nearly a quarter of a hundred children, and says she will live long enough to see each one of her twenty-three offspring the happy parent of a third generation of Oslers, who are well represented in the city across the Delaware.

A happy attendant at the games of the canny Scots at Gloucester yesterday was a mother from the land of thistles who kept her eye on the lively movements of fifteen young Scots who danced the Highland Fling to the music of three bagpipes.

At one of the largest hotels in Atlantic City last week there stopped a fine-looking old man of some 90 years, now a retired merchant. He has been married three times in nearly the century of his life, and he had eighteen children by his first wife, six by a second and four by the third, making a total of twenty-eight. The oldest of this young colony is 70 years of age and the youngest 16. The old gentleman is hearty and happy, and takes his daily bath in the surf with as much gusto as his 30-year-old grandson and his 8-year-old great-granddaughter. — Philadelphia Record.

THE END OF THE CHAPTER.

Albert E. Krahe, Arrested in Montreal for Forgery, Pleads Guilty and is Sentenced.

Albert E. Krahe, who forged a cheque for $2,900 on his employers, Messrs. Kilsch & Co., of New York, and who, it will be remembered, was captured in this city recently with his pretty young wife, and went back voluntarily to New York with the detectives, pleaded guilty on Wednesday before Judge Martine, of New York, and asked for mercy. Judge Martine said that for the sake of the young man's wife and mother, who were in court, he would give him a chance to reform, and sentenced him to the Elmira Reformatory. It will be remembered that Krahe confessed his crime while in Montreal and also stated that his infatuation for his young wife, whom he wished to load with handsome presents, had led him to make out a cheque on the firm of which he was cashier, of $2,900 instead of $900 with which to pay the employees.—Montreal Gazette.

How Many Stars are There in Sight?

The total number of stars one can see will depend very largely upon the clearness of the atmosphere and the keenness of the eye. There are in the whole celestial sphere about 6,000 stars visible to an ordinarily good eye. Of these, however, we can never see more than a fraction at any one time because a half of the sphere is always below the horizon. If we could see a star in the horizon as easily as in the zenith, a half of the whole number, or about 3,000, would be visible on any clear night. But stars near the horizon are seen through so great a thickness of atmosphere as greatly to obscure their light, and only the brightest ones can there be seen. As a result of this obscuration it is not likely that more than 2,000 stars can ever be taken in at a single view by an ordinary eye. About 2,000 other stars are so near the South Pole that they never rise in our latitudes. Hence, out of 6,000 supposed to be visible, only 4,000 ever come within the range of our vision unless we make a journey towards the equator.—Century Magazine.

Climate and Peculiarities of Our Pacific Coast.

(Correspondence Montreal Witness.)

At Valdey Island, south of Seymour Narrows, it rains frequently; north of that it rains generally; in Alaska it rains always, so people say. But we could not afford to lose the clouds on the mountains, and the grandeur of the humid sunsets beggars description.

At Victoria, whose twelve thousand people are buried in profound repose, are all the sweet flowers and old-time institutions of the mother country. There are hansom cabs, a few bad smells, graduated society, and ivy and daisies, apple trees, oaks, elders, sweet clover and holly, broom and bracken. Its thick green grass, and all the little nameless weeds familiar to English eyes, bring back to English people a thousand reminiscences and tender thoughts. There is dreamy quiet in Victoria. Sybarite villas and cottage gardens, delicious air, cheap fruit and few mosquitoes. It is a place to dwell in; a place in which to rest and be at peace.

A Rising Young Man.

To his fond father, who has asked him where he is in his class now: "Oh, pa, I've got a much better place than I had the last quarter." "Indeed. Well, where are you?" "I'm fourteenth." "Fourteenth, you little lazybones! You were eighth last term. Do you call that a better place?" "Yes; it's nearer the stove."

A Little Boy's Philosophy.

A little boy running struck his toe and fell on the pavement. "Never mind, my little fellow; you won't feel the pain to-morrow," said a bystander. "Then," answered the little boy, "I won't cry to-morrow."

Poluted.

A confirmed tippler remarked in the presence of his little son that at one period he didn't touch a drop for two years. "Pa," said the little fellow, "was that your first two years?"

Land of the Beautiful Dead.

I.

By the hut of the peasant where poverty weeps
And nigh to the tower of the king,
Close, close to the cradle where infancy sleeps
And joy loves to linger and sing,
Lies a garden of light full of heaven's perfume,
Where never a tear drop is shed
And the rose and the lily are ever in bloom—
'Tis the land of the beautiful dead.

II.

Each moment of life a messenger comes
And beckons man over the way;
Through the heart sobs of women and rolling of drums,
The army of mortals obey.
Few lips that have kissed not a motionless brow,
A face from each fireside has fled,
But we know that our loved ones are watching us now
In the land of the beautiful dead

Not a charm that we knew were the boundry was crossed,
And we stood in the valley alone.
Not a trait that we prized in our darling is lost:
They have fairer and lovelier grown.
As the lilies burst forth when the shadows of night
Into bondage at dawn break are led,
So they bask in the glow by the Pillar of Light,
In the land of the beautiful dead.

O! the dead, our dead, our beautiful dead,
Are close to the heart of Eternity wed.
When the last deed is done and the last word is said
We will meet in the beautiful land of the dead.

JOHN JEROME ROONEY.

FASHIONABLE FURNITURE.

Some of the Crazes in Wood that Have Been Popular for Years.

There are many crazes in the furniture business in respect to different woods and their imitations, says the New York Graphic. For many years walnut was a wood that held absolute predomination over all other woods for furniture. But while other woods have become very popular and walnut is apparently on the decline, yet, really, walnut will always be a fashionable wood. The price will gradually increase, for the large demand is fast consuming the supply. In many States fifteen years ago the farms were enclosed with walnut rail fences, as the wood was not so valuable in those days. But in these States where walnut grows the lumber that would have been formerly cast aside with the "culls" is to-day sold for high prices. Even the small limbs of walnut trees are now sawed up into material for rungs and posts of parlor chairs. The old snarled limbs and knots of the walnut trees are sought after with avidity by buyers through the country districts, who sell them to firms that manufacture them into ornaments for antique shelves, fancy hassocks and other similar furniture. Rail fences in these districts are now a rarity in the extreme. But, as to the various woods that are used in the manufacture of furniture, maple, ash, poplar, gum and cherry comprise the list. What is known as quarter-oak is the latest craze. Quarter-oak is made by first sawing a log from end to end through the middle. Then each half sawed from end to end through the middle, thus leaving four quarters. Each quarter has only three sides, one the bulge part of the log, and the other two sides being flat and coming to a sharp edge. The boards are sawed off the sharp edge and each sawing, therefore, throws off a board wider than the one before it. Sawing the quarters of the log in this manner the lumber is beautifully cross-grained. The cross-grained lumber is worked into the finest parlor furniture at present. The wood is susceptible of a very fine polish, and the cross-grain produces an effect, made by both nature and the saw, that is far superior to the art of the most experienced grainer. But one of the prominent features still in the furniture business is the staining of woods. There are tricks in all trades, and this is the greatest one in the furniture manufactories. A very simple preparation, composed of crude oil and lampblack, is rubbed on the highly-polished surface of oak, and when it soaks into the pores of the wood the wood then takes on a dark hue. The varnish is then applied, which gives a neat finish to the wood, and this is then a fair imitation of antique oak. The common gum is often stained to represent cherry. Cherry itself is very valuable and is left in its own natural color, although it is sometimes stained to represent rosewood. Soft maple, poplar and gum are stained with preparations of burnt umber, crude oil and lampblack, to produce an imitation of mahogony. Ash has a very pretty grain that stands out prominently under color, and it can be stained to imitate red cherry. Sycamore is a wood largely used for bed-posts and it stains nicely in imitation of walnut.

A Dog on Long Sermons.

A correspondent, "A. H A.," of the London Spectator, of August 4th, writes: "During a recent journey in Canada I met with a striking instance of reason in a dog. I was staying at the Mohawk Indian Institution, Brantford, Ont. Rev. R. Ashton, Superintendent of the school, is also incumbent of the neighboring Mohawk church (the eldest Protestant church in Canada). Mr. Ashton is very fond of animals and has many pets. One of these, a black-and-tan terrier, always accompanies the ninety Indian children to church on Sunday morning. He goes to the altar rails and lies down, facing the congregation. When they rise to sing, he rises; and when they sit, he lies down. One day, shortly before my visit, a stranger-clergyman was preaching, and the sermon was longer than usual. The dog grew tired and restless, and at last a thought occurred to him, upon which he at once acted. He had observed that one of the elder Indian boys was accustomed to hand round a plate for alms, after which the service at once concluded. He evidently thought that if he could persuade this boy to take up the collection the sermon must naturally end. He ran down to the back seat occupied by the boy, seated himself in the aisle and gazed steadfastly in the boy's face. Finding that no notice was taken, he sat up and 'begged' persistently for some time, to Mr. Ashton's great amusement. Finally, as this also failed, the dog put his nose under the lad's knee and tried with all his strength to force him out of his place, continuing this at intervals till the sermon was concluded. Did not this prove a distinct power of consecutive reasoning?"

Wall street has just lost one of her most daring speculative leaders, Charles A. Johnes, who in the last few years has made over $2,000,000 in the stock market, breaking down his health utterly in the strain and excitement involved therein.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE greatest woman in the world died last Monday. She was a Nova Scotian, her maiden name was Anna Swan, and she was the wife of Capt. Bates, the Kentucky giant. Her actual height was 7 feet 9 inches, and her weight 325 pounds. She had been exhibited all over the world, yet she was as modest and retiring as a woman of her size could be. She had one child, but it died in infancy.

AN interesting experiment was recently made by a Dr. Durand in reference to the relative power of imagination in the two sexes. He gave to 100 of his hospital patients a dose of sweetened water, and shortly afterwards entered the room, apparently greatly agitated, saying he had by mistake administered a powerful emetic. In a few minutes four-fifths of the subjects were affected by the supposed emetic, and were mainly men, while every one of those not affected were women.

WHETHER or no there exists some mysterious connection between camp meetings and rain, the fact remains that the weather during their continuance is generally of a decidedly moist character. This year has been no exception to the rule; but instead of dampening the enthusiasm of the dwellers in tents it appears to have added to it. The camp-meeting, amid all other changes, is likely always to remain as a distinctive feature of Methodism, valuable for the physical rest which it affords and for the friendly associations which it engenders.

THOSE who deprecate the principles on which the opposition of organized charity to indiscriminate alms giving is based would have their eyes opened could they read the details of a case in one of the courts of New York this week. A lame woman who was imported by one Greenfield as his capital in a begging venture, sued him for the recovery of $235, being a balance of $300 she had deposited with him during her twenty-six weeks' operations less board at the rate of $2 50 a week. She gained the suit with interest and costs and once more illustrated the profitableness of begging.

EIGHT big ocean steamers are being built for the trans-Atlantic lines, and some sharp contests of speed are expected when they are floated, for all are being built with a view to lowering the record. The Guion line has on the stocks what will be the biggest vessel afloat—not including, of course, the Great Eastern, which is to be broken. She will be 11,500 tons. Sir William Pierce, who designed the Oregon, Alaska, Umbria and Etruria, is her designer, and he says she will cross the ocean in five days. Her length will be 560 feet, breadth of beam 63 feet and depth of hold 53 feet. Several striking departures will be made in her construction.

THE Duke of Marlborough has recognized the force of the point that his New York marriage with Mrs. Hammersley was of very doubtful validity and has had another ceremony performed in England. This removes all doubt in the matter, as there can be no question as to the validity of the English marriage. The Duke's experience should be a lesson to every divorced defendant who may want to go to New York to get married. The New York law prohibits a person against whom a decree of divorce has been granted for his or her marital infidelity from marrying again during the lifetime of the complainant without leave of the court.

UNITED STATES Consul Leoning, of Bremen, reports the arrival in that port of some tobacco grown in the German colony of Cameroon, in Africa. It is the product of a first crop, and is regarded as fully equal, if not superior, to Sumatra leaf. The price paid in Bremen for this tobacco was 50 cents per pound. Similar grades of Sumatra sell for 88 cents to 95 cents per pound. Quite a boom in this tobacco is now being experienced in Bremen. Companies are being formed and capital is being liberally invested in its cultivation. It is expected to compete sharply with Sumatra, being of quality equal to the Dutch product and much cheaper.

A TELEGRAM from Pittsburg to the New York Times says that a "prominent local mining engineer and coal expert thinks natural gas is giving out." He says: "Within two years at furthest coal lands will be selling for what they were considered worth before natural gas was thought of. This will be due largely to the failure of the gas fields to supply the demands made upon them. Gas, like oil, will in time exhaust itself. New fields may be opened, but, taking all in all, I think the outlook for coal was never so bright since natural gas came in use." Similar predictions were made concerning the petroleum supply twenty years ago.

THE marriage of Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, last week, to Agnata Ramsay, daughter of Sir John Ramsay, has created extraordinary interest on account of the remarkable university career of the bride. Both bride and bridegroom enjoy the distinction of being seniors in classics, a coincidence without parallel. Dr. Butler is a man of high academical distinction and extremely popular. One of the bridesmaids was a fellow student of the bride at Newnham College; she wore spectacles, giving her a curious appearance. Dr. Butler is 55 years of age and the bride 23. He presented her appropriately enough with finely bound copies of Plato, Sophocles and Dante.

THE old proverb, "Better late than never," has just been illustrated by a striking instance. Ninety-seven years ago some person, now unknown by name, posted in Paris a number of the Gazette Universelle, directing it to "Monsieur X——, in Morges, Switzerland," but the newspaper did not arrive at its destination until last week. It appears that the Gazette, which had been waiting for delivery ever since January, 1791, had got mixed up with a bundle of other newspapers, and was found with its cover and address still intact amidst a heap of rubbish in a garret. The finder conscientiously sent it to the Morges postmaster, by whom it was as conscientiously forwarded to the present representative X—family still living at Morges. So unique a specimen of postal integrity deserves to be exhibited in a postal museum, or would not be out of place amongst the curiosities in the Newspaper Museum at Aachen.

NO ONE can accurately estimate the damage which has been done, especially in recent years, by bush fires. These are all accidentally started; that is they have developed, unexpectedly, from smaller fires. The persons setting them out, however, have exhibited a criminal carelessness. The owners of valuable river property are found fault with because they discriminate as to whom they will allow to camp upon it, but the fault-finders would be less given to severe criticism were they aware of all the anxiety and worry the campers have caused. A few days ago, says a Kingston paper, tourists were refused a landing at one man's wharf, and on the same day a fire was started in his bush. Before it was checked it had burned over a considerable territory. That was not the first experience of the kind which the landlord had had, and he is to be excused if he curtly warns every camper henceforth to go elsewhere with his fires Later, another property owner, near to the same place, had most of his hay burned up, and the scarcity of fodder makes the loss a serious one.

MCKEE RANKIN writes to the Chicago Times that the late Bartley Campbell had nothing to do with "The Danites." It was dramatized from Joaquin Miller's sketch, "The First Families of the Sierras," by P. A. Fitzgerald, of Philadelphia, an old acter, to whom Rankin paid $25 an act for the work as fast as it was done. The play, under the title of "Poor Little Billie Piper," was first read to Joaquin Miller in the summer of 1876, Rankin says, and to Bartley Campbell in the following winter. Rankin adds: "This P. A. Fitzgerald was considered an unlucky man, and I was certain that managers would never listen to a play written by him; so I hired Miller to father the work and paid him $5,200 for the fraud." This is a fair illustration of many happenings in the Grub street literary line. The stage carpenter who sawed out the play got $200, the literary charlatan who lent it his name got 25 times as much, and the actor of it probably doubled the last named sum at least twenty times. And Bartley Campbell and Louis Aldrich got the hint of that profitable piece of theatrical joinery out of poor Fitzgerald's work to boot.

PROBABLY the most aggravating passenger the street car drivers have to deal with is the able-bodied man who pulls the bell and then proceeds to alight before the car stops. Of course the driver obeys the signal and then looks round for his passenger to alight. Nobody stirs, and on further investigation he sees the person who rang the bell across the street, unconscious of or indifferent to the fact that he has caused the driver and horses unnecessary labor and the passengers unnecessary delay. Of course, if a passenger wishes to do so it is his privilege to pull the bell rope, and nobody will complain. But in that case let him keep his seat until the car stops and then get off. But if he proposes to leave the car while it is in motion why does he ring the bell? There are many citizens who never think of stopping a street car to get on or off if they are alone and unencumbered by baggage. No one should try it, however, who hasn't learned to jump with the car, a precaution that is sometimes neglected by people old enough to know better and who are very much surprised on stepping off the wrong way to find themselves lying flat on their backs in the streets.

In a recent report to the English Education department Sir James Chrichten Browne, M. D., gave it as the result of his investigation of alleged over-pressure of work in elementary schools that "the seeds of disease are being sown broadcast by the schoolmaster." He found that suicide, insanity, and many diseases of the heart and the kidneys are increasing in England year by year; and he expressed the opinion that "the main cause of this increase is over-pressure in elementary schools." This is a startling judgment of high authority on a subject of strictly vital interest, and we have no reason to question its truth. To force the unformed and reluctant brain to tasks beyond its normal power is far more cruel than to overtask the muscular system by excessive physical work. In the latter the body soon reaches its maximum of possibility and there stops, with a stunted growth, a premature development, and an enfeebled system as its consequence. In the former there is an excited condition of the nerves, a permanent damage to the brain, and a deterioration of all the vital functions which depend upon the brain. There are many small graves where children lie buried who might have lived the allotted span of human life but for the baneful haste and ambition of indiscreet parents. There are many schools which are worse than slaughter-houses.

A Self-Sacrificing Host.

At one of the country hotels, after the fourth or fifth execrable meal, I determined to speak to the landlord. He was a mild-mannered man, and I beckoned him out behind the house and began with:

"Say, do you realize that you are keeping one of the poorest, meanest hotels in all Tennessee?"

"Why, no!" he exclaimed in great surprise.

"You have the poorest beds I ever slept in, and I've slept in a hog-pen once or twice."

"You don't say?"

"Your cook ought to be killed with a club, and your cross-eyed waiter should have been in the grave long ago."

"Well, well."

"How you have managed to get along and keep the place beats me. I don't want to be mean, but I want to ask you if you can't improve things a little?"

"I can, and I'll cheerfully do it, sir."

"It's for your benefit to please your guests, of course?"

"Of course it is, and I'm bound to do it. I'll make an improvement in less than half an hour."

In about 20 minutes he came around to me on the veranda, smiling and rubbing his hands, and said:

"Well, I've made it. I've cut the cook's wages down a dollar a month and swapped that cross-eyed nigger waiter off for a lame wench! Bet your life things have got to go different here, if it costs every cent I take in. Can you suggest anything else?"—Detroit Free Press.

The Sisters of the Ursuline Convent, Chatham, have obtained from Bishop Walsh permission to found a convent school at Wyoming, to be conducted as a branch of the Ursuline Academy.

FAMOUS HORSES KILLED.

Some of the Notable Animals Lost in the Corning Smash-Up.

Quite a stir was caused in sporting circles by the news of the fatal accident to the valuable horses owned by the firm of Langtry & Gebhard. Ten horses, of the aggregate value of $100,000, were killed in the collision at Corning. The horses were shipped on Sunday afternoon by the Wells-Fargo express, at the owner's risk, the company being released from all liability. The car was expressly fitted up for their occupancy and was to go directly to Englewood, Ill., where the horses were to be given a three days' rest. The horses owned by Mrs. Langtry were St. Saviour, Pauline and two black tandem horses. Pauline was a French thoroughbred and had been the property of Mrs. Langtry for several years. An oil painting of the intelligent-looking animal is hung conspicuously in the drawing-room of her Twenty-third street home. Orphan Boy, one of those killed, was a trained polo horse and had been seen often at the Newport meets. Mrs. Langtry's five-hundred-dollar white English bulldog, together with several young terriers, were also sent with the horses. The bulldog, curiously enough, refused accommodations in the car and insisted on accompanying the fireman in the cab. The dog could not be induced to leave his new friend's side and was crushed beneath the engine, while the fireman was frightfully scalded. The trainmen who came into the Erie depot from the west yesterday told interesting stories of the peculiar actions of the knowing dog and the attention he attracted along the line. When the train was in motion he occupied the fireman's bench and lay with his head on his paws, gazing ahead through the open cab window. Neither the tooting whistle nor the clanging bell disturbed his repose. At the several stopping stations he jumped down and ran about, but when whistled to before the train started he would leap into the engine and resume his watchful position. The dog was a great pet of Mrs. Langtry.

Mrs. Langtry, Mr. Gebhard and a party of friends were to leave to-morrow in the "Lily's" special drawing-room car for her farm in St Helena, Cal., but at a late hour yesterday a telegram from Long Branch was received at the Twenty-third street home directing that the arrangements be delayed. It is thought by friends of Mr. Gebhard that he took the precaution of insuring his horses. The loss of the horses named does not by any means exhaust his stock of racing material. He has several fast ones left, all of which have been entered in Monmouth Park races this season. Among these may be mentioned the bay filly Sweetheart, by Spendthrift, the black 3 year-old filly Her Ladyship, bay gelding Volunteer, by Mortimer, and a chestnut gelding by Owas.

Mr. Buck, editor of the Spirit of the Times, received a despatch from Mr. Gebhard yesterday morning informing him that he was going to the scene of the accident at once, and asked him to have everything in readiness for the care and comfort of Mr. Aby if it was found possible to remove him to this city.

Of the horses in Mr. Gebhard's lot the four best known were Echo, Helvet, St. Savior and Palanca.—N. Y. World.

THE LILY AT THE WRECK

Discourteously Treated by Port Jervis Hoodlums Mrs Langtry Washing an Injured Woman's Hair An Errand of Mercy.

Fred. Gebhard, his cousin [illegible] Blanc, Mrs. Lily Langtry [illegible] re, Mr. Gebhard's valet, and the [illegible] of the party, have come a[illegible] gon[illegible] says Wednesday's Port Jervis [illegible] They arrived in the handsome palace coach La Lee, owned by Mrs Langtry, on Tuesday morning, and although they originally intended to return the same night, they concluded to wait until noon to-day. This was done in order that they might take with them Mr. C. W. Aby, the superintendent of Mr. Gebhard's California stock farm, who was so badly injured in the wreck at Shohola last Sunday night. Mr. Aby is suffering from a compound fracture of the arm, a severe cut in his wrist, and several bad bruises on his back. He was able to walk to the car, which was switched in front of the Delaware House, and will, no doubt, have a pleasant journey to Jersey City in one of the finest palace cars in the country.

To the discredit of Port Jervis hoodlums, and also some older but equally ignorant people, we must confess that the Langtry party were used most discourteously. Coming here on a mission of mercy—to care for their injured employees they were intruded upon in a most outrageous manner. Their car was switched near the Germantown crossing for the night, and the occupants hoped to obtain a much needed night's rest. Instead of that the car was surrounded by a gang of women, men and boys, who insisted on climbing on the platforms, and even went so far as to throw stones and lighted matches through the open, but lace curtained windows. In addition the most vile language was indulged in, until finally the party were compelled to walk down town and take quarters in the Delaware House until their car could be brought down to the centre of the yard where police protection could be obtained.

The goodness of Mrs. Langtry's heart was exhibited by her travelling so far, unsolicited, and by her subsequent conduct in visiting nearly all the injured. This morning, hearing that Mrs. Sarah Slater, one of the injured, was liable to lose a portion of her beautiful head of hair, by reason of the scalp wound she received, and which was filled with matted blood, glass, etc., she spent upwards of an hour in washing and combing it out. This was another act of kindness, and one rarely exhibited by women worth $250,000 in their own right. All who came in contact with Mrs. Langtry acknowledge that she is a most accomplished and courteous lady.

A Necessary Precaution.

A Pittsburg hostess promises in the near future the latest "fad," a Babylonian tea—that is, a tea on the housetop. There should be a balustrade erected for the convenience of the gentlemen who take their "tea" cold.—Pittsburg Post.

It seems strange that though the wheel of a steamboat may be kept going continuously, it only works in its turn.

NEARLY BURIED THE WRONG BOY.

An Extraordinary Case of Mistaken Identity in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn came to the front yesterday with an extraordinary case of mistaken identity. On Thursday last the nude body of a boy was picked up in Buttermilk Channel by Captain Lewis, of the tug W. H. Howie, and taken to the foot of Conover street, whence it was removed to the morgue.

Philip Ulrich, a Glen Island policeman, of No. 567 Baltic street, missed his son John, aged 11 years, who had gone to visit his grandmother on July 30th and had not returned on the day when the body was found. He gave a description of the missing child to the police on August 7th, and on Thursday evening was informed by them of the finding of the body and its removal to the morgue. He at once visited that institution and made a careful examination of the body. It had been so long in the water that decomposition had set in, but Mr. Ulrich was convinced by certain marks on the face and breast that it was that of his son.

From the morgue Mr. Ulrich went home, stopping on his way at an undertaker's and instructing him to prepare for the burial of the remains. When he reached his house he told his wife that he had identified their son in the morgue, and they mourned their loss together.

Early yesterday morning Mr. Ulrich called upon Mrs. John Bulkley, his mother-in-law, at No. 59 Amity street, with whom he is not on friendly terms, as she was bitterly opposed to his marriage with her daughter, and told her of the news.

"Your boy is not dead," said Mrs. Bulkley, emphatically, when Ulrich had finished his sad story.

"He is!" exclaimed Mr. Ulrich; "I have seen his dead body!"

But the old lady was [illegible] and though she was reduced for a time to tell all she knew still persisted that the child was alive. Finally she asserted that he was at St. John's Orphan Asylum, St. Mark's and Albany avenues, Brooklyn.

Now it was Mr. Ulrich's turn to be incredulous, and he insisted upon Mrs. Bulkley's coming with him to the morgue and seeing for herself whether the story he had told was true. She was so persistent in her refusal to go to the morgue and so emphatic in her assertion that the boy was in the asylum that Mr. Ulrich at length decided to postpone his visit to the morgue and go to that institution.

When he reached the asylum and asked for his son the little fellow was brought to him. He was in the best of health and spirits, and Mr. Ulrich's relief at seeing him alive and well was beyond expression. "Johnnie" said his grandmother had induced him to go to the asylum with her and had left him there.

With a lightened heart Mr. Ulrich returned to his home, taking the boy with him. Last night, when questioned as to the motive of his mother-in-law in placing his son in the asylum, he said:

"The Mother Superior told me that the woman who brought the child there said that his mother was dead and his father away. The reason why Mrs. Bulkley put my boy into the asylum was that she thought my second wife did not like him. Now, the fact is the child has never been whipped or maltreated by either his stepmother or myself. There's one thing certain, and that is that I'll make it hot for Mrs. Bulkley on a charge of abduction."

The body of the drowned boy is still unidentified at the morgue, and Mr. Ulrich yesterday countermanded the order for the living boy's funeral.—N. Y. [illegible]

The Canada Thistle—How to Get Rid of Them.

Almost every one knows something about this very troublesome seed. I can remember the time when I had never seen one of them. Tho' I am not engaged in farming at present I will try to tell those who are so engaged and are troubled with this great pest how to get rid of them. Several years ago I sent an article to the [illegible] this subject, which I have good reason to know did some good. I shall now, as well as I can remember, repeat what I then said. I simply related my method and how well it succeeded. I gave two examples. I had one small field in which spring wheat entirely failed and the thistles grew up very thick and rank. I allowed them to get full size and when they were just beginning to blossom I took a skimmer plough and turned them nearly under and let them die till they completely rotted. Then I ploughed the field and sowed it with fall wheat, which yielded a magnificent crop, and we were able to bind it all without gloves. In another field there was one large patch of thistles which had troubled me for years and seemed to gain every year. I summer-fallowed that field thoroughly, using both gang and skimmer freely; the result was that we had a good crop and could harvest nearly all without gloves on that place where the thistles had been. About five years ago the thistles had accumulated in one corner of the wooded pasture where the timber had been taken off. I went down one day when rain was falling very gently, and with a scythe cut them all off. Three years ago I sold the farm. About two weeks ago, being in the neighborhood, I felt a little curiosity to go and see if the thistles had reappeared on that land to any extent, and found that very few had made their appearance after the lapse of five years. Now, I think it is quite possible and easy to write prohibition and annihilation in regard to the thistle and [illegible] of them. When they get to the full size and are then ploughed under, I think the crop is equal to a good coat of manure. As I told the readers of the Globe, in any way they can be made to pay their way. Let it be this motto of every farmer, "Keep the thistles down and cut." United we can is all important; give them no quarter and triumph is sure. E. TOWNSEND.

—Two boys were trying to jump down a few steps on the stoop of a house wherein they resided. Says John to Jim: "Can you jump down six steps?" Answer Jim: "I wouldn't risk it here. We better go to some other house. If I break my neck here in front of my house I get the licking I ever had." And off they went.

First Mormon missionary: How did you leave Baxter county, Smith, by rail? Second Mormon missionary: Yes, fence rail. And I can smell the tar yet.—Burlington Free Press.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance $1 50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, AUG. 30, 1888.

THE FISHERY TREATY.

Last week, in the American Senate, the Fishery Treaty met its doom. Whether the rejection of this treaty is merely a bid for the anti British vote by the Republican party, or whether it is a defiance of Canadian rights, appears an undecided point with many Canadian journalists, yet a large majority of them concur in the belief that it is simply a coup d'état on the part of Republicans, and that after the approaching elections the matter will be reconsidered and everything amicably adjusted. It is at least well to accept the most charitable explanation forthcoming. Still there is no doubt whatever that there are several firebrands in the American Senate who would like to see Britain and the United States once more set by the ears. They are not at all backward in making this known, and have iterated and reiterated as much time and again. One of these spread-eagle orators lately asserted that the States "licked Britain once, and she can do it again." Hot-headed, hasty, and egotistical, such men require the ruling power of master minds to modify their ardor. But there does not appear to have been any of these evenly-balanced intellects in the American Senate of late years. At least a turbid, boiling stream of fiery elocution has had free scope during the late debate, and with the result that the United States Senate has [illegible] the wrath of Britain and of the Democratic party the doom that was to end a long series of [illegible]. They say in effect by this act, "We will not have [illegible] on those terms at we [illegible] we have with [illegible] and fisheries [illegible] to [illegible] all probability it would have been in force among them to-day and worked well.

with, and it remains with Canada to decide whether the edge shall be turned against its wielders. It is thought by many that Canada will look upon it merely as a bubble upon the seething sea of political warfare now rolling around the American people, and allow it to pass on its way unheeded. It is a bad business, to say the least, and the question arises, how much of this slander, and defiance, and calumny, must Canada endure before reaching that point where forbearance ceases to be a virtue? Will it be wisdom to wink at it all, and laugh while we swallow the bitter pills, until American politics acquire a calmer and more rational phase, before we decide whether the challenge be in earnest or no? It is, at any rate, a most mortifying and humiliating position for Canadians to be placed in.

THE NECESSITY OF THE HOUR.

Flesherton needs closer railway connections. For years she has suffered the inconvenience of having her railway station placed just sufficiently far away from the village to be a continual source of irritation and annoyance. It is safe to say that this inconvenience has cost the business men of Flesherton thousands of dollars in cartage and bus fares alone, besides being a heavy drag upon the prosperity of the village itself. Some time ago our station was burned down, and has not been rebuilt. Gentlemen of Flesherton, now is your opportunity to secure the one thing necessary to the future growth and wellfare of our now prosperous village—a station within a convenient distance of its business centre. It is the company's intention to rebuild this fall, and when we are aware that they can send a company of men along, with material, etc., and rebuild within a very few days, it is obvious that there must be no delay if we are to secure this boon. It is a matter of vital importance that we secure better railway facilities. A deputation should be sent to wait upon General Manager Van Horne with a view to this end. Will our leading men move in the matter, or will they allow the present opportunity to pass away, possibly never to have another equal-

Flesherton was not hatched in an incubator, and hoisted into its present position by a speculative mamma. Its growth has been "slow and sure, but healthy, yer honor," like Pat's carbuncle. Flesherton Advance. Pat's carbuncle was lanced by a physician and its formation revealed a very morbid growth. Does the Advance carry the simile thus far?

[Dundalk Herald. Ours was lanced about fifteen years ago, Bro. Spurr, and the "morbid growth," when last heard from, was kicking up dido about twelve miles to the south of us, in the swamps of Proton. See paragraph elsewhere referring to Dundalk.

It would do you good to see those beautiful 22c Cretonnes that J. G. Anderson is selling for 13c a yard.

Died.

At the residence of her father, Meaford Road, on the 26th inst. Annie E. Buchanan, aged 22 years.

Eighteen persons were killed by a boiler explosion at Neenah, Wis., on Friday evening last.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 23 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Harvesting is the amusement of the day here now.

The recent rains have spoiled the small potatoes, but they have not damaged the large ones.

Miss Giles, who has been visiting friends around here for some time back, left for Owen Sound last Saturday.

The Rev. J. A. Ross, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Dundalk, very ably filled the pulpit of the C. M. church, here last Sabbath evening.

The tea meeting held here last Monday evening was a success financially; the evening proved satisfactory for the occasion, and the proceeds, which were about $40, went for the erection of a shed, with a lecture room above it.

Special Discount Sale of Summer Goods this week and next at M. Richardson & Co's. Call early and secure bargains.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. William Farr, formerly miller of this place, but now of Lockton, has just been paying a visit to his numerous friends and acquaintances in and around Eugenia.

As Mr. S. Hawkins was driving along Inkerman St. this morning his horses took fright and ran away. They were stopped, however, before any serious damage was done.

There was a slight frost here on Tuesday morning but crops are now so far advanced that very little damage was done, so far as present indications show.

Mr. Clemes, teacher, has returned again, looking hale and hearty after his summer vacation. Consequently school re-opened last Monday morning. Attendance about 40.

Miss. Sarah Latimer has returned to Toronto after spending a few weeks visiting her parents and friends in this vicinity.

The rocks of Eugenia are at last being utilised for building purposes. A quarry has been started near Mr. Sloan's factory for furnishing stone to construct the Boyne bridge. Quarry men pronounce the stone of superior quality, and the time may come when we shall see "The pregnant quarry teem with human form."

T. B. Gilliland, Esq., is away on a visit to the residence of his late father in the Ottawa district.

Don't forget Russell's, Flesherton, great reduction sale for the month of September.

Having a Hard Time.

Friend Fawcett, late proprietor of this paper, is having a hard time of it in Streetsville. He met with an accident the other day, and this is how he discourses about it: "On the sidewalk leading from Queen street to the C.P.R. [illegible] there is a plank, one end of which projects [illegible] six inches above the level of the other plank. Monday the [illegible] was walking rapidly along [illegible] walk when the toe of his left foot came suddenly [illegible] with the [illegible] projecting plank. His body described a half circle as he shot out [illegible], but it was not found necessary to secure the services of any of our medical men. Somebody should nail down that plank." The Streetsville Review of last week contained the farewell of Mr. Bell and salutatory of Mr. Fawcett. The latter is enlarging and otherwise improving his paper. We calculate he can do it, too, as the Yankee says. The Review will be our most interesting exchange.

R. T. of T.

Rev. Mr. Shilton, B. A., has kindly consented to preach the annual sermon to the Royal Templars on Sabbath evening the 9th prox.

Call at J. G. Anderson's and get 5 lbs. of his famous 30c uncolored Japan Tea for $1.

General News.

Fifteen lives were lost in a steamer collision on San Francisco Bay on Wednesday last.

Eight hundred workmen were drowned by an inundation in China.

Hon. Mr. Mowat returned from England on saturday.

The Manitoba Government and the Northern Pacific officials have signed the new contract.

The C. P. R. bridge across the Credit, near Meadowvale, collapsed on Saturday under a freight train, but fortunately no lives were lost.

A young man at Gananoque was killed on Saturday by being struck with a baseball.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of Wm. Elliott, Jr., Lot 12, Con. 1, Euphrasia [illegible] about July 23, four heifers (3 two years [illegible] and 1 yearling). Owner may have them by [illegible] property and paying expenses.

FISH, [illegible] UIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT, FLESHERTON.

MEDICAL HALL,

Flesherton,

To the Front

—FOR—

School Books, Writing Paper, Envelopes, Slates, Pencils, Inks.

PAINTS,

Ready mixed, cheapest in Town. Brushes, Oils, Turpentines, White Lead, and Dry Paints.

SPICES,

Whole, ground and mixed, for pickling purposes.

COFFEE

What is Coffee: Cocoa, Chocolate.

Baking Powder.

Absolutely the best in town. A present with each package.

DRUGS

Of large variety. Patent Medicines in full supply. Lime Juice, Syrups, etc.

TOILET SOAPS,

And Perfumery.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 75 to	4 75
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 50	0 55
Oats	0 15	0 45
Peas	0 60	0 60
Butter	0 15	0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 14	0 14
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 50
Pork	6 50	6 50
Hay per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	19	23
Sheepskins	0 50	1 06
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 60

Considerable damage was done to standing crops in Proton during the hail storms of last week.

A North Dakota grain dealer says that thousands of acres of wheat have been left uncut on account of damage done by frost.

A freight train on the Manitoba road ran into a herd of cattle near Fort Buford, injuring five trainmen and killing a hundred cattle.

Hon. J. S. D. Thompson, Minister of Justice, has been made a K. C. M. G.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to Collection of Notes and Accounts. Get their Notes discounted.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's Block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, Morrison's Hotel, [illegible] of each month. Teeth extracted and filled in the latest styles, the best and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST. [illegible]

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer,

Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co., and F. & L. B. & S. Society. Money to loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Farm and Town Property.

[illegible]

W. J. BELLAMY,

[illegible] CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER [illegible]

[illegible]

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES [illegible] prepared [illegible] Terms [illegible]

E. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to

GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,

Or to

J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at [illegible] P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

Notice to Contractors.

...TUESDAY, the 2... day of October...

... Secretary.

...t of Railways and Canals...

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for the St. Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE 23rd DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal. And for the deepening and enlargement of the summit level of the Cornwall Canal. The construction of a new lock at each of the three interior lock stations on the Cornwall Canal between the town of Cornwall and Maple Grove; the deepening and widening of the channel-way of the canal; construction of bridges, etc.

A map of each of the localities, together with plans and specifications of the respective works, can be seen on and after TUESDAY, THE 11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, at this office, for all the works, and for the respective works at the following mentioned places:

For the works at Galops, at the Lock-keeper's house, Galops. For deepening the summit level of the Cornwall Canal at Dickenson's Landing; and for the new locks, etc., at lock stations Nos. 18, 19 and 20 at the Town of Cornwall. Printed forms of tender can be obtained for the respective works at the places mentioned.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

... to the bushel and average 2... to the acre. He was paid 95 cents per bushel for it at the mill.—[Durham Chronicle.

During the heavy storm on Friday evening last Mr. Edward Martin's barn, on lot 31, con. 5, Mono, was struck by lightning and entirely consumed, with all its contents. The barn contained... hay and fall wheat, one team of horses, a mare and a colt, seeder, waggons, etc., and a new set of harness used for the first time that day.—[Shelburne Free Press.

The antiquarians of Amaranth have something to study over just now. Mr. W. B. Jelly, reeve of Amaranth, has discovered part of the remains of some huge animal that existed in prehistoric times. There is a low place in a swamp on Mr. Jelly's farm which holds water during the greater part of the year, and was found very convenient for watering cattle. In the summer months it dries up. A few days ago Mr. Jelly and his sons attempted to clean the place out. After digging through the black muck they came to sand filled with all kinds of shells similar to those to be seen on the beach of any of our large lakes. When they had dug about five feet they found four large ribs of some animal now extinct. The ribs are over four feet in length and, from appearances, have been longer. The circumference of each rib in its smallest part is six inches. Shortly after they discovered the ribs they struck a small spring and the hole filled with water, which prevented them from prosecuting their search any farther.—[Shelburne Free Press.

Our readers will remember that some little time ago we noticed the discovery of material at Shallow Lake, Keppel, by Mr. R. J. Doyle, having all the necessary ingredients for making a high grade of Portland cement. Satisfied that the deposit was of great value, a company was organized, and test kilns erected for burning the material. We are informed that Wm. Robinson, Esq., civil engineer, of this town, is now in England arranging for the purchase of the most improved machinery for manufacturing Portland cement from the deposit of carbonate of lime and clay at Shallow Lake. Mr. Doyle received a letter from him this week, which says that he is having the cement thoroughly tested by English engineers, who are greatly surprised at its great strength. The English Government standard for tensile strength of cements ... Mr. D...

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The garden party in connection with the Methodist parsonage, on Thursday evening last, came off in the usual satisfactory manner. Amusements and recreatives for all were indulged in until a late hour. The Flesherton Brass Band, although a little late in putting in an appearance, added much to the enjoyment of the evening. The Ladies who had the matter mostly in hand provided largely of the good things to satisfy the appetite, of which there was enough and to spare. And to consume the remainder a social was held on Monday evening, and with the pomised String Band passed another pleasant evening. Total proceeds, about $50.

Harvesting has commenced in earnest, and the sound of the reapers and binders can be heard in all directions, but many complaints are made of the short straw.

A meeting of the newly formed Farmers Institute was announced for Saturday evening last, but the members failed to put in an appearance. Surely they do not intend letting it die so young.

The Drunkard's Grave.

... of Winnipeg and was read at last week's meeting of the Sons of Temperance from The ...

Tune — The Lone Pilgrim.

... marked by a stone,
And ... will be at the last judgement
... before the white throne.

...

You can get a Fine English Straw Hat for 1... a Superfine for 5c more, at M. Richardson & Co's Discount Sale of straw goods this week.

Address to Rev. Mr. Wilson.

... Rev. A. Wilson at the manse, Markdale, arrived ... last week.

Rev. A. Wilson:

Dear Sir,—On behalf of your many warm friends and admirers in this locality, we avail ourselves of this favorable opportunity, on the eve of your departure from amongst us, of signifying our appreciation of your faithful and untiring efforts in the discharge of your christian duty whilst laboring in this field. We acknowledge with pride and pleasure your fearless and faithful devotion to duty, whether in the pulpit, on the platform or in private life; and the many useful lessons of instruction given by you we feel assured are now bearing fruit, and will continue to ameliorate and elevate humanity long after you have ceased to be an active worker in the Master's vineyard. We also join in acknowledgement of the many estimable qualities of your amiable and devoted wife, Mrs. Wilson, for whom with yourself we shall always entertain the highest regard. We earnestly hope that the new field upon which you are entering, and the christian charge you are assuming, may appreciate and enjoy your ministerial and social labors and be benefitted as much thereby as those you are now leaving. We sincerely wish you God speed in your many arduous duties as a christian minister, and will always watch with pleasure your future success in the divine life. As an additional mark of the esteem in which you are held, we respectfully ask you to accept this ...

Signed ...
Wm. W...
Thos. K...

Martyrs to Headache

...

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes ... W. DeV..., ... Brooklyn, N. Y., "I had ... able headaches. I commenced ... of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A... st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykens, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

FLESHERTON Implement Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broadcast Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Rakes,
Waggons,	Iron Harrows,
Buggies,	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Sleighs,
Cutters,	Plows,
Fanning Mills,	Scufflers,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,	Turnip Drills,
	Land Rollers.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New Fonthill Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

... in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

... FRAMES and MOULDINGS ... the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT ... wherever introduced. SAMPLES ... particulars as to Price, Style ...

MRS. BULMER.

HEARD'S Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON.

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Waggons, Lumber Waggons and ... Harrows. ... Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing ...

THIS SILVER-PLATED INSTRUMENT

Can be used by any member of the family from Infancy to Old Age with perfect safety.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age.

Price - - $3.

ORIENTAL

CATARRH IMPOSSIBLE UNDER ITS INFLUENCE

The only catarrh remedy ever offered to the public on 15 days trial; a written guarantee given with each instrument. W. T. Baer & Co., 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

ACTINA

THE GREAT EYE AND LUNG RESTORER

Actina is not a medicine or a disgusting lotion or powder ball, but a Self-generating Vapor, easily and pleasantly applied at all hours, times and places.

Actina No. 2.—Quickly relieves and thoroughly cures all Throat and Lung diseases.

Actina No. 3.—Positively cures all diseases of the Eye. Cataract, Granulated Lids, Inflamed Eyes, near and far sightedness. This Eye ...

This Actina is sold under our written guarantee on 15 days trial. ... W. T. Baer & Co., 155 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ont.

MEDICATED ELECTRIC BELT

Medicated for all diseases of the blood and nervous system. Ladies' Belt $... Men's Belt $5 ...

CURES

The only appliances giving a direct current of Electricity to the parts. ... Hundreds of Testimonials on ...

Cures Guaranteed

Medicated Electric Belt Co., 155 Queen St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A Painless Cure

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous ... weakness, ...

Symptoms for which No. 8 should be Used.—Want of energy, ... want of ... aversion to society, want of confidence, ... inability to fix the attention ... depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, ... loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse ... barrenness, palpitation of the heart, ... disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible ... In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

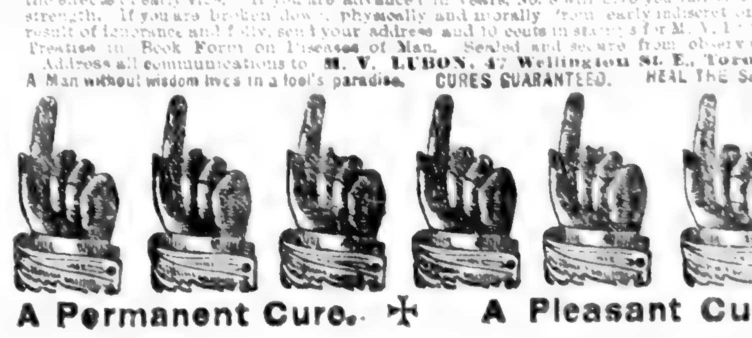
A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

A Country Idyl.

"Oh, let me leave the city's heat,
  Its fripperies and formalities,
And place once more my tired feet
  On nature's actualities.
I'll turn from fashion's mimic train,
Its aping arts, its high disdain,
And bathe my tired heart and brain
  In primitive realities."

He turned from "fashion's mimic train,"
  And sought the calm rusticity
Of field and forest, lake and plain,
  Disburdened of publicity.
But horse flies marked him for their prey,
And down his backbone day by day
The caterpillar wound his way
  In sinuous eccentricity.

And when beneath some arbor snug
  He'd lie in thoughtful revelry,
The bumble-bee and tumble-bug
  Would come with fiendish devilry,
With daddy longlegs run a race,
And march in military pace
Across his bleared and blistered face,
  In wild, tumultuous revelry.

And while the still breeze from the south
  Lapped him in dreams elysian,
The gay green frog leaped in his mouth
  With acrobat precision;
The woodchuck nimbled at his nose,
The weasel chewed up both his hose,
The snake crawled thro' his underclo'es
  In wandering indecision.

He lay there in the valley green,
  The city's strain to calm off,
And the farmer with his mowing machine
  Then mowed his outstretched arm off.
And then he rose with murderous will
And roamed the earth and vowed to kill
All poets who with fiendish skill
  Such pastoral lies could palm off.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

"Then you must forgive her," she said, averting her eyes from his face, with a little pang at her heart when she saw the pain there. "I have forgiven her; but"—he paused, and his strong fingers pulled nervously at his mustache; then he went on rapidly—"I care for her far too much to keep up a show of resentment against her; still I am not at all sure that it would not be wiser to go away and never see her again."

"Why?" Shirley asked.

"Because—because I can hardly think she cares for me when she doubted me on such slight grounds, Lady Glynn."

Shirley glanced at him: there was no mistaking the pain on his face; and she felt sorry that a girl who had been fortunate enough to win such a love as his should have been weak enough to doubt it, and so raise doubt in his own mind.

"You must not say the grounds were slight," she said earnestly. "Most women,' I think, would have been vexed and pained and you must not think that, because she had not perfect faith, she has not perfect love. Girls are different from men, you know; they want constant assurance of the love they inspire, and you must try to forget her jealousy in love."

"That is love's curse," he answered, smiling, but his face was brighter for the earnest words she had spoken; and the pain he had felt at the want of faith in him which pretty Rosie Venn had shown was almost removed.

Presently the sound of wheels rapidly approaching the house made Madge start up with a quick joyful exclamation. Shirley too rose to her feet; but her knees trembled, and she was forced to sit down again while she tried to appear composed and to quell the nervous agitation which seized her. Madge flew out into the hall, and Mr. Litton followed, for he feared that he might be needed in his professional capacity if Sir Hugh had returned with his friends.

Soon the room door opened and Sir Frederic Oliphant entered, going over to Shirley with outstretched hands and very troubled eyes; and, as she looked up at him, her own were very dim.

"My poor child," he said, gently, "they would not accept bail! We did our best."

"I am sure of that," she said gently, and turned away from him for a moment in silence. "How did he bear it?" she asked steadily then, looking at him with brave steadfast eyes.

"Well and bravely," he answered warmly. "There was a sad dignity about him which disarmed even those who were inclined to be bitter against him."

"I am glad to know that," she said. "Will they let me see him?"

"Yes; if your are well enough and equal to it, you may see him to-morrow."

"Thank you, I shall be well enough. And Guy!"

"Guy remained at Adinbrooke; he wished to be near Sir Hugh."

"That is like Guy," she said softly; and during the rest of the day she was very quiet.

CHAPTER LI.

Punctually at 12 o'clock on the ollowing day Lady Oliphant's brougham drove through the quaint old town of Adinbrooke, and turned up the hill where the old castle stood which was now used as the county jail, and drew up at its gate. The morning was fine and clear, and, as Shirley Glynn and Lady Oliphant passed into the building, a ray of wintry sunshine fell on the younger woman's lovely face, touching it with a momentary brightness which faded as they entered the comparative darkness within. The governor, a stately, military-looking man, with a stern yet not unkindly face and a heavy iron-gray mustache, came down to meet them. He had met Lady Oliphant before, and shook hands with her in a frank friendly fashion, bowing low to Shirley as he did so, and looking at her with interested eyes as they went on together. He had heard much of her beauty and grace, and her name had been familiar to him when she had been a queen in society and feted and sought after and followed.

His face was touched with a deep compassion as he preceded the two ladies to his own private room, where Guy was waiting, looking haggard and worn and pale, as if the night had been a long and restless one.

Shirley gave him her hand in silence, and a gleam of tenderness stole into his weary eyes as they met hers, while his heart ached for her with an agony which had never ceased even for a moment. If he could have spared her any further suffering, he would gladly have done so at the cost of his own life; but this trouble nothing could lessen—pains, influence, wealth, all were alike powerless.

"I must ask you to wait a few minutes," Captain Graham said courteously. "It will not be longer, I think."

He placed chairs for them, then left them alone in his pleasant sitting-room. It was a cheerful room handsomely furnished, and windows looked over a garden which in the summer was bright and fragrant with the beauty and the smell of flowers. Lady Oliphant and Guy exchanged a few sentences as they waited; Shirley sat by the window, looking out with wistful eyes and pale parted lips. Something in the place seemed to stifle her; even in that cheerful airy room she could scarcely breathe; and Guy, without speaking, opened the window near which she sat. Her eyes glanced up at him gratefully, and then she looked out again at the dreary garden.

Presently the door opened, and a pretty golden-haired little girl came bounding in, but stopped shyly, seeing the strange ladies. Guy bent down to her and took her little hand in his. She was a daughter of Captain Graham's, whose acquaintance he had made the night before.

"Don't go away, Amy," he said, smiling. "Come, and speak to these ladies. Did you want your father?"

"Yes," she whispered shyly, shaking her curls over her face as she left her hand in his; and Shirley turned from the window at the sound of the sweet childish voice, and the stilled sensation at her heart left her as she saw the shy bright blue eyes looking at her wistfully from beneath the veil of falling yellow hair.

"Whose little girl are you?" she said softly: and the child crossed the room and put her chubby little fingers on Shirley's soft sealskin.

"Father's," she answered brightly.

"And mother's?"

"Yes; but mother has gone away, you know; the angels came and fetched her."

"Did they, darling?" Shirley's fingers were parting the wavy golden hair from the pure white brow, and her eyes, very intent and tender, were studying the child's face.

"I was sorry," the child went on, "because no one ever kissed the place and made it better, when I fell down, as she did; but father was very sorry;" and the bright face shadowed a little at the remembrance.

"And you were his little comfort?"

"Yes, who told you so—did father? He always calls me that."

Shirley lifted her on to her knee, and pressed her quivering lips to the pretty hair; and the little girl with all a child's quick instinct and pity for any one suffering, put up her arm and clasped Shirley's neck and nestled her golden head against the soft sealskin of Shirley's coat; and there was inexpressible comfort in the tight clasp and the clinging little hand.

It seemed to Shirley, as she sat there with Amy Graham nestling in her arms, that much of the darkness which had fallen upon her spirit as she entered the castle had been lifted since the child had entered the room. That anything so good, so bright, so innocent should have lived in that gloomy place was sufficient to remove half its gloom: and Amy never guessed what a little comforter in truth she had been to the beautiful lady who had clasped her so tenderly and so closely.

"You live here always, Amy?"

"Yes, always; but sometimes we go away together to the sea-side, father and me and the nurse."

"Do you like the sea-side, my dear?"

"Yes; but I like the castle best."

"You have no little brother or sister?" Shirley asked softly.

"No"—the child shook her head as it rested against Shirley, and the blue eyes grew very wistful—"I had a little brother once, but he went with mother to heaven."

"Captain Graham has seen great trouble." Lady Oliphant said, in a low voice. "He lost his young wife and little son within a few days of each other."

Shirley looked up wistfully; she was thinking, perhaps that "grief is more for the living lost than ever it is for the dead;" but she remained silent; and in a few moments Captain Graham came back, his stern face softening into a beautiful tenderness as he caught sight of the child in Lady Glynn's arms and saw the more peaceful look in the beautiful hazel eyes which met his with sudden swift inquiry.

"Sir Hugh can see you now," he said quietly. "Have you been making friends with my daughter, Lady Glynn? She is generally a little addicted to shyness."

"She was not afraid of me," Shirley said as she put the child down—and Captain Graham noticed how long and close and fond the kiss was which she pressed upon the rosy cheek—and then she followed the governor out of the room.

He led her himself down the long passages and the stone steps, thinking meanwhile that it was rare for the gloomy prison to receive such a beautiful visitant, and himself too opened the door of the cell where Sir Hugh was confined.

"I will take care that you are not disturbed," he said very gently. "And, Lady Glynn, I need hardly tell you that he is very weak, and that—"

"I will not forget," she said steadily. "I will not be less calm than I am now. Thank you, Captain Graham."

She went in softly; he closed the door after her, and Shirley was in the prison-cell with which her dreams had been haunted more than once.

It was a bare whitewashed room, scrupulously clean, and through the high barred windows a ray of wintery sunshine had struggled in and lay softly on the floor, while in the little grate a fire was burning cheerily. Sir Hugh was fully dressed, lying upon the bed with closed eyes, and he looked so haggard and attenuated and death-like that Shirley's heart almost ceased to beat with a sudden fear. Her noiseless movements, the soft unrustling velvet dress that she wore, did not attract his attention, and she was fully a minute in the room, watching him, before he saw her.

Her thoughts went back almost involuntarily to the days when she had known him first, and she saw him again as he had been then, so handsome and distinguished, so full of life and health and gayety; she remembered the New Year's-eve ball at Fairholme Court and their interview in the school-room, which had been the beginning of such misery, and it almost seemed as if she could hear again the patter of the rain against the window-panes as she had heard it then, and the moan of the wind in the leafless trees. And it was his love for her which had brought him to this grievous strait, the impulse of an undisciplined heart, which, having always received "good," could not bear to resist "evil."

The heavy lids were slowly lifted, and his eyes opened and he saw her, and over his face came a sudden brightness which gave it for a moment some of the beauty of other days. The next minute she was kneeling beside him, and his weak arms were round her, his face hidden where Amy's golden head had rested a few minutes before, and there was silence.

It was Shirley who, remembering Captain Graham's injunctions, moved first. She disengaged herself gently from his weak clasp, and put him back upon the pillows, and his eyes dwelt upon her with all the old passionate tenderness as she bent over him.

"So you have come to me, Shirley?" he said at last, while his eyes drank in the beauty of her face and his hands clasped hers closely.

"You expected me, Hugh? You knew I would come?"

"Yes, but—"

"But what, dear?"

"But I was almost sorry afterward that I had asked you. This is no place for you love."

"It is my fittest place, Hugh; and as often and as long as I can I will be with you here."

He smiled feebly.

"How pleasant it is to hear you speak in that little tone of decision," he said. "It is very pleasant to see you in that dress, Shirley."

He touched her velvet and fur with his slender fingers for a moment; and she smiled bravely into his altered face.

"I am glad," she said brightly. "But tell me of yourself, Hugh."

"Of myself, dear?" he echoed. "There is not much to tell, save that I am happier, much more at rest, than I have been during all these long months."

She stooped toward him and put her lips to his forehead.

"And you are not suffering much, Hugh?"

"No—hardly at all. And I am much stronger. Captain Graham sent me that arm-chair, Shirley: and it is only sheer laziness which makes me lie here."

He rose as he spoke, and staggering to his feet, managed with Shirley's aid, to reach the arm-chair, where he lay back exhausted even by that effort.

"I can see you better here," he said presently, smiling at her, with his pale lips quivering a little and his eyes very dim. "And I want to see as much of you as I can, my brave, generous darling. I seem to have so much to say to you, Shirley, and—and not very much time to say it in."

As she was kneeling by his side, he took her hand, and, folding it in both his, pressed it near his heart. The touch seemed to lessen the pain there, he thought, as he met the wistful eyes.

"They told you about yesterday, dear?" he asked, after a short pause.

"Yes. Was it very painful, Hugh?"

"No, my darling I think I am dead to pain now. I remember thinking once that, if you knew of my crime, the sight of the horror and repugnance in your eyes would kill me; but, when you knew it, and Guy, it seemed as if I did not care who else saw my shame. And they were all very good and patient, Shirley, although poor Guy was terribly cut up because they would not take bail."

"We were grieved at that, Hugh."

"Were you, my darling?" he said wistfully. "I think it is almost better so. I have been such a burden to you these last weeks that—"

She raised her hand to his mouth and silenced him, and he caught it and pressed it fondly to his lips.

"It is better so, Shirley," he said again. "I cannot help feeling what misery I should have saved you and Guy if I had been honest and brave enough to do what was right at first. But regrets are unavailing and useless—besides, it is too late for any atonement now."

They were silent for a space then, the eyes of both resting on the red glow of the fire, and Hugh's faint, struggling breathing alone breaking the stillness.

"Guy has been so good to me," he went on softly. "I have no words to speak of his goodness. I think the very sight of him puts life into me, Shirley. My darling, it takes so much of the pain away to think that I leave you in his care."

Weeping now, she leaned her head against his arm, and asked him tremulously and brokenly through her tears not to speak to her; there might be happiness for them yet.

"For you, yes, my best and dearest, happiness enough, I pray Heaven, to atone in some measure for the misery of the past; but Shirley, if you look forward a little, only a few short weeks, you can not but see that it will be better for me. Darling, forgive me! I did not mean to pain you. I am not worthy of one of those precious tears, and yet they make me so happy."

They were falling now thick and fast upon his fevered hand, and it seemed to Hugh Glynn that they fell upon his heart like the blessed rain from heaven upon the parched earth, bringing healing and softening and fertility where all had been dry and barren before.

"Last night, dearest child," he went on quietly—and Shirley noticed that he never called her his "wife all through these bitter days—"when I awoke all the past came before me—all my past life so selfish and worthless and useless, and all the wretchedness I made by my fatal love for you—all those years of our married life, when—"

"Ah, do not talk of them!" she entreated sadly. "I cannot think of them now without deep pain. If I had been less proud and unforgiving, if I had not cherished my anger against you, all this might never have been. Oh, Hugh, I am as guilty in the sight of heaven as you can be—ay, and more guilty, since my sin lasted for years, and yours was immediately repented of."

"Love, you had every right to hate me," he said sadly; "I had injured you past all forgiveness. But let us not talk of the past, since it so pains you. Let us talk of your future, Shirley."

She started and looked up at him.

"You know, dear child, that by the will I made soon after—after"—he hesitated a little, then went on hurriedly—"I stole you from Guy, I left what was all yours by right away from you, and now—"

But her gentle hand upon his stopped him.

"Hugh!" she said entreatingly.

"What would you say, my dearest?" he asked as he saw how her lips quivered and how the pained color rose in her face.

"Hugh—that will—do not change it—I could not—"

There was no need to finish the sentence; he understood her, and a flush of shame rose to his hollow cheek.

"I see, my dear," he said, after a long silence. "I will not urge you then. Tell me about your brother," he went on presently. "Will he ever forgive me all the misery I brought on his sister?"

"He thinks that he was more the cause of that misery than you, Hugh," she answered gently. "But you are very weary, dear. Will you let me read to you now?"

"Yes, presently. Do you ever sing now, Shirley? I have so often thought of that song you sung one day in the oak parlor at Fairholme Court. It was the day Guy proposed to you, I think, and I shall never forget your face as you sung it. Oh, my darling, soon, when you are free, you can place your hand in your king's with perfect confidence, for

"'Titled by gift of God is he,
And rich in a rarer thing than wealth!'

Does it pain you for me to talk thus, Shirley?" he continued, wistfully. "Dear, it is my only comfort now to think how your future will atone for the past."

"Let me read to you, Hugh," she pleaded earnestly.

"Presently, dear. It is so pleasant to look at the happier things in store for you. You have had bitter things long enough, poor little woman; but, if it pains you, I will think of them when I am alone. Yes, I am ready, dear, if you will read."

The Book, a worn and shabby little volume, which had taught them both many a lesson during those terrible days at Erindale, was lying on the table. Shirley drew it toward her, and turned over the leaves hesitatingly.

"Always the same chapter, Shirley," he said, with a little smile. "You know—that which tells of the son who was dead, and alive again, who was lost and found."

Steady and sweet and grave and reverent was her voice as she read those grand words which tell of a Father's infinite love and never-failing pardon—words which have brought comfort and healing to many a sinner; and, as he listened, the look of peace deepened on the haggard attentive face of Hugh Glynn, and his thin burning fingers closed over her hand.

When the reading was over, they sat for awhile silent in the dim firelit cell, their hands clasped and Sir Hugh's head resting on his wife's shoulder. The same strange sense of unreality which had been upon Shirley before was upon her now; it was all part of the same dream. Was it possible that it was Hugh Glynn, the man she had hated and despised, who was lying thus peacefully against her now, and that it was her heart which was so full of pity and compassion and tenderness? Was it his hand which clasped hers, his voice which said softly—

"Love, I am too happy! It is not right that such a wretch as I have been should know such blessedness as this! Shirley, it seems to me more than ever now that your forgiveness and Guy's are an earnest of that other forgiveness for which I hardly dare to hope."

And then again he pressed her hand passionately to his lips; in his humiliation he never sought to touch her mouth and call her by tender names, which almost broke her heart, remembering how he loved her and now he had suffered for that love.

After a time, seeing that he was very much exhausted, she induced him to rest upon the little pallet-bed again. It was approaching the time when she must leave him, she knew; and he guessed so also by the sorrowful yearning which came into her eyes.

"If I were brave enough and unselfish enough," he said huskily, "I would tell you not to come here any more, my darling; but I cannot give up entirely the comfort of seeing you. But do not come often, Shirley; this is no place for you, and—"

"Hugh," she answered steadily, "I will come, as I said, as often and for as long as they will let me."

He smiled gratefully and sadly.

"It will not be for long, dear, even at the longest," he said feebly. "Thank Heaven, oh, thank Heaven for that! Oh, Shirley, if you could know how the thought of the trial haunted me at first, how often oh, how often—I saw the crowded court, the judge, the accusing faces, the contempt of my crime and cowardice and baseness in every eye! How I used to wake at night struggling with the terror of it, and dared not go to sleep for fear of it recurring! Oh, Shirley, even now, if I dared, I would pray that the end might come before that, that I might not be judged at any earthly tribunal, but by that Judge who is more merciful than any earthly judge!"

And Shirley, as she bent over him trying to soothe the agony of terror which had seized him, in her heart echoed his prayer.

CHAPTER LII.

Three weeks went by. Sir Hugh Glynn was very ill, sick unto death; and with every hour the certainty increased that he would not live to be tried for the deed he had done under the summer sky on the rocks at Easton. His illness was a complicated one, brought on partly by exposure and want, partly by remorse and misery. The exposure to the weather on that Christmas night when he had been found senseless in the snow by the woman he had wronged so deeply had aggravated the chest-complaint from which he had suffered for months; one lung was entirely gone, the other was going fast, and the end might come at any time.

Daily, almost hourly, he wasted and became weaker, and each day, when the prison door closed after Shirley, she wondered whether, when she came on the following day, he would be living to give her that fond bright smile which always came into his eyes when they rested upon her, no matter how great his suffering had been the minute before.

To the last day of her life Shirley remembered Captain Graham's kindness and consideration for her then. The circumstances of the case were strange and unusual certainly, and perhaps admitted of unusual privileges; but every care and kindness which were possible were extended to Sir Hugh in his prison-cell; and he was grateful and contrite exceedingly.

He did not suffer much, except when the terrible paroxysms of coughing recurred and the subsequent hemorrhage, and a word of complaint never passed his lips. It was often difficult to Guy Stuart, remembering the Hugh Glynn he had known in the by-gone years, to recognize him in this patient, uncomplaining, penitent sufferer. That Hugh Glynn had been so proud, so selfish, so impatient of any contradiction, so unbending, so heedless while the prisoner in Adinbrooke Jail was so unselfish, so tender over others, so repentant and gentle, that he won sympathy from all with whom he was brought in contact.

Shirley saw him daily for a short time. Sometimes he was well enough to talk to her, at others he was able only to lie with her hands in his, and his eyes resting with undying love and tenderness on her face. Sometimes he would ask her to read to him—always those same blessed merciful, divinely beautiful lines which comforted him as nothing else could. Sometimes his mind wandered a little from very weakness, and he would murmur disconnected and broken words which told them much of what he had suffered and borne in the past; but often, when he was in this condition, the touch of Shirley's lips upon his brow and her voice speaking his name would bring him back to the present, and he would make a pathetic struggle against the unconsciousness for a few moments; when he would wander again, or sink half into a stupor, half into a sleep.

(To be continued.)

A REMARKABLE SERMON.

Archdeacon Farrar on the Religious Denominations.

Ven. Archdeacon Farrar spoke thus in the course of a sermon preached in Westminster Abbey, and in anticipation of the Lambeth Conference then about to sit:

"Perish the hand which would circumscribe by one hair's breadth the limits or the definition of the Church of Christ; perish the arms that would exclude from that one flock of the Good Shepherd the 'other sheep which are not of this fold;' perish the narrow superstition that the wind of God, which 'bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth,' can only be conveyed by mechanical transmissions. I, for one at any rate, refuse to flatter the priestly pride which would sectarianize the catholicity of the Church of Christ. The articles which I accepted at my ordination taught me that the visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men wherein the pure Word of God is preached and the sacraments duly administered, and I, for one, even if I were to stand alone, would repudiate and protest against the uncatholic teaching which would pretend to do what it cannot do by unchurching any who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth.

"When I speak of the Church in general I do not mean this or that communion, under this or that organization, but I mean, in their ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands, the whole multitude of the saints of God. What! are we not to claim as full and honored members of the Church of Christ in every possibly true sense of that word because they were Moravians those holy missionaries who planted successfully

Sweet Sharon's Rose
On icy plains or in eternal snows?

Or Williams, the Apostle of Polynesia and the martyr of Erromanga, because he was a dissenter? Dr. Carey and others in India, because they were Baptists? Or Elizabeth Fry because she was a Quakeress? If there are any who think that He who died for all mankind cares mainly or chiefly for outward organization, their views of Christ are not such as I learn from Him who made keeping the commandments the essential entering into the Kingdom of Heaven. I say with Whitefield: "Do they profess repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ? If so, they are my brethren." True and unswervingly loyal in my love for the Church of England, yet I would stand bareheaded before any true saint of God, and be he Romanist or Independent, or Quaker or Presbyterian, so he be a saint of God, desiring ten thousandfold more that I may stand with him before the throne of Christ rather than with those who, though they may have had "Lord, Lord," or "The Church, the Church," forever on their lips, and have spent their lives in the endless round of outward ordinances, may yet, if their lives have been unloving and unworthy, hear those awful words, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites," and "Depart from Me, I never knew you." For it is Christ, and Christ alone, it is not episcopal government, or apostolic succession, or ancient ritual, or the orthodoxy of curiously articulated creeds; it is Christ, and Christ only, and the innocence which shines in the lives of them that truly believe in Him, which has been the strength of Christianity."

How She Got Out.

"O, papa, I was caged once," said a little girl. "When I was visiting auntie in the country last summer I went into some bushes, and after a while I found I was caught. The bushes were so thick that I couldn't get out."

"Well, how did you finally get out?"

"O," she replied, with a toss of her curly head, "I had a little hatchet and I hatched myself out."—Chicago Tribune.

This is the Worst.

Blifkin's boy, who was engaged in rubbing Dalmatian insect powder on his dog, got off this dreadful one to his mother: "How does a campaign flag differ from this insect powder?" Of course she gave it up, and the boy answered and said: "Because one is flung to the breeze and the other is brung to the fleas." He had to go to bed without his supper.

The King of Denmark will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of his reign on Nov. 15th next. Recently he learned that a subscription was being promoted among all classes of Danes to present him a magnificent jubilee gift in the shape of a country seat in Jutland. He has written a letter in which he states that when he looks upon the existing economical conditions of Denmark and sees the hard struggle for existence which his people are carrying on he feels obliged in conscience to refuse to accept any gift so costly.

Mr. T. Gallagher, Chatham township, while engaged fixing a rack-lifter the other day, slipped and fell a distance of 30 feet to the floor, escaping with a few bruises.

BOYS ON THE FARM.

Agricultural Education in the Common Schools.

THE TEXT BOOK REQUIRED.

Mr. Thomas Shaw on the Great Want of the Day.

MINISTER DRURY'S SENSIBLE IDEAS.

The twenty-eighth convention of the Ontario Teachers' Association was concluded yesterday afternoon at the Normal School, Toronto. The President, Mr. J. H. Smith, occupied the chair.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, R. McQueen, Kirkwall; Recording Secretary, R. W. Doan, Toronto; Corresponding Secretary, D. H. Hunter, Woodstock; Treasurer, W. J. Hendry, Mimico.

The President introduced to the convention Mr. Thomas Shaw, Secretary of the Central Farmers' Union, who read a paper on "Agriculture in Our Rural Schools." After complaining that agriculture was not taught in the public schools, Mr. Shaw went on to speak of the coming text-book on the subject, dealing closely with what it should contain. The following are the prominent thoughts advanced in the paper:

The reasons why agriculture has not received more attention at the hands of our educational authorities are not far to seek. It has been sought by those who need it most—the farmers. Hitherto they have been so largely absorbed with the work of removing physical obstructions on their farms, and getting bread and butter for their families, that they have not given due attention to the nature of the mental food they should get at the school. They have not clamored for the introduction of an agricultural text-book, or it would have come long ago. They have been content with bread when they could have had the butter for the asking. This Province has many thousands of Common Schools, and High Schools by the score, and these are not too many, and yet it has but one school virtually where agriculture is taught. Though the Guelph College were brimful of students, only one farmer in 1,500 could send his son there. The sons of the 1,499 must go without instruction in what is to be their future life-work, or get their instruction at home—a sweeping reflection this on the ignoble content of the farmer. Thus it is that the flower of rural communities are drafted away into the cities, that in the governing voice of the country the farmer gets a place amongst the thirty rather than the first three, and that in the social scale he is pressed tightly against the wall. We are without a text-book. Why? Book-making is a good deal of a trade. It is largely governed by the law of supply and demand. Now that farmers clamor for it, it will come. The old national series of school books come from Britain. A book adapted to the wants of Canada cannot come from Britain or any country but Canada. The soil of Canada forbids it, the climate of Canada forbids it, and the honor of Canada forbids it. It must be written by a Canadian. The reasons why the study of agriculture should be introduced into our rural schools are not far to seek. There is first its relative importance to the farmer, whose children almost exclusively fill the forms of rural schools. It is to him both meat and drink, and clothing and money. It is the steed he rides from the cradle to the grave, and the funeral car that conveys him to his last resting place. Why shouldn't he be taught this from his earliest infancy? We know of no study so well calculated to stimulate the perceptive faculties at a tender age as the study of agriculture. Then there is its relative importance to the whole community. The prosperity of every one is largely bound up with that of the farmer. The number of the spokes in every wheel of business, the number of wheels and the number of revolutions are largely determined by the success attending the operations of the farmers. About two-thirds of the population of this country are farmers. I believe they own more than two-thirds of its property, and they furnish more than two-thirds of the brains that stock the professions. The part they play in the commonwealth is nearly all in all a two-thirds' factor, and therefore they are surely entitled to a two-thirds' consideration at the hands of our educational authorities. A boy who, to the practical training he gets at home, adds sound theoretical instruction from a school text-book will beat the boy at farming who has only the first. Whatever, then, tends to improve farming should be countenanced by the whole community.

A TEXT-BOOK NECESSARY.

There is no doubt in my mind as to the best mode of introducing agriculture into our Common Schools, though I am not so clear as to all that the medium of instruction should contain. It should be introduced through means of a text-book worthy of the name. I do not in the meantime favor the erection of any additional schools of agriculture, but I do favor the wholesale utilizing of the rural schools we have for teaching agriculture. When this is done the want of departmental instruction in the higher schools will force itself upon public attention, and these for the time being will become nurseries for the Agricultural College.

WHAT IT SHOULD BE.

I do not know who the writer of that text book will be, but I can tell you, as already more than hinted, that he will be a Canadian, and I may add that his hands will bear upon him the marks of hard and honest manual toil. As to the style of this bock it will be written in the plainest Anglo-Saxon, its language so simple that a child will understand it, and in so pleasing a manner that both young and old will love to read it. It will be rather under than over scientific, bearing upon its every page the stamp of the intensely practical. The strong meat of science is rather for maturer minds, though, if finely minced, some of it is good for children. It is almost impossible to convince the average farmer of Ontario that a cattle beast, during the first year of its life, when properly fed, will gain two pounds of flesh per day on a less feed ration as readily as it will gain one pound during the third year of the same. But there will be no difficulty in convincing his boy if taken in time. It is a hopeless task to endeavor to convince the farm matrons of Ontario that their methods of making butter are defective, but their daughters may be easily convinced if taken young. These truths, simple as they are, mean millions to Ontario every year.

CONTENTS OF THE BOOK.

It will treat of the soils of Ontario—their formation, composition, and more especially the crops they are best capable of producing, hence the style of farming to which best adapted; will give the different modes of draining, and the benefits that follow when this is properly and judiciously done; also the modes of tillage most suitable to them, noting in a general way the allowances to be made for the class of farming adopted, whether mixed or special. It will treat of a rotation of crops, having a due regard to variations of soil and subsoil, the disturbing influences of climate, and the resources to which recourse must be had when this rotation is interfered with, through lack or excess of moisture, snow or frost, causing failure to one or a number of crops. The principles that underlie successful farming will be made prominent. Here we refer to adaptation of animal and plant life to locality, having reference to market facilities as well as to sustaining them in an ever increasing vigor; the proper utilization of labor and labor facilities, and the great wisdom of being forehanded in everything. It will include the wide subject of fertilizers, and the deep subject of the principles of feeding animal and plant life. The right treatment of this section will throw firebrands into the scrub stock system, and thin the ranks of land robbers, who are ruining the agriculture of our country, and it will slay the intruding weeds of Canada by the hundreds and the thousands. There will be a and insects, their habits and the best means of destroying them, with plates of the most dangerous of the intruders. The methods of destroying them must have a due regard to locality, for those almost diametrically opposite succeed best in different localities sometimes. A goodly section will treat of live stock and products, possibly of their origin, certainly of their utility, characteristics, and a summary of the principles of management.

CHAPTER ON WEEDS

FARM ARCHITECTURE.

with plans and drawings. We have good models of dwellings and outbuildings now. A description of the most suitable modes of fencing would be valuable, and so much at least of forestry as treats of windbreaks, and the trees most suitable for reforesting this country with the best modes of planting them. Horticulture will come in for its share of attention, including the useful varieties of fruits, adaptations and outlines of management, with the principles of successful gardening. The farmers' garden with a diagram will serve an excellent purpose. There might be room too for the statement of the general principles of bee-keeping, and the beautifying of home and surroundings.

THE FARMERS' DEMAND.

The farmers of this country are soon going to ask that agriculture be taken down from the shelf in our High Schools and given a place among the first three, and when they ask it it is going to be done. But it is infinitely more important to get it first into the common schools, where the masses may be reached. When these get into the fairyland region of agricultural study they will extend their explorations, which shall soon reach the higher schools, where their hunger must be ministered unto.

DEPARTMENTAL REGULATIONS.

In the general directions of the departmental regulations I find the following in reference to the use of the authorized text-book: "Special attention should be given to such points as how plants grow, and what they feed upon, how farms are beautified and cultivated, the value of shade-trees, what trees to plant and when to plant them, the relation of agriculture to other pursuits, the effects of climate on the habits of people, poetical selections on rural subjects; talks on natural history, should form part of the instruction of every Friday afternoon." I don't know who wrote these regulations, but with all due deference to the gentleman I fear he was a "book farmer." It is very well to know "how plants grow and what they feed upon," and something of this should be embodied in the text-book. Nor is it unimportant to know how to beautify farms, but less so than to know how to make them profitable. The relation of agriculture to other pursuits is not of little moment, but the study of it is certainly better adapted to maturer minds. "The effects of climate on the habits of a people" might prove a profitable study for pupils in the High School or the Agricultural College, but it is surely more important for young persons to know the effects of climate on the habits of plants by which life is sustained. The poetical selections on rural subjects I would relegate to the farmers' wood fireside, and leave the "Talks on natural history" as part of the Friday afternoon exercise. In the compilation of our text book it should never be forgotten that the large majority of those who study it will never attend a higher school, and therefore the overwhelming importance of having it filled brim-full of knowledge that is intensely practical.

CONCLUSION.

It is quite possible that all the landmarks that fix the limit of its claims upon other classes may not be very easily pointed out. That agriculture has claims upon the favorable consideration of the whole community has already been shown, but the extent of those claims has not been defined. The forest of the vision here is so thick with underwood that I frankly confess I can scarcely see the light on the further side. Agriculture in Canada is unquestionably the first mustard tree, and the fowls that repose in its branches should be encouraged to do so, but how far they should be compelled to eat of its fruit is an open question. The lawyer of the city might not wish his son to spend time in the study of agriculture, while the member of the school board might choose differently in the case of his son. But the obscurity that hangs over this part of our subject will be dispelled before the advancing light of the expression of public opinion, which will ultimately make known the desire of majorities, as to how far the landmarks that mark the limit of the use of this text-book shall extend. In the meantime let us have the book at the earliest possible moment, and may it be a worthy forerunner of a magnificent Canadian agricultural literature that is yet to be.

Hon. Charles Drury.

Mr. Drury, Minister of Agriculture, who came in while the paper was being read, was called upon to address the association. He said he had come to the conclusion that there was something wrong in the system of education in looking at the effect produced upon the young men who pass a step beyond the Public Schools. He regretted to state that the young men who attended the High Schools, Collegiate Institutes, and universities seemed to be imbued with an idea that labor with the hands was undignified and unbecoming to a gentleman. The result had been that those who had been looked forward to as the hope of the future of agriculture in this country had gone into other pursuits. There had been a measure of disappointment in the effect which education had had upon the tastes and inclinations of the young men. He had always looked forward to the time when the farmers of this country would be well educated men in the broadest and most liberal sense. He saw no reason why the farmers should not aim to educate their children, but he had known many instances where, after farmers had had their sons educated in the high schools, they refused to return to the farm. He did not know where the fault lay, but this was a great matter of disappointment in the educational system. If the introduction of a text book upon the subject of agriculture would meet the case it would be a boon to the country. All of the professions were at present overcrowded. Canada could furnish unlimited means for the employment of tens of thousands of our best men in the field of agriculture. There was a feeling abroad that for a man to spend his life upon a farm was to "waste his sweetness on the desert air," and that if a man was in possession of sufficient means to spend his life as a gentleman farmer he ceases to be a gentleman when he is obliged to work with his hands. He had once heard a clergyman say that he had been a farmer, but that he had got above that sort of life. (Laughter.) He was not sure but that the same gentleman would have been a better farmer than a preacher. Whatever could be done to promote a better judgment as to the true dignity of labor, and whatever could be done to educate our young men to believe that there is a field of usefulness for them upon the farm would be a lasting benefit to the community. He trusted that the Minister of Education would at an early day see his way clear to place in the Public Schools of the Province a text-book upon the subject of agriculture. (Applause.)

Mr. G. W. Ross, M. P., Minister of Education, made a brief address, in which he assured the association that he was always glad to receive their advice. The position of Minister of Education was not without its difficulties. He was proud of the system of education in Ontario, and knew of no better system in the world, though of course it was capable of much improvement. He advised the association to act with caution and prudence. (Applause.)

After passing various votes of thanks the association adjourned sine die.

A Runaway Street Car.

"Keep your seats or you'll all be killed!" The excited individual who thus exclaimed was Conductor Warren, of Allen street car No. 78.

Yesterday he ran extra during the noon hour, his regular route being on Virginia street. The car was on Fourteenth street, near the State Normal School. Suddenly both brake-rods broke, and the car, heavily loaded with men, women and children, started down the grade banging against the affrighted horses' heels. Driver Welch, seeing that he could not stop the car, did not forget the first law of nature and with great presence of mind unhooked his team, turned them to one side and allowed the car with its terrified human freightage to proceed. It was at this juncture that the conductor cried out as above narrated. At the corner of Vermont street a lady, despite the protest, jumped from the car. The West avenue car pulled up from York street and the driver saw the runaway coming. It was too late to pull back, so he turned in, and by thrashing his horses managed to keep ahead. After a while the car slowed and the men were able to get off and block the wheels. The lady who had jumped off was picked up with a badly strained back, was placed in a carriage and driven to her home on Eagle street.—Buffalo Courier.

Another Swindling Game.

Numerous complaints reach the police here from the Eastern Townships and from farmers in the vicinity of this city about Yankee swindlers, who, if the report be true, have at least fleeced thirty or forty tillers of the soil out of a good portion of their savings. It appears that these men sell to the farmers reapers and mowing machines and other farm implements on the instalment plan. Part of the money the farmer pays down, and for a part of it he gives a note, which the Yankee copies, forges the signature and returns on the day when the note is due with the cleverly forged note and receives his money from the unsuspecting farmer. Three days later the genuine note is presented to the farmer for collection. The swindler had had the genuine note discounted and of course the farmer has no means but to pay the amount. A detective was engaged this morning by one of the victims.—Montreal Star.

Young Frenchman—"Ah, oui. Eet ees fix by custom in Paree, when a young man marry he get certain number francs from the father of the girl." Young American—"It isn't so in this country. Here you must not only be able to support the girl but very often the rest of the family into the bargain. Say, what's the fare to Paris?"

"We don't want any poetry, young man," said the editor; "we have enough on hand to last longer than the paper." "I am not a poet, sir," replied the young man, indignantly; "I am selling a soap warranted to remove oil, tar, pitch or stains of any kind from the finest fabrics of the loom down to three-ply carpets. You do me a gross injustice, sir." "I beg your pardon," said the editor, contritely.—Life.

AN OCEAN GROVE GIRL.

She Uses Cork Stays, but Has Considerable Trouble with Them.

She tripped down to the foamy edge of the surf and ran back, screaming prettily as the water ran over her toes. And all the spectators smiled. And then she ran down again and danced on one toe and then on the other, and then on both at once as she got all the way up to her ankles. Then picked up all her courage, and as a big wave rolled in she ran to meet it. It flopped her bang up against the beach, knocked her sailor hat into shapelessness, and, as it receded, drew her out as if she had been a wooden ball. It was almost too much of a good thing and she struggled and wiggled and spluttered. And while she struggled to get a foothold another wave seized her and she dipped over the top of it as light as an eggshell. Quick as thought came a third, and she danced over the top of that also, and every time she tried to get on her feet she was whisked back.

Then she realized that she was beautifully floating out to sea, and she sent up a scream that startled the bathers near her. One of them, young and brave and strong, rushed—for it was too shallow to swim—to her rescue. He seized her by the shoulder, but her feet would not down, and being a wise and thoughtful lad, he towed her into shore. She scarcely stopped to say thank you, and with the red blood of confusion showing in her tanned cheeks, rushed away to change her garments. She might have escaped with that had she not imparted the secret of the episode to a friend. And the secret was this: She was a prudent girl with a proper regard for her safety. She had taken out the whalebones of her corsets and introduced cork stays, and had put another layer of cork in her stockings. She had miscalculated the effect, only to find that while the cork kept her nicely above water, it quite as effectually prevented her getting down also. The story came out, and the girl left Ocean Grove simultaneously.—Lit'rary Press.

A Wonderful Offer.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cts. It has fairly attained a wide world-reputation. If you have a dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectorations of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers, the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

Ironclads versus Locomotives.

War comes high, and next to it preparations for war. The English Admiralty estimates that a first-class ironclad costs £750,000, or in our money about $3,750,000. First-class locomotives cost about $10,000 apiece, so that 375 locomotives, that serve the uses of peace, could be built for the money put out on one vessel which is good for nothing if not a destroyer of the productions of peace.—Boston Transcript.

"Never morning wore to evening but some heart did break," says Tennyson; and the part that ill health often plays in heart-wreck is too great for computation. Uterine disorders especially bedevil the spirits and sap the springs of vitality and nervous force. For these distressing diseases, functional irregularities, unnatural discharges constant pains, weak back, lassitude, dullness, sinking sensations, ill temper, and all weakness and derangements peculiar to females, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a perfect specific. Sold by all druggists.

True to Life.

"Let us play we are married," said little Edith, "and I will bring my dolly and say: 'See, baby, papa!'" "Yes," replied Johnny, "and I will say, 'Don't bother me now, I want to look through the paper!'"

When dread disease, with iron hand,
Hangs its dark mantle over thee,
Escape its silent, awful hand
With Golden Medical Discovery.

Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures coughs, colds, and consumption if taken in time. Of druggists.

Sentiment and Business.

Young man—I cannot understand, sir, why you permit your daughter to sue me for breach of promise; you remember that you were bitterly opposed to our engagement because I wasn't good enough for her, and would disgrace the family.

Old man—Young man, that was sentiment; this is business.

Let The World Know It.

You can purchase a bottle of Polson's Nerviline, the greatest pain remedy in the world. Nerviline cures headache, neuralgia, toothache, pains in the side or back, rheumatism, etc. As an internal remedy, Nerviline is prompt, effective and pleasant to take. Nerviline has no equal as a pain-subduing remedy, and a test bottle costs only 10 cts. Call on your druggist and invest 10 cts. Nerviline, Nerviline, nerve pain cure.

Snakes Among the Nutmegs.

Connecticut snake hunters are astonished at the great number of rattlesnakes abroad this season. Until a few years ago a rattler was a curiosity in Connecticut, but since the hill towns began to grow up to brush they have come in. In the beautiful town of Farmington rattlers are especially plentiful. Ten have been killed in that town since the season opened. The other day Jason Peters, of Farmington, killed the tenth rattler just as it was approaching his doorstep on an errand of investigation, apparently, respecting the interior of the house.

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Sir Charles Synge Christopher Bowen is acknowledged as one of if not the best lawyer among the English Lords Justices. He is a grave, pale and almost melancholy looking man, and his manner is gentle and apparently timid, and has a peculiarly gentle voice. All his utterances have an academic ring about them, which peculiarity he has possessed since he made his first forensic speech. Off the bench he is a rather shy man. Strangers on meeting him would scarcely credit that he is a great equity judge; indeed, he is generally accredited with being rather "slow" for public man.

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher will be the guest this summer of the founder of Sage College at Illinois.

Warner's Safe Cure

1 has been before the public now about ten years, and in that time has proved itself to be all that it has been represented.

2 It is purely vegetable, contains nothing harmful, and DOES purify the blood and CURE disease, as it puts the kidneys, the only blood purifying organs, in complete health.

3 It cures permanently. We have tens of thousands of testimonials to this effect from people who were cured years ago and who are well to-day.

4 It is a Scientific Specific, was not put upon the market until thoroughly tested, and has the endorsement of Prof. S. A. Lattimore, M. A., Ph. L.L.D., Official Analyst of foods and medicines, N. Y. State Board of Health and scores of eminent chemists, physicians and professional experts.

5 H. H. Warner & Co. do not cure everything from one bottle, they having a specific for each important disease. Fight shy of any preparation which claims infallibility.

6 The testimonials printed by H. H. Warner & Co. are, so far as they know, positively genuine. For the past five years they have had a standing offer of $5,000 for proof to the contrary. If you are sick and want to get well, use

Warner's Safe Cure.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,916 at Boston, large classes at Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, E. H. COOK, Pres. N.Y. State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus post free from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DOM L 35 88

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS generally

We want a good MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

Address, C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

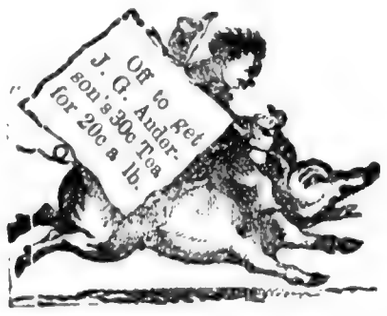
The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N. Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U. S. in the Hide line, have sent their [illegible] parison the Reporter gives him the endorsement [illegible] and the head of any competitor and that his present [illegible]

And the Review says:

"Mr. Page's business as compared with others in same line, we have become fully satisfied that in his [illegible] the largest dealer in this country, if not in export [illegible] in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more [illegible]

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND



And still there are

MORE

BARGAINS

TO BE GOT AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Don't forget to ask for

THAT CASHMERE,

Regular price 35c a yard, now 22 1-2 c a yard. It is a yard and a quarter wide.

Those DRESS GOODS

We are selling at 12 1-2c a yard, regular price 20c a yard. Beautiful new goods.

GREAT REDUCTIONS IN

Boots and Shoes!

30 Per Cent Discount off Men's Long Boots.

1000 DOZEN BUTTONS!

Selling at 5c a dozen, regular prices from 10c to 50c a doz.

COME SOON

In order to secure Best Bargains.

1000 doz. Eggs Wanted

RIGHT AWAY!

Top price paid in Cash or Trade. The Famous

New Process Electric Soap,

To be Got Only at

J. G. ANDERSON'S

Mammoth Bargain House.

He Lost his Bride.

Some weeks ago a citizen of Varney began to pay his attention to a Normanby girl, who was stopping at his mother's and whose atttractions were heightened by the fact that she was an heiress. In about four months she will be twenty-one years of age, when she will come into possession of a $3000 farm. The Varney-ite was devoted and persistent and the young lady finally consented to marry him.

The young man was in receipt of many congratulations upon his success. And why shouldn't he be? for the winning of an heiress is not an every-day occurrence. The day selected for the tying of the matrimonial knot was Monday, 20th inst., and great preparations were made for the event. The time came around, the guests were assembled and the minister on hand, when the groom suddenly bethought himself that a license was necessary and he posted off in hot haste to Durham to procure one. He was to have been back at 6 o'clock, when the ceremony was to take place, but was delayed and did not make his appearance until eight. In the meantime the young lady grew impatient at his delay and a young man who was present, and who was to have been "best man" at the feast, induced her to go away with him.

Then followed a scene, or rather a series of them. The ladies of the house followed, and vainly implored her to return, but she refused to listen to them and continued on her way with her "ay Lochinvar. This exasperated them and they demanded the dress and shoes she was wearing, which they claimed were theirs. She took them off.

AND FLUNG THEM AT THEM.

And as the dews of night had begun to fall and it was somewhat chilly her companion very gallantly took off his coat and placed it around her and together they wended their way into the interior of Egremont.

The feelings of the Varneyite on reaching home and finding that the bride—and of course her $3000 farm—had flown, may be better imagined than described, but with commendable self-restraint he neither raved nor swore. His trust in womankind has, however, been destroyed and his favorite saying in future will be "as fickle as a woman's mood."—[Durham Chronicle.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket, with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

A Physician

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

BOOTS & SHOES!

ALWAYS ON HAND.

A LARGE VARIETY

TO CHOOSE FROM AT

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO

Also to Contractors for Timber Feet.

D. McTAVISH. R. P. LEGATT

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

Has removed to the shop on Main street, next door to Wm. Stewart's block, next Wm. Bradshaw's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

The Manitoba Government has secured important modfiication of its contract with the Northern Pacific, and the bargain as it now stands is much more favorable to the Province.

Mr. James, grain inspector for the State of Minnesota, and Mr. Shelly, inspector at Duluth, report that the greater part of the Minnesota and Dakota wheat crop has been injured by the frost.

NOTICE!

To Farmers and the public in general.

Now that the Public Schools are about to open, I would respectfully call your attention to our

Full and Complete Stock

OF

SCHOOL SUPPLIES!

IN ALL CLASSES.

CALL AT

W. RICHARDSON'S

DRUG STORE.

Also Lubricating Lardine Oils for Machines.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:FROM:—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 376. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, SEPT. 6, 1888. W. H. THURSTON.

SAVE MONEY!

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's

Noted

Jewelry Store.

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

A few lines left yet in summer goods at M. Richardson & Co's discount sale continued. Bargains going.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Flesherton Presbyterian church intend holding a concert on the second evening of fair, further particulars of which will be given later on.

When used according to directions Ayer's Ague Cure is warranted to eradicate from the system Fever and Ague, Intermittent, Remittent and Bilious Fever, and all malarial diseases. Try it.

Suggestions are being considered as to making the Boyne bridge spring the best in the township, by the way, a drinking fountain and watering trough for the benefit of the public.

Rev. T. Wesson has been elected by the Flesherton Division Sons of Temperance, and was initiated to the office of D.G.W.P., in place of A. R. Fawcett whose removal makes a change necessary.

Mr. B. Thompson is making extensive improvements on his property, situate at the corner of Beechill and Elizabeth streets. He is evidently bent upon doing his part to make the most of the natural beauties of our village.

Disorders of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, can be cured by restoring the blood to a healthy condition, through the vitalizing and cleansing action of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the safest, and powerful and most highly concentrated alterative available to the public.

In Union Cashmeres, all wool Cashmeres, foulle cloth, crepe cloths, opera twills, Scotch tartans, plaids, fancy meltons, tweed effects, etc., you can get excellent values and a large and choice stock to select from at M. Richardson & Co's.

The new Boyne bridge is to be a stone and brick structure, in which good workmanship and artistic taste will doubtless be displayed. The bridge ought to bear a memorial tablet to the individual on whom the oversight of the concern falls, and who for so many years has devoted himself with untiring zeal to the welfare of the township.

Mr. P. Lucas desires to inform the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr. Lucas informs us that he has never sold a roller flour, and never intends to, also that he has always had his wheat for flour for sale since last winter, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

Returned.

Mr. Wm. Suggitt dropped in on us quite unexpectedly on Monday. He is looking hale and hearty after his ocean voyage.

A Burglary.

The store of Mrs. Thos. Jordan, of Epping, was burglarized on Wednesday night last, a full account of which will be found in our Kimberley correspondence. Since receiving the above correspondence we learn that several of the articles stolen have been recovered [illegible] they were hidden by the [illegible] ing some of the clothing and a gold ring.

Fall underwear just in. A large stock, fine lines, prices low, at M. Richardson & Co's.

Lusus Naturæ.

Our exchanges may revel in stories of big squashes, tall corn and bloated hens eggs, but we have the medal on fruit. Mr. John Beecroft has a crab apple tree loaded with both blossoms and fruit. In the same garden are also pear and apple trees in bloom. We intend shortly to advertise Flesherton as a winter sanitarim for invalids who are in the habit of wintering south of the 35th degree of latitude.

Personal.

Mrs. T. Akitt, of Collingwood, is visiting at Mr. Beecroft's.

J. W. Henderson and family returned to Toronto last week.

Misses House and Mrs. Scott, of Hamilton are the guests of Mr Patch for a few days.

New goods arriving daily at M. Richardson & Co's for fall and winter trade. In dress goods, mantle goods, fine fabrics and newest designs, a large stock. M. Richardson & Co.

Garden Party.

[illegible] ladies [illegible] of the Methodist church, Flesherton, held a garden party at the residence of Mr Bentham on Wednesday evening last. The evening was delightful, as also was the attendance good. The ladies provided a veritable abundance of good things. Flesherton's band enlivened the proceedings, and everybody appeared to enjoy themselves thoroughly.

On Friday evening a young people's social was held at the same place for the purpose of the ladies' [illegible] boys and girls of Flesherton were with them, etc., and [illegible] for the purpose for which they were assembled.

For bargains in gloves, hosiery, buttons, belts, ties, and parasols, go to M. Richards n & Co's discount sale this week.

East Grey Exhibition.

The committee appointed at the last meeting of the board to arrange for special attractions during the show to be held here on the 24th and 25th inst. met last Friday, and decided to have baseball and lacrosse matches on the first day of show, to entertain visitors. The directors, in order to assist in making it a success, will purchase two valuable cups, with prize funds, to be awarded to the best lacrosse and baseball teams to be known as directors prizes and to be competed for on the first day of show on the exhibition grounds. In addition they will offer prizes for bicycle races, bagpipe competition, foot races, etc. The directors' efforts to make our show a grand success will meet with the approval of our enterprising citizens, who will render them such assistance as may be needed to make it by far the best exhibition ever held [illegible] Special attention to the [illegible] keeping the [illegible]

Flesherton Station Items.

Considerable [illegible] grain, in spite of the [illegible] harvest operations of the locality. Notwithstanding the [illegible] were [illegible]

Mr A. McLeod has lately made an addition to his house. He and his family are away for a short time.

Mr D. Muir has erected one of the largest and best barns that is to be seen in this part.

Plant [illegible] the [illegible] carelessly deposited [illegible] of stone, sand heaps and [illegible] obstacle [illegible] their most [illegible] manner [illegible]

The Literary Society expects to [illegible] during this month, at [illegible] will have an interesting [illegible]

The natural social and spiritual advantages might be made far more of than they are. Unity, energy and perseverance are [illegible] to [illegible] faster.

Self-Binder Contest.

A test of self-binders came off on Tuesday as announced, on the farm of Mr. Geo. Stewart, near this village. Only two machines competed a Noxon and a Patterson. The judges on the occasion were R. Oliver, J. R. Graham and A. Stewart, jr. A large number of spectators were on the field. The field of grain cut by the two reapers during the contest was about five acres. After examining the different points of both machines, the judges agreed in awarding the palm to the Noxon reaper, but not without some dissatisfaction on the part of a number of gentlemen who express themselves elsewhere in this issue.

A Sad Accident.

On Wednesday of last week Mrs Sproule, living near Maxwell, mother of our fellow-townsman, R. J. Sproule, and Dr. Sproule of Markdale, M. P. for East Grey, met with a severe and what [illegible] Mrs. Sproule [illegible] town an old lady of 75 years. While walking along the road in the vicinity of Maxwell she attempted to turn around suddenly, when she fell, breaking her left arm and [illegible]. The [illegible] old lady is not likely to [illegible] her ultimate recovery.

[illegible]

[illegible]

A Remarkable Meteor.

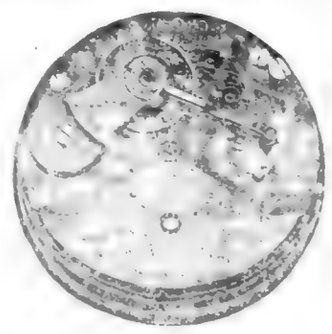
A meteor of extraordinary brilliancy and erratic movement, lit up the darkness last Wednesday evening about 9.30. It appeared from this point travelling upward towards the northwest at an angle of about 45 degrees, and was exceedingly large. A large number of people with whom we have conversed there in agreed that at first it was a very large rocket which was about to be fired, but it was proven to be a meteor of rare beauty. It was observed all over Ontario, and from the Rochester Observatory we learn that it was the finest single specimen of meteoric fireworks which the professor there had ever seen. The stone appears to have come in contact with the earth's atmosphere at an angle, the resistance of which gave it an upward turn, just as a bullet fired at a slant into the water will return to the surface.

Valuable Property for sale in the thriving Village of Flesherton. For particulars apply to A. R. Fawcett, Review office, Streetsville, Ont., or to J. W. Armstrong, Flesherton.

NOTICE.—All accounts due me for Job Printing and advertising must be paid to J. W. Armstrong as soon as possible.

A. R. FAWCETT.

Review Office, Streetsville.



TO

OLD

PATRONS

AM OBLIGED FOR

CONTINUED CONFIDENCE

AND PATRONAGE.

Will be with you again next week.

JEWELER BROWN.

MARKDALE.

SUNK TO THE BOTTOM.

The Oceanic Sinks the City of Chester in San Francisco Bay.

THE USUAL PANIC AND LOSS OF LIFE.

A San Francisco despatch says: One of the most terrible marine disasters that have occurred upon the Pacific coast was that which took place about 10 o'clock yesterday morning in the bay of San Francisco, at a short distance from Golden Gate. The City of Chester left her dock at 9.30 and started on her regular trip to Eureka, on the northern ocast of California. An unusually large number of passengers stood on her decks and waved adieus to their friends. The Chester steamed slowly down the bay, and when within two miles of the Heads encountered a thick fog. Capt. Wallace began to blow his whistle to warn all vessels of his approach. The Chester proceeded cautiously on her course till off Fort Point, when the sound of another whistle floated across the water. Captain Wallace answered the signal. This warning was evidently misunderstood, for in a moment's time those forward saw the huge prow of the Occidental and Oriental steamer Oceanic emerge from the fog. She had just arrived from Hong Kong, and was proceeding up the bay to her docks. She was so close to the Chester that there was no possibility for the latter to escape. The cabin passengers were nearly all on deck, and the captain, seeing the danger, called to them to prepare for the shock. A panic ensued, particularly among the women and children, of whom there was a large number. The Oceanic struck the Chester on the port side and the shock was terrific. Her prow cut into the Chester's upper works and then crushed down to the bulwarks, tearing the great timbers, and breaking into the staterooms and cabin. The wildest confusion prevailed. The bow of the Oceanic crashed into the middle section of the Chester, cutting her almost in half. When the vessels were locked, several of the Chester's passengers were passed up over the Oceanic's bow. As soon as the larger steamer could clear herself, she swung around and began to lower boats. The officers and crew of the Chester seemed to lose their senses, and several passengers stated afterwards that some of the crew clambered aboard the Oceanic, leaving the passengers to cut away the boats. One of these was lowered as soon as possible and several passengers were taken off. Others provided themselves with life-preservers and jumped overboard. The greater portion were compelled to remain on the steamer, which began to settle soon after the collision. Torrents of water rushed into her hold, and in five minutes after the collision the Chester had disappeared. She sank in fifty fathoms of water. Those of the passengers and crew who came to the surface were picked up, but the greater number went down in the rushing water and never appeared again. As soon as it was known that the collision had occurred tugs and other boats went to the scene and rendered what service they could in picking up the living and dead floating among the wreckage. The greatest loss of life is believed to have been among the steerage passengers, of whom there were 23 on board, and only two of these were accounted for. The others are regarded as lost. The cabin passengers numbered 70, and of these ten are lost. Three of the crew are lost. None of the survivors were landed until after 1 o'clock, and at a late hour last evening there was still much doubt as to the number lost. The City of Chester was an iron steamship, valued at $150,000.

A GREAT YARN.

A Manacled Horse Thief Springs Through the Window of a Railway Car.

A Joliet, Ill., despatch says: "Big Jim" Ryan, Sheriff of Cook county, Wyoming Territory, arrived at the prison last evening with a noted cowboy horse thief named Jim O'Connor, sentenced for three years. The sheriff related a story of interest regarding the escape of O'Connor from his custody while coming through Iowa on the Rock Island fast train. The sheriff and his prisoner had been seventy two hours on the cars, and were nearly tired out for want of sleep. The prisoner was heavily ironed with shackles. Just after the train had left Des Moines, and while it was yet dark, the prisoner asked Ryan for a drink of water. The officer went to the tank, not ten feet distant, and was pouring out the water, when his attention was attracted by a terrible crash of broken glass. He turned and found that O'Connor was gone, having plunged head first through the window while the train was flying along at top speed. The sheriff was carried several miles before the train stopped. Ryan rushed up the track and about daylight discovered where the desperado had struck, but instead of finding his mangled remains, as the sheriff fully expected, he found tracks entering a large corn field. It was not until late in the afternoon that O'Connor was captured. The prisoner had irons on both legs and hands, yet had made his way for twelve miles from the railroad, and when found was hid beneath a hedge-fence. There was not a mark upon him to show that he was in the least bit hurt.

A Diabolical Deed.

A Kansas City, Mo., despatch says: On a farm near Bavaria, Kan., a man became incensed at the actions of a boy who was teasing him while feeding a thresher, and he forced the boy into the machine, which mangled him almost beyond recognition. The incensed neighbors ran the perpetrator of the horrible deed down, and prodded him to death with pitchforks.

Fall River, Mass., has a citizen whom Diogenes would have been pleased and honored to afford quarters on the parlor floor of his celebrated tub. This individual has recently distinguished himself by telling the truth in an advertisement, "Horse for sale." He plainly announces that the animal is of ugly disposition, and recommends it to nobody unaccustomed to horses.

Judge Hughes was attacked with rheumatic gout on his return trip from Winnipeg, and is now at his son-in-law's residence at Sarnia.

THE LAND O' CAKES.

Latest Live Scottish News by Mail.

The Duke of Portland has signified his intention of presenting a public park to the villagers of Galston.

It is again rumored that Lord Advocate Macdonald is about to be raised to the Bench as Lord Justice Clerk.

A little girl at Lugate, near Stow, has died from drinking from a stream into which sheep dip had been poured.

The death is announced at Dumfries of Mr. George Graham, a noted and highly respected agriculturist in the South of Scotland.

A marriage is arranged between Lady Elizabeth Carnegie, daughter of the Earl of Southesk, and Hon. Robert Preston Bruce, M.P.

A tablet to the memory of Charles Darwin is to be placed on the house in Lothian street, Edinburgh, where he lived when studying at the Edinburgh University.

Lady Victoria Campbell, a daughter of the Duke of Argyll, who devotes herself to Christian work, is learning the Gaelic language in order to get hold of the Gaelic heart.

Some complaints of the alleged desecration of the parish churchyard of Farnell have arisen out of a goose building her nest and hatching a brood under a raised tombstone.

Mrs. Balfour Stewart, in recognition of the services rendered to science by her late husband, Professor Balfour Stewart, has been granted a pension of £50 a year from the Civil List.

The knitting industry of Shetland, according to Mrs. Fyvie Mayo, which now brings into the islands a yearly revenue of from £10,000 to £12,000, all originated in the quick observation and tact of one man.

Mrs. Somerville, of Edinburgh, has been unsuccessfully suing R. Gordon, merchant, for damages for calling her "a woman." Like Bob Sawyer's landlady, she decidedly objected to be called a woman.

Mr. William Bonar, of Kensington—a member of the distinguished family which includes Dr. John Bonar, of Greenock; Dr. Horatius, of Edinburgh, and Dr. Andrew, of Glasgow—passed away on the 27th ult.

By orders from the Scottish Office in London the imprisoned Clashmore crofters Mrs. Kerr, Mrs. McLeod and Hugh Mathieson—were on the 8th inst. liberated from the Calton Jail, Edinburgh, and sent to their homes

Misses Frances, Blanche and Amy Tulloch, in consideration of the distinguished services of their late father, Principal Tulloch, of St. Andrews, have each received a pension of £25 from the Civil List.

On the 30th ult. the town-crier of Jedburgh announced through the streets that "the persons who were observed stealing strawberries in Bongate nursery between 6 and 7 o'clock on the previous evening were requested not to do so again."

Prof. Blaikie is taken to task for stating in his biography of Patrick Hamilton that the proto martyr of the Reformation was born at Kincavel, near Linlithgow. It is contended that Stonehouse, near Hamilton, where his father, Sir Patrick, had a barony, was his birthplace.

Rev. Gavin Lang, of Inverness, officiated at the funeral of Colonel Cameron, of Inverailort, by whose death the last male representative of that family disappears, as also, through his mother, do the Macdonells, of Barrisdale, a once powerful branch of the Glengarry Macdonells.

Lord Fife has sold the estate of Edinglassie, and also the remaining portion of the estate of Invermarkle, the extent of the whole being between 7,000 and 8,000 acres. Edinglassie has been purchased by Mr. John Walker, of Kingswinford, Dudley, and the remaining part of Invermarkle by Mr. Alex. Geddes, of Blairmore.

The inscription on the Gordon statue at Aberdeen is: "Charles George Gordon, R.E., C.B., Major-General. Born 28th January, 1833; fell in his country's service at Khartoum, January, 1885. Dedicated to his memory by members of the Gordon Clan. 'I have done my best for the honor of our country. Khartoum, 14th December, 1884.'"

Rev. Mr. Peters, Mid Parish Church, Greenock, has not received any stipend for four or five years, the Town Council declining to accept the receipt upon which he wrote "Accepted under protest." He now intimates that he is prepared to sign conditionally on the receipt being worded as "alleged legal stipend;" and this condition has been agreed to.

On the 6th August Mr. Andrew Millar, jun., writer, Paisley, died at Toward from peritonitis, after a few days' illness. The deceased, who was about 60 years of age, was a partner of the firm of Millar, Walker & Millar, writers, Paisley, and acted as clerk to the Abbey School Board, and was also clerk to the Abbey heritors. He was till within a short time ago a colonel in the local corps of the volunteers.

Worked the Child Cornetist to Death.

A Kansas City, Mo., despatch says: Docka Pihlgreer, 9 years old, who had travelled all over the West as "the child cornetist," died here yesterday from the effects of overwork. She was a delicate little thing, very small for her age, yet she had been required to practice on the cornet three hours a day, Sunday not excepted, besides performing afternoons and evenings. She was brought here Monday by the Peeks, under whom she was playing, but was not given the least medical attention. Her mother is a variety actress. The coroner's examination showed that death resulted from heart failure, due to nervous exhaustion.

A Sky Terrier.

A little boy, 6 years old, and a little girl, 8, were looking at the clouds one beautiful summer evening, watching their fantastic shapes, when the boy exclaimed: "Oh, Minnie, I see a dog in the sky!" "Well, Willie," replied the sister, "it must be a sky terrier."

Not Always Behind.

It is not always boys who are ungrateful It is sometimes the daughter's unkindness that is sharper than the serpent's tooth. A pretty miss on the train pettishly said to her mother, "Come on; you're always behind." A venerable gentleman passing stooped and said, "Never behind when you were sick, was she?"—Christian Advocate.

EVICTIONS IN WEST CLARE.

Thrilling Scenes at Evictions on the Vandeleur Estates.

(Letter in the London Daily News.)

On either side of the door of Simon Connell's house was a small window stuffed with brush wood, and through both windows the syringes began to play. Therefore, to protect the emergency men, the sheriff ran up and clapped his shield upon one of the small windows, while a battering-ram follower stuck another shield upon the second window. A prod from a long pole thrust the sheriff and his shield away from the wall, and a torrent of hot water fell all over the battering-ram warrior, who, in spite of it all, maintained his hold upon his shield, sheltering his head behind it. A constable substituted a wooden board for the sheriff and his shield, and in order to keep the board in its place posted a ladder against it. This stopped the syringe play in that quarter, but through the other window the hot water torrents rushed, frequently drenching the shield-bearer from head to foot. Inside there were only Simon Connell, his son and his two daughters—four people, three of them very young—pitted against all the cavalry and infantry outside, and with a hot-water syringe or two against all those heavy batons and rifles and sword-bayonets. "Have you finished with your hot water yet?" the shield-bearer exclaimed ironically. "No, you spalpeen," the man inside replies, "there's plenty for ye." "Out wid it, then, my lad," retorted the other. Out it did come, and no mistake, sousing the emergency man from head to foot, and reducing his billycock to a pulp; but ere long the old ramming song breaks out, "Back away with them, back away with them," and the battering-ram is at last in full swing, thundering against door and wall, shaking the fort at each blow. At the seventh blow a portion of the door gave way, and through the aperture came promptly forth hot water and steam. At the tenth blow the door fell in pieces, but, as the breach was still not wide enough for the storming party, the battering-ram was turned upon the portions of the wall on either side of the entrance. The men drawn up on the right of the farm-yard square, as also those on the left, were drawing their batons, twisting the thongs round their wrists and preparing for a rush. Down comes a huge fragment of the wall, down comes another, and another, exposing the dimly-lighted interior and the figure of a young girl with dishevelled hair rushing across the room. "Back away with them." Down comes another piece of wall in a cataract of bricks, stones and dust. "Charge," and up the heaps of broken wall, like troops scaling an enemy's earth-works, the constabulary rush, with batons overhead. They disappear down the other side in a cloud of dust, while the roof, deprived of its wall supports, shook as if it would fall and bury defenders and stormers alive. Through the dust and steam I could see figures rushing madly about. For about a minute or so, though the time seemed longer, there were the sounds of wild tramplings and scuffling, shrieks of women, and groans, and then they all came out in headlong confusion, captors and captives, and, held fast in the grip of three constables, the father, Simon Connell, with torn clothes and face pale as a corpse, and one side of his head and the whole of his breast and waist-coat literally streaming with blood. He had three terrible wounds in the head. He tottered as if he would faint. Well, I fancied myself pretty well accustomed to ugly sights in battle of another sort, but I must confess I felt dazed and sickened at the spectacle suddenly bursting upon me of this poor, toil-worn, broken-down Irish peasant helpless and bleeding, in the hands of the strong men who were wrecking his hearth and shattering his old home into ruins. "He fought like a demon," said a constable who hurried past me. His head dropped over his chest, he staggered to a walk, the R. I. C. supported him. He sat down on the ground, leaned his back against the wall and groaned. The regimental doctor came up. Lint, scissors and the other necessary materials were fetched from the ambulance waggon, and Connell's wounds were dressed. Connell's son, a boy, was wounded on the head, and the blood ran down his face, but his hurt was not serious.

The last eviction to-day was that of Margaret Madigan, who holds 136 acres at Ladnore. The approach of the sheriff to the farm must have been for some time anticipated, for the roads were cut up and blockaded in several places, and as a consequence the sheriff was delayed for a long time in getting the ram up to the house. The house itself, a neat thatched cottage, was well strengthened with huge timber beams and stout young trees to resist, for a time at least, the assaults of the battering ram. When at length the door was forced open a shower of hot water deluged the bailiffs. The ram was then directed against the adjacent wall, which, being very old, soon crumbled to dust beneath its strokes. More water was thrown out and no reply given to the repeated calls for surrender made by Col. Turner. Inspector Hill, snatching a shield from one of the bailiffs, rushed into the house, when a stone thrown from a loft in the house caused him to beat a precipitate retreat. He then said to Col. Turner: "A case for fixed bayonets, sir;" but Col. Turner said: "No; try batons first." Cecil Roche headed a baton party, which was to take the house by storm; but another stone or two routed them. Just now the aged tenant and her grandchild came out of the house, and it became apparent that the male defenders had taken refuge in a small loft at one end of the house. As they refused to come out, Col. Turner ordered in a dozen men with fixed bayonets, Inspectors Dunning and Hill leading the attack. They were received with a volley of stones, to which Mr. Hill replied by throwing one up into the loft, while Mr. Dunning called out to Col. Turner, "Shall we fire, sir?" Col. Turner replied, "Certainly." Whilst this fusillade of stones was in progress a couple of policemen had succeeded in putting up a ladder against the aperture of the loft, and up to this Messrs. Hill and Dunning climbed armed with bailiffs' crowbars. With these instruments they forced a way into the loft, where a desperate struggle ensued. The two men were overpowered, handcuffed and brought down from the loft. One of them had a bad cut on the side of the head. Mr. Dunning's finger was cut, and Mr. Hill's tunic torn at the shoulder. The two prisoners were brought before Cecil Roche who remanded them in custody. When most of the furniture had been removed the ram was again set in motion, and two sides of the house were levelled, so as to render it perfectly uninhabitable.

How to Have Fine Shoulders.

Begin with ten minutes' work, the wet towel pinned tightly around the hips, corset off and a Mother Hubbard gown on, which is the best modern version of the Greek robe possible. Wet the head well, for the exercise will pump the blood well over the body, heating the temples and spine; roll up your sleeves, sponge and wipe the arms dry and go to work, moderately at first. In ten minutes or less quit, sponge off the muscles that quiver and burn, drop into an easy seat and rest ten or fifteen minutes, then pull again, resting and working for an hour. Keep this up a month and you won't know your shoulders and arms for the same. Walker, in his known work on artistic beauty, says the absence of fine arms in women is due to long sleeves and want of exercise. Pumping, sweeping, spinning, throwing stones at a mark and playing quoits are all better than tennis or rowing to secure finely-modeled arms and busts. The way to get the most benefit from work is to time oneself and see how much can be done in a quarter hour, a half hour, and so on till the sweat flows, that great restorer of the complexion and refiner of the figure. It carries off the grossness of the body, and though it is a proverb in outspoken districts that such a one is "too proud to sweat," and I have heard ladies of middle station in society aver that they never perspired, as if it were a sign of gentility—they never failed to pay the penalty in thick sallowness of face and adipose. The moderate, easy-going woman grows fat. The active, quick-footed one keeps down her flesh and shows as trim a waist and ankle at 45 as she had at 20. The fatal thickening at the back of the neck by which men profess to know women past 40, is an unnecessary consequence. The woman who uses the shoulders freely and rapidly will show as flat and fine an outline at 80 as my beautiful Italian "Reading Girl," and there is hardly a pleasanter sight after the roses and lily figure of 16 than one of these trim, nice, wholesome ladies of 60, with a waist as fine as that of her own granddaughter. A woman who is too fine to work is too fine to be fair, and she will be stout—the one fatal defect in a woman of any age.

Passionate Versifiers.

A new lady poet appears as a contributor to that valuable Democratic journal, the Detroit Free Press. The name of this lady is Sarah K. Bolton, and her poem is upon "That Last, Last Night," and we quote:

> Your hand, electric to my own,
> Your lips, more precious than a throne,
> Were mine, ah joy! and mine alone,
> That last, last night.

We suggest to the gifted but too careless author of these lines that they violate the canons of orthodox poetical art. While it may not be improper for a young lady to smack a gentleman electrically on the lips, provided he is her declared and accepted lover, and she is his affianced bride, it is contrary to all rules to kiss and tell; and no lady who is admitted to the privilege of holding the thrilling hand of her beloved, and hanging on the precious honey of his lips should go away and forget this fundamental rule of good manners. Next, there is something unpleasant in the remark that these lips were last night hers alone. What did she expect? Did she think he would allow other girls to kiss him also? We are anxious about our lady poets. They manifest a disposition to publish in their verses occurrences that are, doubtless, very sweet in themselves, but which ought not unnecessarily to be dragged into the full blaze of impertinent notoriety. —N. Y. Sun.

Old World Church Notes.

Tarsus, the city of St. Paul, will soon be able to boast of an American training school for orphans. There are several institutions of the kind, we believe, and this one will support and house about fifty children.

Dr. Tschakert, professor of ecclesiastical history at Konigsberg, announces the discovery of a large number of sermons and scholia from the pen of Martin Luther. The documents had by some means found their way into the town library of that city. The sermons must have been preached at Wittenberg or neighborhood between 1519 and 1521.

The Congregational, Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of Japan are about to form an organic union. The basis of the union will be the Apostle's Creed and the Nicene Creed, with the historical confessions of the three Churches—all held in subordination to the Bible. The polity is to be a mixture of Congregationalism and Presbyterianism. Congregationalism will prevail in the individual church, but over the united body the Presbyterian forms will prevail. The union paves the way for the formal national adoption of the Christian religion.

Queen of the Gypsy Camp.

A few days ago Undertaker William K. Reed, of Troy, N.Y., was called to go to the gypsy camp at Sickles' Creek to make preparations for the burial of one of the number. Arriving there he found the body of a young woman, a member of the party, who was very handsome in form and face. The entire camp was in sadness over the sudden death of this young woman, who was the pet of the party, and who was considered the queen of the camp. Mr. Reed was told that they were going to burn up everything belonging to the dead woman. Valuable blankets, shawls, dresses, her private carriage, harness, letters, and, in fact, everything she owned, was cast on the pile and burned up so as to keep away evil spirits and bring good luck to her followers. One blanket she had used as a coverlet, handsomely worked, and worth at least $20, was consumed with the rest.

He Wouldn't Bite.

"Mother," said a little boy the other day, "I know what I would do if I was at sea and the men were all starving; they should draw lots to see who should be killed and eaten, and if it should be me I'd jump into the water." "But," said the mother, "they would fish you out!" "No they wouldn't," said he, "for I wouldn't bite."

AH, YES, THE WOMAN.

Two Men After Her, and the Government Finds a Smuggler.

P. J. Rogers, the smuggler, captured in Boston on Saturday, was before United States Commissioner Hallett Wednesday and was held in $2,000 for the September term of the United States court. It is believed that this case is but the precursor of others that will soon be brought before the courts. One case contains all the elements of a French novel. A well known doctor of philology, who has had the honor of imparting a knowledge of modern tongues to infant Hohenzollerns in Germany, and who is known in the United States as the inventor of the "Meistershaft system" of acquiring European languages, came to Boston about twelve months ago and settled down in an ultra fashionable boarding house. His system of teaching brought an ample income, as many wished to learn German from one who had taught the children of the German Emperor. He became a great favorite at the boarding house, and among others who sought his acquaintance was a railroad man, a travelling agent for one of the most prominent roads in the country. As the intimacy grew closer between these two, the railroad man explained to the doctor how it was that he could live in a style apparently beyond his income as an employee of a corporation. With his railway business he combined that of smuggling into this country woollen fabrics of the highest class. To those whom he knew he was always glad to furnish suit patterns at a price much less than they could be obtained in a legitimate manner. As the revenue was impersonal and not among the possibilities as a student of modern languages, the doctor could see no evil in evading it, and as he wanted some new clothes, his railway friend voluntered to get his clothes made in Canada and bring them through free of duty and the bargain was closed. Between the sending of the order and the reception of the goods a new factor arrived in the person of a beautiful woman with whom the doctor and the railway man straightway fell in love. The latter became the favorite suitor and the doctor was in despair. Then the clothes came, and with them an idea to the doctor. He saw how to obtain revenge. He addressed a note containing the facts about the railway man's scheme to a customs' official and refused to pay for the clothes. The last act showed the smuggler the necessity of caution, and by the time the authorities had got their investigation well under way he found an immediate call for his presence in Canada.

KILLING NO MURDER

When a Wife Kills Her Husband.

At Chester, on Saturday week, before Mr. Justice Field, Mary Ellen Coleman was charged with the manslaughter of her husband, John Coleman, at Stockport, on the 17th of April last, and pleaded "Guilty" to the charge. From the statement made by the prisoner's counsel it appeared that the deceased man had been in the habit of brutally ill-treating the prisoner, and on the day of the fatal blow the deceased had been drinking heavily, and the prisoner endeavored to get him home from a public-house. While doing so he kicked her violently in the chest. She retreated into another room, and the deceased followed her and sat down on a chair by the fire, leaning down to where a poker was lying. This the prisoner seized, and dealt the deceased a blow, not of a violent nature, on the side of the head, and from the effect of this blow the deceased died four days afterwards. His Lordship * * * sentenced the prisoner to one day's imprisonment.

When a Husband Kills His Wife.

The trial of Neale, the draper, charged with the manslaughter of his wife, took place at the Leeds Assizes. His wife had committed adultery with a man named Black, and Crown Prosecutor Mr. Stansfeld declared to the jury that "speaking not as a counsel for the Crown, but as a man, he should have acted as the prisoner at the bar had done." The presiding judge, Mr. Justice Smith, said that the prisoner had done "that which was proper" in kicking the man Black downstairs; and went on to suggest that in a paroxysm of rage, induced by the action of Black, the prisoner had turned upon his wife and inflicted upon her the injuries of which she died. "There were," Mr. Justice Smith continued, "manslaughters and manslaughters," and as the prisoner at the bar had been in prison awaiting trial for two months, His Lordship expressed his determination to inflict no further punishment, but ordered him to be imprisoned for one day, which was equivalent to discharging him.

How to Dine Wisely.

Just now there is a good deal being written and wisely written about the extravagance of the workingman in food; but if the workingman would learn to dine wisely and to diversify his meal with a soup and a salad he'd not only have a better dinner but a much cheaper one. When all the hygienic cranks have exhausted themselves, civilization has not been experimenting in living all these centuries for nothing, and there is good reason for supposing that the regulation of proper dinner in courses, when it is not rendered unattractive and ridiculous by elaborations induced by ostentation rather than by consideration of the palate, is the dinner best suited to the human stomach as well as the pleasantest.—New York Graphic.

Gossip About Old Cities.

It is supposed that Rome at one time contained 5,000,000 inhabitants.

Babylon contained 144 square miles, and London contains but 120.

In the Eternal city there were 1,780 palaces, and 46,602 houses divided into flats.

The palaces of Rome each accommodated about 350,000 people.

It took Jonah a day to get into the middle of Nineveh, which occupied more space than London.

Dentist—Well, how do the new teeth work?

Patient—Not very well. They seem to cut the others.

Dentist—That is perfectly natural. They belong to an entirely different set, you know.

Such a Hat.

'Tis torn and 'tis tattered,
'Tis bruised and 'tis battered,
'Tis ragged and rimless and flabby and flat;
The ribbons are faded,
The feathers are jaded,
Did ever you see in your life such a hat?

'Twould surely take hours
To tell of the flowers,
The wreathing of daisies with bunches of green,
The dainty wee feather,
All helping together
To make it the cunningest hat ever seen.

But, turn from its beauties
And think of its duties,
Its thrilling adventures and sorry abuse;
For, over and over,
That rascally Rover
Has made it his plaything, to tear or to lose.

'Twas left in the garden—
Of course it was hard on
Those beautiful trimmings all out in the storm.
'T was flung up for cherries,
'Tis picked full of berries,
And Kitty has found it a nest snug and warm.

But look at the glancing
And beaming and dancing
Of those bonny eyes peeping out from the crown;
The flaxen hair curling
And flowing and whirling
With crumpled old ribbons forlorn hanging down.

Yes, take them together
In all kinds of weather—
The cheek like the roses, the laughter so gay,
The dimples so merry—
'Tis surely the very Best hat you have looked on for many a day.

—Sydney Daure.

THE BRAVE HEART WON.

Flora Wylde was a young lady who persistently refused to accept the rich lover Cecil Clay, whom her ambitious mother had selected. Flora was determined to marry no one but Reginald le Brun and together they devised a plan that would put to rout the machinations of the enemy.

The scene of this victory was to be on the occasion of the oratorio which Flora and her mother were to attend with Mr. Clay.

The night came and the party was seated in a box where they were in full view of the audience, and many a lorgnette was levelled at Flora's piquant face. Until the music began there was a restless glance in her blue eyes as they swept the crowded house. But when the grand opening chorus of the oratorio commenced all nervousness vanished, and the lovely face became as rapt and calm as though all earthly trials were past, and had been succeeded by a heavenly peace. This continued until the time came when custom allows a short rest for the singers, and also that compliments may be exchanged between friends. Then as the door of the box which contained Flora's party was opened and the face for which Flora had been searching appeared within it, it would have been amusing to a student of human nature to watch the changes of facial expression which Reginald's entrance produced upon the different occupants.

Flora rose suddenly and went to meet him, and in a low tone asked: "Have you been disappointed?"

Then Reginald whispered joyously: "All is as I hoped. The highest honors have been awarded to me, and the professorship is mine. What says Flora in answer to my query of this morning?" The girl flushed a radiant rosy red, hesitated for a moment, then, with a supreme effort, gathered up her courage, and put up her lips for a kiss. Mute with astonishment (for it was the first time in all their acquaintance that the shy girl had accorded him the privilege), Reginald bent and touched the quivering, tender mouth with his own.

Flora then drew her arm through his and led him forward from the shadow of the curtain, which had hidden this little scene from the audience (but not from the surprised group within the box), and said:

"I am so happy, for Regie has won a noble success, and what influences his life will make or mar mine, as he is my affianced husband. I suppose it is no news to you, Mr. Clay, so I speak openly. Mamma has undoubtedly told you of what she calls the 'boy and girl' attachment between us."

Mr. Clay murmured something about "being flattered by Miss Wylde's confidence," and something else which was as unintelligible to himself as to Flora.

Mrs. Wylde turned first red, and then pale, and meanwhile had no alternative but to accept the outstretched hand of the gentleman whom Flora had introduced as her future son-in-law. Then the music recommenced, and all had an opportunity to regain at least a degree of self-possession before the last of the oratorio.

Mr. Wylde had always had a liking for the young student, and being altogether in the dark as to the real by-play which was going on he gave Reginald a cordial shake of the hand at parting, and invited him to dine with them on the following day, saying as he did so: "Women folks are very fond of mysteries, when my wife has allowed such a trap to be sprung upon me. Why, man, I had no more idea that my little Flora had any thought of marrying than that I myself was to be transported to another country."

And Reginald kept his counsel, and only smiled, and accepted the invitation.

What passed between Flora and her mother can be better left to imagination. Suffice it to say that Flora was forgiven, and that the wedding day followed soon after the engagement.

One of the handsomest of the bride's presents came from Cecil Clay, accompanied by a note, which ran as follows:

> With congratulations and best wishes from one who, as he cannot take the first place in the bride's heart, is glad to petition for that of a friend. That the girl who, by her frank avowal, saved a poor fellow the mortification of a refusal may have as unclouded and brilliant a life as the gem I send her is the earnest wish of
>
> CECIL CLAY.

The gem alluded to was a diamond solitaire of great size and of limpid purity, and was set in a pendant of fairy-like delicacy of workmanship.

Too Busy to Answer.

Inquiring Child—Father, what is the difference between sitting up and sitting down? Father (with perfect confidence in his ability to explain)—Why, my child, when somebody is standing up and he seats himself, he sits down, and when he dosen't go to bed and sits down he sits up. Then with a dawning doubt of his ability to make it quite clear: "You see, my child, if he sits down, why, he—I mean if he sits up——Go to your mother, and don't ask me questions when I'm busy."

CURRENT TOPICS.

One of the great attractions of the Irish Exhibition in London is Edward Hogan, the Irish piper. Hogan has but one competitor for the high honor he holds of being chief piper in Ireland, and that honor he modestly gives to his own brother. The pipes in his hands sound an entirely new depth and breadth of harmony, and thousands are delighted both with the instrument and the artist.

While Gen. VonMoltke began his military experience in the Danish service, in which he was engaged until he attained his 22nd year, he was not born in Denmark but in Parchim, Mecklenburg, a State which likewise gave birth to Blucher. A branch of his family had settled in Denmark, and it was through this connection that he entered the Danish army, which he quitted in 1822 to enter that of Prussia.

It seems that the wily Muley Hassan, Sultan of Morocco, has been overreached at last. His Royal Highness recently beheaded the members of a rebel deputation who came under a flag of truce with terms that were displeasing to Muley. A short time afterwards the rebels sent in their submission and promised to pay tribute. Muley sent his cousin and 200 horsemen to collect it, but the rebels surprised them with an ambuscade and murdered the whole party.

The Japan Gazette makes this calm announcement of the punishment of native members of its staff: "On the 3rd inst. Mr. Terada, of our staff, was convicted of being implicated in publishing documents the authorities desired to keep secret, and sentenced to fourteen months' imprisonment without labor. Mr. Maeno, also of our staff, was sentenced to four months' imprisonment on a similar charge. Messrs. Hoshi and Ishiguro were also found guilty of the same offense, and were sent to jail for eighteen and twelve months respectively."

Once more, says the Financial News, suggestions are in the air for a postal tube between Dover and Calais, and this time in a more detailed form. The idea is to suspend two tubes of about a yard each in diameter by means of steel cables across the channel, forty yards above the level of the sea. The steel cables will be fixed to pillars at distances of about 800 yards, and in each tube a little railway will run, with cars capable of carrying 450 lbs. in weight. No parcel of greater weight than this will be taken, and the cost is estimated at the modest figure of £1,000,000. It is also proposed to run telegraph and telephone wires through these tubes.

In Marion Crawford's latest volume, "With the Immortals," the author is supposed to have held communion with the illustrious dead. In one of the chapters Heine is asked which is the finest poem. "The finest poem in the world," says Heine, speaking from above, "is the book of Job, the next best is the 'Iliad,' the next is the 'Divine Comedy,' the next 'Paradise Lost,' and the last great poem the world has seen is 'Faust,' though that is held to be more a tragedy than a poem." Now the doubters of spiritual manifestations will have to infer that this is Mr. Crawford's opinion rather than that of Heine. Communing with spirits by authors of books taxes one's credulity as severely as do the performances of the professional mediums.

The big houses in London have lots of cats about them, which grow fat while folks are in town and starve when they go out to the country. This has caused much distress to members of the Animals' Institute, particularly as even the Queen's cats were subject to the same difficulty. But this year it was humbly and loyally pointed out to the Queen that her Windsor cats would starve while she was away, whereupon Her Majesty was graciously pleased to order them all put in baskets and taken along to Osborne with the rest of the Court, which was done. This has become fashionable. Society papers solemnly inform us that prettily decorated cat baskets are in great demand, and the happy pussies may be seen by dozens at the railway stations going to mountain or seashore just like anybody else.

It seems an odd thing that an English name could not be found for "the most powerful vessel ever built for the British navy, with the exception of the Nile and Trafalgar." This is the first class battle ship Sans P reil ("None Such" would have sounded much better in British ears), which was launched on the Thames recently, after costing in construction the enormous sum of £814,000. Her engines represent 12,000 horse power, the vessel has a displacement of 10,470 tons, and she is to be equipped with two 110-ton guns, a 30-ton gun and 33 smaller pieces of ordnance, besides 18 torpedoes and a number of machine guns—truly a formidable colossus of the deep. But her speed has yet to be tried, and that is an element in efficiency of modern men-of-war which the present naval manœuvres have already shown to be of much greater importance than Admiralty authorities have hitherto been willing to admit.

The police of Montreal are on the lookout for swindlers from the south side of the line who have successfully done between thirty or forty Eastern Township farmers out of large sums of money. The swindlers sold alleged farm implements and took cash deposits and notes for the balance. The notes were discounted and the proceeds pocketed before date of payment. Then the farmers were waited on by the swindlers with what now turn out to be forged copies of the notes, and by offers of discount were induced in almost every instance to pay. The original notes were duly presented for payment, and the victims had to find the money a second time or stand an action for recovery on protested notes. The Montreal police also have information of a swindle on an Ontario horse dealer by a supposed buyer from the States. The latter in paying for the stock counted a hundred dollar bill twice, and got away before his victim could obtain redress.

Probably the Russian army is the most heterogeneous in the world, so far as its ethnology is concerned. From information on the point just issued by the Russian Statistical Department we learn that of the 227,906 recruits levied in 1885, the racial composition was as follows: Russians, 169,052; Poles, 17,212; Bulgarians, 406; Tchecks, 12; Lithuanians, 5,800; Letts, 3,424; Greeks, 155; Moldavians, 2,350; French, 1; Germans, 3,572; Armenians, 142; Bohemians, 39; Georgians, 3; Jews, 10,011; Karehans, 309; Tchouds, 20; Esthonians, 2,604; Laps, 1; Moravians, 1,707; Cheremissians, 704; Votiaks, 841; Zyrians, 282; Permians, 68; Voguls, 5; Chuvachis, 1,529; Tartars, 4,508; Bashkirs, 3,017, and about 100 belonging to three other races or tribes. In all, then, the Russian army comprises 32 different race, or at least tribal, elements, among which it is noteworthy neither Ossetians nor Circassians are represented, so far at least as these recruits are concerned.

The practical joker is a twin brother of the man who "didn't know it was loaded." It is a matter for regret that both are allowed to run at large, unrestrained and unmuzzled. The latest practical joke, and one probably fatal in its consequences, is reported from an Indiana town. A half intoxicated man was induced by his companions, the other evening, to shoot at a dummy constructed of straw and old clothes, under the impression that he was firing at a man. The assaulted figure fell heavily to the ground, and the victim of the practical joke, believing himself a murderer, fled. There is now every reason to believe that he committed suicide, and the brilliant geniuses who contrived this uproarious bit of fun are of the opinion that their joke was more of a success than the plans and specifications called for. It is to be deplored that there is no law to reach these individuals whose bubbling humor can only find vent in pointing a loaded revolver at some person's head, or in concocting the joke which is dangerously near the line of tragedy.

Several of the south side glass factories, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, are now using electricity for a novel purpose. Heretofore when they wanted to cut one of the large cylinders of window glass a simple but primitive method was used. This consisted of the pulling out from the furnace a thin shred of glass heated white. This was quickly wrapped around the bottle shaped end of the cylinder and it burned through or fractured the glass. A pair of tongs had to be used in the process. By the new method the glass cylinder is encircled with a fine wire, the extremities of which are put in connection with a small electric battery. It is necessary that the wire adhere closely to the glass. When a current of electricity is passed through the wire the latter becomes red hot and heats the glass beneath it. Then a single drop of water deposited on the heated place will cause a clean breakage of the glass clear around in the path of the wire. Contrary to what takes place with the usual process in the treatment of this fragile material, it is found that the thicker the sides of the cylinder are the better the cut.

Some curious statistics, lately published with the authority of the French Academie des Sciences, indicate a source of fallacy with respect to centenarians, to which Mr. Timbs used to attach much importance. In the very old, vanity is apt to exaggerate the age, just as in earlier life it often acts as a disturbing influence in the opposite way; hence the statements of soi-disant centenarians must be received with caution. It is said that in Bavaria, in 1871, out of 37 persons who claimed to be 100 years old, only one (a woman) was found, on official investigation, to have really reached that age. In Canada, of 82 supposed centenarians, only 9 successfully underwent the ordeal of a similar criticism. An inquiry of the same kind has just been made in France, with the result that, of 184 persons registered as centenarians in the last census, 101 have been found to have no claim to that honor. Of the remaining 83 (52 of whom were women and 31 men), the age was certified in 67 solely by the statements of relatives; in only 16 was any documentary evidence forthcoming. Most of these centenarians belonged to the south-western part of France, especially the foot of the Pyrenees.

Taking a Tiger's Picture.

A thrilling incident, which recently happened in India, is related by the native papers. It was no less a feat than the photographing of a tiger and a buffalo at the instant they were in deadly conflict. The whole affair had been deliberately prearranged. The buffalo was carefully tethered to a stump in the middle of a field. The artist, who was of course in peril of his life, coolly focussed the horrid beast. Then the tiger was let loose, and springing upon the buffalo, struck the huge creature to the earth with a single blow of his paw. The camera, at this intense moment, took its instantaneous impression, and the result was a picture vividly representing the deadly scene, and its victim at the very moment of dying. "The one beat of the heart," says an account, "that intervened between the awful blow of the tiger's paw and the victim's positive surrender of existence, sufficed for the photographer to catch and fix with unerring fidelity the attitudes of the slayer and the slain." The striking achievement has its scientific use. It settles by indisputable testimony of the sun's rays, the much mooted question by what method the tiger destroys its prey. The artist was a man of rare courage, for in order to achieve this triumph of his art he took the chance that the untamable rover of the jungle would leap on him instead of the victim intended for his deadly onset.

The Baby Carriage.

It was a terrible mistake for the handsome editor of the London Advertiser to remain a bachelor; nature intended him for something better. See what he says: We haven't much sympathy with the petulant people who find fault with the baby carriages on the market on busy days. The husband can't leave his work to do the marketing, so the good wife must do it. She often has no one to whom the baby can be entrusted, and perforce the little one must be taken along. No doubt they are often a source of discomfort, but probably the greatest part of it is felt by the lady in charge of the carriage. The people who jostle and scramble in a crowd are infinitely more disagreeable than a baby carriage. Oh, no, let the carriages alone, and perhaps in the years to come, when the present generation are bent and feeble, some of those now in baby carriages may be near with strong arms to give us a helping hand over the rough places.

At an auction in London last week Puttrick Simpson's hundred works and pamphlets and Joanna Southcote's writings, many very scarce, were dispersed. Some had the seal of the prophetess on the covers.

THE RED MAN'S CORN PITS.

Remarkable Food Storehouses of Canadian Aborigines.

Mr. J B Freeman, M.P.P., contributes to the Canadian Advance the following particulars of some ancient corn pits or caches found in the township of Townsend, as given to him by Mr. Richard McMichael, one of the early pioneers:

About sixty-two years ago Mr. McMichael was engaged with others in clearing the timber from some land in Townsend, Norfolk County, when their attention was called to some particular depressions, and, after the timber was removed, investigation revealed the fact that these pits or holes all contained charred or parched corn. The corn was in a good state of preservation, except for a few inches near the surface where it came in contact with the earth; it was bright and glistening, showing little signs of decay. There were eighteen of these "caches," they were uniform in size and round in shape and measured five feet across. The corn was found from three to four feet below the surface, and, although the corn was thrown out to a depth of four or five feet, the earth was not reached below. We are not left to conjecture as to how this corn came to be deposited here, for we know that this was the Indian method of preserving their surplus corn supply. Early writers tell us that the country between Lake Huron and Lakes Erie and Ontario was at one time thickly populated by the Indians, and that the game was scarce and that there was more corn grown each year as the population increased and the game disappeared, but in no instance have I met with any record when such large quantities of parched corn have been found in any place inhabited by Indians. Then there was no indication that this had been stored up preparatorily as a food supply in case of war, as there was nothing in the surroundings that would suggest this, nor was there anything like a stockade, or a village, or general camping ground, for in almost every instance, where their villages or camps once stood, the first settler could find traces of them, but in this instance there were only some ashes, and on an adjoining farm can still be seen a large stone that was used, no doubt, for grinding corn. I have said that these pits were found in the forest; there was no difference in the size of the timber in or about them, in fact, one of the largest pine trees growing near was partly in and partly over one of these depressions, and the usual way of computing the age of a tree by its rings or circles, that some contend mark each year's growth, would indicate that this tree was near a thousand years old, but, as I do not think that this method is trustworthy, say that the pine tree was four or five hundred years old, and then we can scarcely realize the fact that the corn in these pits should have shown so little signs of decay, but there can be no doubt about its being just as Mr. McMichael stated, as no one who knows him would question his veracity.

Mrs. Livingstone's Grave.

We are fifty miles from the mouth of the Zambesi, the mile-wide water shallow and brown, the low sandy banks fringed with alligators and wild birds. The great deltoid plain, yellow with sun-tanned reeds, and sparsely covered with trees, stretches on every side; the sun is blistering hot; the sky, as it will be for a month, a monotonous dome of blue—not a frank, bright blue like the Canadian sky, but a veiled blue, a suspicious and malarious blue, partly due to the perpetual heat haze and partly to the imagination, for the Zambezi is no friend to the European, and this wild region is heavy with depressing memories. This impression, perhaps, was heightened by the fact that we were to spend that night within a few yards of the place where Mrs. Livingstone died. Late in the afternoon we reached the spot—a low ruined hut a hundred yards from the river's bank with a broad verandah shading its crumbling walls. A grass-grown path straggled to the doorway, and the fresh print of a hippopotamus told how neglected the spot is now. Pushing the door open, we found ourselves in a long dark room, its mud floor broken into fragments, and the remains of native fires betraying its latest occupants. Turning to the right we entered a smaller chamber, the walls bare and stained, with two glassless windows facing the river. The evening sun, setting over the far-off Morumballa mountains, filled the room with its soft glow, and took our thoughts back to that Sunday evening twenty years ago, when in the same bedroom, at the same hour, Livingstone knelt over his dying wife, and witnessed the great sunset of his life. Under a huge baobab tree—a miracle of vegetable vitality and luxuriance—stands Mrs. Livingstone's grave. The picture in Livingstone's book represents the place as well kept and surrounded with neatly planted trees. But now it is an utter wilderness, matted with jungle grass and trodden by the beasts of the forest: and, as I looked at the forsaken mound and contrasted it with her husband's tomb in Westminster Abbey, I thought perhaps the woman's love which brought her to a spot like this might be not less worthy of immortality.

Spendthrift Luxuries.

The garden lunch, the latest and favorite form of entertaining at Lenox and Bar Harbor, is superseding the afternoon lawn party in the affections of the fashionables because it gives scope for so many more picturesque effects, costs very much more and is therefore more exclusive and delightful. The idea is to ask people at 1 o'clock and give them a good lunch, half in the house and half in the gardens, some under tents, some under trees and the older people on the verandas. A band plays under the trees while the feast goes on and sometimes the young people come in for a turn or two of the waltz in the long drawing rooms before they scatter for drives and afternoon teas.

A Birthday Present.

A boy was teasing his little brother about the shape of his nose, when the little fellow quietly remarked: "I can't help it; I didn't buy it myself—it was a birthday present."

"Men usually marry their opposites," said Cholly, reflectively. "That is true," said the old man, a little surprised at Cholly's unusual brilliancy. "All the married men I know have married members of the opposite sex."

WHERE IT IS HOT.

The Irtish Valley is the Hottest Place on Earth.

I laughed at a Russian officer in Omsk who told me that the heat in the valley of Irtish was often so intense as to cause nausea and fainting, and who advised me not to travel between 11 o'clock in the morning and 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the day was cloudless and hot. The idea of having a sunstroke in Siberia, and the suggestion not to travel there in the middle of the day, seemed to me so preposterous that I could not restrain a smile of amusement. He assured me, however, that he was talking seriously, and said that he had seen soldiers unconscious for hours after a fit of nausea and fainting, brought on by marching in the sunshine. He did not know sunstroke by name, and seemed to think that the symptoms which he described were peculiar effects of the Irtish valley heat, but it was evidently sunstroke that he had seen. At the station of the Voroninskaya, in the middle of this parched desert, we were overtaken by a furious hot sandstorm from the southwest, with a temperature of 103 degrees in the shade. The sand and fine, hot dust were carried to a height of a hundred feet, and drifted past us in dense, suffocating clouds, hiding everything from sight and making it almost impossible to breathe. Although we were riding with the storm, and not against it, I literally gasped for breath for more than two hours, and when we arrived at the station of Chreemshanka it would have been hard to tell, from an inspection of our faces, whether we were Kirghis or Americans—black men or white. I drank nearly a quart of cold milk, and even that did not fully assuage my fierce thirst. Mr. Frost, after washing the dust out of his eyes and drinking seven tumblers of milk, revived sufficiently to say: "If anybody thinks that it doesn't get hot in Siberia, just refer him to me!" At the station of Malo Krasnoryarskaya we left the Irtish to the right and saw it no more. Late that afternoon we reached the first foothills of the great mountain range of the Altai, and began the long, gradual climb to the Altai station. Before dark on the following day we were riding through cool, elevated Alpine meadows, where the fresh green grass was intermingled with blue bells, from spirea, gentians and delicate fringed pinks, and where the mountain tops over our heads were white, a thousand feet down, with freshly fallen snow. The change from the torrid African desert of the Irtish to this superb Siberian Switzerland was so sudden and so extraordinary as to be almost bewildering.—George Kennan in the Century.

Notes from the Orient.

The first tea crop is said to be about 200,000 half-chests less than last year. The teamen have made good profits on fine teas.

The treasury of China is said to be in a very exhausted state, owing to the money required for filling up the Honan breach and for the Emperor's marriage.

The Foochow Echo of June 9th says: We regret to learn that the squall of last Saturday caused a very serious accident in this city. It is stated that a very high fire-wall was blown down, burying under it a few houses and about eighteen people, mostly women and children.

The Japanese are becoming so fond of card playing that in Kioto alone over 340 people are kept employed in the manufacture of playing-cards, both Japanese and foreign, and the annual sales in Kioto amount to 53,557 yen.

A rather alarming outbreak of sporadic diarrhœa has occurred in Hong Kong. In the jail four or five deaths have occurred, and in the general community many natives and a few Europeans have succumbed. The unusually cool and wet weather and pollution of the streams are the principal causes.

The Straits Times says: The son of a Chinese headman at Banda has been studying law in Holland, and has passed all his examinations there. By last advice he has blossomed into a fully qualified lawyer. He has cut off his queue, donned European dress, and married a Dutch lady. His coming out to practice in Java will raise no small stir among European lawyers there, who do most business among Chinese clients. A Chinese competitor in the field would draw away a good many of their customers.

Sir Thomas Esmonde's Marriage.

The announcement that Sir Thomas Henry Grattan Esmonde is to wed Miss May Brady, the charming daughter of Judge Brady, has caused something of a sensation in social circles in this city. Parnell's handsome young ambassador came to this country so quietly, and was so retiring and unostentatious while here, that no one for a moment thought that the artful Irishman was planning to steal one of the prettiest and most accomplished young ladies in New York. Just how or when the young people met and courted is not known. Sir Thomas has landed possessions in Waterford County, Ireland, worth $10,000 a year. He comes of good patriotic stock. Henry Grattan, the Irish Demosthenes, probably the most distinguished of all Irish leaders, was his great grandfather, and some of the spirit of the great opponent of Castlereagh, and of the act that united Ireland with England, is inherited by Parnell's young lieutenant. Sir Thomas enjoys the distinction of being the youngest man, with a single exception, who ever sat in the House of Commons. Charles James Fox was a parliamentary leader before he attained his majority. Sir Thomas Henry Grattan Esmonde was elected to represent Waterford in the House before he was 23 years old. Although representing a Catholic constituency, he is a Protestant. Miss May Brady is the second daughter of Judge Brady, and a very beautiful and accomplished young woman, who is well known and admired in the social circles in which she moves.—New York letter in the Chicago Herald.

A Pointer for the Politicians.

A little girl, visiting Niagara with her father, and seeing the foam at the foot of the Falls, exclaimed: "Pa, how much soap it must take to make so much suds!"

A Georgia baby, not quite 2 years old, "has fallen over the foot of the bed 111 times."

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON

THURSDAY, SEPT. 6, 1888.

OUR EXHIBITION.

The East Grey Agricultural Society's fall show will be held in Flesherton on Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 24 and 25. On our local page will be found the announcement of the board of directors, and by which it may be seen that the list of special attractions will be of an exceptionally interesting character. The East Grey fall show has now become well established, and successful. The prizes are large, and the list of prizes lengthy. There is no reason to doubt that our fall fair of 1888 is going to be a particularly successful one in every particular. The magnanimity of the directors in providing, at their own expense, the two valuable cups to be competed for by lacrosse and baseball teams, is highly praiseworthy, and should be appreciated in a substantial manner, as no doubt it will, by an overflowing attendance of visitors.

Such being the case, we would urge our manufacturers and farmers to unite in insuring the still greater success of our home fair. It is a necessity; it is a recognized and substantial benefit to exhibitors, as well as those who are not exhibitors. New ideas of local interest are received; new energies are acquired and fostered in the community, and competition makes keen the ambition to excel in each particular branch. We place much more benefit upon the home fair than upon the larger, longer advertised concerns, such as the Industrial presents in Toronto. Patronize the foreign fairs if you will there is also much to be learned in them, as well as at home—but you, our exhibition concerns you most, reader. Let us make it interesting, then, if you have a little cash and time to spare, you can "take in" the outside world with a clear conscience.

Our editorial remarks of last week about station matters has called forth a letter from a gentleman in Toronto, which we would be glad [illegible] Such letters [illegible] vicinity, and we [illegible] Flesherton support [illegible] advocate [illegible] the station [illegible] long ago. We [illegible] like [illegible] ing to do anything in this matter, or are our public men [illegible] and [illegible] dozed that they cannot "stir their stumps," to use a homely expression? The present station facilities to Priceville are not such that it would be compelled to make any strenuous opposition; in fact Priceville people have expressed indifference in the matter, and say the removal of the station one mile further east would make no material difference to them. Considering the immense advantages to be gained, is it not criminal in us to display so much apathy in our own welfare. Let us be up and doing.

London has a new evening daily, the first number of which is before us. It is called The Evening Times, is printed in large type, has a neat appearance, and with a fair show of advertising. We notice, though, that it begins life by using "boiler plate" miscellany and story, but will probably discontinue that when it "gets on its feet," as it looks suspicious in a daily. We wish it abundant success.

By the way, the Toronto World uses the same "blacksmith" material, the wherefore and why we would like to have explained, as "Billy" and "Jim" have always prided themselves upon the newsy quality of their matter. Perhaps that latest circular, which does not come under the "injunction" head in Hoyle, and which the World has not mentioned in its columns, explains it.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

It once more becomes our painful duty to report the death of one of our loved ones, Miss Annie Buchanan, which sad event took place at the residence of her father, Mr. Wm. Buchanan, on Sunday morning, 26th ult. The deceased had been in delicate health since last winter and hopes were held out at one time of her ultimate recovery, but they were in vain. Her funeral took place on the following Monday afternoon and was largely attended by friends and well-wishers, who followed the remains to their last resting place in Irwin's burying grounds. A memorial service was held in the Wesley Church last Sunday by the Rev. J. W. Shilton, from Romans the 14th chapter and 7th and 8th verses: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself; for whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lords." The church was filled to the doors; every available space was occupied. The large attendance, both at the Funeral and Memorial service, showed the respect in which the deceased was held in this and surrounding neighborhood.

Priceville Items.

By our own prowler.

The new Presbyterian Church edifice is rapidly being closed in, and begins to present an apperance in keeping with the taste of the present age.

The removal of a large and dilapidated old building from the principal street, near the hotel, is a decided gain to the appearance of the village. Possibly before long a substantial structure may take its place and prove that somebody believes that Priceville has not seen its best days yet.

Mrs. Walker, of Toronto, paid a two days visit last week to her parents, Mr and Mrs Brown, of the postoffice. We are glad to state that Mr. Brown's foot is improving, and it is hoped his long confinement to the house is about to cease.

Miss Cordelia Reid of Rockford is spending a holiday with her parents not far from here.

Priceville needs a new cemetery, and on [illegible] the matter in hand while [illegible] sites are still available.

Autumnal tints are just beginning to impart to fields and woods a peculiar charm.

The New Station.

To the Editor of the Advance.

Dear Sir, Allow me to make a few remarks upon your railway facilities, of which you had an Editorial Note in last week's Advance. You said the station [illegible] burned some time ago, it would perhaps be the only chance Flesherton would have to bring it nearer. You are right. It is a chance in a lifetime. To look at Flesherton, one cannot help being forced to admit that it has a better chance than any other village around. Since the Valley Road has become an established fact, the best route for all grain and farm produce grown in Euphrasia and Collingwood townships is to come to Flesherton, on account of the said road leading to it. Then Osprey township's best market is Flesherton, on account of its excellent gravel road. Collingwood has seen its best days, and on account of the high rates charged by the Northern railway the markets along the C. P. R. can afford to pay a higher price for produce than Meaford, Thornbury, Collingwood, or any of the towns in that direction. Now then Mr. Editor, if the C. P. R. had its station in Flesherton instead of a mile and a half away, the village would soon outstrip any of its sister villages in every respect. But how is this to be brought about? The railroad company will not do it without assistance. The citizens at the station and Priceville will fight any move of the kind so that it depends largely on the township of Artemesia to move in the matter. Osprey will no doubt help. It is in their interest to do so, but it is the people of Artemesia, and especially of Flesherton, who have to get this change made. It will assuredly pay them to offer the Co'y. a certain amount of money to bend the track and build the station in the village. If it was brought as far as or into Mr. Varty's brickyard, then the money which is intended to straighten the road to the present station would go a long way towards paying for the construction of the work. It will be an insane thing to let the chance go by, without trying to get the much needed change. Yours respectfully.

G. W. L.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Another daring burglary was committed on wednesday night on the premises of Mrs. Jordan, Epping. An entrance was effected through the window on the north side by the removal of a pane of glass and drawing the nails that fastened down the window, and hoisting it. A pile of dishes which lay on the window sill inside was carefully removed and set down outside. The burglars seemed to be sociable fellows, for not being satisfied with carrying off ready-made clothing, boots, suspenders, and three or four dollars in cash, they went to the cellar, got some pies, brought them up, and ate them in the store. It would appear that the boots were required for their own personal use for the lamps were set down on the floor while they fitted on the boots. It is surmised that the intruders were pretty familiar with the premises, as the cash they took had been kept in a small vessel in the postoffice, also their getting the pies.

Since writing the above I have heard that Mrs. Jordan's loss is much greater than at first estimated, exceeding $100.

The new bridge over the Beaver near this place is approaching completion, under the able and skilful management of Mr. J. R. Fawcett, contractor.

The repairs on the fourth line at "Kerr's Elbow" are creditable to the reeve, road commissioners, and Mr. Lang, who did the work. For years that was a dangerous place, especially in winter.

A meteor of dazzling splendor appeared about 9.30 o'clock Wednesday night in our zenith, passing from south-east to north-west. It presented the appearance of a powerful streak of phosphoric light.

M. R. H.

M. Richardson & Co. invite inspection of their unusually large and attractive stock of fall goods, opened this week.

Trial of Binders.

We, the undersigned, were present at a field trial of binders on the farm of Mr Geo. Steward near Flesherton, on Tuesday, 4th inst., between the Patterson and Noxon binders, and would say that the Patterson is the lightest draught and makes the best sheaf, and is, we think, the best constructed:

A. STEWART,	SAMUEL PEDLAR, jr.,
H. CULLEN,	WM. BEECROFT,
WM. MCMURRAY,	J. GILCHRIST,
AARON TELFER,	GEO. WARDROPE,
JACOB HOLLY,	JOHN TELFER,
WM. PEDLAR,	JOHN HARGRAVE,
H. PIPER.	J. HICKLING.

Women's boots and slippers, very cheap, at M. Richardson & Co's discount sale. SEE THEM.

Funny He Didn't Break.

The precocity of some children is remarkable. A friend of ours has a little boy who will be a philosopher some day if his bump of acquisitiveness keeps on growing at its present rate. The little fellow's father is a printer, which, of course, explains his cuteness.

Freddie's mamma had been giving him his regular Sunday lesson from the Bible. She told him that God made all the little boys, and girls, and everybody. Freddie was quiet for some time. Finally he said:

"Mamma, does God live 'way up there in the sky?"

"Yes, dear."

And he made me up there?"

"Yes."

"Then it's funny I didn't break in two when he frowed me down, ain't it, mamma?"

R. T. of T.

The members of Fountain Council No. 146 are earnestly requested to meet in their hall, Sproule's block, at 6 o,clock p.m. on Sunday the 9th inst. and to proceed from thence to the Methodist church.

Married.

Rutledge—Buggin—At Methodist parsonage Markdale, on the 3d September, by the Rev. Geo. Buggin, C.W. Rutledge, editor Standard, to Ada Auggin, daughter of the pastor.

General News.

China refusess to ratify the American treaty restricting Chinese immigration.

The Retaliation Bill was reported back to the House of Representatives on Saturday.

All the members of the Salvation Army at Newmarket were arrested on Saturday night on the charge of obstructing the street.

Several firemen were buried and burned to death in a burning building in Baltimore on Saturday morning.

Hotels in the North-west possessing certain prescribed accommodation are now allowed to import and sell liquor containing four per cent. of alchohol.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 20 years standing by a simple remedy, will send a description FREE to any Person who applies to Nicholson, 30 St James St. Montreal.

Hon. C. Edwards Lester,

Late U. S. Consul to Italy, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," "America's Advancement," etc., etc., etc., writes as follows:—

New York, August 1, 1886
122 E. 27th St.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.,

Gentlemen:—A sense of gratitude and the desire to render a service to the public impel me to make the following statements:

My college career, at New Haven, was interrupted by a severe cold which so enfeebled me that, for ten years, I had a hard struggle for life. Hemorrhage from the bronchial passages was the result of almost every fresh exposure. For years I was under treatment of the ablest practitioners without avail. At last I learned of which I used (moderately and in small doses) at the first recurrence of a cold or any chest difficulty, and from which I invariably found relief. This was over 25 years ago. With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL within 24 hours.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to vast numbers of persons, while in acute cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light but frequent doses. Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is in any house. I speak earnestly because I feel earnestly. I have known many cases of apparently confirmed bronchitis and cough, with loss of voice, particularly among clergymen and other public speakers, perfectly cured by this medicine. Faithfully yours,

A Priceless Blessing

C. EDWARDS LESTER.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STONE FLOUR!

STONE

FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Desires to call on the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr Loucks would inform the public that he has never sold roller flour, and never intends to, as the mill he has always had the one door to hand and it has since last winter, all rumor to the contrary notwithstanding.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of Hugh Knott, Jr., Lot 12, Con. 3, Euphrasia, on or about July 21, four heifers, of two year olds and 1 yearling. Owner may have them by proving property and paying charges.

0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour		$1 75	to	4 75
Fall Wheat		$0 78	to	0 80
Spring Wheat		0 78		0 80
Barley		0 50		0 55
Oats		0 45		0 45
Peas		0 60		0 60
Butter		0 15		0 15
Eggs, fresh		0 14		0 14
Potatoes bush		0 40		0 50
Pork		6 50		6 50
Hay per ton		7 00		8 00
Hides		4 50		5 50
Wool		19		23
Sheepskins		0 50		1 06
Geese		0 06		0 06
Turkeys		0 10		0 10
Chickens per pair		0 25		0 30
Ducks per pair		0 50		0 60

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD

Special Attention paid to Collections, Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Bank of Toronto.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's Block. Residence, Wm. Wilkins'

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.C.P.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.C.P.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

WILL VISIT FLESHERTON, ON [illegible] HOTEL [illegible] at moderate rates.

REFERENCES BY KIND PERMISSION TO [illegible]

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, [illegible] Conveyancer, Auctioneer, Collector and sale of lands, Agent for C.C.C. Co. and P. P. B. W. Society. Money to loan at [illegible] per cent. MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Town or Farm Property [illegible]

S. DAVIDGE,

Flesherton

W. J. BELLAMY,

IMP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE ACT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared [illegible] Interest [illegible] Money to loan at [illegible]

E. J. Sproule,

POST MASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Agent for Insurance and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to

GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,

Or to

J. G. C. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Jno. F. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

Call and see PARLOR SUITES

NOW BEING SHOWN AT

Flesherton Furniture Warerooms.

Quite new in design. The best ever brought into this section, and at prices lower than cheap, trashy goods that have been offered by country dealers in the past.

A Large Stock of

Cane and Perforated Chairs

in a variety of styles, at from

60c EACH. EACH.

Beautiful Cane Seat with carved backs, $1 each.

Ladies' Rockers, perforated, $1.35

Our stock of Bedsteads, Cots, Cribs, Cradles, Cupboards, Bureaus, Tables, in fact every line, has been still further marked down. Our premises are large but our stock is larger.

BOUGHT CLOSE!

AND

Well Selected.

A few Children's Carriages to be sold at a small advance on cost. One or two more Express Wagons at cost.

OUR

UNDERTAKING

Establishment

We are striving to bring to the very front in the County, and is acknowledged to be the lowest in price.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island, the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after [illegible] the 9th day of October next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information relative to the works can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms [illegible]

[illegible]

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

A. P. BRADLEY,

Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August 1888.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for the St Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE 25TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal. And for the deepening and enlargement of the summit level of the Cornwall Canal. The construction of a new lock at each of the three interior lock stations on the Cornwall Canal between the town of Cornwall and Maple Grove; the deepening and widening of the channel-way of the canal; construction of bridges, etc.

A map of each of the localities, together with plans and specifications of the respective works, can be seen on and after TUESDAY, THE 11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, at this office, for all the works, and for the respective works at the following mentioned places:

For the works at Galops at the Lock-keeper's house, Galops. For deepening the summit level of the Cornwall Canal, at Dickenson's Landing; and for the new locks, etc., at Lock stations Nos. 18, 19 and 20, at the Town of Cornwall. Printed forms of tender can be obtained for the respective works at the places then [illegible]

[illegible]

Department of Railways and Canals.

FLESHERTON Implement Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broad-cast Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Rakes,	Iron Harrows,
Waggons,	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Buggies,	Plows,
Sleighs,	Scufflers,
Cutters,	Turnip Drills,
Fanning Mills,	Land Rollers.
Spring Tooth Cultivators,

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

Owen Sound baseball club "waxed" the Walkerton club last week to the tune of 9 to 6.

Shelburne is going to have waterworks. It carried a bylaw last week for the issue of $12,000 debentures for that purpose.

Mount Forest sends a girl missionary to the Telegu district, in India. The lady, Miss Fanny Stovel, left last week for her far-away field of labor.

A Grand Valley church choir was suspended for a month because they misbehaved themselves while returning from a special service at Farmington.

Mr. T. McGirr, of Egremont, has corn 9 ft. 1 inch high. Mr. R. Lethbridge, of Owen Sound, goes him nearly two feet better by producing a stock 10 feet 9½ inches high. These are tall stories, but true.

Orangeville had two fires last week. Wm. Judge's store and stock, and Miss Kyle's millinery establishment were destroyed. Loss on both about $24,000; insured for $11,000. Another fire, of incendiary origin, in the jewelry store of Mr. Acheson, was extinguished without any loss.

The Pickering News man is wrestling with big cucumbers now. The last one he dissected was 12½ inches long and had a pedigree attached. Its grandfather was the Duke of Edinburgh's head gardener, and it was exported by a Mr. Green. It was a Green cucumber. The News man appears to be as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

We expect to hear of an editorial catastrophe in Durham within the next few days. The editor of the Chronicle is still after the unfortunate who lost his intended bride last week. He satirises the poor wretch thus: —"The Varneyite who was jilted last week has his eyes on a Glenelg girl, said to be worth $7000. It is to be hoped that he will be more successful than in his last venture."

"Green corn" socialbles are the latest fad with Hanover people. The Hanover Post says the one to be held there this week is "the last and only one to be held this season." Unless green corn has lost the properties it contained when we hooked and roasted it in the dim long ago, we are much mistaken if Hanover people don't find it the "last and only one" wanted in several seasons.

While sweeping out one of the [illegible] on Monday, Mrs. [illegible] W. Smith [illegible] Mt. Forest, was greatly startled [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] would have to follow that white streak [illegible] but in front there is nothing to point the way. Then there fell a silence broken shortly by the familiar "yum-up" [illegible] of the party. [Meaford Mirror.

Orangeville is now connected by telephone "with all towns of importance within a radius of fifty miles." So says the Dufferin Advertiser. Anybody with an ordinary "readiness" at comprehension will understand the importance of this announcement. We lived in Orangeville at one time, but the readiness was not so marked at that period as it is now. We believe this is owing to the presence of so many fire bugs within its limits. But why didn't you spell it "redness," at once, Mr. Advertiser?

The London Times has come to the conclusion that Retaliation will work its own cure without any action on the part of Canada.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever [illegible] in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES [illegible] Gallery. [illegible] all particulars as to Prices [illegible] obtained.

MRS. BULMER.

[illegible]TON.

HEARD'S Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO

[illegible]

D. McTAVISH. R. P. LEGATE.

BOOTS & SHOES!

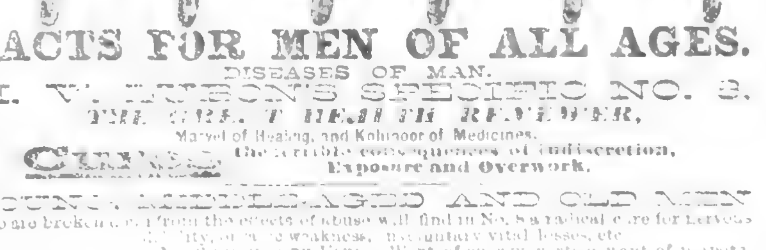
ALWAYS ON HAND.

A LARGE VARIETY

TO CHOOSE FROM AT

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.



FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8.

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

CURES The terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, often innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally, from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

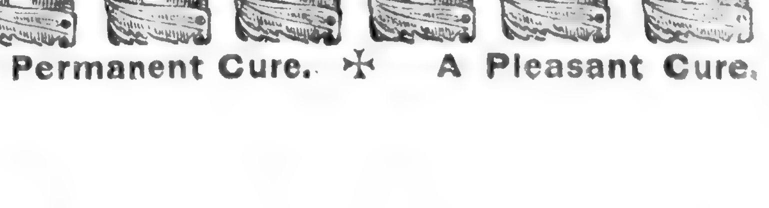
A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

The Friend of Ages Ago.

"Should auld acquaintance be forgot?"
—Yes, if you'd just as lief as not.
—John Paul.

There are several things that trouble one's age,
And work for a man much woe,
Such as gout—and doubt—debts that will run,
And rhyme that will not flow.
But when all has been said, do we not most dread,
Of the many bores that we know,
That ubiquitous ban, the woman or man,
That knew one "ages ago?"

In youth—you were young; and foolish perhaps;
You flirted with high and with low,
Had one love on the hill, and one down by the mill
Yet never were wicked, ah, no!
And this friend knew you in a far-away way,
In a way that was only so, so—
Just enough to give hue to the cry about you
"Oh, I knew him ages ago!"

You are married now and quite circumspect,
Your pace, like your speech, is slow,
You tell in a bank, keep silent in church
Are one it is proper to know;
But this vigilant friend will never consent
That your virtues unchallenged shall go—
Though she never demurs, but only avers
That she knew you "ages ago."

And sure I am that if ever I win
To the place where I hope to go—
To sit among saints—perhaps the chief—
In raiment as white as snow,
Before me and busy among the blest
Perhaps in the self-same row
I shall find my ban, this woman or man,
Who knew me "ages ago."

And shall hear the voice I so oft have heard—
Do you think it is sweet and low?
As it whispers still with accent shrill
The refrain that so well I know;
"Oh, you needn't be setting much store by him,
This new angel's not much of a show,
He may fool some saint who isn't acquaint—
But I knew him 'ages ago!'"

Whatever Is—Is Best.

I know as my life grows older,
And mine eyes have clearer sight,
That under each rank wrong somewhere
There lies the root of right;
That each sorrow has its purpose,
By the sorrowing oft unguessed;
But as sure as the sun brings morning,
Whatever is—is best.

I know that each sinful action,
As sure as night brings shade,
Is somewhere, some time punished
Though the hour be long delayed.
I know that the soul is aided
Sometimes by the heart's unrest,
And to grow means often to suffer,
But whatever is—is best.

I know there is no error
In the great supernal plan,
And all things work together
For the final good of man.
And I know when my soul speeds onward
In its grand eternal quest,
I shall cry as I look back earthward,
"Whatever is—is best."

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

It was a weary time for all, this long struggle between life and death. Sir Hugh's constitution was naturally a strong one, or he would have succumbed long before, and his frame offered a desperate resistance to the inroads of disease. Neither Mr. Litton nor the prison surgeon gave any hope, or had any fear—since by far the greatest mercy to him would be death—that he would recover; but there was an acknowledged dread in their minds that he might linger on until the sessions, and so stand his trial. Shirley had no such dread; she seemed certain that he would die before the time appointed for the next sessions, and that he would pass on to that higher judgment which can never err.

Sir Hugh Glynn's arrest and imprisonment caused a great excitement in the fashionable world—a far greater excitement indeed than his supposed murder had caused. The whole story was so romantic and mysterious, so many rumors were afloat about the strange circumstances of his marriage and the reason of the unfortunate valet's power over him, that the sensational papers reaped a splendid harvest and their contributors were at no loss for matter. Hardly a day passed but some new and startling facts, facts which had but very slight foundation, were brought to light, and Lady Gynn's beauty and grace and strange disappearance and stranger reappearance were widely commented upon. It might have troubled Shirley had she read all these thrilling paragraphs; but she never glanced at a newspaper during these sad days. Her whole thoughts were given to the dying man dying with such a stain upon a name which had been honored; dying, the last representative of an ancient and noble family, in a prison-cell!

But, great as the excitement was in the great world, it was hardly greater than Lady Eastwell's sorrow at the thought that she had been indirectly the means of Sir Hugh's arrest. At first her knowledge of the circumstances of Shirley's marriage and of Latreille's part therein had made her suspect that the latter knew more of the murder than had transpired. There had been no mention of his name at Guy's trial; but, after Major Stuart's acquittal, which had incensed Alice, who firmly believed him guilty, she had set the cleverest detectives to work to discover Latreille's whereabouts. That he was an accomplice was not impossible, she thought; she knew him as a daring and unscrupulous man, and she felt sure that if he could be found he would throw some light upon the subject. How the detectives succeeded she now knew; they had thought to find Latreille when Sir Hugh gave himself up as the murderer, and Guy's innocence was clearly proved.

Alice was almost despairing when the tidings reached her. She had loved Sir Hugh Glynn as well as it was possible for her to love any one, and she had hated Guy as his murderer with a bitter, vindictive hatred. That Shirley—who, after all, had done her cousin no wrong—should suffer, troubled her little; and even at the time of the murder her sorrow at Sir Hugh's fate had been greatly lessened by the thought that the death should be atoned for. But now, when all had come to light, the wretched woman saw how greatly mistaken she had been, and how cruelly she had wronged Major Stuart and Shirley, and she saw in the full light of day into what a fatal abyss her jealousy of Shirley had plunged her, and her grief was very profound.

The thought of Sir Hugh dying in a prison haunted her day and night; and even a letter which, at her husband's request, Shirley wrote to her gave her but little consolation. In a few gently worded earnest lines Lady Glynn begged her, in her husband's name and her own, not to regret what she had done, for it had been Sir Hugh's fixed intention to give himself up to justice. She was in no way to blame, and she must not blame herself for a moment. Sir Hugh was quite at peace, the note said, and they sometimes talked of the old days at Fairholme Court. And the letter closed with an earnest entreaty for forgiveness for the shame which he brought upon all those in any way connected with him, and with every kind wish for her happiness and her husband's.

Alice read it with floods of bitter repentant tears, and her agitation and excitement were such that they brought on an attack of low fever. As soon as she was convalescent Lord Eastwell took her abroad, and the illness was the beginning of a happier life for him, for his imperious wife grew gentler and humbler and her suffering did not bear only bitter fruit, but the flowers of charity and gentleness and patience bloomed in her heart.

At Easton the strange revelation was read with mingled feelings, and Lucie Grey now the happy wife of her father's curate, an earnest single-minded young clergyman of good means who worked as a labor of love—hastened to Erindale to Shirley. Ada was abroad with her husband; but it was very pleasant to Shirley to renew her old friendship with those who had been so good to her in her misery, who had seemed then to be her only friends.

So the days became weeks, and February set in, cold and snowy. In March the sessions would come round; but before March another visitant came to the quiet cell, a visitant the shadow of whose wings had hovered long above it.

It was drawing near the hour for Shirley's daily visit, and the fire was burning cheerily in the grate. Guy Stuart was sitting by the bed on which Hugh lay dressed—he always insisted on being dressed, although the process was a slow and exhausting one. He was raised upon pillows, and breahting with great difficulty, and the dews of a great agony were upon his brow; but he was easier now, although the last paroxysms of coughing had been terrible, and had shaken him with horrible violence, and he was but half conscious for a time.

Presently he turned his languid eyes upon Guy, and a little gleam like smile lighted them for a moment—lighted them, then faded.

"It is almost her time, is it not?" he said feebly.

"Yes, dear old fellow, only a few moments more."

"It will be the last time, Guy. Nay, don't look so grieved, old friend. Why should you? It is better as it is. Lift me a little—I can talk more easily so; I have something to say to you before she comes."

Guy raised him gently, with all a woman's tenderness in his strong hands, and as he did so Hugh's blue eyes went to his face with a look of grateful affection.

"Dear Guy," he said unsteadily, "how good you have been to me all my life long! I won't say anything more about forgiveness, old friend, because you have proved how completely you have forgiven. Let me tell you rather what visions I have seen; what dreams I have dreamed, while I have been lying sleepless here.'

His weak hands clasped the strong fingers more closely, his eyes, with the same fond gratitude, rested still upon his friend's face; but Guy's own eyes grew very dim and his lips quivered as he listened.

"I have seen in the future, Guy," he said softly, "a happy home brightened by mutual love and joy and peace, a home which I am not forgotten, but where I am remembered sometimes with compassion and pity - ah, don't interrupt me, Guy! Is it not better to be remembered thus than to be recalled with execration, which I merited? I see in this home, old friend, two persons whom I have wronged, oh, so cruelly, but whom through all my madness I have loved and honored, and I see them perfectly happy in their mutual love and perfect trust! I see the husband—he has your face, Guy—strong, brave and true, loving and protecting, striving, by a tenderness which never swerves or falters, to make his wife forget the misery she has suffered through me. I see the wife—she has a face whose loveliness made me mad once, old fellow—loving and honoring, trusting and looking up to a man worthy of all her tenderness, and making the sunshine of his home and of his life. It is such a pleasant picture that I should like to linger over it, Guy; but—I dare not!"

"Hugh, dear old friend, cease," Guy said gently, the tears standing in his gray eyes, his lips quivering almost beyond the power of speech.

"Is not the picture pleasant in your eyes, Guy?" asked the dying man, conquering his difficulty of breathing and of utterance in his desire to continue. "Or are your eyes so dim with watching in this little room that they cannot see it? Let me go on, Guy; and do not grieve so bitterly. Can't you guess the pleasure those dreams have given me? I see, too, in that happy home, a pale young mother lying with a child in her arms, who is your son, Guy," he resumed after a moment's pause. "I see the stately old house bright with restless little children, whose swift feet scamper down the galleries, and whose sweet gay voices echo through the old rooms, filling them with mirth and laughter. Guy, sometimes in the old days, before this heavy trouble came upon us, I used to think that if Heaven had given us a little child things might have been different; but, oh, how thankful I am now that—"

His voice failed him, and he sunk back upon the pillows. There was a long silence, broken only by his struggling breathing, before he spoke again.

"Will my dreams be realized, Guy?" he said wistfully.

"Hugh, dear old fellow!" was all Guy could say, as he lifted his head for a moment and looked at him.

"You love her still, old friend?"

"As I have always loved her."

"That is well. And she loves you; you will be very happy."

"I will do my best," Guy said tremulously; and a faint glad smile parted the pale lips.

There was something inexpressibly pathetic and touching in the thought of the dying man thus planning a life of happiness for those whom he had so cruelly wronged. Strong man as he was, Guy Stuart had some difficulty in restraining his tears.

"It is almost time now?" murmured Sir Hugh, restlessly, after a few moments. "She is not late, Guy?"

"No—oh, no! She is never late, Hugh."

"Never late!" he repeated softly. "No, Heaven bless her."

Almost as the words passed his lips the door opened softly, and Shirley entered. She was very pale, paler even than her wont, Mr. Litton had told her how near the end was; but there was a steady brightness in the eyes which went so earnestly to the pale face on the pillows, and which saw the sudden wonderful brightness which came over it as Sir Hugh's dying gaze dwelt upon her.

"Dear Hugh"—there was an infinite tenderness in the sweet voice as she bent over him—"how is it with you?"

"It is well, my darling," he answered, softly, weakly lifting her hand to his lips in his usual caress of tender greeting, while his wife touched his brow with her lips, and felt, with a quick pang, how icy cold it was already.

"See what I have brought you!" she said cheerfully. "Are not these lovely, Hugh?"

They were some fragrant hot-house flowers, and they seemed to Hugh Glynn to bring some of the freshness and beauty of the earth which he would never see again. His eyes rested on them with a great sadness and an intense longing.

"They are lovely," he said, "and so sweet!"

She held them up to him, and he inhaled their fragrance and touched them with his languid fingers tenderly, almost as if they had been living and could feel his touch. Shirley watched him with quivering lips.

"Madgie sent them, Hugh, with her love," she said.

"Did she? That was good of her, the pretty child! She is like a flower herself, a bonny English rose. The time has seemed long, Shirley," he went on wistfully, looking at her.

"Have you been waiting, Hugh?" she said sorrowfully.

"I am always waiting for you, Shirley."

She bent over him tenderly, putting back with gentle hand his hair from his damp brow.

"I will not leave you again, Hugh," she whispered; and a wonderful brightness came over his face.

"Is it indeed so?" he said eagerly. "You may stay with me?"

"Yes; they have given me leave."

"Ah!" There was a slight pause; then he added softly, "I understand!"

She smoothed his pillows, making him easier in his rest, and, having given him something to moisten the parched lips, she sat down by him where his eyes could rest upon her.

"Do not go, Guy," he whispered presently, when Major Stuart made a movement to depart. "Stay with us—we need you."

And Guy stayed.

The minutes went by and grew into hours in the little white-washed room, where it grew dark so early, and the dying eyes rarely left Shirley's face, except to rest for a moment upon the flowers.

"I am glad I saw her once," he said, struggling against the increasing weakness. "She will make Jack happy."

"Yes, dear Hugh."

"I am glad I had an opportunity of thanking her for her goodness to you, Shirley," he murmured. "Heaven bless her for it—Jack's pretty little sweetheart!"

After that there was a long silence, during which Hugh lay back with closed eyes, the ashy-gray pallor deepening, and the shadows darkening round his lips.

"You are not suffering, Hugh?" Shirley whispered once.

"No, darling," he answered, opening his eyes and letting them rest upon her with ineffable love. "I am past all suffering now."

"And—and you are not afraid?"

"Afraid? No, my dearest. I am so tired; and the thought of rest is so grateful to me. I feel as if I were travelling to meet a friend, Shirley, and as if I were footsore and weary after the long and dreary road; but the end is so near now—the journey is almost done."

He slept for a little, and, when he next spoke, the short rest seemed to have refreshed him, for his voice was a trifle stronger, and not so husky.

"There is one thing, Gu , I want to say to you," he said earnestly—so earnestly that Shirley's eyes filled. "It has been on my lips so often; but somehow things seem to drift away from me, and I forget. Guy, will you—I am leaving all my cares to you, dear fellow—will you see if there is any one belonging to that poor fellow to whom you can make any poor atonement?"

"I will make every possible search, Hugh. Trust me."

"Thank you, old friend. I do not think there is anything else," he said wearily. "And nothing troubles me now," he added, in a moment, "but the remembrance of the pain I have given you, my darling."

"Do not let that trouble you, Hugh; forget it now, even as I have," she said earnestly.

"I cannot forget it, dear," he murmured, with the same weariness. "It is always present with me—present with me oftener than the look on that poor fellow's dead face which haunted me so terribly at first."

"Hugh, will you not try to think of other things now?" she whispered tremulously.

"I will think—as I have thought so often of late, my dearest—of the visions I have seen—the visions of which I have told Guy, and of which he will speak to you some day."

He looked at his friend for a moment with a grateful smiling regard; then he turned his face toward Shirley, and she rested her head on the pillow beside his.

The end was drawing near now. Presently the doctor came. He stayed a few moments, and administered a restorative which lessened the difficulty of breathing; and Sir Hugh thanked him faintly for all his kindness and patience ere he went away again.

In the stone passage without he met Captain Graham coming toward him.

"It is a question of minutes now," said the surgeon, in answer to the questioning look. "He has not half an hour to live."

"How does she bear it?"

"Bravely. I think her face looks the face of an angel just now."

His face touched with a deep compassion, the governor passed on, and entered the cell. Hugh glanced at him with startled eyes; he was lying now with his head supported on Shirley's arm, and his hand closed unconsciously over her fingers as Captain Graham entered.

"You will not take her away?" he said, with pale lips.

"No—oh, no!" was the immediate answer.

"Thank you. You have been very good to me. Will you take my hand?"

Instantly Captain Graham took the proffered fingers in a friendly clasp. Sir Hugh smiled faintly, thanked him again, and then turned once more to his wife.

The Governor of Adinbrooke Castle had seen and would probably see many sad sights in the years he had spent or would spend within the walls of the old prison. He had seen agony and woe and defiance and terror, but he had seen no sight which had touched him so deeply as this; no scene had ever passed before his eyes so full of sad significance and pathos, and a mist came between him and the group by the bed on which the firelight fell, touching Sir Hugh's face as he lay back upon the pillows, and lingering on the soft folds of Shirley's velvet dress and on her bent, uncovered head, while Guy knelt in the shadow, and the fragrance from the bright-hued flowers rose sweetly upon the air. Captain Graham was not an impressionable man, but to him in after-years as well as to Guy the scent of stephanotis or a glimpse of its white starry blossoms always brought back that scene.

Presently, when the governor had left them, the chaplain of the prison entered, a gentle white-haired clergyman, a fitting bearer of the Master's message to the sin-sick souls among whom he labored so patiently and untiringly. As he stood by Shirley's side, he put his hand upon her head with a murmured blessing. He knew all her story; for he had been constantly with Hugh during the past three weeks, and the latter had received his ministrations with gratitude and earnest penitence. He greeted him now with a smile and a few murmured words of thanks; then his eyes came back to rest once more on Shirley's beloved face, never to leave it again.

It was an evidence of Sir Hugh's deep penitence and humiliation that all this time he had never called Shirley by the name of wife; nor had he kissed the sweet tender lips which had spoken only words of gentleness to him since that Christmas night. He was not worthy, he felt with bitter pain; and sometimes, when she bent over him to put her lips to his brow, he shrunk from her as if the touch brought pain. But now, as his weakness increased he moved his head feebly, so that it should rest upon her breast; and she supported him with unfailing gentleness.

"Do you suffer, Hugh?"

"No, my dearest."

His voice was so low and faint now that only she, quite close to him as she was, could hear the words, and, as she bent over him again, the clear silvery tones of her voice reached his failing senses, and the peaceful expression grew upon his face. She was repeating to him softly the words of Him who was giving her comfort now in this dread hour, the words of the Great Physician who came not to those who were whole, but the ailing and sick-laden and weary, whose hands were waiting even then to open the prison doors that were never to be barred again, whose death had paid all ransom due. No sweeter, truer death-bed message was ever given; and even the old clergyman felt his eyes fill with tears at the perfect faith and trust and love which the words evinced.

And the shadow of the hovering wings drew nearer and nearer as each minute went by.

"Shirley!"

The heavy head resting upon her bosom lay still and helpless now; only the great eyes raised to his face, and never moving thence, gave token that he lived.

"Yes, dear Hugh."

"The end is drawing nearer; it is very dark, is it not?"

"Evening is coming on, dear."

"I can hardly see your dear face, Shirley. My darling, I never dared to hope that such happiness as this should be mine—that I should die in your arms."

"You are happy, Hugh?"

"Quite happy."

The words parted the pale lips, but were uttered with difficulty; the failing eyes never moved from her face, so full of compassion and tenderest pity.

"Is Guy there?" he murmured, after a minute's silence.

"Yes, Hugh—yes, dear fellow! What can I do for you?"

"Do you remember some lines we read together long ago and liked—some lines from Sintram about death? You will not have forgotten; Guy, let me hear them now."

There was a momentary pause as Guy recalled the words, and with them the place where he had read them first—Hugh Glynn's luxurious college rooms, with their books and flowers and the open piano at which Hugh had been sitting when Guy first read the words.

"Have—you—forgotten, Guy?"

"No, dear Hugh." And softly and clearly Guy repeated the lines:

"When death is coming near,
And thy heart shrinks with fear,
And thy limbs fail,
Then raise thy hands and pray
To Him who smooths the way
Through the dark vale.

Seest thou the eastern 'dawn,
Hear'st thou in the red morn
The angel's song?
Oh, lift thy dro ping head,
Thou who in gloom and dread,
Hast lain so long!

"Death comes to set thee free,
Oh, meet him cheerily
As thy true friend.
And all thy fears shall cease
And in eternal peace
Thy penance end!"

The death-dews were gathering upon Hugh Glynn's forehead; the dying eyes, almost blind, almost unseeing now, still looked upward at Shirley's face.

"Shirley, my friend—has come; will you—this once, my darling? It will be the first—and the last—time."

She understood him, and, stooping instantly, put her lips to his in one long last kiss. When she raised her head there was a smile upon his face which lingered there.

"Hugh—oh, Hugh!"

But even her voice had no power to call him back from the goal which he had reached. As their lips had met the overshadowing wings had touched him, his head fell back, his eyes closed. He had come to the end of the journey.

In the whitewashed prison cell, with flowers on his breast, and a faint smile upon his lips, the erring, sinful wanderer lay at rest.

* * * *

So it happened that the sensational newspapers never reported the trial to which they had looked forward so eagerly, and only a quiet little paragraph appeared announcing Sir Hugh Glynn's death in Adinbrooke Castle, and making public his confession of the crime which he had committed, and for which his suffering must have atoned in the eyes of his fellow-men. He had stood at no earthly tribunal, no earthly judge had summed up the particulars of his crime; but to the Judge who is all-merciful, all-loving, those who mourned him most deeply left him, with contrite and grateful hearts.

* * * *

The June roses had bloomed and faded and summer had twice succeeded summer before Guy Stuart came back from a tour abroad, the beginning of which had been taken up with researches for any kindred or relatives of the unfortunate man who had met his death on the rocks at Easton. Every effort had failed, and therefore even the poor atonement of gifts and money was impossible; so Guy, having discharged his duty, pushed onward in his travels, biding his time as patiently as he might until he could return to England and ask the woman he loved so dearly to crown his life with the light and glory of her love.

(To be continued.)

DANGER IN EATING BERRIES.

Seeds and Pits Which Often Produce Physical Ailments.

Can people swallow the seeds and pits of fruit with impunity? It is a topic that may be more important than others of more apparent weight. The slightest amount of physiological knowledge might be supposed to bar the swallowing of cherry stones, yet a young woman died in this neighborhood the other day from peritonitis caused by such indulgence. This violent form of seed swallowing, however, may be considered as a little apart from the real inquiry, since it is not exactly common, though doubtless much sickness and not a few casualties are caused by it. But what of smaller seed-swallowing? The country has been startled by the prostration of Congressman Randall, and it seems to be proved that the disaster was, at least in part, occasioned by Mr. Randall's over-indulgence in berries in his particular body condition. Doctors tell us that the common physical trouble under which Mr. Randall labors is always more noticeable in berry season than at other times of the year, the seeds being the aggravating influence. It is not the size of these foreign substances that is the consideration, but their bulk when swallowed in quantity. One would hesitate about swallowing the small handful of pits contained in a moderate bunch of grapes (they make quite a formidable showing), yet they are, all the same, swallowed in eating the grapes, and possibly pack in the stomach or bowels, an entirely indigestible mass of woody fibre. As to yet smaller seeds the process is precisely similar, depending only on the quantity of such food eaten. The seeds of blackberries are enormous in size and quantity compared with the pulp, and in eating a comfortably large saucerful of this fruit one swallows the equivalent in seeds of those of a large portion of grapes, or of a number of cherry stones. But are we then to bar small fruit as a diet? Scarcely, but more prudence can be exercised. They should be eaten in moderation, early in the day rather than at night, and with the greatest caution, if at all, by persons in the physical condition of Mr. Randall. The rejoinder may be made that this stony dissipation has been going on for ages; so it has, and much mischief must have marched hand in hand with it. It is clear, at least, that persons with impaired alimentary organs should make the works of those parts as easy as possible, and not load them with quantities of foreign indigestible matter.—New York Evening Telegram.

He Was Unacquainted With History.

A good many years ago a Scotchman and an Englishman fell into a warm dispute about the privileges resulting to each country from the Union, each of them divesting his own country entirely of any share of them. At length the Scot safely observed that if the English had no advantage by the Union why were they so forward in promoting it, and why were the Scots so backward to agree to it? "Why, sir, as to the former, because it freed them from the devastations committed by their plundering parties; and, as to the latter, because it deprived them of the rich booties which they received from England at the expiration of every temporary truce." "Ay, ay, was that the way? I did not know—I'm unacquainted with history; but what the d——l had the English ado but to wear them back?" "Why, sir, at a fair engagement, in open war, they never could stand us; but, having their own mountains and forests so near for a safe retreat, it was impossible to prevent their plundering parties from committing frequent depredations." "Ay, ay, I did not know these things," said the Scot, "and were the English too hard for them at a fair engagement?" "Indeed, sir, they were. The best and bravest of the Scots allowed of that." "Ay, ay, I'm unacquainted with history, but it is believed to have been otherwise where I live." "Where," said the Englishman, "do you live?" "At Bannockburn!" "Hem—" Not another word ensued. The subject entirely dropped, and the shrewd Caledonian sat squirting in the fire as if he meant nothing by the answer.

A Nursery Yarn Refuted.

A little girl came to her grandfather the other day with a trouble weighing on her mind. "Auntie says the moon's made of green cheese, and I don't believe it." "Don't you believe it? Why not?" "Because I've been looking in the Bible, and found out that the moon is not made of green cheese, for the moon was made before the cows."

Wife—John, I had a fearful fall this morning.

Husband—How was that?

"I was going down the cellar stairway"—

"And I s'pose you slipped and fell?"

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to be more careful I just paid $12 to have the stairway painted and if you keep on you'll have it all scratched and dinged."

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Still Harping on the Bustle.

The Princess of Wales recently appeared at a fete in London in a bustleless gown, and some two dozen leaders of fashion have since followed her example. The dress was not flat in the back, but was made to curve gracefully by the aid of two small reeds, the uppermost one placed about eight inches from the belt line.

Big Feet Look Best in Black.

When will women learn that big feet look their best in black? Not in shiny black, like patent leather, which naturally attracts the eye, but in dull black, like soft kid. They can wear lovely slippers or low shoes of this kind in the morning, and for evening a black satin one is always good form. A very high heel will not make a large foot look small. It simply puts it upon a pedestal, and the lookers-on have an opportunity to measure its length. A black velvet slipper can only be worn by Cinderella, and the foot of Cinderella must be slender, else the pile of the velvet will make it look thick. A large buckle is never desirable, except with a slender foot and very low instep; when there is a fine arch a small buckle or bow wants to be adhered to, so that the natural beauty may be shown to great advantage.—Bab in New York Star.

What the Connemara Cloak is Like.

A specimen of the Connemara cloak, which Mrs. Cornwallis West has lately introduced from its native bog into London society, was lately seen at a Narragansett hop. It is, when on its native heath, made from the finest black cashmere, but that worn by Mrs. O'Donnell over her bare shoulders and thrown aside at the ball-room doors, notes the Providence Journal, was of soft gray stuff. This cloak has hundreds of small plaits hung from a small, well-fitting shoulder-piece, the plaits being flat at the top and the fulness coming out over the skirts. The secret of its manufacture is in its home, Ireland, and the garment to be correct, like the one at the pier, must be imported.

Neither Has He.

Mother (returning home)—Well, how have the children been behaving while I've been away?

Father—O, they're cross and bad tempered.

Mother—Is that so? Well, where did they get their bad temper, I should like to know?

Father—I declare I can't tell. But I am sure their mother hasn't lost any of hers.

She Sized Up the Situation.

Dainty little maiden, prithee tell me why,
With all your winsome graces, Cupid goes you by?

Thus the little maiden: "Sir, I've always said,
Foolish is the lassie who will love or wed."

But, my little maiden, I am sore afraid,
Rue will be your flower if you stay a maid.

Then the little maiden dropped her modest eyes,
Said: "Good sir, the foolish wed, but who, alas is wise?"

Nine Women to One Man.

Probably there is nothing in any other part of our warring world just like the state of affairs described in a South American letter to the Boston Transcript, as indicated thus:

Nothing astonishes the visitor to Paraguay so much as the vast preponderence of the female over the male population. The proportion is something like nine to one. This is the result of a long and very fierce war, in which the Guaranians followed and supported a cruel and ambitious ruler through indescribable hardships and sufferings. This war ended only with the death of the man who waged it, and has reduced the whole population to about one-sixth of what it was twenty years ago, leaving only women and boys. These women are as beautiful and fair to look upon as can be found in any part of the world. They are of medium height, rather slight and lithe, with finely moulded limbs, small, pretty hands and feet, and figures of matchless grace and beauty that would serve for models of a sculptor's art. Their carriage is so easy and natural as to be almost the poetry of motion, for the freedom from high-heeled boots and tight clothing has left their step light, supple and strong. Their dress is of the simplest form; a short tunic or robe, not unlike a skirt, falling to below the knees, and a sheulder covering not unlike a shawl - both pure white and adorned with pretty native laco. They are gracefully worn, and bewitchingly serve to half reveal and half conceal the form beneath.

Latest Fashion Notes.

There is a decided revival of black toilettes in Paris.

Fashion says the bustle will be worn smaller or entirely discarded the coming season.

Ear-rings are no longer considered an essential part of a woman's toilette.

Two or three small scarf pins are worn by young ladies, thrust in the front or side of the high standing collars of English gowns.

Jet beads are being combined with stee and with crystal beads that are gold in the centre, in the passementerie, in preparation for autumn wear.

Black hats are worn with costumes of any color, a convenient fashion doing away with the necessity of so many different colored head coverings.

An exquisite costume for autumn is made in mahogany-colored wool, with long, full drapery, caught up on one side with heavy cord and tassels; collar, cuffs and epaulettes to match in passementerie.

Belts are more worn at this season than later, with heavy wool gowns. Some new designs in leather show repousse designs, like fish scales or fine ivory carving. Steel and oxidized chains around the waste confine the fullness of some makes of gowns.

He Struck it Rich.

Stone—Hello, Upson, old man, you're looking fine; you must have struck luck since I last saw you.

Downes—Yes, old boy; I've struck the boss fake; no more poverty for me, no more small salaries; I've written a book, and my fortune is made.

Downes—I'd like to know what you could write about.

Stone—Hush don't give it away; great snap; have written on "How to Live Comfortable on Ten Dollars a Week."

Stone—But you never could.

Downes—Nor any one else—that's why they all buy the book to find out.

Stone—H'm, yes—I see.

A TRAGIC LIFE HISTORY.

How Beautiful Minnie Wallace Fought to Prove Herself Innocent of Murder.

Perhaps not one out of the many persons who see a beautiful, dark-haired young lady pass through the corridors of the Grand Pacific every day would guess at the tragedy and romance that surround a period in her life history. And yet she has passed through scenes that would have placed the marks of care in the face and silver strands in the hair of a woman less brave. As she passes to and from the dining-room in the hotel every eye is turned towards her, and her coming is looked for again. Minnie Wallace is certainly very attractive. She is slight, graceful and well-formed, with hair black as midnight, soft, shining and with a tendency to wave and curl caressingly about her shapely neck. Her hazel eyes are large and honest, underneath eyebrows that are well-arched. Her features are regular, lips rich in color, gleaming teeth, shapely hands and feet and a smooth, white skin, with enough color in it to brighten up the whole face. In addition to all these personal charms she is wealthy.

Those who see Minnie Wallace now would never imagine that she was Minnie Wallace Walkup, the heroine of one of the most exciting murder trials which ever was recorded in the annals of the State of Kansas. She was born in New Orleans in 1869. Her father is J. E. Wallace, one of the leading lawyers of that city. She was reared in luxury, for her father always had a good practice and lived well. She attended school at the St. Louis Institute until she was 15 years old. At 16 she was married at Covington, Ky., to James R. Walkup, a very wealthy cattle dealer, of Emporia, Kan. Her husband was a well-preserved man, 52 years of age, quite tall, and of fine appearance. The marriage took place July 22nd, 1885, Minnie's mother being present. Minnie and her husband went to Emporia at once, where an elegant home was open to receive her. Her husband had been a widower and had two grown-up daughters and a son who was married and had children of his own. Yet the girlish bride was happy. It is true that in the course of the trial in which soon afterwards she took such a prominent part she testified that she did not love her husband, but added that she never loved any other and thought more of him than of any man she had ever met. Whatever happiness there was in this strange marriage was destined to be of short duration. On Aug. 22nd, just one month after the wedding, James R. Walkup died and the surrounding circumstances warranted the belief that death had been caused by arsenic poisoning. He had been sick for several days and had been nursed by his child-wife, which caused suspicion to fall on her. She was indicted by the grand jury, and in the following October the trial, which lasted several weeks and created interest all over the country, came off, when beautiful Minnie Wallace asserted her innocence and pleaded for her life. The prosecution was urged by her dead husband's two daughters, who, in the event of her conviction, would have profited largely in the division of their father's estate. Minnie knew no one in the town, and every one's hand was against her.

Not every one, for Hon. William Jay, another wealthy citizen of the place, became her champion and spent $4,000 in her defence. He had never known her, but he looked into her eyes and thought he saw only innocence there. It was proven that she bought arsenic a short time before her husband's death, but she claimed that it was purchased at his request. Druggists from Cairo and elsewhere proved that he had been for years a confirmed arsenic-eater, and then the tide of public sentiment began to turn in her favor. She showed that she had placed the arsenic in the drawer of a dressing-case and a servant had been bribed to hand the poison to her master. In his weak condition he did not correctly gauge the dose, and before anything could be done he was dead. The child-widow was placed on the witness stand, and when she told her story, a scene followed such as no court ever saw before. Crowds had gathered daily, and on this day there was not a dry eye in the court room. The jurymen, the lawyers, and even the judge wept, and the stenographer's eyes were blinded so that he could not see to write. The girl who had had but one friend to stand by her in her hour of trouble had now captured the hearts of all, and they were ready to swear that she was innocent of the heinous crime laid at her door. The verdict of acquittal was returned, and Minnie Wallace Walkup was a heroine.—Chicago Times.

New Wrinkle for Milkers.

Says Farm and Home: Some time ago there was an animated discussion in Farm and Home respecting the relative merits of wet and dry milking. The plan which I am going to describe is both and neither. The milker works mostly by drawing out the teats between his fingers, but "full-handed," as it is called. That is to say, he grasps the teats firmly, and squeezes out the milk by opening and shutting his hand without moving his position. When he can get no more, he takes from his breast pocket a bottle of glycerine, pours some in his hand, and quickly rubs it on the teats with his fingers. This glycerine treatment leaves the teats beautifully supple and tractable for the 'full-handed' process at the next sitting, quickly heals all sores, and keeps the udder and teats sound. It seems to make a perceptible increase to the yield. Will other milkers try it and report?

Wiping the Bishop's Mouth.

A lady, whose establishment was very small, invited Dr. Monck, the Bishop of Gloucester, to dinner. She engaged, for the occasion, the services of an old butler, who had retired and become a greengrocer, and of a boy who knew nothing of waiting. The boy was as nervous as he was ignorant, and annoyed the old butler by constantly asking for instructions, until at last the man, in a moment of impatience, said: "Stand behind the bishop's chair, and when his lordship takes a glass of wine take your napkin and wipe his mouth!" The boy took the jocose reply for a serious command. He stationed himself behind the bishop, waited until that dignitary had drunk a glass of wine, and then, as deliberately as nervousness would permit, wiped his lordship's mouth.—London Society.

THE POOL OF BETHESDA.

It Has Been Discovered at Last With Reasonable Certainty.

"We have generally an announcement to make, but not often of so much importance as that of this day. It is the discovery of the Pool of Bethesda." So writes Mr. Walter Besant in the Quarterly Statement, issued by the Palestine Exploration Fund. He is jubilant, as all Palestine enthusiasts are likely to be, that a vexed question in regard to a site is apparently settled forever. Bethesda is mentioned only by the fourth Evangelist. In the fifth chapter of his gospel John says: "Now there is at Jerusalem by the sheep market (or gate) a pool which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches." The word translated "pool" in the authorized version is given by some authorities as "swimming bath," and the phrase "pool by the sheep market" is possibly better rendered "sheep pool." Eusebias explains the occasional red color of the water of this "sheep pool" as being a trace of the carcasses of sheep washed in it before sacrifice; hence the name. There are, according to the Evangelist, five porches, or porticoes, around the pool. These, Dr. Geikie thinks, charity built for the accommodation of sufferers. It seems to us, however, equally probable that they formed part of the original scheme for the bath. Five porticoes would seem to imply a pentagonal structure, but this is by no means essential. A rectangular pool with a portico on every side, divided by one across the middle, would answer the description. "Bethesda" (a Hebrew name which was very probably invented by St. John) may mean either "house of mercy" or "the place of the pouring forth" (of water). At the northeast of modern Jerusalem, close to St. Stephen's Gate, stands the Church of St. Anne. At the time of the Crimean war it was a ruined mosque, but when the French came into possession of it they restored the church and handed it over to the Algerian monks. It is near this Church of St. Anne, and in connection with excavation made around it that the real Pool of Bethesda has recently been discovered by Herr Conrad Schick. There is a courtyard to the northwest of the church, which leads through a newly opened passage into another courtyard some fifty feet square. At the north of this latter courtyard there was at one time a small church. Beneath the floor of this sometime church are vaults, and through the floor of these vaults a cistern is reached, cut into the rock to a depth of 30 feet. The cistern is a portion of the original pool of Bethesda. There is still water in it, but it is difficult to say whence it comes. This, in brief, is Herr Schick's report of April 5th. Since then further excavations have been made, and he has prosecuted more extended inquiries. A twin pool has been discovered. Further examination will bring more details to light; but it may now fairly be assumed that the two pools, tanks or cisterns thus discovered really constituted the Pool of Bethesda, "having five porches," where Christ healed the paralytic of eight-and-thirty years' standing.—Pall Mall Gazette.

It Made the Engineer Cry.

"Yes, indeed, we have some queer incidents happen to us," said the engineer. "I was running along one afternoon pretty lively when I approached a little village where the track cuts through the streets. I slacked up a little, but was still making good speed, when suddenly, about twenty rods ahead of me, a little girl not more than 3 years old toddled on to the track. There was no way to save her; it was impossible to stop or even slack in that distance, as my train was heavy and the grade descending. In ten seconds it would have been all over, and, after reversing and applying the brake, I shut my eyes; I didn't want to see any more. As we slowed down my fireman stuck his head out of the cab window to see what I had stopped for, when he laughed and shouted at me, 'Jim, look here!' I looked and there was a great big black Newfoundland dog holding that little girl in his mouth, leisurely walking toward the house where she evidently belonged. She was kicking and crying, so that I knew she wasn't hurt, and the dog had saved her. My fireman thought it funny and kept on laughing, but I cried. I just couldn't help it. I have a little girl of my own at home."

No Divorce for Mrs. Langtry.

Your correspondent has definite news direct from the husband of Mrs. Langtry. A cousin of his is Hillary Langtry Bell, an artist now residing in this city. He says that all overtures on the part of Mrs. Langtry looking toward the husband's consent to a divorce have been repulsed anew. Langtry will not consent to a legal separation. "There is a home here in England for my wife whenever she chooses to come to it," Langtry is quoted by his cousin as saying, "although not so good a one as she is able to maintain in America. It was her ambition to cut a dash in the world that separated us. She has no ground on which to get a divorce from me, not even that of non-support, and I will contest any proceeding which she may bring. Neither will I consent to a proposition that I myself obtain a divorce, which I could do, but which would enable her to marry again in the United States. Therefore, I do not believe that there will be a divorce of any sort very soon."—New York Correspondent.

Curious Case of Seasickness.

The Albany Journal says: One night recently a young man boarded the Hudson River steamer for New York with his widowed mother, who had never travelled on water, of which she had a horror. The old lady's step became more and more tremulous as she approached the boat, and after some hesitancy and expression of her fears of seasickness, she was escorted aboard and safely deposited on one of the comfortable cushions in the main saloon. Her son then left her, and returning half an hour later, inquired how she felt. She answered: "I am deathly sick. Can't you do anything for me?" The son replied: "Mother, the boat has not yet left the dock." In imagination she had been tossing on the deep, but the son's reply cured her sickness.

Mr. Vanderbilt has taken Lansdowne House, in London, and will probably entertain next season.

Rev. Father Chiniquy is now in Montreal.

PLANS FOR KEEPING GRAPES.

How to Preserve Late Varieties at Small Expenditure.

There are a number of methods in use for keeping the late varieties of grapes so as to lengthen the season for this fruit. These methods all depend for their success on the same conditions. In the first place, it is desirable that the fruit shall retain its bloom, hence great care in handling it is necessary to prevent the branches coming in contact with each other. It is also necessary that imperfect or bruised berries be clipped from each bunch. Following are two simple but effective systems that may be utilized to advantage, whether the amount of fruit to be saved be large or small. Both plans admit of the free circulation of an even temperature around each bunch and prevent the same from rubbing against each other. The first method is to take new shoe or soap boxes, or any box of about the same size, and nail cleats on the inside of the ends or sides about one inch from the top, and between them bars at various distances, as required by the varying length of the bearing shoot cuttings. The bars are made by nailing a small strip on top of each. As late as possible, cut off the bearing shoots containing the bunches, with pruning shears, and shorten them so that they will go between the end of the box and the top part of the bar, resting on the bottom part, thus hanging their bunches in their natural position. By this method the boxes can be handled without shaking the shoots off the bars, carried to the light, each bunch examined as winter advances, decaying berries or bunches removed, and the best kept without any moldy taste, as is so common when they are packed solid.

The second plan is equally simple. All that is required are two or more iron or wooden hoops, two lengths of wire to every two hoops to hold them in position and some string, and the contrivance is complete. When hung up it is the easiest thing in the world to trim out decayed or useless berries; in fact, the stock of grapes can be kept in good condition without even shifting the contrivance at all.

For Sweet Home's Sake.

Mothers, wives, sisters! why that patient hopeless suffering, those pinched, melancholy faces that sadden home and cause anxiety to loved ones, while so potent and harmless a remedy as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can be obtained of your druggist? It is a panacea for all "female complaints," of marvellous efficacy and health-giving qualities. The debilitated, and sufferers from those excruciating periodical pains, "dragging down" feelings, back-ache and kindred female disorders, should use this certain remedy at once, and be restored to the blessings of health for home's sake. Of druggists.

A Sagacious Tramp.

Woman (to tramp)—If I give you a nice dinner will you help me put up some patent self-rolling window curtains?

Tramp—No, ma'am. I'll saw wood, carry in coal, or dig post holes, but I wouldn't help a woman on window curtains if she gave me a Delmonico spread.—New York Sun.

With Satisfaction.

Polson's Nerviline, the new and certain pain cure, is used with satisfaction in every instance. There is abundant reason for this, for it performs all that is claimed for it. Nerviline is a never-failing cure for cramps, pains in the side or back, lumbago, sore throat, chilblains, toothache. Nerviline is, in fact, a sure remedy for all pains, both internal and external. Try a 10 cent sample bottle. Large bottles only 25 cents, by all druggists and country dealers.

A Sprained Throat.

A little boy, whose father was a rather immoderate drinker of the moderate kind, one day sprained his wrist, and his mother utilized the whiskey in her husband's bottle by bathing the little fellow's wrist with it. After a while the pain began to abate, and the child surprised his mother by exclaiming, "Ma, has pa got a sprained throat?"

The Mistakes of Moses and Ingersoll are common topics of conversation, but the mistake we wish to comment on here is the great one so many people labor under that consumption (which is really only Scrofula of the lungs) is an incurable disease, and that there is no hope for one suffering from it. This terrible malady that yearly fills so many graves, can be surely cured, if not too long neglected. Be wise in time, if you are afflicted with it, and arrest the undermining influence that is sapping your life-blood, and hurrying you to an untimely grave, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a remedy that never fails in its life-giving mission, if taken in time. All druggists.

A Close Observer.

An English editor asserts that he has noticed the growing popularity of the Royal Family in Ireland. That editor must be a very close observer to perceive such a small thing.

He is almost as observing as Mr. Spriggs' aunt.

"The days are growing longer," observed Mr. Spriggs to his family.

"Oh, yes, I have noticed it," interrupted the aunt.

"They are half a minute longer," added Spriggs in the same tone of voice.—Texas Siftings.

$500 Reward.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, a standing reward of $500 for a case of chronic nasal catarrh which they cannot cure. No matter how bad the disease has become, or of how many years' standing, it yields, in due time, to their skill. This famous remedy is sold by druggists at 50 cents.

A fugitive item says one of the wealthy passengers who recently sailed for Europe in a Cunard steamer wanted to arrange with the captain for the exclusive use of a lifeboat for his family, and "four sailors to row," in event of disaster!

"Yes," she said, "the waves in a storm remind me of our hired girls at home." "Hired girls, madam?" "Yes, they are such awful breakers."

HISTORY OF A WORD.

An Albany Paper Claims to Have Been the First to Use Telegram.

It seems incredible that it was only a little over forty years ago that the telegraph was invented and put in practical use. It may not be generally known that the Albany Evening Journal gave the word "telegram" to the world. In its files of April 6th, 1852, the following was printed, and from this paragraph was derived the word "telegram," now found in every dictionary:

A NEW WORD.—A friend desires us to give notice that he will ask leave at some convenient time to introduce a new word into the vocabulary. The object of this proposed innovation is to avoid the necessity, now existing, of using two words, for which there is very frequent occasion, where one will answer. It is telegram, instead of telegraphic dispatch or telegraphic communication. This word is formed according to the strictest laws of the language from which its root comes Telegraph means to write from a distance. Telegram, the writing itself, executed from a distance. Monogram, logogram, etc., are words formed upon the same analogy and in good acceptation. Our friend, moreover, says that the House line, if disposed to be precise, should call their communications teletypes, as they are printed, not written. In a generous spirit of toleration he proposes no action upon the last suggestion; but as to everybody else, except the employers and customers of the House line, he would have them "held and firmly bound" to speak, write, print and telegraph telegram, instead of any two words signifying the same thing, under penalty of being considered verbose and tedious.

Got Too Big for the Cab.

Daniel Kenyon, the oldest engineer on the Erie Railroad, has been made a ticket collector at the Pavonia ferry house in Jersey City. He is 66 years old, and was an engineer since 1847. He was of slight build when he got his first engine. Several years ago he began to grow fat, and recently reached and passed the 300 pound mark. Then he was not able to squeeze into the cab of his engine and had to resign. The place he now occupies was made for him. While an engineer he had charge of the fastest train on the road. He never had an accident happen to any train in his care, and he travelled an average of 2,500 miles a month.

Cardinal Howard has recovered from his recent illness.

WHAT

WARNER'S SAFE CURE CURES

BACK ACHE,
BLADDER TROUBLES RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA,
HEAD ACHE,
NERVOUSNESS,
INDIGESTION.

There is no doubt of this great remedy's potency. It is no New Discovery unknown and maybap worthless, but is familiar to the public for years as the only reliable remedy for diseases of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. To be well, your blood must be pure, and it never can be pure if the Kidneys (the only blood purifying organs) are diseased.

DIZZINESS,
AGUE,
DYSPEPSIA,
FEMALE TROUBLES,
BAD EYES,
IMPOTENCY,
DROPSY,

CURED WITH WARNER'S SAFE CURE.

Ask your friends and neighbors what WARNER'S SAFE CURE has done for them. Its record is beyond the range of doubt. It has cured millions and we have millions of testimonials to prove our assertion. WARNER'S SAFE CURE will cure you if you will give it a chance.

MARVELOUS
MEMORY
DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,003 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, E. H. COOK, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DUNL, 36 - 8.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

And still there are

MORE

BARGAINS

TO BE GOT AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Don't forget to ask for

THAT CASHMERE,

Regular price 35c a yard, now 22 1-2 c a yard. It is a yard and a quarter wide.

Those DRESS GOODS

We are selling at 12 1-2c a yard, regular price 20c a yard. Beautiful new goods.

GREAT REDUCTIONS IN

Boots and Shoes!

30 Per Cent Discount off Men's Long Boots.

1000 DOZEN BUTTONS!

Selling at 5c a dozen, regular prices from 10c to 50c a doz.

COME SOON

In order to secure Best Bargains.

1000 doz. Eggs Wanted

RIGHT AWAY!

Top price paid in Cash or Trade. The Famous

New Process Electric Soap,

To be Got Only at

J. G. ANDERSON'S

Mammoth Bargain House.

MANITOBA.

THE MOON AND STARS—APPARENT SIZE—WONDERFUL BRILLIANCY—THE WEATHER AND HARVEST.

From our own Correspondent.

"The bright day is gone,
The moon and stars appearing,
With silver light illume the night."
And cheer us on our way
With rays so brightly shining—
Akin to sunlit day.

Mr. Editor: While I was living in Ontario a full moon, just rising, generally appeared to me the size of the fore wheel of a waggon—on unusually clear nights sometimes as large as the hind wheel. After removing to North Carolina I was surprised to find that it frequently appeared the last mentioned size. But here, in this extraordinary clear atmosphere of Manitoba, the moon not only looks as large as the hind wheel of a wagon, but sometimes ten feet in diameter, and so near that, in imagination, I can see

Hill, valley and [illegible]
Stream, tree and fountain
[illegible]

And although I cannot hear the "music of the waters" or "what the wild waves are saying" I will not say that I cannot see the "Man in the Moon" wink, blink, or smile. However, he almost seems like an acquaintance, so apparently near me, and I have looked at him so often in a "cousinly way," but "respectful I'd have you know."

Perhaps some will say "this is all imagination." I reply that I never yet found any person who could "out see" me in long distances, having "beat" those accustomed to scanning the "wide extended deep" to see if there was "a sail in sight."

By steadily gazing, and letting "imagination run," I can make the moon look much larger than I have described, but this is not the proper way. The size it appears at first is the rule I go by.

THE STARS.

Beautiful star.
"Up above the world so high,
Like a diamon I in the sky."

Their size, brilliancy, and "color" is wonderful, astonishing, innumerable, exceedingly more so in this great North West than in parts where the atmosphere is not so transparent.

I do not know that I can better end these "rambling notes" than by quoting the concluding lines of that beautiful poem by Addison in the old "English Reader" (our best school book when I was a boy, perhaps the best yet) if some of our "worldly wise men" want-to-be skeptics, trying-to-be-infidels, would study and commit to memory the entire poem, it might aid them in becoming better men, and making others so, but this is not their aim.

The poet Addison is speaking of the moon and stars in the lines referred to, which are as follows.

[illegible]

"Ask [illegible] the Lord [illegible]."

THE WEATHER.

There has been a little rain during the "rainy season," deservedly. Not a constant "drip drip" but similar to "bad harvest weather" which sometimes occurs in Ontario. It generally ceases about the time harvesting fully begins, not causing deep mud which would be the case in such soil, were it to so rain in spring and fall. The showers are comparatively dry in fact.

MANITOBA'S

and North West Blizzards, (in Canada "mind ye") are more feared than felt, yet the latter should be "look'd out for" not knowing what might happen. However, I would not exchange climate with those countries of long intensely hot summers, malaria, serpents, and cyclones which are fearful realities, and cannot be "fenced against" as we can the cold. Prairie winds do blow "mighty powerful" but are not inverted aerial maelstroms.

"Give us this day our daily bread."

THE HARVEST

is being gathered in, probably the most bountiful ever known in Manitoba and the North West Territories. Slight frost did occur, but "the cold wave" has given way to warm, fine summer weather.

Artemesia Council.

Artemesia Council met on Monday, all the members present.

Bylaw No. 425, appointing John Hassard, John H. Anderson and Jacob Sloan as collectors for 1888 was introduced and passed.

Bylaw No. 224, to levy school trustee's rates for 1888, was also introduced and passed.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: J. R. Hogg, goods for H. Kearns, $2; postage, $3.95; W. H. Thurston, advertising and job work, $4.60.

The following motions were passed:

Boland—Sharp—That Geo. Boyce be paid the sum of $5, said amount to be payment in full for all road jobs done under the supervision of Wm McKee as commissioner for Ward No. 4, in the year 1885, and which work has been in dispute since that time.

McArthur—Boland—That the reeve, Mr. Sharp, and the Township Clerk be a committee to receive bonds from the collectors for the year 1888.

McArthur—Boland—That the reeve and Councillor Sharp be and are hereby authorized to issue their order and draw on the township treasurer for sufficient sums of money as the work on the Boyne bridge requires.

Boland—Cairns—That John McArthur be paid $2 for expending special grant on town line, Proton and Artemesia.

J. McArthur was instructed to build culverts at McPherson's, gravel road, and at Vauce's, south line.

The Council then adjourned.

Hot Springs, Arkansas, has been swept by a flood and thirteen people drowned.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival, and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, 4s 6d, 11s, 22s, and 33s each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World

☞ Purchasers should Look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FISH, FRUIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of [illegible]

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. GRIMES, FLESHERTON.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in [illegible]

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 377. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, SEPT. 13, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's

Noted

Jewelry Store.

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Cool evenings.

Harvest about ended.

Time to think about getting a new overcoat.

By the way, that reminds us that there are a number of unpaid subscriptions on our list.

SERVANT GIRL WANTED.—Apply at J. G. Russel's, Flesherton.

A first-class tailorss desires situation for the fall. Apply at Advance office.

Clearing sale at Climo's. Every thing at and less than cost. 18c. allowed for Prime Tub Butter.

Rev. Mr. Stewart, missionary of Toronto, occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian church here on Sunday afternoon.

Eugenia baseball team plays a return match with the Redwing club, on the latter's ground, on Saturday.

Mr. J. H. Strain, who has been here for some time visiting his parents, returned to Dakota last week.

The editor had a pleasant visit from Mr. T. Jackman, of the Markdale Standard, on Sunday.

Messrs. Dannde and Gibbons went shooting on tuesday, and came home with an even dozen of partridge. A fine bag!

We have to thank the directors of the Great Northern Exhibition, to be held at Collingwood Sept. 25 to 28, for a very neat complimentary ticket.

The Orangeville Presbytery meets at that town on Tuesday next, when arrangements will be made for supplying this circuit with regular ministerial service.

The next sitting of the Fifth Division Court for the County of Grey will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Thursday, Oct. 4, at 10 o'clock a. m.

We have placed before us the September number of the Canadian Horticulturist. It is, without exception, the finest publication of the kind which we have received.

The East Grey fall exhibition, to be be held in Flesherton on Sept. 24 and 25, bids fair to be the finest thing of the kind ever held here. The attractions for both first and second day are exceptionally good, and will no doubt draw a very large crowd.

The sound of the hunter's gun is once more heard throughout the land, and he cometh home in the gloaming, if successful, by the most populous thoroughfare; if otherwise he waiteth until dark and sneaketh around by the back streets. You see we know ourselves how it is.

The next meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association will be held here on Monday and Tuesday, the 25th and 26th of October. Dr. McLellen will be in attendance and deliver a public lecture in the evening. Those who have heard the Doctor need not be told of his merits as a lecturer.

Grow Flowers.

It has pleased us to observe that a large number of Flesherton's citizens have an eye to the beautifying of their homes with flowers and shrubs. There is nothing more pleasing to the eye, or that adds more to the beauty of any home, than a well-chosen collection of flowers and shrubs. Rochester is called the flower city from its well-known partiality for flowers. Every lawn in that city is a bower of bloom, and almost every window a bouquet. Travelers remember this and take away with them a pleasing sense of having enjoyed a pleasure that can scarcely be defined. Place shrubs about your houses and flowers in your windows, and visitors to the village will note and truthfully surmise that the citizens are what they should be, tasteful, thrifty, and good neighbors among which to pitch one's tent.

Priceville cattle fair next Monday.

Mrs. Aikenhead has returned to Toronto.

At Red Flag for Bargains. 18c. for Prime Tub Butter.

Markdale is going to turn her roller shating rink into a town hall.

18c. allowed for Prime Tub Butter. Climos are giving up Business. You can get Bargains.

Rev. Geo. Buggin of Markdale will preach educational sermons in the Methodist church, Flesherton, next Sunday morning and evening.

Rev Andrew Wilson, of Toronto, will, D. V., occupy the pulpit of the Presbyterian church, Flesherton, on Sabbath afternoon next at the usual hour.

The Flesherton cattle fair on Monday last was well patronized by both buyers and sellers, still only a small number of cattle changed hands, and the quality, as a general rule, was somewhat inferior.

Ayer's Ague Cure acts directly on the liver and biliary apparatus, and drives out the malarial poison which induces liver complaints and bilious disorders. Warranted to cure, or money refunded. Try it.

Anniversary services will be held in Priceville on Sunday, Sept. 23, in connection with the Methodist Church, and on the Monday evening following a tea-meeting will be held in Watson's Hall in aid of the church fund. A splendid program is being prepared and a good time is insured. See posters for particulars.

HAY WANTED.—Farmers having good No. 1 hay for sale will hear of a purchaser by applying to Thos. Sturdy, hay presser, 26 Catharine street south, Hamilton. N. B.—I am at present pressing in Dundalk, and will be at Flesherton, if business will warrant removal, for a few months in winter.

Prices $8 to $11 per ton.

Anniversary Services,

The anniversary sermon in connection with the Flesherton R. T. of T. was preached in the Methodist church on Sunday evening by Rev. Mr. Shilton, from Proverbs 24th chapter, 11th and 12th verses. There was a large audience present, who were treated to an eloquent, practical and sometimes touching discourse by the pastor. The society gathered in their hall previous to the service and marched to the church, about 72 strong, where the centre portion of the church had been reserved for them. It was a pleasant sight to see so many individuals in the procession, with faces expressive of confidence in the righteousness of their cause. The neat badges of the society are, in our estimation, superior to the old style of glittering regalia. It may be gathered from the above turnout that the R. T. of T. of Flesherton are in a very flourishing condition, especially when the fact is taken into consideration that only a little more than one half of the number turned out.

The Boyne Bridge.

Work on the construction of this bridge was commenced on Tuesday. Before it is too late we would like to offer a few suggestions upon the matter. Taking the old adage as a text, that anything worth doing at all is worth doing well, and looking to the future, we would suggest that it be raised some two or three feet higher than we believe is the present intention, and the rise on the south side graded a little. This would give a much finer and easier approach to our village, as well as add to the beauty of the place. The extra cost would be very little above the present specifications, and it could be done much easier now than at some future time when it would become a necessity, as it is intended to build a substantial structure that will endure for all time. Build it high enough, build it broad enough, to answer all future requirements, and make the approach a little ornamental as well as substantial.

A Fall Poem.

BY OUR FALL POET.

How dear to the heart are our summers of pleasure,
With picnics, excursions and fishing galore,
When the gifts of the gods are thrown down without measure,
And Flora bedecks all the world from her store

But fall! bitter fall, with its rains and it hailing
Its mud and its frost, can we sing to its praise
We sigh for the picnic, but all unavailing—
'Tis gone far away with the long summer days!

And what shall we do for our lawn garden party,
That gave us the rehumatiz from the night air?
It lingered too long, yet regrets are quite hearty
But a good time is near—otherwise the fall fair.

Yes, fall is approaching with pleasures and [illegible]
The grape turneth blue in the sun ran [illegible]
Fall rains drizzle down through the [illegible]
And pumpkins hang low on the frost bitten vine.

Our Fall Exhibitions.

East Grey at Flesherton, Sept. 24 and 25.

Artemesia at Priceville, Oct. 2

Great Northern, Collingwood, Sept. 25 to 28.

Proton, Dundalk, Oct. 11 and 12

North Grey, Owen Sound, Oct. 10 and 11.

South Grey, Durham Sept. 25 and 26

We know of no mode of treatment which offers, to sufferers from chronic diseases, a more certain hope of cure than that which is comprehended in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For purifying and invigorating the blood, this preparation is unequaled.

Valuable Property for sale in the thriving Village of Flesherton. For particulars apply to A. R. FAWCETT, Review office, Streetsville, Ont or to J. W. Armstrong, Flesherton

NOTICE.—All accounts due me for Job Printing and advertising must be paid up to J. W. Armstrong as soon as possible

A. R. FAWCETT,
Review Office, Streetsville

TO

OLD

PATRONS.

AM OBLIGED FOR

CONTINUED CONFIDENCE

AND PATRONAGE.

Will be with you again next week.

JEWELER BROWN,

MARKDALE.

LATEST ENGLISH NEWS BY MAIL

Singular Accident to Excursionists.

A serious accident happened last week on the large passenger steamer Duke of Connaught, which is at present engaged in taking passengers from Fleetwood to the Isle of Man. When the vessel left Fleetwood at 4 o'clock a gale was blowing from the west, and drenching showers fell at intervals. She had not proceeded more than a few miles when the mainmast snapped twenty feet from the deck, owing, it is said, to the pitching of the steamer. The mast fell on the bridge with a crash, and there broke into three pieces. The deck was crowded, and the fractured mast and wreckage fell among the excursionists, injuring seriously six of them. The captain immediately turned his steamer and ran back to Fleetwood as rapidly as possible, where medical aid was promptly procured.

Dismissed with Ignominy.

A singular scene was witnessed at Colchester the other day, when the volunteers encamped on the Abbey Fields were paraded to witness the "drumming out" of a private of the 3rd Essex Volunteer Battalion for neglect of duty and insubordination. The shoulder straps and buttons having been torn off the culprit's uniform, he was marched under escort to the railway station and summarily dismissed.

Poisoned by Hemlock.

At an inquest held at Consett last week on two little boys named Bernard and Joseph Molloy, who died suddenly on Monday, the medical testimony showed that they had sucked the ends of hemlock stalks, absorbing such a quantity of poison as to result in their death. The doctor stated that hemlock was a very active and dangerous irritant at this season of the year. A verdict of "Poisoned by the juice of hemlock" was returned.

Killed by Swallowing False Teeth.

A man named Darcy has died at Birmingham from swallowing a set of false teeth in his sleep. He went to the Queen's Hospital the day after he swallowed the teeth, and, all the ordinary methods to remove the obstruction having failed, his throat was cut open and the teeth extracted. For a time he did well, but pleurisy set in as a result of the operation, and he died.

The Banns Forbidden.

As the vicar of South Acton parish church was publishing the marriage banns from the altar at the morning service on Sunday week the congregation were startled by a young lady announcing in a clear and collected voice, "There is just cause or impediment." Her voice rang through the sacred building just at the moment when Mr. Dunn had concluded the customary invitation, "Ye are now to declare it." The lady appeared to be quite young, about 16 or 17, and was pretty and well-dressed. She bore herself bravely and refused to be hustled out. She was evidently laboring under a deep sense of injury.

Life in London Slums.

An inquest was held at Poplar Town Hall on Saturday week into the circumstances attending the death of a little fellow of 7 named Ephraim John Bond, the son of a bricklayer, at 13 Brunswick road, Poplar. The child was taken ill on Sunday and died on Monday night. The mother said her house had been flooded and a large quantity of sewage matter still lay under the floor. Dr. Wadley said when he saw the deceased on Monday night he was suffering from bronchitis and "dying as fast as he could." Without doubt his illness was attributable to the state of the house, as owing to the water under the floor and the dampness of the walls it was a shocking place for the child or any one else to exist in. The cause of death was acute bronchitis. Verdict accordingly.

Other Jottings from the Old World.

Sir Beaumont Dixie has been received into the Church of Rome.

The important collection of engraved gems in the British Museum has been catalogued by Mr. A. H. Smith in the form of a small volume describing altogether 2,349 pieces.

The friends of Canon Knox Little will be glad to hear that good accounts have been received of his health from Denmark, where he is on a walking tour, sometimes covering thirty miles a day.

Lady Butler's "Scotland for Ever"—probably the best drawn of all her pictures—has been purchased by an anonymous benefactor for £1,000 for presentation to the Art Gallery at Leeds. The same lady's "Floreat Etona" is about to be engraved in the "mixed method" for publication by Messrs. Graves.

A married woman named Jane Medlen was charged at the Thames Police Court on Saturday week with loitering in Wellesley street dressed in male attire; but after hearing the evidence, which showed that the accused had adopted this unsuitable attire so as to watch the movements of her husband, of whom she was apparently jealous, the magistrate, with a timely caution, ordered her to be discharged.

A month ago, George Frederick Curzon, 12 years of age, was attacked by a large black dog in the neighborhood where he lived, Smith-down road, Liverpool. The principal wound was in the boy's lip. It was dressed, the wound healed up, and the boy appeared to be perfectly well until a few days ago, when symptoms of hydrophobia supervened, and he died in great agony on Saturday week.

In an action tried in the Queen's Bench the other day, before Mr. Justice Manisty and Mr. Justice Hawkins, in which a court milliner and dressmaker sued a lady for £303, the balance of an account for dresses and other articles supplied to the defendant, Mr. Justice Hawkins caused considerable laughter by inquiring what was meant by the items in the account "ladies' silk pants" and "gentlemen's silk vests." No answer was returned to the inquiry.

Latest from Ireland.

Mr. A. J. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, is to address a meeting in Glasgow on 1st Oct.

The Queen has subscribed £50 to the Royal Irish Constabulary Fund, which was started recently.

The young woman named Lavery, who was shot during the progress of a Nationalist demonstration at Lurgan on the 15th ult., died next day.

Mr. Wm. Hellier Baily, a man whose name has been familiar to scientists and others in Dublin for many years, has died at the age of 69 years.

Major Dennis, of Ravenswood, Newtownbarry, died on the 9th ult., after being hurt by a car which struck him while training a young horse.

Sir Wm. O'Malley was married on the 7th ult., in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, to Miss Caroline Favey. The bridegroom is a widower of 70 and the bride only just out of her teens.

Mr. Parnell was born at Avondale, in County Wicklow, in 1846. He is a descendant of Parnell, the poet, and his family have been associated with Irish Parliamentary life for upwards of a century.

Rev. John Smith, of Templetrine, County Cork, had a narrow escape from drowning at Tenby on the 14th ult. He was carried away by the current, and only reached the rocks two miles away when completely exhausted.

Best Books for Sunday School Libraries

A writer in the New York Independent discusses what kind of books should be placed in Sunday School libraries. A supply of suitable new books is clearly very necessary, if it be true as stated that since the "Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society" came into being they have sold four tons of the old "goody-goody" kind of books as waste paper. The Independent's advice is as follows: I have learned that it is not safe to accept any book on the merit of the author without careful examination. Mrs. Burnett has written the sweet, helpful stories of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "That Lass o' Lowrie's," but she has also written "Through One Administration," a book which should go into no Sunday School library. While Pansy is almost always true and helpful, her book, "From Different Standpoints," is considered objectionable by many. This is also true of Louisa Alcott's "Moods." Very few persons would think of disapproving of George MacDonald's "Annals of a Quiet Neighborhood" or "The Marquis of Lossie," but many object to "Robert Falconer" as unsettling to the simple Christian faith of the young.

Mayne Reid is an author whose books must be selected with care. They are very fascinating to the average boy and some of them may legitimately satisfy his taste for thrilling adventure. Such stories as "The Cliff Climbers," "The Wood Rangers," "The Plant Hunters," "The Forest Exiles" and "The Young Voyageurs" have undoubtedly stimulated many a boy to a healthful love of woods life. A minister who finds his greatest recreation and pleasure during his summer vacation in plunging into the almost unknown wilderness, testifies that his first taste for his healthful enjoyment was given by the reading of Mayne Reid's books. I must, however, warn the boys against some of them. Banish "Oceola," "The Scalp Hunters," "The War Trail," "The White Chief" and "The Wild Huntress" from the shelves.

Jules Verne is a writer condemned by many; but some of his books I believe to be healthful and stimulating. It is a natural step his "At the North Pole" and "Desert of Ice" to Kane's "Arctic Explorations" and other works on exploration. It is true that Verne blends fact and fiction so skilfully that it is difficult to distinguish between them; but I believe that his books of the character of those mentioned do stimulate a taste for reliable works of travel and exploration.

The elder boys and girls should be encouraged to read Sir Samuel Baker's Paul du Chaillu's, Livingstone's and Stanley's wonderful travels in Africa; Parkman's "Oregon Trail," Irving's "Astoria" and "Captain Bonneville's Adventures," Bayard Taylor's "Travels," and Isabella Bird's "Unbeaten Tracks in Japan" and "Life in the Rocky Mountains."

Librarians testify that it is more difficult to supply reading for girls than for boys. This would not be true if girls were encouraged, as I believe they should be, to read the same books which their brothers read. Why should a girl not enjoy works of travel and adventure, historical stories and juvenile books of popular science, as well as fairy tales, the quieter pictures of home life, and the never-failing love story?

A girl has the advantage of a boy in her reading, in that her mind develops and matures much earlier; so that she may safely begin to read at the early age of 13 or 14 authors which boys had better leave until some years later. A girl of 13 may not appreciate the keen edge of satire and the fine analysis of character in Dickens' and Trackeray's novels, but she will find much that she can understand and enjoy, and her taste will be cultivated for the best reading. These authors are not so safe for inmature boys, for too often their pictures of certain vices are painted in a light to awaken admiration rather than abhorrence in the minds of boys.

Specimen Old World Tragedies.

Mr. W. S. Hosley, steward to Lord Braybrooke, at Audley End, was found dead the other day in the grounds surrounding the mansion. It appears that he attempted to drown himself in an ornamental lake, but scrambled out again, and, opening a vein with his penknife, bled to death. Domestic troubles are said to have preyed on the mind of the deceased.

A terrible tragedy is reported from Kopacs, in Hungary. A man named Mati had a quarrel with his wife, a young and beautiful woman, whom he had lately married. She sought refuge in his mother's house. Mati followed her there, and on his mother—an old woman over 0—remonstrating with him, he seized a chopper and literally hacked his mother and wife to pieces.

The woman who wades into the ocean with her two-year-old child in her arms, and then ducks the screaming unfortunate in the water until it becomes wild with fright, is still with us. She is one of the things that never die. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children should have an agent on the beach to arrest all such unnatural fools.—Martha's Vineyard Herald.

Sarah Ann—Oh, ain't my brother a clever boy, Jane? Why, he's only been at school two months, an' he's got the Catechism. Eliza Jane—Wot's that? Why, my brother's only been to school two months, an' he's got the measles!"

THE FAITH CURISTS.

Rapid Growth of the New Gospel of Healing.

SOME WONDERFUL EXAMPLES.

Interesting Letter from the Hon. H. G. Joly on the Subject.

The Faith Curists of New Jersey are developing in force and the congregations at their Sunday services are rapidly increasing in converts and enthusiasm. They are spreading the gospel of faith as a cure for all the ills that the body and soul are heir to. Brother Elsey is the leading worker, and has for his adviser Rev. Dr. Simpson, of Forty-fifth Street Tabernacle, New York (formerly of Knox Church, Hamilton). The Mount Zion Sanctuary, which is also a home for invalids awaiting cures by faith, is under the direction of the Society of the First Born in Erie street, Jersey City.

THE LORD WILL CURE.

On Sunday afternoon the sanctuary was filled with devout worshippers and a fair sprinkling of curiosity seekers, who were addressed by Rev. M. D. Hancox, of the Church of the First Born, who preached from Leviticus, xxvii: "Whatsoever a man giveth to the Lord it shall be made holy." In illustrating his text the preacher said that if any one gave his body to the Lord, He would accept it and care for as His own property. If it was ill He would cure it. "If you have a headache or your liver is out of order the Lord will cure it, for you are his peculiar property. He will take care of you so that you shall not dash your foot against a stone."

AN EXPERIENCE.

At the same hour the Elsey Memorial chapel members, converts and friends to the number of about 300 met in the grove on the high bank of Newark Bay at Pamrapo, on the fifteen acres of ground recently bought as a site for their proposed mission and held services. The ground reaches to the blue waters of the bay, where their baptismal services are performed.

Rev. William Raymond, of Troy, N. Y., spoke on the subject of cures by faith. He said that during the last war he was so ill in Washington that the physicians told him he could not live. He went into the woods north of that city to die. While praying to God to receive his spirit, a change came over him, and in one minute he was completely cured and stood on his feet a well man, after five years of intense suffering. He is now 70 years old and for fifty-one years has been preaching the gospel of faith, and has cured over 2,000 persons. He said that men born blind had been made to see and the deaf made to hear as readily as others. Let the healing of the body lead and salvation is sure to follow.

WONDERFUL RESULTS.

He instanced the case of Mr. Osborne of Troy, who was completely paralyzed on his left side. The speaker visited him, and taking the palsied hand in his own, offered a silent prayer. In a few minutes the fingers of the hands moved, the arm was lifted to the head, the paralysis left the leg, and within a week the man was well and walking about Troy.

HON. H. G. JOLY'S LETTER.

Hon. H. G. Joly, of Quebec, has written a letter to the press in which he says: No one can witness suffering without wishing to relieve the sufferer, but few know how much they can do in that direction. After reading the article on "faith cures" in one of your issues, I felt it might perhaps be of some use if I can give my experience on the subject. For many years past I have relieved a good deal of suffering by very simple means, holding the patient's hand with one hand and passing the other over the affected part; in a great many cases the relief has been a permanent one.

INFLUENCE OF AN IDEA.

Instead of attempting an explanation which I have no authority to give, here are some extracts from lectures on the principles and the practice of medicine, delivered by Prof. J. Hughes Bennett before the Edinburgh College of Medicine. Under the head of "Influence of predominant ideas on the body," he says: "In all cases of relief there can be little doubt that any benefit that did occur may be attributed to a strong belief on the part of the patient in the efficacy of the means employed." He calls it from the Greek monoideism, or one idea, meaning, I suppose, the concentration of the minds of the patient and the operator on one single idea, viz., cure.

WHAT PROF. BENNETT SAYS.

This subject, however, says Prof. Bennett, is in its infancy, and has to be separated from the charlatanism which has hitherto been mingled with it. The labors of Dr. Esdale among the natives of India and of Mr. Braid in Manchester exhibit a worthy commencement of the rational treatment of disorders by the means now alluded to, and there can be little doubt that in no long time its influence, when further studied, will be acknowledged. But how far this influence is dependent on the confidence of the patient, on the belief of some mysterious circumstance which is presumed to produce the effect, or on some unknown law regulating function through the mind, further observation alone can determine. He then speaks of suggesting thoughts to patients in different ways and creating impressions on the mind, and mentioned cures of insomnolence, spasms, relief or cure of hysterical paralysis of the limbs or special organs of sense, and torpid functions of lactation, perspiration, defaecation, etc., etc., have been rendered more active.

HIS EXPERIMENTS.

With few exceptions, I have only succeeded with uneducated people, whose confidence was unlimited and who were willing to accept any suggestions as to the effects of my attempts at curing them. The process may be called "mind cure" or "monoideism," as Prof. Bennett calls it, or "faith cure," which is the best name, after all. For without faith the cure does not work; faith on the part of the patient in the operator; faith on the part of the operator in himself and in the power above, whose help he instinctively looks for.

Any one can relieve suffering in this way who will give his whole heart to the task. If you wish to test the purest joy of life, you will find it in relieving suffering among those whose only future is their health, in enabling the workman, crippled with rheumatism, to resume his work, or the poor mother to take, once more, charge of her modest household and her children. If you think that my statement may induce some of your readers to try the faith cure, publish it; but I leave it to you to do what you think best.

H. G. JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

EXPERIMENTS IN MESMERISM.

Making Subjects Insensible to Pain—A Girl is Persuaded that a Cow Sings, but Positively Refuses to Play Cards.

(W. A. Croffut in North American Review.)

Mesmerized sensitives do not see any of the objects or people in the room except the operator, or hear anything except his voice. They can be made apparently cognizant of their surroundings only by having their attention explicitly called to them by the operator. Even then they generally see imaginary objects only. Their eyes are open and their sight appears to an oculist entirely normal, but there is no co-ordination of the faculties. If I introduce "a gentleman," they treat him as such. If I introduce him as a "young person," they wonder whether he is a boy or girl, and are liable to address him as either. Mesmerism is as perfect an anæsthetic as ether and as harmless as water. Any mesmerized person can at once, by a single stroke of the hand, be rendered totally insensible to pain, and can have a tooth drawn, a cataract removed, a cancer cut out or an arm cut off without feeling the slightest pain. This has been so often demonstrated that amputations frequently takes place under its influence in the Paris hospitals, and it is successfully employed in obstetrics.

It is quite erroneous to suppose that the conduct of the responsive is directed in detail by the operator. He only suggests the general line of thought, and each responsive pursues it according to his own knowledge, experience or prejudices. I say to my responsives, for instance, that I have a wonderful educated cow with seven heads. They all want to see it. I call their attention to the imaginary stable door near by; they look toward it, and when I snap my fingers they all see a seven-headed cow enter. Now, by questioning them, it becomes obvious that they all see a different cow. Unless I have designated her color, one sees a white cow, another a red cow, and so on.

Then I tell them that she can dance—can waltz and keep time with music. I hand one of them a cane telling him it is a flute and that he is an eminent performer, and he goes through the motions of playing to the dancing cow. They all hear different tunes, but the exhibition is satisfactory. I now add that the cow can sing—can sing a different part with each mouth—can sing seven ballads at once. At this point there is perhaps some incredulity expressed. They see the cow stand up on her hind legs and hear the seven ballads—and this, I may as well add, is the narrative of an actual experiment.

Five of the six mesmerized persons believed that she sang. "She is singing Tit Willow," said one. "And a Warrior Bold," said another.

"I hear singing," said the incredulous one, turning to me. "'Annie Laurie,' isn't it? How do you work her?—the machinery, I mean?"

The others laughed at him. "Why, the cow sings," said a young lady. "Can't you hear her sing? Can't you see her sing?"

As a rule the responsives can be completely dominated and made to do anything of which they are physically capable. They could generally be induced to take poison or jump off the house, or throw themselves under a locomotive, or attack one another with deadly weapons; but there are some exceptions. I was unable to overcome the fear of one of my responsives, whom I sent to assault an imaginary Indian in the park. He refused to go and said it was "difficult to kill an Indian."

A young lady, one of the brightest sensitives I have ever seen, steadfastly refuses to play cards. I tell her she is Buffalo Bill, and easily induce her to assume his character, but when cards is suggested, "No, I never play cards. It is wrong!" she says, and I cannot move her. I could make her jump out through the window or put her hand in the fire, but play cards she will not. I was puzzled by it, till, inquiring, I ascertained that her religious parents had brought her up very strictly and taught her it was "wicked to play cards."

Valuable Medical Advice Gratis.

We are not so sure that cheap quinine is such an unalloyed blessing. It has come about that nearly every family now has its quinine bottle, that it is sold at many general stores, and that the doctor rarely meets an invalid who has not been thoroughly dosed with quinine. The drug, when taken continuously or excessively, is an injurious one; and its therapeutic value is greatly exaggerated in the popular mind. The value of quinine in "colds," bronchitis, ephemeral fevers, anorexia, general malaise, and various other minor ills, is most problematical.—Medical Record.

Living on Stewed Weeds.

"I was surprised," said a prominent physician, "at what I learned of the details of the dietetic hotels of Japan from so close an observer as John La Farge, who has recently spent a number of months in Japan. He tells me that the rice growers, the peasantry who cultivate the rice in Japan, are far too poor to be able to eat it. The poverty that is too great to admit of a rice diet in a rice-growing country is beyond our imagination. What do they eat? That is what I asked. Weeds, stewed weeds, as well as I can learn."

Just a Thimbleful.

Wife—Are you going out this evening, John?

Husband—Well-er-yes, my dear; I don't feel just right, and I thought I would step around the corner and get just a thimbleful of brandy.

Wife (pleased that she could save him trouble)—Well, you needn't go out for that, John; I have a little brandy in the closet.

So she filled her thimble full, and he gulped it down and tried to look happy.

RETENTIVE MEMORIES.

Some Remarkable Feats of Recollection Chronicled.

Mr. Staunton, the United States War Minister during the great civil war, had a very retentive memory, and was especially well up in Dickens' works. One evening in the early part of 1868 Dickens, then on a reading tour in the States, was dining with Charles Sumner, when Mr. Staunton and some others were present. The War Minister was put to the test, and when started could repeat from memory a chapter from any of Dickens' books, showing a much greater knowledge of the works than their author could boast. Mr. Staunton accounted for this intimate knowledge of Dickens by mentioning the habit which he had formed during the war of invariably reading something by the author of "Pickwick" before going to bed at night. The late Bishop Prince Lee, first Bishop of Manchester, was similarly gifted. It is related of him that being once, at an evening party, started by a lady with a line quoted from "Marmion," he went right on with the poem from memory, and could have recited the whole. As a further test the same lady quoted a few words from a conversation in "Ivanhoe," whereupon the Bishop repeated the whole chapter correctly from memory. But greater than any of these was Lord Macaulay. From a very early age the retentiveness of his memory was extraordinary. When only 3 or 4 years of age, his mind mechanically retained the form of what he read so that, as his maid said, he talked "quite printed words." Once as a child, when making an afternoon call with his father, he picked up Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel" for the first time, and quietly devoured the treasure while his seniors were engaged in conversation. When they returned home the boy went to his mother, who at the time was confined to her bed, and sitting down at the bedside repeated what he had been reading, by the canto, until she was tired. Later in life his wonderful memory was always a subject of interest to his friends, and occasionally was put to searching tests. One day at a Board meeting of the British Museum, Macaulay wrote down from memory in three parallel columns on each of four pages of foolscap a complete list of the Cambridge Senior Wranglers with dates and colleges attached, for the hundred years during which a record of the names had been kept in the University Calendar. "On another occasion," says Trevelyan, "Sir David Dundas asked: 'Macaulay, do you know your Popes?' 'No,' was the answer, 'I always get wrong among the Innocents.' 'But can you say your Archbishops of Canterbury?' 'Any fool,' said Macaulay, 'could say his Archbishops of Canterbury backwards,' and he went off at score, drawing breath only once in order to remark on the oddity of there having been both an Archbishop Sancroft and an Archbishop Bancroft, until Sir David stopped him at Cranmer." Macaulay once said that if, by any possible chance, all the copies of "Paradise Lost" and the "Pilgrim's Progress" in existence were destroyed, he could write them both out again, complete, from recollection. When O'Connell made his motion, in 1834, for the Repeal of the Union, Mr. Tennant, M. P. for Belfast, delivered a speech lasting for three and a half hours, full of figures and calculation, entirely from memory, in which he trusted so completely that he sent the MS. of his speech to the newspapers before he delivered it. His confidence was not misplaced, for the oration was spoken without a single mistake, or even a momentary hesitation. Another Irish M. P., Mr. Robert Dillon Brown, member for Mayo, had the same useful faculty. He would dictate a speech to an amanuensis, and twenty-four hours afterwards, without looking at it or thinking of the matter in the meantime, could repeat it word for word. Woodfall, the editor of the Morning Chronicle and brother of Junius' publisher, was able to report accurately in the morning the debate of the previous evening, without taking any notes. In some cases the mental action involved in feats of this nature would seem to be quite mechanical and unintelligent. In the newspapers of January, 1820, there are accounts of an extraordinary man who was known as "Memory-corner Thompson." This man, although he could hardly remember anything he heard, could yet retain perfectly the names and descriptions of large collections of objects that met his eye. He could take an inventory of the contents of a house from cellar to attic merely by surveying them, and could afterwards write it out from memory. He could draw from recollection accurate plans of many London parishes and districts, with every street, alley, public building, public house, etc., duly noted, down to the minutest topographical details, such as pumps, trees, bow-windows and posts, all correctly marked. Conspicuous instances of this mechanical kind of memory are to be found amongst the famous mental calculators. Jedediah Buxton was a celebrity of this kind about the middle of the last century. He had but little education, and indeed was not able to write his own name. But in arithmetic and in abstruse calculations his powers were wonderful. The following is a specimen of the problems which when put to the test he solved mentally in a few minutes: Find how many cubical eighths of an inch there are in a quadrangle mass measuring 23,145,789 yards long, 2,642,732 yards wide, and 54,965 yards thick. When in London in 1754 he was taken to see Garrick as Richard III. at Drury Lane. The play did not interest him, but he occupied himself in reckoning the number of words he heard, and in counting the number of steps made by the dancers. The American boy, Zerah Colburn, who came to London in 1812, was a similar phenomenon. He had no knowledge of the rules of arithmetic, and was quite unable to explain how he arrived at the answers to the problems submitted to him. Mental power of this nature would seem to imply an unwholesome development of one part of the brain at the expense of the rest. The retentiveness of such a memory as Lord Macaulay's is greatly to be preferred to the abnormal mental activity of an animated calculating machine.

Mme. Mutsu, wife of the Japanese Minister in Washington, is petite and slender, has dead-black hair, a clear olive complexion and kindling black eyes.

Two Sinners.

There was a man, it was said one time,
Who went astray in his youthful prime.
Can the brain keep cool and the heart keep quiet
When the blood is a river that is running riot?
And the boys will be boys, the old folks say,
And a man's the better who's had his day.

The sinner reformed, and the preacher told
Of the prodigal son who came back to the fold,
And the Christian people threw open the door
With a warmer welcome than ever before;
Wealth and honor were his to command,
And a spotless woman gave him her hand,
And the world strewed their pathway with flowers abloom,
Crying: "God bless lady and God bless groom!"

There was a maiden went astray
In the golden dawn of life's young day.
She had more passion and heart than head,
And she followed blindly where fond love led—
And love unchecked is a dangerous guide
To wander at will by a fair girl's side.

The woman repented and turned from her sin,
But no door opened to let her in;
The preacher prayed that she might be forgiven,
But told her to look for mercy in heaven.
For this is the law of the earth we know,
That the woman is scorned, while the man may go.
A brave man wedded her after all,
But the world said, frowning, "We shall not call."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Commonplace Woman.

We have read, as you know, for ages and ages,
Of a willowy maiden devoid of a spine,
A fabulous, pre-historic young person,
Who on white of an egg and a cracker could dine.

But I write to you now of a commonplace woman,
Who's shockingly healthy and fearfully fat,
Who never has headache or nervous prostration.
Commonplace! what could be more so than that.

She doesn't do Kensington cat-tails or rushes,
Nor has she a screen with a one-legged stork,
She doesn't adore Charlotte Russe or blancmanges,
But prefers unromantic, commonplace pork.

She hasn't a quilt of crazy silk patchwork,
Nor the tiniest bit of crocheted macreme;
She cannot perform Beethoven's sonatas,
Nor sing but the most commonplace little lay.

She hasn't a gift for the art decorative,
Pasting Japanese monsters on Yankee stone jar,
That stands in a corner to look so esthetic,
But that grieves to the soul the old household Lar.

She never paints song birds nor crickets on china—
To be drowned every day in our teacups, alas!
Or ferns, cabbage-roses of ribbon or velvet,
And naught did she know of the much-hammered brass.

She cannot write poems that glow like a furnace,
Nor sonnets as cold as the Appenine snow;
For if she chops up her ideas into meter,
There's a rush in the ebb, and a halt in the flow.

She doesn't believe she was born with the mission,
Un'ess, it may be, to be happy and well;
Nor does she at all understand protoplasm,
And looks upon women who do as a "sell."

But there's worse to be told of this commonplace woman,
Who owns neither bird, nor dog, nor pet cat;
They say that she's really in love with her husband.
Commonplace! what would be more so than that?

And when we all stand at the last dread tribunal,
Where great and where small are assigned each a part,
May the angels make room for the commonplace woman
Who knows naught of literature, science or art.

—Good Housekeeping.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

An Abundance in the Red-Headed Girl's Veins Prevents Her Tanning.

A red-headed girl, I believe, never turns brown. That, I understood from a learned physician, is because she has too much iron in her blood. It is the iron that gives the fine Titian hue to her hair. If she had less iron in her blood her hair would probably be brown or chestnut, or perhaps blonde. The varying degrees of redness that you see in different red-headed girls is due to the different proportions of iron in their blood. A girl with glossy, brownish hair that shows red in a strong light has only a fair share of iron in her blood, but a bricktop, if I may be permitted the expression, a bricktop is full of iron. The doctors know of no way of neutralizing the effect of the iron. Perhaps they wouldn't resort to it even if they knew it. For it is the iron in the blood that makes red-headed girls so strong and hardy and good-natured. It also is the cause of freckles, which are very good for the health. And it is noted as a singular thing—probably also having some relation to the iron in the blood—that mosquitoes never bite red-headed girls. So you see, according to the dictum of this learned physician, a red-headed girl has many advantages over her dark-haired sisters.—Philadelphia Press.

A Cure For Insomnia.

"So many cures have been advocated for sleeplessness that I am tempted," writes a correspondent, "to propound my own recipe, which, if it may appear somewhat impracticable and far-fetched, has at least the advantage of simplicity. It is merely this: when you have tossed and tumbled about one bed until your pillow seems to be on fire and your sheets red-hot, turn into another—I mean another bed. You will find the sheets and the pillows refreshingly cool, and it is probable at all events that you will go to sleep. The recipe is not at all infallible, and it is of course necessary to have another bed to turn into, which is not always possible. But when practicable it is worth trying; and if it fails one can always fall back on the undoubted fact that there is no universal cure for sleeplessness. What is one man's meat is another man's poison."

False Economy.

Wife (reprovingly)—The great trouble with you is, John, you buy a good many things you don't need, simply because they are cheap. That is very false economy.

Husband—Here is a lady's watch I bought to-day for $20 that's worth every cent of $30.

Wife—Oh, thank you, John; why, it was a real bargain!

After the Musicale.

Miss Screecher—Well, dear, how was my voice to-night? Did it fill the room?

Miss Veracity—At first it did, but afterward——

Miss Screecher—Well?

Miss Veracity—It emptied it.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

The Beautiful Apartments of Queen Victoria at the Quaint Palace of Holyrood.

A CHILD WITH NINE GRANDPARENTS.

The Queen's Edinburgh House.

Although Queen Victoria had visited Edinburgh before, she did not reside in the palace of Holyrood until August, 1850. She had, meanwhile, selected the rooms to be fitted up for Prince Albert, herself, and their children, and they have remained ever since very much as they were first prepared. The suite selected was that corresponding to those of Mary Stuart and Darnly, in the northwest corner, the Queen's being in the southwest corner. Even the little turret chamber, in which Mary Stuart was at supper with Rizzio the night he was torn away and stabbed to death has its counterpart in a similar little tower room, opening into a splendid room known as Prince Albert's drawing-room. According to the ground plan of these towers, which is the same, this drawing-room corresponds with Queen Mary's bedchamber in the other corner, and there are two of these little rooms, as there are two towers flanking each side of the room. Mary Stuart used her other tower room as a dressing-room, but in Prince Albert's drawing-room they are mainly cosily fitted up with modern luxury.

The first room of the suite is called the Queen's breakfast-room, and is by no means the small apartment which usually does duty as a breakfast-room. Most of the rooms in this suite are large, and the breakfast-room is none of the smallest. The walls are paneled with oak half way up, and the mantel-piece is also of oak, finely carved. The prevailing tints in furniture and wall decorations are green and gold, and the furniture is thoroughly modern and comfortable. Next to this is a little square, oak-paneled room, apparently used for nothing at all. The only remarkable thing about it is a very ornamental roof, representing a blue dome and being studded with silver stars. Next to this is Prince Albert's dressing-room—a fine, handsome apartment, with some superb panel paintings. It is furnished in green and gold. Prince Albert's drawing-room is one of the most splendid in the suite. It is nearly fifty feet long, and here are the two little tower rooms opening into it. It has an exquisitely worked ceiling, with the monogram of Victoria and Albert inserted in numerous panels, and has handsome furniture and hangings of red and gold. The Queen has two drawing-rooms, besides a throne-room. Her bedroom is hung with artistic tapestry, and over the mantel is a modern painting of Venus rising from the sea. The state drawing-room contains some of the ornamentation of the two Charleses, and the cipher "C. R." is seen in many places on the walls and ceilings, especially in the Queen's drawing-room. The oak paneling in this room is beautiful, and the ceiling, a delicate green, with the monogram of Victoria and Albert, the Scotch emblem of the thistle, the rose and the shamrock, is much admired. Besides this room, there is what is called the evening drawing-room, which was the Queen's favorite apartment. This is in red and gold, too, but the walls are heavy with tapestry brought from Buchingham Palace, and there are other reminders of her English home.

The throne-room is the most imposing of the suite, and there the Queen held her levees. Its proportions are very nearly sixty by thirty. It is hung with crimson damask, and the royal arms are plentifully sprinkled about. At one end is a throne, which was made for George IV., when he made his celebrated visit to Scotland in 1822. A portrait of the first gentleman in Europe in Highland costume, and painted by Sir David Wilkie, hangs on the walls, beside numerous Hanoverian portraits. There is but one Stuart represented among those portraits, and that is Mary, the wife of William of Orange.

A Baby With Nine Grandparents.

Effie Webster, the little 16-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Webster, of Reading, Mich., is a representative of the fifth living generation—having father and mother, grandfather and grandmother on both sides, great-grandfather and great-grandmother on both sides, and great-great-grandmother on the side of the father—nine grand parents. The great-grandparents on the mother's side have thirteen great-grandchildren and twenty-three grandchildren.

She Came Down Like an Angel.

California has a petticoated balloon jumper. Her name is Mrs. Van Tassell; she is young, handsome and blonde, and she weighs 165 pounds. She made her first jump at Los Angeles the other day. The Chief of Police sent detectives to prevent her getting into her husband's balloon, from which she had advertised to jump; but she escaped from them, made the ascent, and, when she was a mile above the city, dropped. She landed, feet foremost, safe and sound.

She Picked Out Six Damsels for Him.

One hundred and thirty-six Peking carts were to be seen outside a gate of the Nanhai Palace at Peking, China, on the morning of July 9th, each containing a fair candidate for the Emperor's harem from mandarin families of the Manchu, Mongol and Chinese banner population. The Empress held a fresh inspection on thrt day and selected for the youthful Emperor of fei-pin six damsels of the lower rank of kungnu, 20.

Florence Nightingale at 69.

Miss Florence Nightingale is now a confirmed invalid, and is a patient at St. Thomas' Hospital, London. Her services during the Crimean war injured her spine, and she has never recovered from the effects thereof. This illustrious philanthropist is nearly 69 years old.

Queen Victoria and Her Pearls.

Queen Victoria has a great fondness for pearls, and has taken care that each of her daughters shall have splendid ropes of them. One of her first purchases, after the birth of each child, has been two or three very fine pearls, and on every succeeding birthday she added one or two very perfect and carefully selected ones to the string, so that it was completed by the time they were ready to "come out." These necklaces are very well known in England, and they have been worn frequently this season. The young daughters of the Princess of Wales have them, too, thanks to their grandmother. The English papers even have commented upon this rivalry and say: "It is surely a blunder that our Princess should have lent her countenance to a custom worthy only of glorified pork-packers and millionairesses from the other side of the Atlantic. They admit that, though London is the great diamond market, New York is her biggest customer, the sales here being estimated at something like $50,000,000 a year, and two large firms of this city carrying a stock valued at $1,500,000 each. Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts' pearls have been the most splendid seen in London this season. She has three strings of three sizes, which hang around the neck apart from each other. She also has a ruby pendant, with seven large stones of the true pigeon's blood color, and these are set amid very fine diamonds, the whole attracting much attention whenever she has worn them in London. Another one of her jewels commented on by the society papers there is a lizard with a ruby head, emerald body and diamond legs."

A Singular Test of Strength.

In a recent issue of the Cincinnati Enquirer we find an account of a novel contest of human against brute strength. Two residents of Dearborn county, Indiana, Wm. Liddle, a merchant, and Jesse Crim, a blacksmith of the village, laid a wager that they could outpull any two horses in the township. Steven Cook, a farmer, who owned a fine team, accepted the bet, and not long ago, in the presence of a concourse of neighbors and friends of the respective contestants, the trial of strength was made. Liddle and Crim lay flat on their backs with their feet firmly braced against an immovable structure arranged for the purpose, and with their heads pointing from the horses, that were hitched a distance of 40 feet away to a piece of timber held firmly in the hands of the prostrate men.

The test was to be decided by the horses either pulling the timber from the hands of the men, or else pulling them from the ground to their feet. Three trials were to be made, each of three minutes' steady pulling. The excited farmers and villagers crowded around the parties to witness this singular feat of strength and endurance. The horses were twice whipped into pulling their best, but with distended muscles and swelling veins that told of the terrific strain upon them the prostrate men held the horses to their position. At the third trial the excited farmer lashed his horses to force them to their utmost, when, by a sudden jerk, the timber in the hands of the resisting men, and to which the horses were hitched, snapped in two pieces. The end of one piece struck Crim in the side as it broke, and rendered him unconscious for nearly an hour. He was supposed to be dead, but finally recovered, and is out of all danger of serious results from the blow.

What a Man's Ear Shows.

In China long ears are considered an indication of wisdom, and common people think they are the Emperor's chief characteristic.

Pliny says: "When our ears do glow and tingle some do talk of us in our absence."

Mollinaeus, an ancient writer, says: "If his ears tingle 'tis a sure sign that others speak of him."

In "Much Ado About Nothing" we read: "What fire is in my ears?"

Herrick alludes to the ear superstition:

"One ear tingles; some therebe
That are snarling now at me."

An earlier writer (1598) says: "If their ears tingle they say it is a sign they have some enemies abroad that do or are about to speak evil of them."

An old writer says of the superstitious man: "When his right ear tingles he will be cheerful, but if his left he will be sad."

In popular weather lore, when the ears ring at night a change of wind is at hand. Forster, an old meteorologist says: "Singing in the ear portends a change of weather."

It seems formerly to have been a form of endearment to bite one's ear. We read in "Romeo and Juliet:"

"I will bite thee by thine ear for that jest."

The ear was in Egypt a hieroglyph of obedience. The saying "walls have ears," is very old. Chaucer says: "The heldf hath eyen and the wood hath ears." The phrase "to set people by the ears" had its origin in a pot-house custom of stringing pots by the handles or ears, and clashing them together in carrying them.

The Scotch ask: "Right lug, left lug, which lug lows?" So in Hull, England, it is said that slander is talked about you if the left ear burns; but if the right, men speak well of you. In Lancashire this is reversed. The Dutch say that some one is praising you if the right ear itches, but if the left he calls you names. In the latter case bite your little finger and the evil speaker's tongue will suffer accordingly. In this country it is said that people talk well of you if the right ear tingles, but evil if the left.

The Empress's Monument to Her Husband.

The choice of the monument which the Empress Victoria is about to erect over the grave of Frederick III. is another instance of the delicate consideration which distinguishes the actions of the widowed Empress. During their stay at Toblach the Emperor and Empress were much interested in the small old church of "the Holy Grave" at Innishen, which has often attracted the attention of visitors to the Puster valley by its peculiar architecture. The Emperor himself went over the church, and the Empress made sketches of various parts of it. At present two prominent German architects are at Innishen, making plans of the church, an exact copy of which is to be built as a mausoleum over the remains of the Emperor at the Friedenskirche.

Asking Too Much.

Old lady (to druggist's boy)—"What does the proprietor do, boy, when he gives arsenic for somethin' else?"

Boy—"Well, I dunno; sometimes he does one thing an' sometimes he does another. You can't expect, ma'am, a $3-a-week boy to keep track of the boss all the time."

An Inaccurate Definition.

Teacher—"You may tell me, Willie, what a ruminating animal is." Willie—"One that chews its cubs."

THE CREWS OF BIG SHIPS.

It Takes a Good Many Men to Manage the Ocean Racers.

The crew of a big ship like the City of New York numbers a good many more persons than some regiments of soldiers, says the New York Sun. The New York is commanded by Capt. Frederick Watkins, and his right-hand man, the chief officer, is S. F. Barff. To help these two to navigate the ship six deck officers are provided, and three of them are constantly on deck when at sea. In addition to these, in what may be called department of seamen, there is boatswain and his mate and 36 sailors, of whom 12 men are called quartermasters, who are detailed to steer the ship and stand on lookout. There is also a ship's carpenter, who is generally as handy aloft as with the saw and adze. In charge of the machinery are a chief engineer, Mr. McDougall, and 27 assistant engineers, beside two electricians and their three assistants who look after the electric lights; three donkey men, 31 leading firemen, 54 firemen, 63 trimmers and one blacksmith. The donkeymen are foremen in charge of the boilers; the leading firemen are also called greasers, and it is their duty to keep the machinery oiled and cleaned. The 54 firemen shovel coal into the furnaces, and see that it is spread just right to burn as hot as possible, and when a furnace needs cleaning they do the work. The trimmers shovel the coal from the bunkers into the stoke hole. Mr. McLeod, the chief steward, is assisted by Mr. Finlow, formerly steward of Jay Gould's yacht Atalanta, and by 146 other people, of whom seven are women and eight are boys in their teens, called bellboys. Mrs. McNichol is the chief stewardess, and four women help her in the first cabin. The second cabin and the steerage have one stewardess each. Of the other people in this department 36 are table waiters, 16 are bedroom stewards and attend to keeping staterooms in order, 10 are occupied in the pantry, 16 are cooks, 6 are porters, 5 are messroom stewards and wait on the officers, 14 are in the second cabin, 16 are in the steerage, 4 are bakers, 3 are butchers and 5 are storekeepers, and this term includes the bartenders and the men in immediate charge of the rooms where provisions, etc., are kept. While this completes the list of the three great departments into which a ship's company is divided, there is yet a purser, who is a keeper of accounts, besides having a lot of other important duties to attend to, and the ship's surgeon, who has one assistant. The number of stewards carried varies with the passenger traffic. The total number of the crew of the City of New York when she sailed was, according to the purser, 394.

"The Field is the World."

There are 75 Episcopal churches in New York city, and 44 of them are entirely free.

There is some idea of holding the next Pan-Anglican Council in the United States. The American bishops have made the suggestion to the English prelates.

Cardinal Lavigeris, who is trying to suppress the slave trade, was, before he left London, cordially received by the Prince and Princess of Wales and by Lord Salisbury. While in England he was elected a member of the Anti-Slavery Society. In the prosecution of his mission the Cardinal intends to visit all the capitals of Europe.

The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen recently entertained at Dollis Hall 350 of the residents of the homes for working girls in London. Among those present on the occasion were Dr. George Macdonald, the novelist; Captain Sinclair and a large number of ladies and gentlemen interested in benevolent enterprises and the reformation of the masses.

There has been much discussion of late regarding the relative merits of Christianity and Mohammedanism as a religion suitable to the African race. Rev. Isaac Taylor and the traveller Johnstone contend stoutly for the superiority of Mohammedanism. A new opinion has been advanced by Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, now in Scotland, who, while preaching at Oban a few days ago, expressed his conviction that God had used Mohammedanism as a means of preparation for Christian missions.

Dr. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, in an address to the University Extension students at Oxford, described novels as the "prose poems of the day." Novels, he said, were no longer looked at askance or read in secret as they once were. It was now no uncommon thing for clergymen to put one another through a course of examination to find out which was best up in his "Pickwick." The novelist had latterly entered the domain of theology, as he had already fraternized with art and science. "Novelist, preach on, if you will lift me higher," said the bishop. "We have tried to do all in our power. God speed you! We are brothers in one common end." Professor Jowett complimented the bishop, and stated that he seemed to have the power beyond any of his contemporaries of adapting the religion of Christ to the wants of the nineteenth century.

In recent times laymen have not been privileged to any extent to preside in Presbyterian assemblies. It was considered a rare example when, a few years ago, Dr. Bruce, of Newcastle, a licensed preacher, but never in charge of a congregation, was elected moderator of the English Presbyterian Synod. His brother, Sir George Bruce, who is an elder in the Church, is now named for the chair. The suggestion is creating some difficulty. Dr. Walter Morrison, of Westbourne, London, writes to the effect that to elect a layman to the moderator's chair would be unconstitutional, besides being out of the order of succession. Dr. Burns, of Kirkliston, gives an account of the American assemblies and makes special mention of the efficient manner in which a layman this year discharged the duties of vice-moderator. Dr. Burns thinks the Americans are moving in the right direction and recalls the fact that John Erskine, of Dun, a layman, was six times moderator in the Scottish Reformative Assembly, and that the honorable office was held also by George Buchanan.

It is only 60 years ago this month that the first stage carrying the United States mail westward passed over the Allegheny mountains. The road taken by the stage was from Cumberland, Md., to Wheeling, a distance of 130 miles.

A DASHING EXPLOIT.

How Forty Daring Englishmen Captured 400 Beloochees.

The recapture of Mone from the rebel leader Twek-nga-lu in the beginning of May is a good example of what rapid and determined action will do with a semi-civilized enemy. The relieving party under Col. Sartorious, of the 1st Beloochees, started at daybreak, in a downpour of rain, from a village in the hills to the west of Mone. About two miles from the town Mr. Scott, the assistant superintendent of the Shan States, with Lieut. Fowler, of the Beloochees, and six men of the Ride brigade, mounted on officers' ponies, went off from the main column to make a dash on the palace. Mr. Scott had been in Mone several times before, and was able to take the party by a jungle path round the south of the town. From there they galloped straight on the palace, disregarding the armed men in the streets. The eastern gate was fortunately ajar, so that it was not necessary to dismount. The clatter of the hoofs brought Twek-nga-lu to a window. Mr. Scott knew him by sight, and, with the assistance of a soldier, had the rebel tied to his own bedpost within two minutes of entering the palace inclosure, which is over a hundred yards square and full of detached houses. Twek-nga-lu had a repeating rifle loaded with sixteen cartridges lying by his bedside, but had not time to seize it. The four gates were then closed and guarded by one man each, and another guarded Twek-nga-lu. Mr. Scott and Mr. Fowler, with the corporal of the party, then went to meet the body-guard of twenty men, all armed with guns. Mr. Scott demanded the name of the leader, who proved to be Twek-nga-lu's chief fighting-man. He then announced who he was and called on them in Shan to sit down, advancing all the time. Kun-sang, the leader, refused, whereupon Mr. Scott promptly knocked him down, seized the gun of the man behind him, and shouted out that he would shoot any one who did not sit down immediately. The corporal and Mr. Fowler each covered his man as he came on. Before the Shans could realize the situation, five had been disarmed, and the rest then gave in. Messrs. Scott and Fowler collected all the guns and swords, the corporal kneeling in the Hythe position ready to fire. In five minutes the palace was completely in their hands and the main column was heard firing to the north of the town. A quarter of an hour later they marched into the palace and found everything settled, Twek-nga-lu bound and his chief leaders under guard. When it is considered that the town was held by 400 men and that the force inside the palace outnumbered the capturing party by nearly ten to one, the affair may be considered as successful an example of prompt daring as is to be found out of a lady's romance. The capture of Twek-nga-lu is likely to have the most satisfactory results. The disturbances which broke out in the southern Shan States in April were mainly due to his advance and his intrigues, and now that he and his chief leaders have been captured, the complete establishment of peace may be anticipated.

—St. James' Gazette.

The Main Spring Broke.

The folding bed is apparently unknown in Virginia.

The other day a tall and rather verdant F. F. V. arrived in town, on a Government office bent, and took quarters in a Washington boarding house.

As it was the dull season the Virginian was quartered in a large front room where the bed folded silently up, like Longfellow's Arab tent.

It so happened that the Virginia boarder met some friends from Alexandria during the evening of his first day in Washington, and when he reached home the hour was late.

Reaching his room he fell on the bed, boots and all, and the springs being worn the structure began to close up.

The elevation of his feet, however, did not trouble the new boarder in the least; he was already slumbering peacefully, and the bed, of course, did not close tightly. In the morning the absence of her new boarder from breakfast troubled the landlady to such an extent that she went with the maid to investigate. The Virginian's door was open, the room undisturbed and the bed apparently closed. The maid, however, discovered his hat on the floor, and then in sepulchral tones called attention to the feet protruding from the top of the bed.

The terrified women pulled the bed slowly down, and the new boarder, awakened by the motion, crawled out in a rumpled state.

"I beg your pardon," he said in some confusion, but his Virginian politeness quickly getting control, "I was feeling a little peart last night and sat down rather hard on the bed, and I—I reckon I busted the mainspring."—Washington Cor. New York Press.

Women Getting off Cars.

Woman, lovely woman, will wilfully persist in getting off street cars backward before they stop, despite conductors' cautions. A young woman fell flat on Niagara street a day or two ago because she jumped off while the car was moving, and that same night the writer saw an elderly woman saved from a like fate on a Main street car by the conductor's seizing her just as she was about to leap. Of course the innocent creatures think that if a man can jump off a moving car with impunity, they can. But no man can get off at right angles with a car, putting down first the foot on the side toward the horses without spilling himself promiscuously on the pavement. If women won't wait until the car stops, they should remember these simple rules: First, face the same way the car is going; second, pull skirts clear of the car; third, put the outside foot well forward and brace the body back; fourth, hold on with both hands until the driver stops the horses; fifth, step off.—Buffalo Express.

Had Him There.

Countryman (to celebrated Hindoo Snake Charmer)—I s'pose you know a good deal about snakes, Mister? Hindoo Snake Charmer—Snakes, sir, have been the study of my eventful life. I know all about them. Countryman—The hull business? Hindoo Snake Charmer—Yes, sir. Countryman—Well, I wish you'd tell a feller where the body leaves off an' the tail begins.—New York Sun

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, SEPT. 13, 1888.

INTEND TO RETALIATE.

For some time past the members of the House of Representatives at Washington have been wrangling over a marrow-bone of contention, viz., the Fishery Retaliation Bill, which finally passed the House on Saturday last. It still has to go before the American Senate, and in all probability will be passed there also. It strikes us that it must be a humiliating spectacle to the honorable citizens of the United States, this mixture of bluster, bravado and pandering to the Irish vote—for that is the whole secret of the situation. The Irish vote of the United States is a very important factor in the election of a president for the "grand and glorious?" republic. Republicans want it, and Democrats require to retain it. Hence the political manoeuvering in their representative houses, the low depths of groveling insult and calumny heaped upon Great Britain and Canada, and the pitiful spectacle of a people who try to make political capital at the expense of the finer feelings and friendly advances of a neighboring people. It will, at least, have the effect of placing the stars and stripes in unenviable contrast with the union jack; it will remove the film from the eyes of many Canadians who have looked with clouded vision upon the glitter and glamor surrounding the republic to the south of us and thought it a good thing to connect ourselves more closely with—in fact place ourselves under the control of the American mercantile world. There are a few such, but we predict that the sorry spectacle which has lately been presented, of American Senators and American Congressmen trampling upon our just deserts, and outraging diplomatic justice, will very largely have the effect of disgusting even these advocates of closer intimacy with everything American, in politics, at least.

As a proof of the low ebb of American politics, and the depths of unmanly degredation to which American politicians can descend, this fishery business is a glaring illustration. Scouting the conscientious endeavors of Great Britain and Canada to effect an amicable settlement, they, for the basest of political purposes, refuse to accept any peaceful terms, and have the effrontery to say, in effect, "Heed not our boasting—we wink while we talk." The New York Tribune says:

"That this Administration will exercise the powers conferred by the bill, if it shall become a law, scarcely anybody believes. The composure of Great Britain and Canada has been undisturbed except by a single belligerent editoral in a London newspaper, and the brave ravings of a gallant Canadian militiaman. Neither Great Britain nor Canada believe that President Cleveland will exercise the powers which it is proposed to grant."

This is very consoling to think upon, at any rate, when consider that any retaliation attempted will recoil upon the United States with as great force as it can hit us. This latter is the cause of our "composure."

Toronto is once more bubbling over with enthusiasm and excitement. Its big exhibition was formally opened on Tuesday by His Excellency, Governor Stanley. On Monday he was tendered a royal reception by the municipal officers of the city, in the Horticultural Pavilion, at which 5,000 people were present. Toronto, if anything, is a loyal city, and always receives in a magnificent manner the representatives of our Queen.

Emin Bey went into the heart of Africa to hunt slave-traders; Stanley went to hunt for Emin Bey, and now another glory-hunting American has gone to search for Stanley. And still the fever-haunted marshes of Central Africa cry out, "Come on, Macduff."

A Bad Spirit.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Will you kindly permit me to explain a matter going the usual rounds, and which, if allowed to pass unchallenged, may do more harm than desirable.

A man of this Village who gives his name as Spirit, on Friday the 7th inst., endeavored to vent his spleen on myself in this way—: A particular friend of mine, one who has been under obligations to me more or less for the past ten years, went to this Spirit's green grocery to transact some business, when this said Spirit feigned sickness, and asked him to get him some stimulant from the drug store. He desisted, told him to get some from the hotel. He told him no, that he could get nothing but trash, or words to that effect. He told this Spirit to send the boy for it. His second plea was that we wouldn't give it to the boy. Upon this emergency this innocent old man was induced to come. But the Medical Hall had certain definite rules regarding the sale of liquors.

First, we never use the privilege the laws give us, to sell indiscriminately, even to the six ounce limit. We must always have a reasonable evidence that it is to be used as a medicine pure and simple. So that it is no marvel that in this instance the same safeguards were used. Let me say, the old gentleman has a daughter, who was and is out of health, and for whom stimulants had been ordered before. When the question was put, is this for sickness? his reply was "Yes." Next question, "how is your daughter now?" The answer was, "not very well." So that it was given to him, as understood by us, for his daughter. But no sooner had this stimulant passed to this man, who subscribes himself as Stephen Spirit, than he supposed he had us under his clutches. I am told he has the bottle sealed for the day of doom and destruction. I hope he will keep it where he can always see it as a warning to his unexampled meanness.

Now it so happens that a licensed medical practitioner is not limited to six ounces, nor to sixty ounces, as long as he does not wantonly give it for the sake of trade. In this case I was present, and the liquor was given upon a medical privilege only. I hope this explanation will serve two purposes—first, by exonerating us from blame, and second by establishing the character of a man who lives among us.

One other thing I merely state, that a man who utters such a sentiment as this, "That he hopes that God nor the devil will get him until he gets vengeance," is a dangerous man, and it is a question whether I ought not, as a public man, arraign him for expressions so amenable to punishment. I will decide upon the course I shall pursue hereafter. Yours,

DR. CHRISTOE.

Sept. 10, 1888.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

In the last issue of The Advance a statement was made to the effect that the goods stolen from Mrs. Jordan recently were recovered. I have inquired and find that there is no clue as to the articles stolen, or the burglars either, except that an old suit of tweed was left behind, being the remnant of a good outfit.

Our neighbor, Mr. R. J. McAfee, had, a few days ago, a very narrow escape from a large bear. As he was going from the 7th to the 9th line, through the bush, a dog that accompanied him came suddenly upon a large bear, which was sitting, or lying, in a small stream, cooling himself when disturbed by the dog. As soon as bruin spied the dog he went for him, and the dog went for Mr. McAfee, and Mr. McAfee went for a tree and climbed up the tree with all the agility and dexterity he possessed. The bear did not attempt to climb up after Mr. McAfee, but cast some terrible glances at him, and after a while moved off. The dog used the precaution of keeping a safe distance between himself and the bear.

Bears have got so numerous that it is almost a daily occurence to see from one to four between the 9th and 11th lines.

There is a good hunting club organized for the express purpose of lessening the number of bears in that part of the township, and the first hunt of the season will take place in a day or two.

Local News.

Trout fishing ends on Saturday, and fish stories will be at a discount for another eight months. Here is our last, as a kind of farewell: From Kimberley we had forwarded to us last week a quarter of a trout which weighed when caught 2lb. 10 oz., and measured 17⅝ inches in length. The piece received made a breakfast for three.

Fire Bugs at Dundalk.

About 1.30 Sunday morning fire broke out in Dundalk in the store owned by John Connor and occupied by James Egerton as a liquor store. Despite the efforts of the people the fire spread and soon J. D. Morgan's store and dwelling, C. H. Jewell's furniture workshop, the Hanbury block, occupied by Jeweller Johnston, and James Connor's store and dwelling, were in flames. The total loss is estimated at about $8,000; partly covered by insurance. Jewell's furniture store and Hanbury's store being built of brick, these buildings were saved, though badly damaged at the back. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

Since the above was put in type we learn that one or two arrests have been made in connection with the affair, but the parties were discharged. The constabulary of Dundalk are about as big a farce as their lockup, and that is saying a good deal.

An Explanation.

The communication from Dr. Christoe, in this issue, may appear somewhat obscure to many of our readers who are unacquainted with the circumstances. We did not care, from charitable motives, to mention the matter heretofore, but now that the Dr. has made it public property we feel at liberty, and in duty bound, to explain the disagreeable affair fully. Some two or three weeks ago Dr. Christoe felt it his duty to bring Mr. Spirit before J. W. Armstrong, J.P., where he was fined on two different informations, viz., for using abusive language, and furious driving. Since that time Mr. Spirit appears to have been laying a deep plot to wreak a heavy vengeance upon the Dr., and taking advantage of the latter's amiable disposition, he found it not difficult to secure sufficient evidence, as he thinks, to convict the Dr. for selling more than the prescribed six ounces, and has accordingly laid information before the license inspector. We are sorry that the matter has gone so far. It is only a personal affair at best, and such things should never occur in a village which boasts the same amiable nature that Flesherton inhabitants are noted for. We should like to see the thing dropped, and an amicable settlement arrived at. Such would reflect more credit upon both parties than eternal warfare, where no just object is to be attained.

Birth.

Born—At Flesherton On Saturday, Sept. 8, the wife of J. B. CLIMO of a daughter.

General News.

Hon. Edward Blake's health is reported much better.

The Provincial Exhibition was opened at Kingston on Monday.

A war among the American Northwestern Indians is threatened.

The damage done by the frost in Maine is estimated at $1,000,000.

The floods in Austro-Hungary are causing an immense amount of damage.

The Red River Railway will not be open for passenger traffic until Oct. 1.

Two business blocks in San Francisco were burned Sunday; loss, 1,250,000.

The Retaliation Bill was passed in the House of Representatives on Saturday by a vote of 174 to 4

The writ has been issued for Montreal East, the election to take place on the 16th inst.

It is estimated that eighty persons lost their lives in the recent West India hurricane.

The steamer Baltic, of Collingwood, is ashore on One-Tree Island in the North Channel, Lake Huron.

An Indian has killed six out of a herd of seven buffalo which he found at the Red Deer Forks, in the Northwest.

Hon. Edward Blake has given $2,590 for scholarships in the Department of Political Science in Toronto University.

Last week a large quantity of whiskey was seized at the Sault, which had just been smuggled from the American side.

Six applications for divorce have been entered at Ottawa for the coming session.

Sir Francis De Wilton, Rev. Mr. Mackenzie and Sir Charles Wilson believe there is no cause for alarm regarding Stanley.

Maine returns would seem to show that the Republicans have elected all the Senators and that the Democrats have gained a few seats in the House.

Two earthquake shocks have occured at Vostizza on the Corinthian Gulf, doing great damage. Troops have been despatched with a supply of tents for the homeless and provisions for the destitute.

Sir George Stephen is still in Scotland, and it is learned has already felt much benefit from the rest and relief from his presidential labors and cares. He shortly returns to London

---

Owen Sound News.

The harbor is filled with steambarges and consorts and sailing vessels with grain and coal, and indications point to a good fall trade.

Farmers around here cannot grumble about the crops. All grain crops are excellent and prices are good.

Mr. Kough, the extensive breader of Galloway cattle, has shipped for exhibition at Kingston 11 head of Galloways—4 bulls and 7 females. He will show at Toronto and London.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 25 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Piano For Sale.

A beautiful 7 octave upright Dominion Piano nearly new, at a bargain. Apply at Advance office

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 62, 2nd west, Artemesia, two sows in pig—one aged and the other young, black, and black and white spotted. Information thankfully received as to their whereabouts.

W. C. PARKER.

MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT.

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$5 00	to	5 00
Fall Wheat	$0 78	to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78		0 80
Barley	0 50		0 55
Oats	0 30		0 30
Peas	0 50		0 55
Butter	0 15		0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 15		0 15
Potatoes bush	0 40		0 50
Pork	6 50		6 50
Hay per ton	7 00		8 00
Hides	4 50		5 50
Wool	19		23
Sheepskins	0 50		1 00
Cheese	0 06		0 06
Turkeys	0 10		0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25		0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50		0 60

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's Block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.,

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) on 2nd of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Con. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,

Or to J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island; the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks; and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for the St. Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE 25TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal. And for the deepening and enlargement of the summit level of the Cornwall Canal. The construction of a new lock at each of the three interior lock stations on the Cornwall Canal between the town of Cornwall and Maple Grove; the deepening and widening of the channel-way of the canal; construction of bridges, etc.

A map of each of the localities, together with plans and specifications of the respective works, can be seen on and after TUESDAY, THE 11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER NEXT, at this office, for all the works, and for the respective works at the following mentioned places:—

For the works at Galops at the Lock-keeper's house, Galops. For deepening the summit level of the Cornwall Canal, at Dickenson's Landing; and for the new locks, etc., at lock-stations Nos. 18, 19 and 20, at the Town of Cornwall. Printed forms of tender can be obtained for the respective works at the places mentioned.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same, and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $6,000 must accompany the tender for the Galops Canal Works, and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $2,000 for each section of the works on the summit level of the Cornwall Canal; and for each of the lock sections on the Cornwall Canal a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $1,000.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted. The deposit receipts thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By Order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

FLESHERTON Implement Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broad-cut Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Rakes,	Iron Harrows,
Waggons,	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Buggies,	Plows,
Sleighs,	Scufflers,
Cutters,	Turnip Drills,
Fanning Mills,	Land Rollers.
Spring Tooth Cultivators,

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

Meaford is calling loudly for a high school.

Orangeville is to have eighteen electric lights.

The Durham Chronicle man says the editor of the Review goes fishing and shooting on Sunday.

The News says that if there is one thing more than another that Chatsworth excels in it is the "young hoodlums, shamless girls and young women it produces.

Durham is becoming depopulated. Three of its "enterprising" citizens left for the Northwest last week, one for British Columbia, and one for England. It must be somewhat lonesome in Durham now.

A special officer of customs has seized the American tug Gladiator on the Georgian Bay for having towed a raft of logs from French River, Ont., to Midland, and not reporting or clearing at either place. The vessel is in charge of the sub-collector at Algoma Mills, pending a deposit of $400 or release by the department.—[Collingwood Enterprise.

Mr. D. McCorkindale, of Sullivan, met with a serious accident on Monday of last week, resulting in the loss of one of his feet. While driving on the horse-power of a threshing machine he accidentally got his foot caught in the cogs of the power, and although the horses were stopped almost instantly by two men close by, his foot was so badly crushed that it had to be amputated.—[Chatsworth News.

They had a "green corn and onion" festival in Hanover lately. The Post says it was financially a failure, which was probably owing to the absence of some people who should have been there. Our explanation of its failure would be the presence of the onions. Onion festivals are nice things to stay away from. One can enjoy them better about a mile off. Therefore they don't pay financially.

The infant child of a woman named Hunt, who lives in Markdale, died on the train Saturday night week. The mother noticing something wrong with the child, called on a lady near her, who took the infant in her arms, shortly after which it died. The strangest part of the story is that the mother could not be induced to take the child after its death. The corpse had to be taken off the train at Markdale after the mother left the train.

The pedigreed cucumber which the Pickering News man dissected last week knocked the poor fellow out. His mind and stomach are still weak, and he has begun writing cucumber poetry. Here is a sample of his poem:

Six cucumbers sat on a garden wall
Inviting the sun's torrid rays;
And the old lady who placed them there
Watched them with kindly gaze.

A boy chanced along one moonlight night
To where they were spread on the wall;
He said veni, vidi, vici and
Then set up a terrible squall.

It was an unequal struggle, doctors could do nothing, the unfortunate youth died.

The lady found him a narrow grave,
And smoothed out his funeral pall;
And all the year round, his ghost may be found
Astride of that garden wall.

For some nights past vandalism has been rampant in Thornbury. The oatmeal mill here was badly damaged. The spout where farmers put in their oats was chopped away, and also cut away inside, and were it not for the fact that Mr. Hood had taken the precaution to put in a stop pin at the end of the spout a large quantity of oats would have gone down the river and been carried away. On Friday evening last a large number of windows of the mill were smashed with stones. Other depredations were carried on such as breaking into Mr. Thornton's barber shop and carrying away his sign over to Mr. Hood's residence. Large sticks of wood were thrown against the houses of sleeping residents. Now fun is fun, but such rowdyism as this should be severely punished.—[Thornbury Standard.

Last Saturday afternoon it was rumored around town that a bear was trapped in John McDowell's bush about a mile and a half from the village. Chas. McConnell, whose trap it was, had bent over a small tree fastening it to a larger one, hanging on the bend thereof a cow's head. In endeavoring to reach the head Bruin stepped into the trap which was placed below. About 50 of our citizens went out to bring the bear to town alive, and as the dark night was just closing in when they left, a fire was lit for them to carry out their programme. once on the scene, the bear was lassoed and dragged down to the ground. Then three poles were got and one placed over the neck, another over the body and the latter over the hind legs. The fore and hind legs were then bound with cords and a pole run between them. The bear was thus carried out of the bush hanging to the underside of the pole, where it was put into a wagon and brought to town. The bear was then driven to Chas. McConnell's and a chain, placed around his neck and fastened to a post in a pen which was surrounded by a boarding about four feet in hight. The cords were cut and bruin released from his uncomfortable position. Being full of rage he seized a five foot pig trough in his mouth and wielded it about as though it was a stick. This was left him to play with and the following morning found him on the other side of the fence hanging by the neck quite dead, having no doubt tried to jump to the ground and failed on account of the length of chain. The result was a post mortem examination which revealed that Bruin had died in good health, was very fat and weighed 150 pounds.—[Dundalk Hearld.

Hon. Peter Cooper, the philanthropist, once said:—"In all towns where a newspaper is published every man should advertise in it, even if nothing more than a card stating his name and the business he is engaged in. It not only pays the advertiser, but it lets the people at a distance know that the town you live in is a prosperous community of business men. As the seed is sown so the fruit recompences. Never pull down your sign while you expect to do business, for it often indicates that business is poor and you are losing your grip commercially speaking. The judicious advertiser will receive in return ten dollars for every one invested in the columns of a live newspaper."

To Assist Nature

In restoring diseased or wasted tissue is all that any medicine can do. In pulmonary affections, such as Colds, Bronchitis, and Consumption, the mucous membrane first becomes inflamed, then accumulations form in the air-cells of the lungs, followed by tubercles, and, finally, destruction of the tissue. It is plain, therefore, that, until the hacking cough is relieved, the bronchial tubes can have no opportunity to heal. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral the inflamed membrane, arrests the wasting process, and leaves no injurious results. This is why it is more highly esteemed than any other pulmonary specific.

Soothes and Heals

L. D. Bixby, of Bartonsville, Vt., writes: "Four years ago I took a severe cold, which was followed by a terrible cough. I was very sick, and confined to my bed about four months. My physician finally said I was in consumption, and that he could not help me. One of my neighbors advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and before I had taken half a bottle was able to go out. By the time I had finished the bottle I was well, and have remained so ever since."

Alonzo P. Daggett, of Smyrna Mills, Me., writes: "Six years ago, I was a traveling salesman, and at that time was suffering with

Lung Trouble.

For months I was unable to rest nights. I could seldom lie down, had frequent choking spells, and was often compelled to seek the open air for relief. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which helped me. Its continued use has entirely cured me, and, I believe, saved my life."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

STONE FLOUR!

STONE FLOUR!

MR. P. LOUCKS

Desires to inform the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr. Loucks would inform the public that he has never sold roller flour, and never intends to; also, that he has always had stone flour on hand and for sale since last winter, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON

HEARD'S Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO

A large stock of TRIMMINGS in great variety. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Special Attention given to Contracted or Tender Work

D. McTAVISH, R. P. LEGATE

BOOTS & SHOES!

ALWAYS ON HAND.

A LARGE VARIETY

TO CHOOSE FROM AT

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

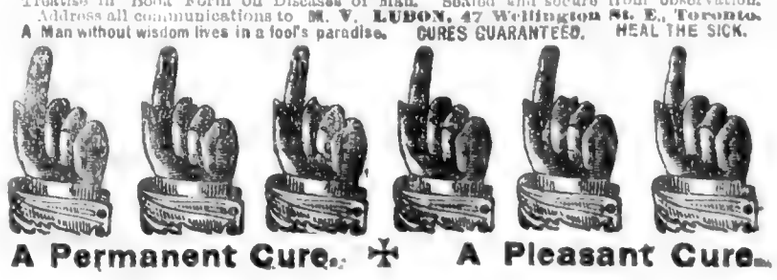
YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

The Master and the Reapers.

The master called to his reapers:
"Make scythe and sickle keen,
And bring me the grain from the uplands,
And the grass from the meadows green;
And from off of the mist clad marshes,
Where the salt waves fret and foam,
Ye shall gather the rustling sedges
To furnish the harvest-home."

Then the laborers cried: "O master
We will bring thee the yellow grain
That waves on the windy hill-side,
And the tender grass from the plain;
But that which springs on the marshes
Is dry and harsh and thin,
Unlike the sweet field grasses,
So we will not gather it in."

But the master said: "O foolish!
For many a weary day,
Through storm and drought, ye have labored
For the grain and the fragrant hay.
The generous earth is fruitful,
And the breezes of summer blow
Where these, in the sun and the dews of heaven,
Have ripened soft and slow.

"But out on the wide, bleak marsh-land
Hath never a plow been set,
And with rapine and rage of hungry waves
The shivering soil is wet.
There flower the pale green sedges,
And the tides that ebb and flow,
And the biting breath of the sea-wind,
Are the only care they know.

"They have drunken of bitter waters,
There food hath been sharp sea-sand,
And yet they have yielded a harvest
Unto the master's hand.
So shall ye all, O reapers,
Honor them now the more,
And garner in gladness, with songs of praise,
The grass from the desolate shore."

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

He had not seen Shirley for more than a year, and only once or twice during his long exile had a letter from her reached him—frank, and friendly letters, such as a sister might write to a brother who was absent from her. Guy had smiled a little sadly over the cordial words; they were the only letters he had received from her, save the few during the brief separation just subsequent to their engagement, and contrasting them with those, he saw how the eager young girl had grown into the grave saddened woman who had suffered and loved and borne a load of anguish rarely laid upon the shoulders of frail humanity. But all the letters breathed a spirit of tenderness and trust which touched Guy sensibly as he read them, and which made it easier to keep away from her until such time had passed after that peaceful death in Adinbrooke Castle as would admit of his claiming the precious charge Sir Hugh had left him.

He heard much of her from others, more especially from Lady Oliphant, who was a constant correspondent. She told him how useful and earnest and beautiful was the life which Shirley led in the pretty cottage-home he had chosen; for she had steadily refused any of Sir Hugh's wealth save the small annuity he had left her in the will he so regretted at the last. She told him what good she did, how much she was loved, and she cheered him with a few words of hope which brightened Guy's lonely life abroad with the thought that perhaps, after all, the visions poor Hugh Glynn had seen with his dying eyes might become blessed realities in the time to come.

But, when the roses were in bloom a second time, Guy received his summons home in a pretty affectionate note from Madge Oliphant, asking him to come back to be present at her marriage.

And, with his heart beating with a sense of joyous expectation and a passionately tender longing for the sight of Shirley's face once more, Guy turned his own toward home.

CHAPTER LIII.

It was on a lovely summer evening that Guy Stuart got out of the train at the little country station, and found Madge and her ponies waiting for him in the golden sunlight. She greeted him joyfully, and as he bent and kissed her cheek, it seemed to him that he had seen nothing so fair in all his wanderings as this "bonny English rose."

"It was very good of you to come to meet me yourself, Madgie," he said, as he accommodated his long limbs to the limits of Madge's fairy-like little vehicle.

"Did I not always come to meet you when you came to Erindale?" she asked, gayly.

"Yes; but you were only a lassie then; now you are a young lady about to be married, and a very important personage altogether. When is the great day, Madgie?"

"The great day is to-morrow," she replied, with a laugh and a blush. "You will soon see outward and visible signs of it."

"To-morrow! Then I am only just in time?"

"Yes. We expected you quite a week ago."

"You gave me no date, Madgie. I suppose you were in such a wild state of excitement that you forgot that I was not likely to know what day you had fixed."

"In a wild state of excitement!" she echoed, tossing her pretty head. "A propos de quoi, Guy?"

"A propos of a wedding! Young ladies are always wild about weddings, so what they must be about their own particular one passes the limits of my imagination completely!"

"Well, you see, I am the exception which proves the rule," Madge said, laughing. "I am much as usual, thank you."

"You are as saucy as usual, Madge. How are your father and mother?"

"Very well, indeed."

"And the Hall is turned upside down, I presume?"

"Nearly," Madge answered, gayly. "The dining-room is intact; so you will have your dinner in peace, which assurance will, I know, be a great comfort to you. You see, Guy," she added, more soberly, "I should have preferred a very quiet wedding, but mamma and papa did not like disappointing all the village people, who have been looking forward to all kinds of gayeties; so last night there was a ball for the tenants and household, and—"

"To-night?" said Guy, laughingly.

"There is a dance for ourselves. Mamma wanted it to-morrow night; but I said that I did not see why I should be out of it, so I begged to have it to-night."

"Quite right. And, if the bride-elect will honor an old fogy so far, I beg to put in a retainer for a dance or two."

"As many as Jack will let you have," she said, merrily. "Guy, how dare you call yourself an old fogy? You look ever so much younger than you did when—when I saw you last."

"Do I? I am glad of that. I am glad too, Madgie, that Jack has been able so to arrange matters that he will not be obliged to take our sunshine away from us."

"No; that has been settled very comfortably. Mr. Kearton takes the management of the house at Calcutta, and Jack stays in England."

"It would have gone hard with your people to spare you, Madgie."

"Yes, my heart was almost broken when I thought of it. It was so terrible to think that I must leave either papa and mamma or Jack. It was miserable, Guy."

"Poor little Madgie!"

"Sometimes I almost wished that I had never seen Jack," she said, half ruefully: "and the next moment I felt that not even mother wanted me as he did."

"Poor Jack! The past shadow will make the sunshine of the present all the brighter."

"That was just what—" Madge began, impulsively, but she stopped, coloring a little.

"Just what, Madgie?" Major Stuart asked, looking at her with a little smile; but Madge shook her head, smiling also, and did not finish her sentence.

Perhaps he guessed what the conclusion would have been, for he did not urge her; but a great longing came into his gray eyes.

They drove on in the golden sunlight, down the pretty leafy lanes which were so pleasant in Guy's eyes. When he had seen them last they were bare and leafless and glittering with hoar-frost, now the hawthorn, both pink and white, was blooming in the hedges, and the banks were ablaze with floral treasures.

Perhaps it was because the thoughts of both were so full of Shirley that neither of them spoke of her. Once or twice glancing at the grave face of the man by her side, Madge saw the yearning in his gray eyes, which she interpreted rightly; and she touched the pretty ponies lightly with her whip to increase their pace; for were they not bringing them home to Erindale Hall and to Shirley?

The golden sunlight was taking a shade of rose-color when they turned in at the park gates, passing the little ivy-grown lodge where Shirley and Madge had first met, and driving swiftly up the avenue, Sir Frederic and Jack were standing on the white stone steps, and the great hall door was crowned with an arch of flowers, one of the unmistakable signs of the morrow's proceedings; and, while Guy greeted the two gentlemen, Madge disappeared into the house.

"The child would not let any one meet you but herself," Sir Frederic remarked, smiling. "We are glad to see you again, Stuart, and I hope your wanderings are over."

"I hope so, too," Guy said, smiling, but with a great earnestness in his voice; and they all proceeded together under the flower-crowned doors into the great hall, which was likewise full of unmistakable signs of the coming event, where they stood talking, until Madge returned, slipped her hand through Guy's arm, and led him away, talking fast and merrily the while, to hide her great agitation.

At the door of a little room which Guy remembered well as her own favorite sanctum she stopped, opening it very softly, and motioning to Guy to enter. She did not follow, but closed the door after him, and then slipped away with an April face of smiles and tears as she thought who was waiting for him within.

For a moment after he had entered the room Guy thought that it was empty, but the next he became aware of a slender woman in white standing by the open window, with her face turned toward the setting sunlight and his heart gave a sudden great bound of joy and gladness as his eyes rested upon her.

How often during the long months of his exile and waiting he had yearned for the sight of her face, the sound of her voice, the touch of her hand! Even as a thirsty man in the desert craves for water he had thirsted for her, his darling, whom he had loved so faithfully, so unselfishly, so perfectly, all his life long.

She was so lost in some day-dream or musing that she did not hear him enter, nor the closing of the door, and he was able to watch her for some minutes unperceived. He saw that she was no less beautiful than she had been in the old days, and that her loveliness had increased rather than diminished; and, as she stood there in the sunlight, in her soft white dress, with one deeply tinted rose nestling in the lace at her throat, she was a sight "to make an old man young."

As she stood, she sighed softly—sighed although there was a little smile upon her lips; then she turned quickly, feeling suddenly, as people do, that some one was watching her; whereupon Guy immediately went forward; and all her heart went out in glad welcome to him, although for a second she could not move. Then she held out both hands to him, and the next instant—how it happened neither ever knew—she was in his arms, held there in a clasp which spoke more plainly than any words of Guy's longing and Guy's love, while her eyes—the lovely, lustrous hazel eyes, so passionate—looking up to his, told him, better than the sweetest words could all he wanted to know.

In that moment it seemed to Guy that all the past suffering was forgotten in the the great joy and blessedness of their reunion. For many minutes he could find no words to speak to her; she was so true, so beautiful, so loving, that he could not utter what he felt; his joy and love were alike dumb. But she needed no words. He held her in his arms, crushing her in a close, fond embrace, looking down at the sweet face as if he would never tire of the rapt fond gaze: and, as they stood thus, the golden sunshine streaming into the pretty room fell upon them both, a presage of the happier days to come.

Shirley was the first to break the rapturous silence. Putting her hands upon his breast, she looked up into his face.

"You have come back to me, Guy?" she said softly.

"I have come back, my darling."

"You will not go again?"

The sweet voice was a little hurried and breathless now.

"Not if you tell me to stay, Shirley."

There was another silence as Guy watched the lovely pink flush mounting over the fair pale face up to the roots of the pretty hair. The sweet eyes were downcast now, the red lips quivering a little.

Guy stooped down and steadied them with his own and the flush faded.

"Shirley," he said very earnestly, very tenderly, very softly, "if, during all these years we have passed far from each other, you have learnt to love me less than you used to in the old days, and not only to love me less, but to love me differently—as a friend, as a brother—let me hear it from your lips now. But—"

"But what, Guy?" she said, lifting her eyes now to his, with a little smile in their lustrous depths.

"But if not, Shirley—if you care for me still—"

"If!" she repeated, with a tone of tenderest reproach in her sweet voice, and her arms crept up about his neck.

Closer in his arms now, nearer to his heart, clinging to him with a love which had never swerved not faltered, a love which had endured, and would endure, they were very happy.

* * * *

The tenants' ball given in honor of Madge's marriage had been a great success, and the ball given to Sir Frederic and Lady Oliphant's friends on the eve of their daughter's wedding-day was not less so. The entertainment gained considerably by the presence of the charming bride-elect, whose fair and radiant smiles were pleasant to see and to remember.

Out of consideration for the event next day, it was not to be a late party, but dancing was kept up with unabated vigor, and the bonny queen of the ball must have danced her tiny satin slippers into holes on the occasion.

Many of the guests were to remain at Erindale for the night, in order to be present at the wedding on the next day, and from garret to basement the grand old house was bright with light, while the gay strains of the dance-music rose and fell softly.

"Madgie," Jack whispered, when, having waltzed her cleverly out of the circle of the dancers, they found themselves for a few minutes alone in the solitude of the conservatory, where the light fell on the rich-hued flowers and on Madge Oliphant's golden hair and white dress, colorless and pure as the dress she would wear next day, "tell me, my dearest, are you quite happy?"

"Quite happy, Jack," she answered, leaning her bright head against him for a moment.

"You have no fears, no misgivings, Madge?"

"No fears—oh, no—and no misgivings, Jack—save one."

"And that, my own?"

"Is that I am not worthy of your love!"

He caught her in his arms and pressed his cheek to hers.

"And you never think—you never fear that Oh Madgie, even now, in my great happiness, I cannot help thinking of—"

"Jack"—she lifted her head and looked at him with deep earnestness—"this evening, when I went to Shirley, and she told me that what we had all so longed and wished for was to take place, she said that she had no regret now for the past, that all the sorrow had been blessed to her, that the present happiness was brighter for the past darkness, that there was no shadow—not one—upon her or Guy now. Jack"—the golden head was pressed closely against him now—"if you cannot forget, think of it as she does—with gratitude and love; and"—she looked up smiling—"out of that trouble has come something for which you at least ought to be thankful, you ungrateful boy, since without it you would never have known me!"

He drew her closer in his arms.

"And you are more than able to make me forget the past," he said tremulously: and the last shadow of the cloud fell away from them.

Other lovers beside Jack and Madge sought the solitude of the conservatory to talk to each other in uninterrupted felicity; but perhaps of all none were more peacefully happy than Guy Stuart and Shirley Glynn as they stood there toward the end of the ball, while Sir Frederic and Lady Oliphant were speeding the parting guests. Many an interested and admiring glance had followed Lady Glynn that night, for her story was well known, and it surrounded her with a halo of romance which her grace and beauty had increased: while to her, as well as to Guy, a ball-room was a sight unfamiliar enough to be interesting and pretty, and to have many a touch of pathos and sentiment.

"Shirley," Guy said softly, as he bent over, "when am I to take you home?"

"When you like, Guy," she answered, smiling.

"Thank you, my dearest," he said with a grave tenderness which pleased her; and there was a steadfast light in the deep gray eyes which boded well for the happiness of the future which rose before them with its rainbow of hope and joy. "Do you remember, Shirley," he added, "that once before I said that, looking into the future, I could see no shadow of parting with you?"

"I remember, dear Guy."

"But the shadow ought to have been there, dearest."

"I saw it, Guy," she said softly.

"I cannot see any shadow now, my darling. Can you, Shirley?"

"No—for there is none, Guy."

* * * *

Unmistakable signs of a wedding were plentiful the next morning; and the sun shone gayly on Madge Oliphant's wedding-day, streaming through the stained glass windows of the parish church on the assembled guests as they waited for the bridal-party.

The old church was crowded, the chancel alone being reserved for the guests; the rest of the building was thronged with the good people of Erindale, the women in their gala dress, the men with nosegays in their button-holes in honor of Miss Madge.

And in the carved pews of the chancel there were familiar faces—Sir Oswald and Lady Fairholme, the latter as bright and sweet and sparkling as ever, and Mr. and Mrs. Litton, who had been married a year or more, and were settled in London, where the young surgeon's skill and perseverance and genuine love of his profession were meeting with their reward. They had come down for the occasion, for Rosie Litton and Madge had been fast friends in their girlhood. There, too, was Shirley, grave and beautiful in her rich dress of shimmering silk and lace; and, as Mr. Litton's eyes rested upon her, he recalled the pale trembling woman who had come to him through the winter night, and their midnight walk through the snow. There also was Guy, so tall, erect, and stately, with a wonderful tenderness in his eyes as they dwelt upon Lady Glynn, his face that of one who has borne and endured, and conquered sorrow, and learned peace and faith through pain.

There was a low but irrepressible murmur as Madge and her dainty white-robed bride-maids came up the aisle and a gleam of passionate tenderness and joy flashed into the eyes of the handsome young bride-groom who stood waiting for her, and by whose side she knelt to make the vows which she purposed, with all the strength of her pure young heart, to keep.

It was a pretty sight and a touching one. Shirley's eyes watched them with a grave tenderness which had something a little wistful and sad in it. Perhaps she was thinking of her own wedding-day and its disastrous ending, and of the tears which had fallen upon the gleaming satin and lace of her wedding-dress. No such fate was in store for Madge, she thought thankfully; and, looking at Ruby, she met her earnest and sympathizing glance with a fond little pressure of the hand. The next moment they were both smiling at Bertie Fairholme, who, in a dainty court-suit of velvet and lace and silk stockings, brought up the rear of the bride-maids with little Amy Graham, and who had evidently given all his childish heart to his little golden-haired companion.

It was a pretty wedding, the guests said afterwards, the prettiest that some of them had ever seen. There was no lavish display of wealth, and the good wishes that followed the young bride were heartfelt and earnest. As she went down the path on her husband's arm the sunshine fell upon them both, as it fell upon their future lives.

Within a month from the day there was another wedding in the old church, a very quiet wedding, with no gay cortege of bride-maids and groomsmens, but which, notwithstanding, the village turned out to witness to a man, for there were a beautiful bride and a noble-looking bride-groom, and a few true and tried friends who had been with them in their sorrow and were with them to share their joy. Mr. Venn was assisted in his office by Mr. Grey, the Vicar of Easton, and his curate, his daughter Lucie's husband; and his wife and daughters were present. Jack and Madge were there also, having returned to England for the purpose, the former a proud and happy young husband, the latter the prettiest little matron imaginable.

As Guy and Shirley went down the aisle together, inseparable and blessed, those who loved them felt that their "feast of joy" was not the less glad because of their experience of misery. They had learned to suffer and to endure, and the suffering and endurance had ennobled and strengthened them; and, as the sunshine fell upon them and the soft summer air floated by, it seemed as if some passing angel had touched them with his flying wings and blessed them with a heavenly blessing; and no sweeter words had ever fallen upon Shirley's ears than those two which Guy uttered when they were once more alone—"My wife."

"For them
Night has faded far away;
Their sun has risen and it is day;"

and from their present bliss they could look back thankfully and without pain on that long and desert land through which they had toiled with weary feet.

A plain white marble tablet in the church where they worship bears, without name or date, the short prayer—

"MISERERE, DOMINE!"

and, in the words of him in memory of whom it was placed there, the future lives of Guy Stuart and his wife may be summed up—

"I see a happy home brightened by mutual love and joy and peace, a home where I am not forgotten but remembered sometimes with compassion and pity. I see two persons perfectly happy in their mutual love and trust. I see the husband, strong, brave, true, loving and protecting, and striving by a tenderness which never fails to make his wife forget the misery she has suffered. I see the wife loving, honoring, trusting, and looking up to a man worthy of all her tenderness, and making the sunshine of his home and of his life. I see too in that happy home a pale young mother lying, smiling and serene, with a child in her arms. I see the stately old home bright with restless children, who scamper swiftly down the galleries, and whose sweet gay voices echo through the old rooms, filling them with mirth and laughter."

And what the dying eyes saw in vision has come to pass in reality; for it is even so.

THE END.

To Death in Her Bridal Robes.

A romantic case of attempted suicide is reported from Buda-Pest. As the morning express from Vienna was approaching the station at Palota a girl in a white bridal dress and a wreath of orange-blossoms on her head rushed out from a copse, and threw herself in front of the engine. Before the train could be stopped the locomotive had passed over her body. The unfortunate creature, fearfully mutilated, was conveyed to Buda-Pest, where on reaching the railway station her legs had to be amputated. Although her case is critical, hope is entertained of saving her life. It appears that the girl, who is only 18, was a governess residing close to the spot where the attempted suicide occurred. The faithlessness of the man to whom she was engaged to be married is said to have driven her to her desperate resolve.

A Mad Bull in a Theatre.

Much excitement was occasioned at Nottingham, England, the other day, by an infuriated bull. The animal knocked down and injured several persons in the market-place, and afterward rushed into the Theatre Royal, entering by the stage door. It did considerable damage among the scenery. A number of property deer used in forest scenery were conspicuously exposed, and these the bull savagely attacked and destroyed. Eventually the animal was driven into a blind alley, and despatched by a bullet.

Fun After Dinner.

Helen—Oh, Ethel! there's a man-of-war coming directly toward us.

Ethel—Do let me take the glass! I have been here six weeks, and it is the first man of any kind I have seen.—Life.

BATS CAPTURE A HOUSE.

They Drive the Inmates Out by Fear of Ghosts.

There is a dwelling on West Fayette street, near Fulton avenue, that for the past twelve months has been the cause of much fear to superstitious neighbors, particularly to the colored colony in Bruce street. In the last year the house has had three tenants. The first family lived there two months, the second about a month, and the house then remained idle for a little time. The neighbors would see the new tenants get their furniture and coal in and then make preparations to vacate. Servant girls whispered the stories of the strange house to one another, and many were the conjectures of the cause of the queer doings. Shortly after the first family moved in the children would wake up and scream for protection, declaring that some one was in the room, and had pulled the bed clothes off them. The gas would suddenly flare up after burning steadily for some time, and go out, leaving the occupants of the house in utter darkness. This sort of thing continued until the folks moved into more desirable quarters. Loud and unaccountable noises were heard in the house nights. Except that one of the back third story windows was open there was no entrance except by unlocking either the front or the back door. The young folks in the neighborhood would give the house a wide berth and scurry along past it as quickly as possible. The windows would rattle and the doors bang without any apparent cause, and finally the thing got to be intolerable and the second tenant moved. The next family that moved in were entirely ignorant of the reports that had been circulated about the house, and they settled themselves in the firm belief that they had secured a good dwelling at an extremely low figure. In a little while they, too, began to be disturbed, and would vainly light the gas after it was repeatedly put out. One night recently it was determined to ascertain, if possible, what caused the strange doings, and watch was set. The lights were dimmed and all but two of the family retired. After getting nearly asleep the watchers were rudely awakened by the sound as of the flapping of wings and a peculiar chittering noise. The gas, which had been dimmed, had gone out, and refused positively to be lighted again. The watchers were in a dilemma. Matches were at a premium, and in the dark none could be found. The flapping of wings kept on, and the alarm was increased visibly by the smothered cries and the uneasiness of the ghost catchers. After a long search a match was discovered, and the fears of the scared people were considerably lessened by a ray of light from a gas jet. The cause of all the excitement was two large bats. They continued to flutter until one had been killed and the other escaped by the open window. The next day an examination of the gas pipes was made, and they were found to be clogged up in such a manner that when an extra force of gas was put on the whole house was cut off. The mystery of the noise in the house was cleared up. It is supposed that the bats had free access to the house at all times, and their flapping around the rooms, particularly when the house was vacant, made the racket. The question of the bedclothes being pulled off the children is only accounted for in the belief that they went to bed after partaking of too much supper, and were restless and kicked off the clothes.—Baltimore American.

Queer in the Extreme.

An artesian well sunk under the salt waters of New York Bay, on the Jersey side, produces pure fresh water in abundance.

The English put-a-nickel-in-the-slot machines have got so far along that they now give a chew of tobacco to any one who drops in a penny.

Mr. Sinn, of Royston, Ga., dreamed the other night that he had shot a burglar, and awoke to find that he had shot himself and was minus a finger by the operation.

There are two sunflower stalks of natural growth at Rochelle, Fla., one of them has 1,000 and the other 1,136 blooms and buds. The stalks are about ten feet high, with branches reaching out about six feet.

One Huolarinen, of Helsingfors, Finland, was during his life believed to be on a friendly footing with the devil. His will leaves all his land and property to that individual and the authorities of Finland are much troubled about what to do.

In Paris a man makes a living by going about the streets playing on a clarionet through a canula placed in a hole in his throat after the operation of tracheotomy. When he has finished a little tune he takes the canula out and exhibits it to the audience to show that there is no deception.

Mainly About Women.

Boucicault and his daughter Nina do not speak.

Tableaux at summer resorts are giving entertainment at much expense of time and labor, and the "May Queen," the "Gypsy Camp," "Jacob's Dream" and others are making their annual appearance.

Ella Wheeler Cox seems to have become a convert to the mind cure. In a recent poem she says:

Think health, and health will find you
As certain as the day,
And pain will lag behind you
And lose you on the way.

A distinguished physician, who recently retired from practice, has built himself a fine house in the suburbs of Paris. Over the portico he placed the following simple but significant inscription:

Who would have thought it,
Melons and cucumbers bought it!

Sarah Bernhardt has gained a good deal of flesh of late. But she is far from requiring a Banting process.

Where the Quail Belongs.

An Austin teacher was instructing his class in natural history.

"To what class of birds does the hawk belong?" he asked.

"To birds of prey," was the reply.

"And to what class do quail belong?"

There was a pause. The teacher repeated the question:

"Where does the quail belong?"

"On toast!" yelled out the hungry boy at the foot of the class.

Mr. Crowley, the Liberian chimpanzee who has attracted so much attention at Central park, New York, died yesterday morning of malaria.

Make Childhood Sweet.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest
  Ere you fill them full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tuberose
  To make sweet the last sad hours;
But while in the busy household band
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
  Oh, fill their lives with sweetness.

Wait not till the little hearts are still
  For the loving look and phrase;
But while you gently chide a fault
  The good deed kindly praise.
The word you would speak beside the bier
Falls sweeter far on the living ear;
  Oh, fill young lives with sweetness!

Ah, what are kisses on cold clay lips
  To the rosy mouth we press,
When our wee one flies to her mother's arms
  For love's tenderest caress!
Let never a worldly babble keep
Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
  Circling young lives with sweetness.

Give thanks, each morn, for the sturdy boys,
  Give thanks for the fairy girls;
With a dower of wealth like this at home
  Would you rifle the earth for pearls?
Wait not for death to gem Love's crown,
But daily shower life's blessings down,
  And fill young heart's with sweetness.

Remember the homes where the light has fled
  Where the rose has faded away;
And the love that glows in youthful hearts,
  Oh, cherish it while you may!
And make your home a garden of flowers,
Where joy shall bloom through childhood's hours,
  And fill young hearts with sweetness.

A Bitter Reflection.

Oh why so sad, my lady fair?
  What pales thy cheek and dims thy eyes?
Thy drooping face is mark'd with care,
  Thy heaving breast betrays a sigh.
What lacks thy lot to make it sweet?
  What joy is there that is not thine?
What makes that heart in sorrow beat
  And give of happiness no sign?

Ah, woe is me! I loved a youth,
  Handsome in face, and brave and strong,
The paths of honor and of truth
  Were his, for he could do no wrong.
Two years ago he sailed away
  To seek his fortune o'er the seas,
And I've been yearning every day
  That he'd return his love to please.

But ah! I've waited long in vain
  For my old sweetheart to return;
No message came across the main
  From him for whom my soul did yearn
Until to-day, when I am told
  His ship is due to come in port;
He comes back worth a pile of gold,
  At least, so says the last report.

Then why repine, sweet maid? You should
  Be overjoyed to hear the news;
You soon will wed a husband good,
  How can you, then, this grief excuse?
The lady answer'd, "Would you know
  Why tear drops from my eyes now fall?
To tell the true cause of my woe,
  I-married-some-one-else-last-fall.

MUST WED OR LOSE A FORTUNE.

His Uncle Leaves Him $280,000 on Condition that He Marry.

James L. Babcock, formerly of Chicago, but now of Ann Arbor, will meet with smiling encouragement from mothers with marriageable daughters, for by the death of his uncle he inherits $280,000 in money and bonds upon condition that he marries within five years. Luther James, the deceased uncle, resided for many years at Lima, Mich., and became one of the wealthiest men in the county. He was a bachelor, and in fact, a woman-hater. His brothers and sisters married and had families, and the old bachelor grew to love and admire his nephews and nieces. He finally selected James Luther Babcock as his particular favorite, whom, as he grew to manhood, the old man helped and put in charge of a bank at Ann Arbor. The favorite nephew prospered. He fell in love with a beautiful girl and was accepted. The wedding day was fixed but the dream of happiness was doomed to fade into mist. Uncle Luther James opposed the match and James Babcock accepted the fiat and broke of the match. He is now 45 years old and still unmarried, but some will say that his uncle's will has recompensed him for the loss of his bride. The banker can now marry if he pleases, and if he declines to fill the condition the property is to be given to the sisters, nephews and nieces equally. By the will, which was probated in Ann Arbor on Tuesday, the two sisters and twenty-one nephews and nieces receive $5,000 each, the residue going to James L. Babcock on the odd condition named.—Chicago cor. New York Sun.

Complex Family Relations.

The way people can mix up themselves and their relations in the matter of marriage was perhaps never better illustrated than in the case of a backwoods Maine family, of which a correspondent writes:

A father, son and grandson married three sisters.

That looks simple enough, doesn't it?

It hasn't dawned on you yet.

Well, see here:

1. Amos, the father, married Abigal.

2. Benjamin, the son of Amos, married Betsey.

3. Charles, son of Benjamin, married Caroline.

What then?

Amos is a brother to his son.

Amos is grandfather to his daughter.

Amos is grandfather to his sister.

Amos is father to his grandson.

Amos is his own grandfather, his own son, and brother-in-law to himself.

Benjamin is brother to his father.

Benjamin is brother to his son.

Benjamin is brother to his mother.

Benjamin is brother to his daughter.

Benjamin is the son of his sister.

Benjamin is the husband of his sister.

Charles is brother to his father.

Charles is brother to his grandfather.

Charles is brother to his mother.

Charles is brother to his grandmother.

Charles is grandnephew to his wife.

Charles is grandchild to his aunt.

Charles is married to another aunt.

Charles is the son of his aunt.

Charles is the husband of his sister.

Love's Labor Lost.

Taking pity on a very forlorn looking tramp yesterday, an uptown housekeeper promised to give him something to eat, and, thinking he might want to wash his horridly dirty face and hands before eating, she sent a servant out with a basin of water, a fresh cake of soap and a towel. A few minutes later the lady returned to see if he was in a condition to be invited into the kitchen when the tramp broke out:

"See here, mum, ef yo can't spare me nothing better to drink out of than a tin basin, an' ef you ain't got nothing better to eat than this queer-tastin' cake, why, I ain't got no use for this napkin."

The infant son of Emperor William of Germany was baptized yesterday. He was christened Oscar Karl Gustav Adolph.

THE MARK OF CAIN

Carried by a Man Who Killed His Brother.

A few days ago Terry Shelton was brought from North Carolina to Georgia upon a warrant sworn out in Fannin County.

As he boarded the car, having come several miles through the country, the idlers at the country station stared hard at the strange man and wondered who he was.

The passengers looked once and looked again, and wondered who he was.

"Who is that man?"

"What's the matter with him?"

"Did you ever see the like?"

It was that way everywhere. The babies even seemed to understand that something was wrong, and they stared too.

Not once during the ride did the strange man leave his seat—never once lifted his eyes from the floor. His broad-brimmed hat was slouched down to his eyes, his hands thrust into the pockets of his blue jean trousers, and there he sat.

"Who is that man?"

"What's the matter with him?"

The strange man is Terry Shelton and the mark he carries is the mark of Cain. That was nine years ago; the murder was in 1879. Human judges have declared him an innocent man, and human justice has meted him life and health, but the mark is there.

May be, as Shelton himself says, the Judge that branded Cain has branded him, and the mark will go with him to the grave.

The story was told here yesterday to a Constitution man, by one familiar with the details, a North Carolinian that has known Shelton for years.

"Terry and Tom Shelton," said he yesterday, "were brothers. Their father was an educated man and a wealthy one, but he died in the war, and the boys have been brought up by their mother.

"She was a horrible woman—a tigress. The property of the old man was squandered and lost, and the boys grew up vicious and uneducated. Tom was the elder. They both married and lived on adjoining farms in Cherokee county. Their mother lived first with one and then with the other.

"The boys were hard workers and shrewd in a trade, so in spite of their dissolute habits they might be considered well-to-do farmers.

"One day in '79 Tom went over to Terry's house, and while he was there they began quarrelling. The mother of the two boys stood in the door and watched. Suddenly both sprang to their feet, Tom with a knife and Terry with a pistol, and an instant later Terry had fired. The ball went through Tom's forehead, killing him instantly.

"Terry told this to the jailer:

"'I had an empty barrel in that cylinder and thought that would be the next one to be struck. I intended to snap that at Tom to stop him, and then if he came further to kill him. I didn't intend to shoot. It was a mistake, and I am not guilty of murder.'

"On the trial, however, the old woman swore in Terry's favor, put all the blame on the dead son, and as she was the only witness Terry was acquitted.

"Three weeks later she came back to town and wanted Terry arrested. She said that Terry had provoked the quarrel and that the murder was cold-blooded.

"It was too late for that.

"Terry Shelton went to Alabama, then came to Georgia, and went back to North Carolina to escape punishment for crimes committed here.

"I saw him when he first came back to North Carolina. When he had left his head was covered with a magnificent growth of curly brown hair. He was very proud of it, and even in jail used to keep it well combed. He had a thick, heavy beard and long moustache.

"When he came back there was not a hair on his body. His hair, beard and moustache were gone. There was no sign of eyelash or eyebrow, and his body was as free from hair as the palm of your hand.

"The effect was startling. It would frighten you to look at him. The skin was natural and healthy in color and condition, but absolutely bare.

"I could hardly recognize him even after he had spoken to me.

"'Where is your hair?' I asked him.

"'I am marked,' he said quietly.

"'How do you mean?'

"'By the Almighty, just as Cain was marked.'

"'Was it all taken out at once?'

"'No, it was pulled out, one hair at a time. It took eighteen months to get it all out.'

"'One hair out at a time,' I repeated after him.

"'Yes, my brother's ghost did it. Whenever I sat down he sat down behind me and began pulling them out. When I went to bed I could feel him plucking them out, one at a time. It lasted that way for eighteen months, and it nearly killed me. No way to stop it. I was absolutely powerless.'

"'Did you do anything for it?'

"'All that could be done. The doctors say there was no blood disease, no skin disease. They tried everything they could think of to save my hair and to restore what was lost, but they did no good.'

"'Do you still do anything for it yet?'

"'No, it is God's own mark and God only can take it away. Everywhere I go now people point me out. Those that know me tell their children that I killed my brother, and their children will tell their children's children. Those that don't know me stare and wonder. Somehow or other it makes people distrust me. It will be so, I suppose, until I die. It is Cain's mark.'"

"It didn't reform him then?"

"No. He tries to reform sometimes, but it does no good. He wanders around and is always in trouble. The people in our country believe as firmly as Shelton does that the mark is a curse that will go with him through life. The man is Cain and that is Cain's mark."—Atlanta Constitution.

Different Experiences.

Handsome Man—Saved another lady from fracturing her skull. She fainted on the hotel steps, and would have fallen on the stone pavement if I had not caught her. It is remarkable how much ill health there is among the women of the present day. They are always fainting.

Homely Man—I never noticed it.

FRIENDS WHO HAD NOT MET.

Romantic Incident of the Great Michigan Prairie Fire.

One day this week a pleasant-faced young lady arrived at the Clinton House, Kingston, and said she was from Grand Rapids, Mich., and that she desired to be conveyed to the residence of Mrs. Augustus Elmendorf. The proprietor told her that Mrs. Elmendorf lived on the Hurley road, and if she would wait until after dinner he would take her to her destination himself. While in conversation before dinner the young woman said Mrs. Elmendorf was a dear friend of hers and had been since both were little girls, but had never met.

This statement caused astonishment among the young woman's auditors. Questions elicited from her the following romantic story: "In the fall of 1871 a disastrous fire swept over the portion of Michigan where I lived. In a few hours my father's house and many others for miles around were destroyed and we were left destitute. This was at the time of the Chicago fire; and besides doing so much for the sufferers in that city kind eastern people did not forget the sufferers by prairie fires. Ulster county people were generous, sending many boxes of food and clothing. In the town of Olive, at that time, lived Bertha, the little daughter of Ephraim Bishop. She had been told of the sufferings of the little children in the west, and among her offerings was a dress for a little girl. When she had finished the dress she wrote a note telling who had made it and asked that the little girl who received it write to her and let her know 'all about it.' In due time a letter was sent to little Bertha. It gave a history of the fire and its ravages, and how delighted the writer was when a letter was found in the dress pocket telling who had sent the garment.

"For seventeen years the correspondence thus begun was continued. The two little girls passed into womanhood, and owing to circumstances neither could control they never met. Photographs were exchanged, and woman's love sprang up between them. Bertha Bishop some years ago married Augustus Elmendorf, a farmer, whom you tell me you will soon take me in to see. I am the Michigan girl who received the dress. No, I am not married. This summer good fortune has given me the opportunity to visit the east, and I have come to Ulster County to see the friend who is so dear to me."

After this story had been told in a way that went direct to the hearts of her auditors, the young lady seemed no longer a stranger in Kingston. During the afternoon she was taken to the home of Mrs. Elmendorf, where she was given a joyful welcome.—Kingston Freeman.

Muscular Vegetarians.

"I'm not a vegetarian," a well known doctor said to-day, "but there are some interesting points in their favor. I suppose to-day that two-thirds of the exhaustive physical labor done in this country is done by vegetable eaters—that is, by European peasantry that grew up on a vegetable diet. A large part of our athletes are Irishmen and Scotchmen, and in Ireland and Scotland vegetarianism is practically universal among the poorer classes—the classes that furnish the athletes. Even China and Japan, with all their terrible poverty, even to the point of habitual starvation in their lower classes, give us giants and wrestlers; and of the two the better physical conditions prevail in Japan. We get the better athletes from Japan, which is even more given to vegetarianism than China.—New York Graphic.

How to Make Colors.

Brown—Made with red and black.

Bright brown—Carmine, yellow and black.

Rose—Lake and white.

Chestnut—White and brown.

Purple—Carmine and blue.

Lead color—White and black.

Pearl—Blue and lead color.

Pink—White and carmine.

Chocolate—Black and Venetian red.

French white—Purple and white.

Green—Blue and yellow.

Pea green—Green and white.

Dark green—Green and black.

Orange—Red and yellow.

Straw color—White and yellow.

Flesh Color—White, lake and vermilion.

Olive—Red, blue, black and yellow.

Buff—Yellow, white and red.

Vermilion—Carmine and yellow.

Lavender—Carmine, ultramarine and white.

Sky blue—White and ultramarine.

Umber—White, yellow, red and black.

Drab—Umber, white and Venetian red.

Consumption Often Cured Spontaneously.

No fact is more remarkable than that there is no disease which is apparently so curable as phthisis. I hardly ever open a body of a person dying from an injury or disease, but traces of the previous existence of tubercle in the lungs are found, and it is apparent that this disease has been arrested and a cure effected. Similar cases are seen in cattle, but more seldom, as the animal is slaughtered for food before the process of cure can be completed. Emaciation sets in, this alarms the farmer, and the animal is hurried to the shambles before its leanness becomes so marked as to render its carcass unmarketable.—Dr. Henry Littlejohn, Glasgow.

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching an stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becomin very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It equally efficacious in curing all Ski Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Food for Thought.

One of those shoppers known as "tasters," who chew calico to see if the colors are fast, went into a prominent dry goods store on the avenue. Approaching the calico counter she inquired of the clerk;

"Have you any blue striped calico on a red ground?"

The clerk, who knew his customer, answered politely:

"Not a mouthful."—Detroit Free Press.

THE DOWAGER EMPRESS.

The Aged Augusta of Germany and Her Grandchildren.

Bellevue Castle, on the outskirts of Berlin, has become the favorite resort of members of the royal family. The aged Dowager Empress takes her daily walks there. There seems little life in the tottering gait, little vitality in the wrinkled, care-worn face. Yet her vanity is still boundless, and no man has taken her portrait for over thirty years, a fact which explains the surprise of foreigners who purchase groups of the imperial family and find the hoary widow looking younger than ex-Empress Victoria. Near the Dowager Empress, on her afternoon walks, is another picture which is in bright contrast to her and often engages Her Majesty's attention—the frolics of her great-grandchildren. A part of the park has been laid out for their use, and here, true to the Hohenzollern blood, they play "soldiers in peace." The eldst, Prince Frederick William, the ruler of Germany in the days of some future Bismarck, now 6 years old, is commander-in-chief, and fully impressed with the importance of his position. A few days ago he asked his mother to have a fort built for his amusement, but he was compelled to content himself with a guard-house instead. Here he orders one of his brothers to stand watch, salute him as he passes with a little wooden gun in regular military fashion, and relieves him after duty by brother No. 2. At other times he drills them and, dressed in his miniature uniform, demands unconditional obedience on the part of the junior Princes. It is amusing to see the perfection with which the commands are executed and hear the sonorous soprano of the commander-in-chief, the high-sounding language when a stomach is too far forward or a foot out of place at "Right dress!" The youngest boy is just out of the cradle; still he toddles about in his own peculiar way, and gives promise of a future leader. The father appears among them often and takes command, degrading the eldest son to the ranks for the time being. But this he accepts with pride, desirous to show his own proficiency. He will be well drilled at 10, when all royal princes receive the rank of first lieutenant. Then his command will be genuine.—Berlin Letter.

Dr. Pillbags' Diagnosis.

To Dr. Pillbags, Patrick came
  With a most woful face;
Says he, "Dear Docther, phat's your name,
  Will you plaze trate my ca-e."
The doctor looked him in the eye,
  His tongue he made him show;
Said he, "My man, you're going to die;
  You've got tic-douloureux."
"My faith," says Pat, "phat's that you say?
  I've got 'tick-dollar,' oh!
Yes lyin' thafe, I always pay
  Your bill before I go.
I'll have no more to do wid yes,
  I'll docther my own case."
He took a dose of P. P. P. P.'s,
  And wears a brighter face.

Use Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets for torpid liver, constipation, and all derangements of stomach and bowels. By druggists.

How to Paint a Residence.

Parts of wood to be painted which are soiled by smoke or grease are to be washed with a solution of saltpetre in water, or with very thin lime whitewash. If soapsuds are used to wash off the smoke or grease, they should be thoroughly rinsed with clean water or the paint will not harden.

The best time to paint the outside of a house is early in the winter, or in the spring, when the air is cold and no dust is flying.

The first, second and third coats of paint, on the outsides of buildings, should be prepared by mixing the white lead with boiled linseed oil and allowing each coat to dry hard before applying the next.

What 10 Cents Will Do.

A 10 cent bottle of Polson's Nerviline will cure neuralgia or headache. A 10 cent bottle of Nerviline will cure toothache or facecache. A 10 cent sample bottle of Nerviline is sufficient to cure colds, diarrhœa, spasms, dysentery, etc. Nerviline is just the thing to cure all pains, whether internal or external. Buy at your druggists a 10 cent sample of Nerviline, "the great pain cure." Safe, prompt, and always effectual. Large bottles at any drug store, only 25 cents.

Could Not be Tickled.

I was a very ticklish youngster, and my comrades sometimes used that weakness for their own amusement. One boy used to show how little effect tickling had upon him; but one hot summer day, as he was lying reading, I tickled him on the ribs, and he almost went into convulsions. I found that he was far more sensitive than any boy in the company, and he revealed his secret to me under condition of my never telling any one else. By holding his breath he became pachydermatous, and would let anybody tickle him as much as they pleased; but, of course, they always gave it up at once when they saw his solid look. I tried the plain, and it worked admirably; and it is my only protection, even unto this day, for my cuticle is as sensitive as ever. The deduction is simple—a man holds his breath and the tickler is baffled.—Science.

The "old reliable"—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Kept His Promise.

"Be mine," he cried with voice surcharged with anguish. "If you refuse me I shall die!" That was forty years ago, and the heartless girl refused him. Yesterday he died. Girls, beware.

That Deadly Scourge!

Tubercular consumption is simply lung-scrofula—the active and dangerous development of a taint in the blood. The grand blood-cleansing botanic principles contained in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery specially fit it to purify the blood, and prevent the formation of ulcers in the lungs and bronchial tubes. Liver complaint, skin disease, and sores, are also cured by it. All druggists.

Miss Katie Beach, once the fiance of Alan Arthur, has become engaged to Mr. Thompson, a wealthy Philadelphian.

PARNELL'S KNIT JACKET.

A Man who Thinks More of his Mind than of his Mantle.

Says a writer in the Chicago News: It is a fact not generally known that Mr. Parnell wears every night in the House of Commons the knit jacket that was given to him in Kilmainham jail. It is a brown and rather shabby garment, knit of coarse wool, and over it he usually wears a black coat. It is said that he wears this particular garment as a part of a vow he made when in prison, and that as long as it holds together he will go on using it. No man in Parliament pays less attention to his clothes than does Mr. Parnell. Except at a dinner party or some social function of that sort, when he wears the most irreproachable evening dress, he is the worst-clothed gentleman in public life in Great Britain. This is the more noticeable, as clothes are part of the religion of the upper classes, and the average gentleman in London would sooner be seen talking to a correctly attired pickpocket than to a shabby peer. If ever you go to the House of Commons, pick out the seediest-looking man below the gangway and you will have Parnell; but you must do that before you look at his face or catch his eye, because when you do that you will be wholly unable to remember what he has on.

—It is the poor struggling attorney who is dressed in a little "brief" authority.

"THE STARRY FIRMAMENT ON HIGH,"

Sang Addison. But hadn't you, for a few years at least, rather look at the firmament from the underside?

YOU CAN DO IT

by observing the laws of health and resorting to that cheat the grave medicine

WARNER'S SAFE CURE.

You are out of sorts; a splendid feeling and appetite one day, while the next day life is a burden. If you drift on in this way you are liable to become insane. Why?

Because poisoned blood on the nerve centres wherein the mental faculties are located paralyse them and the victim becomes non-responsible.

There are thousands of people to-day in insane asylums and graves, put there by Kidney Poisoned Blood.

Insanity, according to statistics, is increasion faster than any other disease. Is your eye-sight failing? Your memory becoming impaired? An allgone feeling on slight exertion upon you? If so, and YOU know whether this is so or not, do not neglect your case until reason totters and you are an imbecile, but to-day, while you have reason, use your good sense and judgment by purchasing WARNER'S SAFE CURE and WARNER'S SAFE PILLS; medicines warranted to do as represented, and which will cure you.

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS generally

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

for us. Cash Furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address, C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N. Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U. S. in the Hide line, have sent their representatives to investigate Mr. Page's business, and after a thorough examination and comparison the Reporter gives him this endorsement

"We believe that in extent of light-weight raw material collected and carried, Mr. Page holds the lead of any competitor and that his present stock is the largest held by any house in this country."

And the Review says:

"After a most thorough investigation of Mr Page's business as compared with others in same line, we have become fully satisfied that in his specialty, light-weight stock, he is unquestionably the largest dealer in this country, while in superiority of quality he is confessedly at the head."

QUERY: If Mr. Page's business is the largest in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more Skins than any of his competitors in the same line?

MARVELOUS MEMORY DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,057 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by Richard Proctor, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. Astor, Judah P. Benjamin Judge Gibson, Dr. Brown, B. H. Cook, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus post free from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DUNN 37 38.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

And still there A re

MORE

BARGAINS

TO BE GOT AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Don't forget to ask for

THAT CASHMERE,

Regular price 35c a yard, now 22 1-2 c a yard. It is a yard and a quarter wide.

Those DRES GOODS

We are selling at 12 1-2c a yard, regular price 20c a yard. Beautiful new goods.

GREAT REDUCTIONS IN

Boots and Shoes!

30 Per Cent Discount off Men's Long Boots.

1000 DOZEN BUTTONS!

Selling at 5c a dozen, regular prices from 10c to 50c a doz.

COME SOON

In order to secure Best Bargains.

1000 doz. Eggs Wanted

RIGHT AWAY!

Top price paid in Cash or Trade. The Famous

New Process Electric Soap,

To be Got Only at

J. G. ANDERSON'S

Mammoth Bargain House.

"Take a Fool's Advice."

The following miserable doggerel has been laid upon our table. We give it space for the simple purpose of illustrating the sad depravity of our modern poets. It is perhaps needless to say the writer is unmarried, and likely to remain so, if the girls accept our advice.

Let babes delight to howl at night,
For 'tis their nature to,
And make their dads dance round in white,
As all dads ought to do.

But, fathers, you should never let
Your angry passions rise;
Kids are necessities, you bet,
And midnight howls and cries.

Let them remind you what you were Yourself, in years gone by,
When you were wont to rip and tear,
And howl, and screech, and cry.

J. W.

Can Dogs Reason?

Many and almost incredible are the accounts given of the sagacity, reason, courage, intelligence, and attachment of the dog. The following incident, witnessed and related by Dr. Cowan, will serve to illustrate some of the foregoing.

As the Dr. was walking down Liberty st. Pittsburg, he noticed a lively little dog trotting ahead of him. When the little dog came up to where a large dog was lying, he accosted him in a very friendly manner, put his nose up to the big fellow's, elevated his tail, etc. The big dog was in a surly mood, for he jumped up, took hold of the little dog, and gave him a great shaking. After the little dog got loose he started down the street, wearing a very dejected appearance. He soon came to where another large dog lay in front of an office. The little fellow brightened up, advanced to the big dog, put noses together, and held a short conversation. Suddenly the big dog jumped up and in company with the little one went back to where the little fellow got his thrashing. The small dog halted, and the big one advanced right up to where the first big fellow was. At once both large dogs assumed a fighting attitude and at it they went. The battle was fierce and long, but the little dog's friend whipped the other big fellow completely. During the performance the little dog sat at a short distance, apparently deeply interested, and when his friend had vanquished the surly big dog the little fellow jumped and skipped with evident satisfaction. He trotted off with the big dog down the street after the fight. It is evident the little dog told his champion, the big dog, about the bad usage the surly dog had given him.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

s an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff oints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FISH, FRUIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT FLESHERTON.

FREE $85 solid GOLD WATCH Sold for $100 until lately. Best $85 watch in the world. Perfect time-keeper. Warranted. Heavy Solid Gold Hunting Cases. Elegant and magnificent. Both ladies' and gents' sizes with works and cases of equal value. ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one FREE. How is this possible? We answer—we want one person in each locality, to keep in their homes, and show to those who call, a complete line of our valuable and very useful HOUSEHOLD SAMPLES. These samples, as well as the watch, we send free, and after you have kept them in your house for 6 months and shown them to those who may have called, they become your property. It is possible to make this great offer, sending the SOLID GOLD watch and COSTLY samples free, as the showing of the samples in any locality, always results in a large trade for us; after our samples have been in a locality for a month or two we usually get from $1000 to $5000 in trade from the surrounding country. This, the most wonderful offer ever known, is made in order that our samples may be placed at once where they can be seen, all over America. Write at once, and mention this paper. Reader it will be hardly any trouble for you to show the samples to those whom we call at your home and your reward will be most satisfactory. A postal card on which to write us costs but 1 cent and after you know all, if you do not care to go further, why no harm is done. But if you do send your address at once, you can secure FREE one of the best solid gold watches in the world and our large line of COSTLY SAMPLES. We pay all express, freight, etc. Address GEO. STINSON & CO., Box 413, PORTLAND, MAINE.

The Advance

ONLY

25c.

TILL

JAN. 1, '89

Train Wrecking.

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 10.—Meagre details of a fiendish attempt at train wrecking on the Grand Trunk Railway reached this city at a late hour last night. It appears an east bound freight train, on reaching a point about three miles east of Bothwell, between 8 and 9 o'clock last night, ran into an obstruction, but, as the train was moving slowly, the only damage done was the derailing of the engine. The trainmen, on making an investigation, discovered that two heavy rails had been placed across the track.

The officials here are confident that the object of the miscreants was to wreck No. 55 express for the purpose of plunder, but they were foiled, for that train was from one and a half to two hours late, and the freight had received orders to come on. Had the express been on time in all probability a terrible disaster would have been the result.

About 1 o'clock this morning an engine having on board Constable Logan and a posse left for the scene with the object of locating the scoundrels.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Blakely & McConnell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 377. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, SEPT. 20, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

SAVE MONEY!

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's

Noted

Jewelry Store

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Be sure and come to the fair on Monday and Tuesday.

It will be the best ever held here.

F. G. Karstedt has removed his shop to Strain's block. See advt.

At Red Flag for Bargains. 18c. for Prime Tub Butter.

The sound of the thresher is heard in the land.

Clearing sale at Climo's. Every thing at and less than cost. 18c. allowed for Prime Tub Butter.

Priceville and Dundalk baseball clubs intend to compete for the cup, with others yet to hear from.

Remember the tea-meeting and entertainment in Priceville on Monday evening next.

Friend Spurr, of the Dundalk Hearld, called on us last Tuesday. He has no earthly use for the Flesherton buss.

A credit auction sale will be held on the farm of Alexander Melvine, Lot 24, Con. 10. Artemesia, on Saturday, Oct. 6, when a large lot of farm stock and implements will be disposed of.

An auction sale of farm stock and implements will be held on the farm of Mrs. Routledge, Lot 33 con. 9, Artemesia, on Oct. 1, at 1 o'clock.

We show exceptional value in men's and boy's natural wool UNDERWEAR and Cardigan Jackets. M. Richardson & Co.

We received a pleasant call last week from Rev. Mr. Cunningham, of Galt, who has been spending holidays in this vicinity.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church will have a refreshment booth on the fair grounds both days of the fair.

Maxwell will hold its first monthly cattle fair on Friday, Oct. 5, when a large number of buyers have expressed their intention of being present.

Take Ayer's Pills and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the sufferings of body and mind, caused by habitual constipation. A moderate use of Ayer's Pills will invariably regulate the bowels.

In boots and shoes our stock is now complete.

Call and inspect. If you dont see what you want ask for it. M. Richardson & Co.

Canker humors of every description, whether in the mouth, throat, or stomach, are expelled from the system by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other remedy can compare with this, as a cure for all diseases originating in impure or impoverished blood.

The Markdale brass band have played in their Sunday cloths until they are played out, and are about getting a uniform. They will now blow more than ever. The suits will be dark navy blue, the fronts and cuffs of coats adorned with gold trimmings and brass buttons; epaulets trimmed with gold fringe, the pants with a broad gold stripe, so as to match the caps. The suits will cost $182. A grant of $20 has been received from the council towards paying for the suits.

We have been shown models of the two cups to be competed for by baseball and lacrosse clubs next Monday. They are beauties, and no mistake. Highly artistic in design, they are gotten up specially for this competition, stand twelve inches high, and are something that the winning clubs may well be proud to carry home after the fight. We feel confident that no handsomer prizes have ever been offered in this section of country, and they should invite a very spirited competition.

18c. allowed for Prime Tub Butter. Climos are giving up Business. You can get Bargains.

HAY WANTED.—Farmers having good No. 1 hay for sale will hear of a purchaser by applying to Thos. Sturdy, hay presser, 26 Catharine street south, Hamilton. N. B.—I am at present pressing in Dundalk, and will be at Flesherton, if business will warrant removal, for a few months in winter.

Prices $8 to $11 per ton.

Special novelties in black goods, Mantle Cloths and Ulsterings now in at M. Richardson & Co's.

From Streetsville.

We received a very interesting letter from friend Fawcett, of the Streetsville Review, last week, in which he expressed satisfaction with with his new home. There are large manufacturing firms in Streetsville, employing many hands, and business is booming. We are very glad to here it, and trust the boom may long continue, and strike the Review office with such force that the staff will require to be doubled, and a book keeper engaged. That is the best wishes we will give at present, brother, but when all this happens then we will do some more wishing.

Millinery. Our millinery department in charge of Miss Maud Richardson, is now full and well assorted in all the new and fashionable goods of the season. Hat, Bonnet, and dress trimmings, the novelties of the season. M. Richardson & Co.

New Postoffice.

For some time Mr. R. J. Sproule has been engaged in fitting up a new post-office for Flesherton. It will be one door east of the old one, and fitted up in orthodox style with a large number of lock boxes and drawers. Mr. Wm. Clark is the mechanical engineer, and thanks to his skilful hand the carpentering is of the very neatest description, and will be a lasting and tasty monument to Mr. Clark's mechanical ability. The boxes, which Mr. sproule has imported from Yale, are all in position, and the new office will be ready for occupation in about a week.

Educational Sermons.

Rev. Geo. Buggin, of Markdale, preached two very interesting educational sermons here on Sunday last. Mr. Buggin is a polished speaker, and succeeded in convincing the Methodist people of Flesherton that the great need of to-day is to secure the highest learning possible for our ministers, as the exigencies of the day demand it. He pointed out the fact that newspapers and periodicals of to-day were usurping the ground which has heretofore been tilled alone by the church, and that in order to keep pace with the press it was necessary for our ministers of to-day to secure the best possible education, and our colleges are formed to that end. There were several interesting points in his morning discourse which we would like to mention but space forbids this week. The proceeds of collections and subscriptions were very satisfactory.

A Sad Death.

On Wednesday last, the remains of Robert Spicer, aged 33 yrs., were intered in the Dundalk cemetery by the Canadian Order of Foresters of which he was a member. At half past two, the Foresters and members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen fell in line and marched to the house, following the corse to its last resting place, where, after service had been read, the members each marched round the grave throwing evergreens on to the coffin as an emblem of a future and eternal life. Mr. Spicer was an old and much respected citzen of Dundalk, a good christian, an affable father and a devoted husband. Our sympathy rests with the bereaved family in their sad affliction.—[Dundalk Hearld.

Mr. Spicer had been employed by R. J. Sproule, of this town, for some time, and was taken ill while here. He returned to his home in Dundalk, and died after about two weeks' illness.

The Mists of September.

For the Advance.

Down in the valley the sunlight is chasing
The mists of September to-day;
Warm breaths of morning are quickly replacing
The frosts that kiss summer away.

Slow rise the mists, but the sunshine is stronger
And gathers them up as a scroll,
Till the vision grows dim and can view them no longer
As onward and upward they roll.

Ah, heart! as the mists of September now vanish,
Each cloud that envelopes thee here
The great Sun of Righteousness eftsoon will banish,
Dissolving each crystalized tear.

And down in the valley, though sunlight may linger
Long after the dawning of morn,
Will soon pierce an endless and scintilent finger—
The night of its mists will be shorn.

HATS, CAPS, and READY-MADE CLOTHING. Our stock in this branch of business is abreast with our well-sustained record of having the right makes and right prices. Come and see. M. Richardson & Co.

There is no place in East Grey like the Flesherton Furniture Warerooms for bargains. Special discount sale in every department during the fall show.

Hay Burned.

A man named Dixon, living near Kimberley, set fire to some stumps in his meadow last week. There were two hay stacks in the meadow when the stumps were lighted, but they are no longer there. They disappeared in smoke along with the stumps. Mr. Dixon loses one hundred dollars' worth of hay, and claims to have learned a thing or two about firing stumps.

DRESS GOODS—NEW FALL DRESS GOODS. In this line we have made special efforts this season to place before our customers an unusually attractive line—See them.

Eugenia baseball club went out to Redwing on Saturday and got done up to the tune of 9 to 4. Only seven innings were played.

COMPETITION

DEFIED!

Fine Gold and Silver Watches for Presentation or Personal use.

ENGLISH

AND SILVERWARE.

Quality and completeness of stock to select from not equalled in Central Grey.

Sizes Complete in Gem and 18 K. Wedding Rings.

No Catch Prices. Goods as represented

OR "CASH" REFUNDED.

Can do better for Customers—"Cash" or "Credit"—than any other jeweler in "Grey Co."

Watches carefully and promptly repaired.

JEWELER BROWN,

MARKDALE, ONT.

This World is Very Funny.

This world is very funny,
No matter how much money
Man is earning he will spend it and be "hard up" all the time;
To his utmost he is straining
To "catch up" without attaining
Till he makes his life a burden when it should be bliss sublime.

He who earns a thousand merely
Thinks two thousand dollars yearly
Would be just the figure to make happiness complete;
But his income when it doubles
Only multiplies his troubles,
For his outgo then increasing makes his both ends worse to meet.

He is run in debt and borrow,
"Flush" to-day and broke to-morrow,
Financiering every day which way to postpone day of doom;
Spending money ere he makes it
And then wondering what takes it
Till he, giving up the riddle, looks for rest within the tomb.

Oh, this world is very funny
To the average man whose money
Doesn't quite pay for the dancing that he does before he should;
And he kills himself by trying
Just a little higher flying
Than is suited to his pocket and his own eternal good.

A Punster's Queries.

Upon what did the "carriage spring?"
From whence did the "lemon drop?"
Oh, what did the "apron-string?"
And who did the "accordeon-stop?"

How far did the "roller-skate?"
And whom did the "watch-charm?"
How long did the "paper-weight?"
And who did the "burglar-alarm?"

Whose path did the "iron-bar?"
And how long was the "ink-well?"
Against whom did the "glass-jar?"
And what did the "prison-cell?"

And what did the "pastry-cook?"
And what property did the "carpet-tacks?"
Oh, what did the "cotton-hook?"
And who did the "sealing-wax?"

What did the "clam-bake?"
And why did the "water-fall?"
Who did the "milk-shake?"
And how loudly did the "base-ball?"

What conspiracy did the "grass-plot?"
And whose brain did the "hat-rack?
When was the "grape-shot?"
And what person did the "car-track?"

A Lullaby.

As sung by Gardner, the clever German dialect comedian.)

Sleep, my darling sleep,
My sweet one, on my breast,
Close thy blue eyes, little love,
And rest, my darling, rest.
Soft blow the gentle south-wind, sweet,
From over the summer sea;
Dream on, my darling, dream,
My sweet one, dear to me! Sleep, my babe

CHORUS—
Then rock a bye, hush-a-bye, dear little darling,
Ley-u-le-o, Ley-u-le-o!
Rock a bye, hush-a-bye, dear little darling,
Ley-u-le-e-o! Hey!

Sleep, darling, while the bright stars
Their silent watch do keep;
Sleep, darling, while the fair moon
So gently guards thy sleep,
Thy mother shakes the dreamland tree,
Bright dreams fall down on thee;
Dream on, my darling, dream,
My sweet one, dear to me! Sleep my babe!

CHO.—Then rock a-bye, etc.

Two Lives.

Among the lonely hills they played;
No other bairns they ever knew;
A little lad, a little maid,
In sweet companionship they grew.

They played among the ferns and rocks
A childish comedy of life;
Kept house and milked the crimson docks
And called each other man and wife.

They went to school; they used to go
With arms about each other laid;
Their flaxen heads, in rain or snow,
Were sheltered by a single plaid

And so—and so it came to pass
They loved each other ere they knew;
His heart was like a blade of grass,
And hers was like its drops o' dew

The years went by; the changeful years
Brought larger life and toil for life;
They parted in the dusk with tears
They called each other man and wife.

They married—she another man,
And he in time another maid;
The story ends as it began—
Among the lonely hills—they played.

Silver and Gold.

Farewell my little sweetheart,
Now fare you well and free;
I claim for you no promise,
You claim no vows from me.
The reason why?—the reason
Right well we can uphold—
I have too much of silver,
And you too much of gold!

A puzzle, this, to worldlings,
Whose love to lucre flies,
Who think that gold to silver
Should count as mutual prize.
But I'm not avaricious,
And you're not sordid-souled;
I have too much of silver,
And you've too much of gold.

Upon our heads the reason
Too plainly can be seen;
I am the Winter's bond slave,
You are the Summer's queen;
Too few the years you number,
Too many I have told
I have too much of silver,
And you've too much of gold.

You have the rose for token,
I have dry leaf and rime;
I have the sobbing vesper,
You, morning bells at chime.
I would that I were younger,
(And you grew never old)
Would I had less of silver,
But you no less of gold

A LITILE.

So little made me glad, for I was young;
Flowers, a sunset, books, a friend or two,
Gray skies with scanty sunshine piercing through—
How little made me glad when I was young!

So little makes me happy, now I'm old:
Your hand in mine, dear heart, here by the fire;
The children grown unto our heart's desire—
How little keeps us happy when we're old!

And yet, between the little then and now,
What worlds of life, of thought and feeling keen!
What spiritual depths and heights unseen!—
Ah me! between the little then and now.

For little things seem mighty when we're young;
Then we rush onward through the changing years,
Testing the gamut of all smiles and tears,
Till mighty things seem little: we are old.

Alice Wellington Rollins.

A Curious Case of Left Handedness.

A French physician mentions a curious case of left handedness. One child in a certain family was left handed, and a second appeared, at the age of 1 year, also to be left handed. It was then learned that the mother always carried her child on her left arm. She was advised to carry her child on her right. The infant, having its right arm free, began to grasp objects with it, and soon became right handed.

CURRENT TOPICS.

An English-Volapuk dictionary will be issued before the end of the year.

The house in London, 13 Picadilly terrace, where Byron passed the wretched period of his married life, where Ada was born, and where he wrote some of his earliest poems, is now being altered, and will be entirely changed.

Advice from England says that the machinery of the great steamship City of New York has been seriously racked by the vibrations of the two mighty 10,000 horse-power engines with which she is equipped and that some new arrangement of the twin-screw apparatus will have to be adopted.

The committee of the Irish Exhibition in London have a great difficulty with their dairymaids. No fewer than twenty of them "have gone and got married" since the exhibition opened. The Irish girl seems to be as charming as she was in the days when Moore wrote sweetly verses extolling her charms.

By Lord Douglas Gordon's death the succession devolves on Lord Esme Gordon; but he has no son, and the eventual heir of the historic title of Marquis of Huntly will probably be found in the son of Lord Granville Gordon. Lady Granville Gorden is one of the London ladies who have taken to trade. She is a fashionable and popular dressmaker, and her sister, Mrs. G. Howard, is a bonnet-maker of high repute.

A scientific sharp declares that the constant jar of walking on the city pavements can be largely prevented by imitating nature "The human heel is covered with an elastic pad. Now, as to walk barefoot would be out of the question, it is suggested that we replace the hard boot-heel with one made of elastic rubber. It would cost but a few cents a month in repair, and would have the additional advantage of lessening the noise of hurrying feet, and preventing, to an extent, broken bones in the winter."

A London physician, writing of the peculiar effects of certain professions on the health, advises clerks to discard the high stool so commonly used by bookkeepers and accountants. He regards it as far healthful in every way to stand when working at a desk. If need be the clerk may rest a few moments by sitting down in an ordinary chair, but to work all day in a cramped position necessitated by the high stool is ruinous to the health, and must, sooner or later, result in the breaking down of the individual who does it.

Edward Hulse, whose engagement is announced to the only daughter of Edward Lawson, of the London Telegraph, is 29, tall and fair. He is the Conservative representative for Salisbury, and one of the youngest members of the House of Commons. He is a capital sportsman. His fiancee is well known in London and rarely misses driving daily in the Park a magnificent pair of chestnuts in a park phaeton. She is dark, petite, and pretty in figure and in face, with a beautiful complexion and a magnificent head of hair.

Canada Presbyterian: When the hot weather begins each summer there is a cry from many quarters for short sermons. Twenty minutes, it is said, is the right length for a sermon in the heated term. When the heated term is over we never hear any cry for longer sermons. Perhaps preachers lengthen without being asked to do so. Possibly those who want twenty minutes sermons during the heated term would be happy to take them all the year round. One thing is certain—nobody says the weather is now cool, let us have longer sermons.

Frequently man succumbs to the slightest injury, and again he will live through the most terrible physical ordeal. Two or three days ago a man in Chicago in some way got under a moving locomotive and was dragged about 100 feet before the machine could be brought to a stop. Then the body was found so tightly wedged that it was necessary to obtain jackscrews and raise the locomotive to free him. He was carried to the hospital, where he was revived, and then astonished doctors and nurses by getting on his feet, bidding them good night, and going on his way.

"Rapidity of execution, not fine work," says the Chicago News, "is the distinguishing feature of all American handicraft. American carpenters and wood-workers do more good work in a given time than any of their brothers of other lands, but it does not have the faultless neatness of the product of Chinese and French artisans. The Chinese, for instance, make chairs, cabinets and even houses without the use of a single nail, and every piece of wood is fitted to its place with hair-line exactness. It is not considered extraordinary in China to spend three years in the construction of a single bedstead.

A despatch from New York says that Dr. R. J. Gatling, the inventor of the Gatling gun, has spent several years of study upon a new method of making heavy ordnance, and, as a result, has obtained patents upon an invention which may revolutionize the entire system of manufacturing heavy missile-projectors now in vogue. Dr. Gatling's invention is stated to be the casting of the heaviest ordnance in solid steel around a central core, which is used in several ways for obviating the disadvantages of the old-style guns. The result, it is claimed, will be the production of an infinitely better gun at a reduction of 50 per cent. in cost.

A process for imparting some of the properties of metal to wood has, according to the Building World, been adopted in Germany. The surface of the wood becomes so hard and smooth that it is capable of assuming a high polish when operated on by a burnisher, and its appearance approaches that of a metallic mirror. The wood is steeped in a bath of caustic alkali for several days at a temperature of about 180 deg. Fahr., and it is afterwards placed in a bath of hyposulphite of calcium, to which a concentrated solution of sulphur is added. The third bath consists of acetate of lead, at a temperature of from 95 deg. Fahr. to 120 deg. Fahr., and the wood is allowed to remain in it for a period of 30 to 50 hours. After having been thoroughly dried, it is in a condition for being polished with lead, tin, or zinc.

Captain Condon, in the recently issued quarterly statement of the Palestine exploration fund, states that the "Ten Tribes" were taken from Samaria by Sargon in the year 722 B.C., and to the number of 27,280. Their places, according to the recently discovered historical tablet, which gives the above date and figures, were supplied by foreigners. Where the "Ten Tribes" were located he finds it not so easy to answer. The burden of tradition, he says, is to the effect that they found a new home in the lands adjacent to the Caspian Sea, and he inclines to the belief that the inhabitants of Georgia, Kurdistan and Bactria, more to the east, "are descendants of Israelite tribes." This view finds support from Benjamin of Tudela, who travelled from Spain, in the twelfth century, and who found independent Jewish tribes in those regions.

The annual report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails of the United States expresses the expectation that in the near future every government of the three Americas will be embraced in the parcels post system already extended to Mexico. Jamaica, Barbados, the Bahamas and British Honduras. The western world will be thus united in a postal and commercial bond which will contribute materially to the intimacy of its various peoples and greatly facilitate their inter communication. This American parcel post system is the growth of less than a single year, the first convention having been signed on October 1st, 1887. Many of the pending conventions are so far advanced that it is not improbable that the system will be extended to several more countries before the year is complete. This movement is free from nearly all the objections to which most of the pan-American propositions are subject and is much more practical in its advantages.

The extensive use of saccharin in certain food substances in Paris—in champagne, for instance—has caused the Council of Hygiene to institute a series of inquiries into its effects upon the animal economy. The Commission, which has recently reported, was unanimous in considering saccharin a medicament rather than an aliment of food proper; and they thought the employment of the substance in alimentation should be prohibited. The Commission intimated, however, that they considered it might advantageously be used as a substitute for sugar in certain diabetic conditions of the human body. In this connection, it may be useful to note that the scientific name of saccharin—which as everybody knows is one of the infinity of useful compounds prepared from coal tar—is "benzoyl sulphonic amide."

A marriage by proxy, or, as it is called, "marriage by the glove," is prevalent in Holland, and is brought about by the fact that many of the eligible young men, after having finished their education, depart for Dutch India. A friend selects a willing young lady, generally one with a substantial dot and otherwise conforming closely to specifications of the letter. A photograph of the favored one is enclosed in the return epistle. After the lapse of a few months a soiled, left-hand glove, with a power of attorney, is received from the faraway bachelor. The friend in Holland marries the selected bride in precisely the same manner as if he were the actual groom and the young wife departs in the next India mail steamer to bring happiness to the lonely one in the far East. A marriage of this description is as binding as if the bridegroom were present, and is never repudiated. If either party to the glove marriage should die before meeting in India, the survivor would share the property of the deceased in accordance with the law.

Recently the Chinese residents at Lhassa, in Tibet, implored the Emperor to cause arrangements to be made which would enable them to receive the copies of their almanac at the earliest possible date in each year. This anxiety would seem very curious, were it not the fact, as we are informed by a writer in the Chinese Recorder, that the almanac is the most important book to the Chinese. Its space is far too important to be occupied with the matter which fills Western almanacs. It contains astronomical information which is useful, but its great mission is to give full and accurate information for selecting lucky places for performing all the acts, great and small, of their everyday life. And as every act of life in China, however trivial, depends for its success on the time in which and the direction (i.e., the point of the compass) toward which it is done, it is of the utmost importance to the Chinese that every one should have correct information, available at all times, to so order his life as to avoid bad luck and calamity, and secure good luck and prosperity. Consequently, the almanac is, perhaps, the most universally circulated book in China.

Photographers in New York are advertising for good-looking young women who do not object to earning a living by means of their beauty. The Sun of that city reports a photographer as saying: "We must have handsome and artistic pictures for exhibition at Fairs, in our establishments and in show cases. Lately many fashionable ladies have objected to having their photographs exposed to common gaze, and as they were usually our best pictures we were in a quandary. The homely women are the cause of it all. A handsome woman is justly proud of her looks, and does not mind having her picture on exhibition; but her homelier sister sees it, is jealous of its beauty, and says: 'I would not allow my likeness to be gazed at by everybody. It does not show good taste.' The handsome woman is convinced by her arguments, and forbids us to use her photograph. Mrs. Cleveland, than whom there is no truer lady in the land, does not object to the exhibition of her photographs. Why should the others? We must have specimens of our work for advertising purposes, so we propose to pay handsome, respectable girls a good price to let us take their pictures for these purposes. I am now getting some ready for the American Fair. Very few suitable girls apply. A beautiful subject applied this morning. Her features and figure were faultless, but the only dress she had was a jersey, and as that would not do we had to let her go. The costumes must be modest and the girls respectable."

Sensationalists say that Kaiser Wilhelm is going to Paris peacefully to exchange compliments with President Carnot.

M. Renan's advice is to devote the early years of life to thought and study. "France," his opinion is, "will perish in a literary sense because of her young writers. It is impossible to write well before the age of 40.

The only Indian in Dakota to whom naturalization papers have been issued is th Rev. Luke P. Walker, a graduate of Indian School at Carlisle, Pa. He is a full-blooded redskin, but has completely severed his tribal relations.

The Empress of Germany has sent to the Czarina a beautiful fan of violet wood, which, when opened, displays the portraits of the four sons of the Emperor William and herself. On the reverse side are biblical texts in the hand-writing of the Empress which bid the great ones of the earth to be united in friendship.

According to evidence given before parliamentary committee, the value of the bare land within the "metropolitan area" of London is £418,000,000, and of the buildings £212,000,000. The rates and taxes paid by the land amount in all to £500,000 yearly, while the buildings pay £7,000,000. It does seem as though the ground owners had it all their own way in the British metropolis.

The Queen has commanded Sir Henry Ponsonby to thank Mr. Framjee Bhumgara for a copy of a "Life of Her Majesty," in the Goojeratee dialect, which was recently presented by him. The Goojeratee-speaking classes in India have long prided themselves on their loyalty to the Crown, and during the progress of the Jubilee celebrations last year the Rostgafter, the organ of that community, issued gratuitously a large number of copies of the above-named work.

A member of the Society of Friends, in writing to the London Times on the subject of separation of the sexes in church, says that the Society of Friends, the least ritualistic of all the religious bodies, has from its origin separated men and women in the meetings for public worship. In Cradoc, Middlesex County, there is a Baptist congregation which divides up in church the same way. A lady leads the singing. Near Bell's Lake, Grey County, a Methodist congregation also sits in church with the sexes on either side.

A correspondent recently despatched a postal card from London via the Brindisi and Suez Canal route, to Hong Kong, with the request that it might be forwarded on to the addressee via San Francisco and New York, which was done. The card was duly received by the original sender the other day, the time taken in its transit round the world being exactly seventy days, which is about forty days' quicker than that accomplished ten years ago. The card was franked for its long and circuitous journey for 3½d, and it travelled upwards of 25,000 miles.

The Militar-Zeitung (Vienna) shows the following figures in estimation of the average range of the improved firearms respectively possessed by the infantry forces of Austria-Hungary, Germany and France. The Mannlicher is claimed to carry beyond 4,113 yards, the Mauser will hit at 3,250 yards, whilst the Lebel is assumed to be certain for 4,550 yards. The accuracy of aim with the Mauser is extremely doubtful, as the arm is defective in constant equipoise, and its centre of gravity is two much forward of the hold. The force of penetration with the Mannlicher bullet is twice as hard, and that of the Lebel twice and a half stronger, than the Prussian projectile.

The life of the railway civil engineer is marked by many hardships and privations of which the traveller, as he journeys swiftly over the line which the surveying party marked out with toil and difficulty not long before, seldom thinks. A despatch to the San Francisco Examiner from Salt Lake, Utah, gives the following illustration of this fact: "News comes from Hicko, sixty-five miles west of Pioche, that a man who was reported lost from the Utah Central surveying party was found at Quartz Springs. When the party left that place coming eastward he walked ahead and sitting down under a tree by the roadside he went to sleep, allowing the waggons to pass unobserved. He awoke bewildered and walked back to the springs, where he remained five days without food. When found he was digging out a rabbit from a hole in the side of the hill. He was taken to Hicko, where he is now recovering, though still somewhat flighty as a result probably of the five days' starvation, or possibly of sunstroke."

The New York Sun gives the following list of names of men over 70 years of age who preserve the vigor of their faculties and are actively engaged in their several occupations, with editorial comments to the effect that these and other facts show that the average number of years allotted to man is increasing:

Airy, Sir G B.	Astronomer	87
Bancroft, George	Historian	86
Barnard, F. A. P.	College President	78
Barnum, P. T.	Philosopher	78
Bartlett, Sidney	Lawyer	89
Bismarck, Prince	Statesman	73
Blackie, J. S.	Scholar	79
Bright, John	Statesman	77
Browning, Robert	Poet	76
Bunson, Robt. Eberhard.	Chemist	77
Cameron, Simon	Statesman	89
Chevreul, M. E.	Chemist	102
Conant, T. J.	Scholar	86
Curtis, Geo. Ticknor	Lawyer	76
Dana, J. D.	Geologist	75
Davis, Jefferson	Statesman	80
Doellenger, Ignatius	Theologian	89
Dow, Neal	Reformer	84
Ericsson, John	Engineer	85
Feuillet, Octave	Author	76
Field, David D.	Lawyer	83
Gilbert, John	Actor	78
Gladstone, William E.	Statesman	79
Granville, Earl	Statesman	73
Grevy, Jules	Statesman	81
Grove, Sir William R.	Physicist	77
Hamlin, Hannibal	Statesman	79
Holmes, O. W.	Poet	79
Hubner, Baron	Diplomatist	77
Kenrick, Peter R	Archbishop	83
Kinglake, Alex. W.	Historian	77
Lagouve, En'st Wilfred.	Dramatist	81
Leo XIII.	The Pope	78
Lesseps, Ferdinand de	Engineer	83
Manning, H. E.	Cardinal	80
Meissonier, Jean Louis.	Painter	76
McCosh, James	Metaphysician	77
Musurus, Pacha	Diplomatist	81
Newman, J. H.	Cardinal	87
Owen, Sir Richard	Anatomist	84
Peabody, Andrew P.	Clergyman	77
Pole, William	Whist authority	74
Quatrefages, J. L. A.	Naturalist	78
Tennyson, Alfred	Poet	79
Thomas, Ambroise	Composer	77
Thurman, A. G.	Statesman	75
Verdi, Guiseppe	Composer	74
Vermilye, Thomas E.	Clergyman	85
Von Moltke	Soldier	88
Weir, R. W.	Painter	85
Whittier, J. G.	Poet	81
Woolsey, T. D.	Publicist	87

She Would Better Take Him.

"Mr. Sampson asked me to be his wife last night, papa." "And what did you say?" "I told him he must give me a little time, and he said I could have the usual thirty days or 5 per cent. off for cash, and then he stopped and apologized. What am I to think of him, papa?" "Think of him!" shouted the old man. "That young fellow is full of business, and you can't say 'yes' too quick!"—Grip.

CHINESE BASEBALL.

Two Wash-house Nines Meet in Deadly Fray on the Green Diamond.

The national game broke out in the Chinese quarter at San Francisco a short time ago, and a team of wealthy tea-importers and soap-and-water millionaires was organized. Some Chicago flat-iron artists took the cue, so to speak, and put another nine in the field. To-day they will meet in mortal conflict. Yesterday they practiced. Mr. George Edmondson and Mr. George Mayer, who manage the laundry trust, took their men to the grounds in carriages and brought their names out on a piece of red paper which looked like an overdue wash bill. The Chicago players were attired in large, roomy trousers of blue cloth and carelessly-arranged white cotton shirts. The San Francisco people wore trousers cut from a flour-barrel pattern and coffee-sack surtouts. All played bareheaded except Arthur Moi, who had a liver-colored pair of ready-made pantaloons and a black frock coat topped off with a soft black hat.

Sam Moi, captain of the Chicago club, was hired to make remarks that look like a gridiron after it had been struck by a pile-driver. Barney McGaffney umpired the game. Mr. McGaffney has only a timid acquaintance with Chinese and Sam Moi interprets the game. "Three strikes," shouts Mr. McGaffney. "Bun-gele-wong he-ho," cries Sam Moi. That means "run," and the Celestial makes a lunge for the first bag. It usually gets there safe, as the old lady who plays first base has a catch-as-catch-can bout with the sphere before she gets hold of it properly.

The Chinese are not the inventors of baseball. They prefer such delicately agile and intellectual games as lawn tennis and bungloo. They smoke cigarettes, but eschew gum. They throw a ball with the wild desperation and lavish precision of a school girl. Pitcher Don Moi, of the San Franciscos, has as many frills on his delivery as a professional. He holds his hands above his head a moment, pulls down the ball, blows a jet of spray on it, and with a backward over-hand twist tosses the sphere somewhere between the first base and the grand stand. Tall Doi, the Chicago twirler, has no professional tricks, but he probably excels Mr. Don in missing the plate. Tee Moo, the San Francisco catcher, wore China bracelets and an openwork undershirt whose largest ingredients were the holes in it. The keen wind tanned his russet skin with a ghoulish whistle, but Mr. Tee did not shrink from it. He very frequently caught the ball, too, but only unstinted expenditure of muscle got the ball to first base. Such a thing as throwing to second base would be a weird Munchausen tale to the Chinese catchers.

In the third inning a tall brunette largely devoted to a thin, knotty neck, a loose, black night gown, short in its reach, and long kitchen apron, sidled up to the plate and picked up a maple chop stick. He loosened a hinge in his back as he smote the ball. It rolled nearly to the second bag. It was a great hit. The short stop, who stands ten feet behind the pitcher to escape being hurt by grounders, ran after the ball. The second baseman trotted briskly after the same object, and the centrefielders who played within an arm's length of the second base passed out in the same direction. "Ki-yi, long-leap-heap, plum-dum!" screamed Sam-Moi. The old lady was hastening to the first base. The three maids were playing ring around a rosy over the ball. They finally got it and the entire three carried it to the pitcher as if it were an egg.

At one critical moment two base-runners got on the second bag, and a wild confusion ensued. The baseman was out holding a conference with two fielders and the pitcher about a fly that had dropped near the foul line. One of the runners passed the man ahead of him and scored, while the other pulled up at third. The basemen never play away from the bags, and the outfielders play on the base lines. The players laughed and shouted as much as the spectators. They coached each other and made puns in Chinese and played from noon until the sun went down.—Chicago News.

His Nerve Helped Him Out.

Husband (Tipsey; late home; wife fixing up her hair before the looking-glass; her heart full of rancor; ready to give him a dreadful scolding)—Why, dear, what are you doing?

Wife (snappishly)—Don't you see what I'm doing. Fixing up my hair.

H—Well—hic—I'm glad to see you doing that.

W.—And where have—

H.—I shay I'm glad to see you doing that. For you have the most beautiful hair I ever saw.

W.—Where have you—

H.—I shay you have the most beautiful hair I ever saw. And it just matches your face. For you have the most beautiful face—hic—I ever saw—so there.

W. (smiling)—Do you think my face beautiful?

H. (putting his boots under the pillow)—You are the most beautiful woman in the world.

W. (lovingly)—You darling, John, you are a sad flatterer. Let me unbutton your collar for you.

Who the Apaches Are.

The Apaches are believed to have been the Faraones and Taracones whom the Spaniards discovered in 1540 to exist in large numbers near the Seven Cities of Gold. They were never conquered by the Spaniards. During our century they have numbered nine large tribes, and include the great tribe of Navajoes and the Utes, in all about 35,000. Some of the tribes are small. Most of them are self-supporting on their great reservations in Arizona, New Mexico and southern Colorado. They have remained the most savage in their superstitions and ways of living, and in their warfare of all the North American Indians. Their vast country, with its great mountain ranges, fertile valleys, wide table lands, forests of pine and oak, masses of flowers and fields of rich grass, plains and tremendous gorges, offers every possibility of wild, barbarous, pastoral, agricultural and civilized life. It should be dotted with homes and farms owned by Indian farmers and mechanics.—September Wide Awake.

Last week a copy of the first edition of the "Life of Grimaldi," by Dickens, and illustrated by Cruikshank, was sold at auction for 54 pounds 10 shillings.

ENRICHED BY A DOG.

Singular Inheritance of a Church—A Fund of $1,500 Left for the Care of a Canine Which Reverts to Religion on the Animal's Death.

(Philadelphia Record.)

By the death of a dog at West Chester, the St. Peter's P. E. Church, of Tredyffryn township, Chester county, is $1,500 richer. The animal was a pet of Mrs. Elizabeth Shee, an aged and somewhat eccentric lady, who died two years ago at West Chester, where she had lived. The lady left behind her an estate of about $10,000, which by her will was disposed of in a peculiar manner. The strangest clause was the one which provided for the dog Ryno, as he was called. A fund of $1,500 was set aside for investment, the interest to be spent in the maintenance of the animal and for his proper burial after his death. Upon his demise the principal was to revert to the church which the lady had attended in her life. Mrs. Shee died early in March, 1886, and Squire Peter Carey, of Phœnixville, who was named as her executor, provided a home for the four-footed heir at the house of a relative of the lady at West Chester, where the dog lived a pampered existence until a week ago, when he died of a complication of diseases, the result of age and an overindulgence in the sweets of life. The existence of a moneyed aristocrat is too much for the average dog, and Ryno is said to have been a cur very much below the average, and succumbed to high living. According to the letter of the will Ryno was buried not far from the grave of his dead benefactor. He was wrapped in a sheet and placed in a box according to the last wishes of Mrs. Shee. The canine had barely been placed under the sod when the church people wrote to Mr. Carey, the executor, stating that they were ready to receive the money. He replied that the principal is so invested that it is not likely that it will be paid over before next spring. The secret of Mrs. Shee's attachment to the dog is a mystery, for the animal was a mongrel of the lowest order. He was surly and snappish, and devoid of any beauty or attractions. He had been brought into Mrs. Shee's house in an early stage of puppyhood, and had always been with her. The dog died in a spasm, and is said to have suffered greatly for hours before death relieved him. It is whispered among the neighbors that his dogship hung on to life too long to suit some people. The parties concerned are all satisfied, however, and there will be no investigation into his death.

Two Dozen Compressed Facts.

There are 2,750 languages.
A square mile contains 640 acres.
A barrel of rice weighs 600 pounds.
The average human life is 31 years.
The first steel pen was made in 1830.
A barrel of flour weighs 196 pounds.
A barrel of pork weighs 200 pounds.
A span is ten and seven-eighth inches.
A hand (horse measure) is four inches.
Watches were first constructed in 1476.
A storm moves thirty-six miles per hour.
The first lucifer match was made in 1829.
The value of a ton of silver is $37,704.84.
A hurricane moves eighty miles per hour.
The first iron steamship was built in 1830.

Modern needles first came into use in 1545.

Coaches were first built in England in 1569.

The first horse railroad was built in 1826-27.

One million dollars of gold coin weigh 3,685 pounds averdupois.

One million dollars of silver coin weigh 58,920.9 pounds averdupois.

The first complete sewing machine was patented by Elias Howe in 1846.

Glass windows were first introduced into England in the eighth century.

Albert Durer gave the world a prophecy of future wood engraving in 1527.

Measure 209 feet on each side and you will have a square acre within an inch.

A Stream of Silver.

There is a stream of silver pouring into Washington at the rate of half a million dollars' worth a day. It comes in the shape of fresh, glittering new dollars, standard silver dollars of the mintage of 1888, with the milling unnicked and the face of the Goddess of Liberty fresh from the stamp. The stream is flowing at present from the Philadelphia mint, but before long the sluice gate will be switched around and the shining flood will be turned in from New York, then, after a time, from New Orleans, and finally from San Francisco, thus giving the United States a silver belt that will outshine even that of a champion pugilist. The Adams Express Company carries the silver in trunks or iron-bound boxes, guarded by armed men. At this end of the line the silver is carried direct to to the treasury department in great iron-latticed waggons, that look like the animal cages in a menagerie. At the treasury the boxes are taken into the building and into the basement, then down a winding stairway in the northeast corner of the building into the sub-basement, where the air at present has an odour of soft mustiness that brings thoughts of mysterious treasures, hidden gold, stories of Capt. Kidd, and similar ideas. The visions of the mystic are suddenly dispelled by a prosy, business-like door of grated iron that bars the way and brings the visitor to a halt.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

They Enlisted at Least.

You are right, Sir John Thompson, in declaring that five Canadians enlisted in the Northern army for one that rallied to the help of the South during the war of the rebellion.

Your figures are accurate, but you err in following them to the conclusion that Canada's sympathies were with the North.

The sympathies of the country were against slavery, but do not rely on Canadian enlistments in the Union Army to prove it. Where the treasure was, there were also the hearts of the valorous Canadians who took a brief for liberty in that controversy.

Even your eloquence cannot arouse the American people to any true appreciation of the services of the Canadian veterans. Your speech embalms in pure Saxon the activity of our athletic compatriots who "jumped the bounty."—Toronto Telegram

Lady Brassey's "Last Voyage" is about to appear in a richly illustrated form in England.

LIGHTNING-RODS GOING OUT.

No Protection, but on the Contrary Strongly the Reverse.

"Lightning-rods are going out of use. Why? Because they are not believed to be the protection it was once thought they were."

That was what an electrician told a reporter.

Fifteen years ago the lightning-rod agent was everywhere in the land, and more especially at every farmer's door. To-day, it is claimed, their number has materially decreased, and farmers are discontinuing the use of the rods.

"What is your opinion upon the subject of lightning-rods?" was asked of Chief Walker, of the City Electrical Department.

"Candidly, in nine cases out of ten," he replied, "I think they are humbugs. I believe it is a fact that more barns are struck and burned that have lightning-rods on than with them off. In the first place, it is best to keep electricity as far away from a building as possible. The object of the lightning-rod is to attract it. The rod is supposed to act as a conductor of the electrical current to the earth, but instead of being carried off, the current, in consequence of faulty construction of the rod or attachments, is frequently switched into the building. The end of the wire is supposed to be buried in moist earth, the moisture acting as a good conductor. Without strict attention the iron becomes oxidized and rusts off, and then the rod is worse than nothing. It is a positive danger under such circumstances, attracting the electricity of the atmosphere, and having no adequate outlet for it. Then, again, the same danger arises when the insulators upon the side of the building become defective. The lightning is attracted from the atmosphere, where it might have remained but for the rod, and it is turned loose against the building on its way to the earth. If, for instance, the attachments on a barn are poor or worn out, the current may be deflected and set fire to the contents. This is no uncommon occurrence. In this city some years ago the rod on the Belmont waterworks was struck and it fused. The current flowed on down and played about the machinery in the liveliest kind of a way. A big stone was knocked off the Washington monument by lightning. When the ground contact is good and the lightning is about to strike a building a rod may be of use, but I think the rods do more harm than good. There was a time when farmers were scared into rodding their barns and houses, but I think they are getting over that.'—Philadelphia Record.

Pins, Twelve Dollars a Paper!

From an article entitled "Hard Times in the Confederacy" in the September "Century" we quote the following; "In August, 1864, a private citizen's coat and vest, made of five yards of coarse homespun cloth, cost two hundred and thirty dollars exclusive of the price paid for the making. The trimmings consisted of old cravats; and for the cutting and putting together, a country tailor charged fifty dollars. It is safe to say the private citizen looked a veritable guy in his new suit, in spite of its heavy drain upon his pocket-book.

"In January, 1865, the material for a lady's dress which before the war would have cost ten dollars could not be bought for less than five hundred. The masculine mind is unequal to the task of guessing how great a sum might have been had for bonnets 'brought through the lines'; for in spite of patient self-sacrifice and unfaltering devotion at the bedsides of the wounded in the hospital, or in ministering to the needs of relatives and dependents at home, the Southern women of those days are credited with as keen an interest in the fashions as women everywhere in civilized lands are apt to be in times of peace. It was natural that they should be so interested, even though that interest could in the main not reach beyond theory. Without it they often would have had a charm the less and a pang the more. Any feminie garment in the shape of cloak or bonnet or dress which chanced to come from the North was readily awarded its meed of praise, and reproduced by sharp-eyed observers, so far as the scarcity of materials would admit.

"But fashion's rules were necessarily much relaxed in the Southern Confederacy so far as practice went when even such articles as pins brought through the blockade sold for twelve dollars a paper, and needles for ten, with not enough of either."

Divorced and Married in Fifteen Minutes.

A novel divorce suit has just been terminated in the Owen County (Ind.) Circuit Court. The parties to the suit were John W. and Sarah J. Medaris, who had lived happily as husband and wife for seven years, with not a cloud to mar their domestic felicity. About two months ago a third party, named Elijah Starrett, of Clay County, made his debut in the neighborhood of the Medaris household. He met Mrs. Medaris, and it was a case of love at first sight. A coldness sprung up between husband and wife. The result was a suit for divorce by mutual agreement, which is best related as follows:

"The parties to this suit agree that they will separate agreement and that each shall testify in behalf of the other." With this understanding they went into open court and testified in the case. The Judge granted a decree of divorcement, and within fifteen minutes the newly divorced lady, accompanied by Elijah Starrett, presented themselves before the now astonished Judge and demanded that he say the marriage ceremony for them. Within fifteen minutes, and by the same Judge, Mrs. Medaris was the wife of Mr. Starrett. The late husband witnessed the marriage ceremony.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Sea Serpents to Order.

Stranger (to seaside hotel proprietor)—I heard you had a sea serpent down here this year and I thought I'd run down and see it.

Hotel proprietor—Yes, sir. The bar-room is just down that hall. Ask for a glass of Sprigg's XXXXXX and then go directly to your room and wait ten minutes.

When held up to a strong light, a fresh egg is very clear, and the air cell at the large end is very small. The smaller the air cell the fresher the egg, as the cell expands the egg becomes stale. A fresh egg has a somewhat rough shell while that of a stale one is very smooth.

"LEATHER APRON."

A Creature Who Might Have Come Out of the Pages of a Penny Dreadful.

Whitechapel has a murder mystery which transcends anything known in the annals of the horrible. It is Poe's "Murder of the Rue Morgue" and "Mystery of Marie Roget" rolled into one real story. It is nothing less than a midnight murderer, whose step is noiseless, whose strike is deadly, and whose cunning is so great that he leaves no trace whatever of his work and no clue to his identity. He has just slaughtered his third victim and all the women in the Whitechapel are terrified, while the stupidest detectives in the civilized world stands aghast and say they have no clue. When the murder of Mary Ann Nichols, who was cut into ribbons last Friday, was investigated, it became evident that that the murder was the work of the same hand that committed the two proceeding ones. All three were moneyless women of the lowest class. All were killed in the street between 1 and 3 o'clock in the morning, and all were mutilated in the same fiendish and peculiar way. The coincidence was so great as to strike even the detectives, and they are now looking for the one man whom they believe to be guilty of all three crimes. The man is called "Leather Apron," and nobody knows him by any other name. He is a character half way between Dicken's "Quilp" and Poe's "Baboon." He is short, stunted and thick set. He has small, wicked black eyes, and is half crazy. He is always hanging about the deep shadows that fill the intricate network of the courts, passages and alleyways in Whitechapel. He does not walk, but always moves on a sharp, queer run, and never makes any noise with his feet. In addition to the three women he is believed to have murdered, he has scared a hundred more of them nearly to death. Every street-walker in Whitechapel has her own story to tell of him. He lives by robbing them late at night, and has kicked, cuffed or knocked down a score of them in the last two years. His usual lodging place is a fourpenny lodging-house in a poverty-stricken thieves' alley off Brick lane. He has left there now, however, and nobody knows where he is. He is suspected of having committed the three murders from the fact that he has frequently drawn a knife on women, accompanied by the same threats which have been carried out on the dead women.

The story of Mrs. Colwell, who heard the screams of the woman as she was being murdered, is to the effect that she was clearly running away from somebody who was murdering her, and yet she could hear no other footsteps. The blood stains on the sidewalk indicated the same thing—that the murderer, whoever he was, was noiseless in his pursuit, and this quality points directly to "Leather Apron." He is a slipper-maker by trade and gets his nickname from the fact that he always wears a leather apron and is never seen without it. One peculiar feature of the case is that none of the police or detectives appear to know him, he having always kept out of their sight, and they are now gleaning information concerning him from women he has assailed.—London Dispatch.

Origin of a Popular Song.

Mr. Scanlan is one of the few actors who really compose their own songs and words. The usual way is to get some one to write a song and then sing it as their own composition. But no one ever accused Mr. Scanlan of doing anything like that, for he can sit down and write a song before you in half an hour, although it might not be very good unless the inspiration was on him. That simple little melody is his masterpiece, and he will sing it as long as he lives. Do you know how he came to write "Peek-a-Boo?" Mr. Scanlan told about it at the West hotel the other day.

"I was sitting in a nook in my home on Fourth avenue, New York, one day about eight years ago," said he. "I was looking over some songs of Samuel Lover's. You know that the music for them is lost, and I had an accordion in my hand trying to pick out a tune that would fit them. While I was doing so some children were playing about the door. With children's curiosity they peeked in at me. I saw them and began to say "Peek-a-Boo," nodding my head at the same time. Unconsciously, the accordion played a few notes to suit what I was saying. The idea struck me. I dashed off the chorus of the song on an envelope and wrote a stanza or two. Afterward I finished the song. The music came naturally. I could hear it running through my head while I was writing the song. That is the history of "Peek-a-Boo"—Minneapolis Journal.

Miss Rives' Literary Work.

A few days ago Miss Amelie Rives (Mrs. Chanler) said in regard to her literary works: "I think out my plots, but I don't know what the characters will say until I take up the pen. "Herod and Mariamne" was written a year ago last winter. It was a month's task. I had had the plot in my mind two years before, but had not put it to paper."

"Will it be put on the stage?"

"I don't know. A manager wanted me to go on the platform and read, but that was out of the question. He has made a proposition to 'dramatize' 'Herod and Mariamne.' That is what he wrote. Perhaps he meant to reduce it to stage proportions, but his offer was vague."

"What will come next—a play or a novel?"

"The next will be a play. Its title is 'Ethelwold.' It is based on incidents in English history just prior to the reign of Henry II. The Harpers have secured it, and it will be issued about the first of the year. After that I have no fixed plans, but will, naturally, continue to write."

Johnny's Mistake

Johnny was told that he might have half the grapes. When his mother went to the cupboard she found that Johnny had taken all the grapes, leaving none for his sister. When spoken to about the matter Johnny replied: "Mamma, I'll tell you just how it was. When I had eaten half of the grapes I happened to think that I'd eaten up Gracie's half instead of my own. I was real sorry; but then I couldn't help it. I'd given her part of my half, only they were so good that they were all gone before I knew it."

EVERYBODY A SPECULATOR.

Life One Big Lottery for More or Less Bread and Butter.

I have the Globe's letter asking me these questions: Would you advise speculation as a means of adding to a man's savings? and, if so, in what manner—in stocks, in real estate, or in what? And what should a man do who has $100, $500, $1,000 or $10,000 to invest?

Why didn't you ask me how a man should go to heaven? Whether his religion should be that of a hard-shell Baptist, soft-shell Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Congregationlist, Presbyterian, Catholic, Shaker, Mormon, Silent Quaker, Hebrew or Faith Cure? Or whether a man should be in favor of high license, low license or no license at all for the beverages that the human appetite demands, a female sufferage advocate, a protectionist or free trader; or whether he should want his $100, $500, $1,000 or $10,000 in specie or greenbacks?

In forty-five years' experience I find, personally and by observation, that speculation is the great underlying principle of all the traffic of this world from the cradle to the grave. Adam and Eve entered into a speculation and were punished. Lot's wife made a heavy plunge in the speculative line and got cornered in salt. Joseph's brothers made a speculation when they divided his coat of many colors, and later on he returned the compliment by cornering the corn market in Egypt. This was before the Chicago Board of Trade was organized. The Jews speculated in the money changes in the temple at Jerusalem during our Saviour's time.

Thus it comes down to the present day, when there is a speculation going on among literary men as to whether Hamlet's soliloquy, "To be or not to be," was written by William Shakspeare or Lord Francis Bacon. A man speculates when he buys an orange grove in Florida or a farm in Maine or Nebraska, when he builds a hotel in Yellowstone Park, or when he proposes to a young lady as to what her answer will be and which will have the best of the bargain. When a man buys a fine-tooth comb he speculates on his harvest. A doctor speculates as to whether his prescription will kill or cure, and the druggist, who may be out of the ingredient wanted and supplies another, as to what the result will be. If a man builds a hotel at the seashore, or a steamboat, he speculates on his patronage. If he studies for a lawyer, he speculates on his future divorce and boodle cases, his breach of promise suits, his prospects of "spook" cases and the number of criminals he will defend.

When a farmer plants onions, potatoes, cabbage and squash he speculates on his crop. Even the person who drops a nickle into the slit of the automatic scales speculates as to his weight. A hen speculates when she sits on the eggs how large a brood of chickens she will hatch, and a man who pays sixty cents for a half-roast spring chicken five years later in generally said to speculate. And the honest politician now and then enters into a little speculation.

I don't see how you are going to change the currents of men's minds, when speculation is the great principle upon which finance, politics, amusements, literature and religion are based. The verb "to speculate" can be stretched and twisted into about as many ways as an elastic band, and no one be a bit the wiser.

The old Quaker gave his son good advice when he said: "Thee must get money and get it honestly;" but when his son had reached the gate he called him back and repeated the first part of his sentence, "Thee must get money."

As before stated, life is a gamble from the cradle to the grave. If any of your contributors or correspondents can suggest some means by which a man can earn a livelihood without speculation, I would be very happy to adopt it, even in my ancient days.—Rufus Hatch, speculator, in the Boston Globe.

The Wonders of the Phonograph.

There seems to be hardly any term to the life of a phonograph (writes the London correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury). "I heard some cornet-playing yesterday, orginally given out in America, which has been repeated in England more than a thousand times, and all the notes are still as distinct and clear as ever. The sensitiveness of the phonograph is also very extraordinary. It was taken to the Crystal Palace for the Handel Festival, and it registered the perfect roar of Niagara which arose from the movements of the multitude. Through this roar comes in curious distinctness the sound of the band and the voice of the chorus. Mr. Edison's secret lies mainly in the construction of his diaphragm. He uses two. To one is attached the needle which makes the record. It i sthe recording angel. To the other, more sensitive, is attached a pointer not much thicker than a hair, but strong enough to cause vibrations in the diaphragm and to send forth thereby the sound to the ear. I hear that Mr. Edison has abandoned, for the present at all events, his wax cylinders. They had failed to go safely across the Atlantic. Curious people handled them and spoilt them. Mr. Edison is now at work preparing a new recording substance. At the same time he is also inventing a battery warranted to work ten hours, and recording the time during which it has been used. The wonderful invention is approaching, but has not yet reached, absolute perfection."

The Molehills and Mountains of Life.

Mrs. De Cash—Oh, yes, my plan of managing a man is to let him have his own way in small things, and then he is more impressed when you oppose him in great things. It is simple enough and very easy.

Fair young bride—But what do you call small things?

"Oh, smoking in the back library, sitting with his legs crossed, neglecting to properly adjust his necktie and so on. There's no use fighting about such things. But when a man begins criticising milliners' bills it it is time for a woman to assert herself."—Philadelphia Record.

Lord Charles Somerset was telling a long story about his walking in the woods at Capetown, Africa, one day, when he came suddenly upon a huge shaggy lion. "Thinking to frighten him," said the noble lord, "I ran at him with all my might." "Whereupon," said another, interrupting, "he ran away with all his mane." "Just so," said his lordship.

BEAUTIES OF A BANK NOTE.

The Commerce's New Issue of 5's, 10's, 20's and 100's an Elegant Success.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce directors do not believe in putting old wine in new bottles. The magnificent new building at King and Jordan-streets is rapidly arriving at its top, and in order to conform with the pristine newness of the building and its decorations the gentlemen at the head of the bank ordered a complete set of new notes wherewith to ornament the coffers. The new notes commenced going into circulation yesterday. A sufficient supply has not yet arrived from the printers, but as soon as it does, allowing time for signing, the old notes will be withdrawn from circulation. Mr W. Smith, the regular signer, will be assisted by a staff of five or six clerks, and it is expected that with these it will be several months before the task of fixing the countersign will be completed. The denominations of the new bills are 5's, 10's, 20's and 100's. They are all handsome pieces of the engraver's art, and a counterfeiter will find that they are his despair as well as the artist's delight. The backs of the bills are covered with an artistic blending of almost every kind of lathe work ever brought into use on banks bills. The faces are also distinguished for the beauty of the engraving and the intricacy of the design. It would be time misspent for the counterfeiter to attempt a re-engraving. The danger of tholography is also turned aside. The yellow tint photographs an inky black, and is so indefinitely blended at the borders with the other colors that it is absolutely impossible to photograph. The face of the 5 shows Literature reclining gracefully in flowing drapery, and with her arm leaning negligently on a book. This piece of engraving was done by the oldest and most successful engraver in the world, Alfred Jones, of New York. On the opposite side of the note, the right hand side, is the bank's seal. The body of the face is filled in with the usual declaration, and the figure 5, in multiplied forms, constitutes the border. The chief figure on the back is a cut of the new building. This is the prominent feature on the backs of the notes of other denominations.

The face of the $10 note has the figure of Britannia for a centre-piece. She is surrounded by cherubim representing commerce, justice, finance and agriculture. On the left hand is the bank's seal, and on the right hand Art is busy with his brushes and pallet. The face of the $20 note shows Mercury riding on a dolphin. To the left the various kinds of navigation are portrayed. History pursues her vocation in the right hand corner. The centre piece of the $100 note is a pictorial sketch showing Science, with emblematic figures about her.

The bills are signed by Mr. Henry W. Darling, the President, and will be countersigned by Mr. Smith and his assistants. The new issue cost $28.75 a thousand.—Toronto World.

A Woman's Big Bluff.

After two or three days of weary search a Canadian named Williams, living near St. Thomas, located his eloping wife here in Detroit. She had run away with the hired man and they were boarding with a family on Champlain street. An officer went with the husband to interview the faitless one, rather expecting trouble, but there was none. The visitors were ushered into the sitting-room and the wife rose up and calmly asked:

"Who did you wish to see, gentlemen?"

"Mary, I've come for you!" replied the husband. "Why did you run away from me and the children? Where's that scoundrel of a Pete?"

"Mary? Mary? Haven't you made a mistake, sir?" she queried.

"Come, Mary, none of that," he answered. "You've got to go back with me."

"Sir, what means this language?" she demanded. "Officer, did you bring this man here to insult me?"

"He says you are his wife."

"Of course she is!"

"His wife! I never set eyes on him before! He is either drunk or crazy!"

"Not my wife!" he shouted. "Haven't we lived together 18 years? Didn't you and Pete skip from home ten days ago? Haven't you got two children waiting for you to come back? And haven't I come to waltz you home and pound Pete within an inch of his life?"

"I must demand your protection," she said to the officer. "This has gone too far already. The man must be crazy."

"I want her arrested," said the husband.

"Try it at your peril!" she replied. "My husband will demand ample satisfaction for this outrage!"

"You must be mistaken," said the officer.

"No, I hain't!"

"But I guess you are, and we will go."

"Your name and the number of your badge, please?" asked the woman, and when they were given she wrote them down and bowed the officer out. The husband went, too, but vigorously contended that no mistake had been made. Two hours later he returned to the house to make another effort, but the wife had disappeared, leaving behind her a note which read:

"To the police.—Please use the old man gently. He is very soft on top of the head. Yours truly—Pete and I."—Detroit Free Press.

St. Patrick's Sons Paraded and Little Mona Knew the Reason Why.

Mona had always lived in a country town, and, in her mind, parades and processions are always associated with funerals.

Last St. Patrick's Day, as she stood at the window a section of the big parade passed by.

"Who are those men, mamma?" she asked.

"They are the Sons of St. Patrick," was the reply.

After a few minutes' reflection the 14-year-old asked:

"Is the old man dead?"

The carrier on the mail route between Viroquo and Prairie du Chien, Wis., made his last run last week and the route has been discontinued. In the early days of Wisconsin Gov. Rusk used to drive a stage on this route.

Mary Robinson, the English versifier, is about to publish a volume of historical essays entitled "The End of the Middle Ages." What is much more important, she is also going to get married.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sykes Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, SEPT. 20, 1888.

On Thursday last there died of yellow fever, in New York, a man who will long be remembered to the scientific world as one of the brightest lights that has ever shone in the firmament of science, in the person of Richard A. Proctor. He was one of the great astronomers of our day, and a brilliant and prolific writer on almost any scientific subject. Among his quarter of a hundred books may be mentioned, "Mysteries of Time and Space," "Our Place Among the Infinities," "Myths and Marvels of Astronomy," "Flowers of the Sky," etc. Professor Proctor was an Englishman, born at Chelsea in 1837, but owned an observatory in Florida, where he contracted yellow fever, which attacked him at New York while on his way to England. By his sudden death, in the zenith of his success, the world has sustained a great loss.

The great exhibition which has now been in progress for over a week in Toronto, has been a marvel of success. Some $624 have been raked in, over and above the amount taken during the same period last year (altogether $27,031.48), and on Monday sixty thousand visitors entered the turnstiles. This is all nice and proper, but we would be much better pleased if about forty out of that sixty thousand would enter our turnstile and pay up for the paper. We place it at a low estimate, as we dont wish anyone to infer that we are inflicted with hoggishness.

The Streetsville Review comes to hand this week enlarged and changed to the popular eight page style. It is immensely improved in appearance, although we cannot say we are in love with its new motto: "Strike! while the iron is hot!" We think it would be more suitable for the blacksmith with whom it originated, and we would have liked to see the Review bearing the good old motto which brother Fawcett gave to the Advance! "Truth before favor;" "Principles, not men," or "Hew to the line," etc. The new motto is more appropriate to a labor paper, or an Anarchist publication. However, we are glad to see the Review so much improved in appearance, and hope the people of Streetsville will appreciate a good thing when they have it.

East Grey Exhibition.

Our exhibition will be held on Monday and Tuesday next, Sept. 24 and 25. That it is going to be a big success is demonstrated beyond a doubt, as entries are coming in thick and fast, and the extra attractions to please the people are of a very interesting order. Below we give the program for the two days:

FIRST DAY.

Directors' Prizes, two silver cups, to be awarded to the best baseball and lacrosse teams. Lacrosse competition open to the county: baseball open to clubs in the east riding of Grey only. Play to commence at 10 o'clock a.m. Articles in the hall will be judged and open for visitors at 4 o'clock p.m. A good day's sport. Come early and see our popular national game.

SECOND DAY.

Judging of cattle, horses, sheep, swine, poultry and all manufactures. Bagpipe competition, bicycle and foot races. Hall open for visitors from 10 o'clock a.m.

Considerable editorial and other matter crowded out this issue.

Fall Fairs.

East Grey	Sept. 24-25
Proton	Oct. 11-12
South Grey	Sept. 25-26
Glenelg	Sept. 27-28
Artemesia	Oct. 2
North Grey	Sept. 25-26

Spring beds from 1.50. Woven wire spring mattresses at $2.50. Everything else at corresponding low prices at Flesherton Furniture Warerooms.

We have hesitated in giving publicity to the communication of Mr. Spirit. It descends too low in the scale of personality, and we will not publish any more of the same quality; but as the writer was justly entitled to one reply to the attack on him of last week, we have felt in duty bound to publish it, at the same time reserving to ourselves the right to omit a few sentences of too splenetic or virulent a nature. We do not desire this style of newspaper controversy. It does not redound to the credit of either party.

Every person we meet is making enquiry as to when the baseball and lacrosse matches are to be played, for the silver cups awarded by the Directors of East Grey Agricultural Society, as a prize to be competed for during the exhibition. Games to commence on Monday, first day of Show, at 10 o'clock a.m. sharp. The question is asked why commence so early in the day? The answer is, so many clubs will compete that they must commence early to get through playing before darkness comes on. Everybody is coming to see this great match. It is all the talk for miles around. It will be a fine contest, no doubt.

Dress Trimmings. Special novelties in these lines at M. Richardson's

An Enterprising Neighbor.

It will be remembered that some time ago Mr. McGowan of Priceville purchased the Edge Mill estate in Durham, and has now in full blast one of the best flouring mills in the Province. All our old settlers know it is a first class water power; but Mr. McGowan has taken advantage of its natural position, giving a power unequaled in this Province, while its facilities for custom or mercantile work is unsurpassed. The machinery has been constructed under the able superintendence of E. P. Cave, which is a guarantee of excellence in itself; while the structure and carpenter arrangements have been under the judicious and skilful workmanship of Mr. J. McLeod, who stands first in the class of skilful architects. The mill-dam has been rebuilt under the same management, and stands unrivalled on the noble Saugeen.

Presentation.

A few friends visited the home of Mr. Joseph Blackburn on Wednesday evening, and presented him with a nicely bound Commentary on the Bible, containing four volumes, and Mrs. Blackburn with a piece of silver. A very pleasant time was spent. The gift was accompanied by the following address:

To Mr. Joseph Blackburn, Superintendent of Chalmer's Presbyterian Church Sabbath School.

DEAR SIR, An eminent poet has said that language has been given us that we may be the better enabled to conceal our feelings. Even if this were so, we would not seek to employ any language but that which would give expression to the heartfelt feelings of respect and esteem which we entertain towards you. Our presence here this evening is for the purpose of giving expression to these feelings; and in doing so it would be quite superfluous on our part, at the same time repugnant to you, were we to dwell upon your many good qualities. We are perfectly well aware that far beyond the limits of our Sabbath School the name of Josep Blackburn is synonymous for that which is just, upright and good. Go where you will, speak to whom you may, the verdict is the same. As teachers associated with you in the work of the Sabbath School, we may be permitted to say that we are well pleased to have you as our superintendant. Your affable nature, the tact which you display, and the deep piety which pervades your utterances at once command attention and respect. Sabbath School teachers often met with much to discourage them, but we are ever reminded by you that it is the work of the Master in which we are engaged, and that He will help us in time of need.

As further evidence of the kindly feelings that exist between us, we ask you to accept of these volumes, not for the intrinsic value attachable thereto, but for the spirit in which they are given. As you peruse these pages in years to come the circumstance of this evening's proceedings will pass before your mental view, recalling to your mind pleasant reminiscences.

Owing to your recent marriage, we have deemed this a doubly fitting occasion to present this testimony.

It is our hearts' desire and prayer to God that you and your amiable bride may be long spared to each other, that He who is the source of all good may shower down upon you his richest blessings, both spiritual and temporal.

A Bad Spirit.

Editor Advance.—The intellectual size of a man may be measured with tolerable exactness by the tone and character of his utterances. In last issue of the Advance Dr. Christoe illustrates the lowness of his character and breeding by using the above heading as a low burlesque upon my family name. I will be charitable enough to suggest that probably it was the vile poisons, under the name of whiskey, which he has been illicitly retailing to the public, and which may have been uppermost in his mind when "A Bad Spirit" suggested itself to his unfertile imagination.

The second paragraph of the effusion is cowardly clap-trap, and were it not that it would implicate a third person, I would expose his subterfuge—the usual retreat of cowardly criminals. The whole paragraph is an absolute lie.

The third paragraph: He does not "sell indiscriminately." There are persons in this vicinity who will sustain me in the assertion that more whiskey bottles are filled in one of our drug stores for "family use" than are filled at Mr. Munshaw's Hotel, and with a degree of "indiscriminate" recklessness as to results, which neither Mr. Munshaw nor his employees would sanction. Indeed, those who are disappointed at Mr. Munshaw's Hotel in bottle filling or otherwise find a ready supply elsewhere in our model christian town. The Dr. allows himself ample scope in his "reasonable evidence" when supplying thirsty souls with the "water of life." I would like to suggest a few of the questions he would propound to an applicant at his bar, but but in view of pending investigations I refrain; yet it would be amusing to know the nature of the medicine dose, and the disease it was supposed to counteract in this lusty patient he supposed "the old man" was getting the whiskey for.

The Licence Law is much too indefinite and vague to be placed in the hands of unprincipled practitioners, as Dr. Christoe has proven himself to be. There was no medical "privilege" or "certificate" required in this instance in obtaining the liquor. It was gotten as an every day occurence, and with the connivance of one who occasionly expounds Holy Writ from the altar of the Tabernacle in this town, and a vehement advocate of Prohibition tyranny for the country at large.

The last papagraph of his whining drawl contains the expression "vengence" as coming from me, which is a libellous untruth. I have long been aware of the immoral double-dealing of this creature on the whiskey business, and did say to a friend "that I would be even with him. and no acquaintance of mine will deem me so absurd as to discharge a whole pack of artillery to annihilate a wizened phantom in mortal shape.

Respectfully yours,
STEPHEN SPIRIT.

Flesherton, Sept. 15, 1888.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The beautiful weather of the last two or three weeks has enabled most of the Farmers to complete harvesting in a satisfactory manner, and although the quantity may not be up to the average, the quality is said to be excellent.

The new store opened out by Mr. J. Carr is making times lively in the mercantile business.

With regret we have to record the death of Donald Cameron, one of the pioneer settlers of this neighborhood. An attack of Inflammation which seemed to baffle medical skill and kind care, caused his death. He died on Wednesday last and his remains were laid at rest in the McIntyre Cemetery on Friday, leaving a large family and many acquaintances to mourn his departure.

Mr. A. Henry, while working about his barn was badly injured by an eve trough falling and striking him on the head. It was thought at first that his injuries were fatal, but he is now in a fair way of recovery.

Quite a large number have gone from here to visit Toronto's great exhibition.

Mr. W. Long, and Mr. D. K. Preston, are away, visiting friends near Kingston.

Mr. H. Fields is having his well drilled and is now over 60 feet deep, while a well dug on the school ground, only a few yards distant, and a little over 20 feet deep, has ten feet of water in it. The school trustees will shortly have to give an account of this ten feet of water.

Inistioge.

Interesting news scarce.

Miss Graham, of Everett, is visiting her brother here, Mr. W. Graham.

Harvesting is a thing of the past for another year here but the recent frosts have done considerable damage to some of the late oats.

Bush fires have been raging around here for some time back, but they have done no serious damage so far.

A few of our enterprising people are down attending the "Great Fair" which is being held in Toronto.

Practice is going on lively here by the S. of T. who intend holding an entertainment here shortly, but we have not learned the date yet, which we will chronicle in our next epistle.

It has been decided to build a large shed in connection with the Methodist Church, together with a lecture room, which we think will be a great benefit to this place when completed, as there are some magnificent orators here who we would like to see express themselves publicly.

Well Mr. Editor, we will have to bring this "Budget" to a close as our pencil is geeting very short.

Visitors to the fair MONDAY and TUESDAY next are invited to call and inspect our magnificent full stock, and premises, when an attractive display of new goods will be found. M. Richardson & Co.

Died.

KESTER—In Flesherton, on Sunday morning, 16th inst., Nelson, son of James Kester, aged 25 years.

It is now supposed that Capt. Vangele was the "white pasha" whose presence was reported in the Bahr-el-Ghazel Province.

A large number of workmen were partially asphyxiated in the Hoosac tunnel on Saturday by coal gas from a locomotive, and many of them had narrow escapes.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 23 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to
NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FARM for SALE

Being part of Lot No. 10 Con. 5, Euphrasia, containing fifty acres. The above property is situated about one-and-a-half miles from the village of Kimberley, all under cultivation and magnificent land.

Apply to
A. ALDOUS,
Kimberley P. O.

STRAYED or STOLEN.

Lost from the premises of John Sherwood, Lot 177, back line east, Artemesia, about Sept 6, 3 milch cows, one light red and two dark red, the darkest having left horn off with star in face and wears a bell. The light red cow has hind teat blind. Information as to whereabouts thankfully received.

JOHN SHERWOOD.

Piano For Sale.

A beautiful 7 octave upright Dominion Piano nearly new, at a bargain. Apply at Advance office.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 80	to	5 00
Fall Wheat	$0 78	to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78		0 80
Barley	0 50		0 55
Oats	0 30		0 30
Peas	0 50		0 55
Butter	0 15		0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 15		0 15
Potatoes bush	0 40		0 50
Pork	6 50		6 50
Hay per ton	7 00		8 00
Hides	4 50		5 50
Wool	19		23
Sheepskins	0 50		1 00
Geese	0 06		0 06
Turkeys	0 10		0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25		0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50		0 60

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Partnership.

E. F. DIXON, M.D.C.M. — J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer,
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE ACT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,
POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

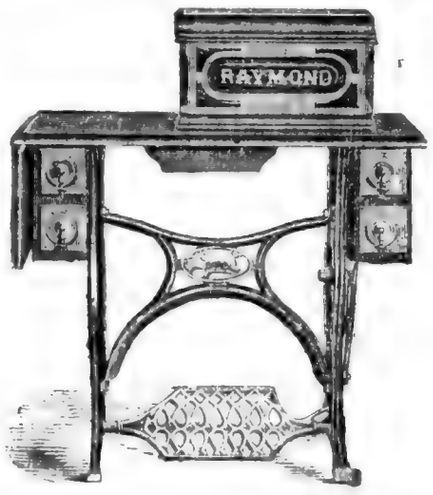
James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Ravelworking, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.
Apply at once to
GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,
Or to
J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Jno. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.



WHEN VISITING

THE EXHIBITION

DON'T FAIL TO

EXAMINE THE EXHIBIT OF

J. E. MOORE,

of the FLESHERTON FURNITURE WAREROOMS, both in the exhibition building and at our store,

Nos. 1 and 2 Durham Street.

Six Beautiful Plush Parlor Suites in Walnut Frames. Bedroom Setts. in a number of Styles, from $11 to $30 per set in Elm, Mahogany and Walnut Woods.

The justly celebrated NEW RAYMOND SEWING MACHINE—The best in the world.

And the well known, tried and tested KARN ORGAN,

Will both be shown. All kinds of repairs and Needles kept in stock. It will pay, as well as interest you, to walk through our Show Rooms and see goods and get prices. Don't forget the place,

FLESHERTON FURNITURE WAREROOMS

Durham Street, Flesherton.

Our Undertak'ng Department

Is complete. A good stock of polished and cloth-covered Coffins and Caskets on hand.

A first-class Hearse in connection.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot of

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

REMOVAL!

F. G. KARSTEDT,

Having purchased the stock of WM. STRAIN, is now in a better position than ever to take the lead in

STOVES,

TIN,

COPPERWARE,

And Metal Work of all kinds.

Eavetroughing a Specialty.

F. G. KARSTEDT,

STRAIN'S BLOCK, FLESHERTON,

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

The Shelburne Free Press is responsible for the following outrage upon the truth: Mr Samuel Lawrence, of Mulmur, with his new machine, threshed 100 bushels of oats in 19 minutes one day last week, on Mr. Wm. Wilkinson's farm in Mulmur.

A sad death occurred on the C. P. R. train going west on Monday evening. A young man, named William McAuly, who was being brought home from Toronto in the last stages of consumption, died on the train as it reached Arthur station. The lifeless body of the young man was met here by those of his friends who were at the station expecting to see him alive.—[Mt. Forest Rep.

Mr. Wm. White, of Sullivan, son of Mr. Donald White, has been troubled for some time past with a peculiar growth of flesh on one of his toes, which finally became so troublesome that on Monday last he found it necessary to have the overgrown member amputated. William will now take a rest for a couple of weeks. [Chatsworth News.

Mr. Francis Lundy, of 3rd line east, Chinguacousy, recently left several bags of wheat standing out in the field over Sunday, intending to sow the grain Monday following. In the meanwhile three horses belonging to Mr. Lunday saw the grain and ate a considerable portion of the same. Two of the horses have since been reported dead, while the third, it is said, is not expected to recover. [Streetsville Review.

Mr. James Baird, of the 8th con. of Holland, near Massie, met with a severe loss by fire last Friday. While Mr. Baird and wife and the older members of the household were at work in the fields, about noon, they suddenly discovered the barn on fire, and before anything could be done to save any portion of the contents the building was enveloped in flames. Mr. Baird's loss is very heavy, in fact the family is left destitute, as the barn, 200 shocks of fall wheat, all his oats and peas, all his farm implements and vehicles were consumed, together with all the winter bedclothes which were stored away in the granary, and he had no insurance. As Mr. Baird is a hard working, sober, pushing man, with a large family, his situation is all the more pitiable, and we have no doubt if a subscription list was opened in his behalf it would be liberally responded to by the public generally. It is not known how the fire originated. [Chatsworth News.

Grey Assizes.

From the O. S. Times.

The Fall Assizes commenced here on Tuesday, 11th inst. Judge Street presided. The docket is unusually small, there being only three civil and one criminal case, and the latter was left over from the Spring Assizes. The small number of civil cases may be accounted for by the Court coming on so close after vacation. The want of criminal cases speakes well for the morality of the county. Judge Street entertained the Bar at supper on Tuesday evening at the Seldon House. The Grand Jury after being sworn in, made a visit to the jail, there being no other business for them

To Assist Nature

In restoring diseased or wasted tissue is all that any medicine can do. In pulmonary affections, such as Colds, Bronchitis, and Consumption, the mucous membrane first becomes inflamed, then accumulations form in the air-cells of the lungs, followed by tubercles, and, finally, destruction of the tissue. It is plain, therefore, that, until the hacking cough is relieved, the bronchial tubes can have no opportunity to heal. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral the inflamed membrane, arrests the wasting process, and leaves no injurious results. This is why it is more highly esteemed than any other pulmonary specific.

Soothes and Heals

L. D. Bixby, of Bartonsville, Vt., writes: "Four years ago I took a severe cold, which was followed by a terrible cough. I was very sick, and confined to my bed about four months. My physician finally said I was in consumption, and that he could not help me. One of my neighbors advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and before I had taken half a bottle was able to go out. By the time I had finished the bottle I was well, and have remained so ever since."

Alonzo P. Daggett, of Smyrna Mills, Me., writes: "Six years ago, I was a traveling salesman, and at that time was suffering with

Lung Trouble.

For months I was unable to rest nights. I could seldom lie down, had frequent choking spells, and was often compelled to seek the open air for relief. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which helped me. Its continued use has entirely cured me, and, I believe, saved my life."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,

FLESHERTON

HEARD'S

Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

McTavish & Legate

MANUFACTURERS OF

WAGGONS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES, DEMOCRATS, &c.

CARRIAGE - PAINTING - PROMPTLY - ATTENDED - TO.

Also TRIMMINGS in great variety. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Special Attention given to Contracted or Tender Feet.

D. McTAVISH, R. P. LEGATE

A Positive Cure. ✢ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the ardent duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a dog's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✢ A Pleasant Cure.

STONE FLOUR!

STONE

FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Desires to inform the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr. Loucks would inform the public that he has never sold roller flour, and never intends to; also, that he has always had stone flour on hand and for sale since last winter, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Advance

TILL JAN. 1, 1889,

For 20 cts

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 6d, 2nd west, Artemesia, two sows in pig—one aged and the other young, black, and black and white spotted. Information thankfully received as to their whereabouts.

W. C. PARKER

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 40 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

CROPS AND THE WEATHER.

Latest About Manitoba's Wheat—A Severe Frost Down East—Potatoes a "Drug" in Western Ontario.

A Montreal despatch says: Mr. Duncan McIntyre, the well-known railway capitalist, returned from a trip to Manitoba to-day. Speaking of the harvest outlook, he said that he had seen the crops of Morden and Gretna marketed. They realized 80 cents per bushel. They were sound, and Mr. McIntyre was satisfied that if the crops in Manitoba and the Territories were marketed before there was any drop in the prices the farmers would realize 50 per cent. more money than last year. There would have to be an allowance made, Mr. McIntyre said, for considerable damage to wheat raised along the Manitoba & Southwestern, as well as along the Monitoba & Northwestern. The main line of the Canadian Pacific from Poplar Point to Moose Jaw was comparatively free from frost. The districts that suffered most were those in the south and north, and the low lying lands and fields with a northern exposure. Strange to say, most of the damage was done on the Southwestern lines, contiguous to Dakota. There was no damage to the barley crop, which had been largely secured. The oat crop on the main line of the Canadian Pacific and the Manitoba & Northwestern was very heavy, and had not suffered from frost.

Private orders received to-day by one of the largest grain firms here, from their agents in Manitoba, state that about 50 per cent. of the entire crop has been gathered. Of this 25 per cent. is stated to be rusted, and 40 per cent frosted, leaving only 35 per cent., or half of the entire crop, in good condition. Of the crop yet uncut 85 per cent. is reported to be still green and unfit for gathering for a week or two. Of course these figures are not official. The price of wheat continues to advance very fast here.

The weather throughout Manitoba and the Northwest was fine yesterday. Special weather bulletins showed that the temperature at 7 a. m. was as follows at these points: 45 degrees above zero at Calgary; 45 above at Medicine Hat; 51 above at Swift Current; 52 above at Mossejaw; 48 above at Broadview and 55 above at Winnipeg.

Mr. T. C. Irving, of Bradstreet's received yesterday afternoon a despatch from their Winnipeg office to the effect that reports regarding the crops are conflicting; that no data is obtainable for true figures. The actual loss, however, will not probably exceed 25 per cent. of the entire wheat yield. The barley and oat crop are practically uninjured.

Now wheat is selling at Oak Lake, Man., at 83c. per bushel.

Potatoes are so plentiful in South Essex, that it is difficult to obtain a market for them at any price.

Mr. P. R. Daly, of Belleville, says the heavy frost the other night did considerable damage in this section. Back north, he says, ice was formed on the water and with another cold blast the fall pasture would be ruined. The corn and buckwheat crop has been badly injured by the frost as well.

A BIG WHEAT SALE.

A Million Bushels Sold all at Once.

A Chicago despatch says: Leopold Bloom and B. F. Hutchison gave the Board of Trade men something akin to an electric shock to-day when Bloom sold 1,000,000 bushels of December wheat to "Old Hutch" at 95½ cents. "Hutch" is short on December, and has been covering himself up the best way he could for some time past. Frank Magin, one of the brokers, was buying this morning, and Bloom sold him a little. The market was strong at 95½ cents, and it looked as if it might go a little higher.

"I ll sell you a million December at 95½ cents," said Bloom.

"I'll take it," said Magin quickly. The transaction involved nearly $1,000,000, and is one of the biggest individual operations on the record of the board.

"How about margins?" some one asked.

"I'll put up $250,000," said Bloom, and he bustled over and spoke to "Hutch" about it.

"That's something that don't interest me," said the old man. "The Secretary's office is the place for that."

But Bloom wasn't satisfied, and he rushed down stairs and presently returned bringing with him stocks and other securities to the amount, so he said, of $300,000. These did not appear to particularly concern Mr. Hutchinson, however, and their owner carried them back to his office. In the afternoon Bloom announced that both he and Hutchison had put up $250,000. This was denied at "Hutch's" bank.

A STRANGE STORY.

Alleged Suicide of a Horse Suffering from Disease.

A Port Jervis (N.Y.) telegram says: A remarkable story of the death of a horse by suicide is told by Peter Lamar, a reputable citizen of this town. He owned a handsome brown mare, notably intelligent, kind and fast, for which he had refused $1,000. The mare was suffering with a painful and fatal disease. One day last week two veterinary surgeons visited her and their treatment apparently augmented her pain. When she was turned loose in the field where she was kept she immediately trotted off to a shallow stream of water, and wading into one of the deepest pools she plunged her head under water and held it there until she sank down, first upon her knees and then upon her side and was drowned. Her owner insists that the sagacious animal knew what she was doing, and that it was a clear case of suicide.

Regained Her Sight.

A Lookport, N. Y., telegram says: Mrs. Jennie Robinson, wife of William Robinson, a waggon maker of Gasport, lost the sight of an eye recently and the sight of the other was affected. She had the best medical aid, but without success. Her blindness dates from October, 1887, and came on suddenly. In the same manner she awoke yesterday morning and found that the sight of both eyes had been restored as it were by a miracle.

At a reception given by Mrs. Marshall Field, of Chicago, the diamonds worn by three ladies present represented a value of $250,000. Mrs. Field herself has one of the finest collections of jewels and precious stones in the West.

WINDSOR BLOOD FLOWS

At the Testing of a New Fire Alarm System for the Burg.

A last (Wednesday) night's Windsor despatch says: Yesterday afternoon bad blood, which has been existing between certain of the town officials, culminated in a row and two fights, commencing before the Town Hall and ending in the office of Waterworks Clerk Reed. The principals were Ald. Davis, his son Fred and Waterworks Engineer Hall. The Fire, Water and Gas Committee of the Council had met for the purpose of testing a new fire alarm system, to witness which the engineer thought he should have been specially invited by the Chairman of the committee, Ald. Davis. He accused Davis of wilful discourtesy toward him, telling him besides, that while he had intentionally omitted inviting him (the engineer) to witness the testing, he (the chairman) had invited his own son to be present without having obtained the permission of his fellow-committeemen. Young Davis hereupon called Hall a liar, and on the latter's retorting began the first fight by striking Hall a terrific fist blow on the left eye. Hall struck back and for a minute or two a vigorous round was fought. Ald. Egan and Drake separated the contestants with the help of Chief Baines. Young Davis went away and his father, the alderman, went into the waterworks office and sat down at the desk, while Engineer Hall was led away to have his damaged face attended to. This last accomplished, Hall returned and going into the waterworks office immediately began fighting with the alderman. Hall was making it quite lively for the former when peace-makers again appeared and put a stop to the second fight. Both opponents were bleeding quite freely. It is expected that Police Court suits will grow out of the fight. The testing of the fire alarm system was postponed till to-morrow afternoon.

TO MARRY A CHINAMAN.

A Beautiful Brooklyn Heiress Falls in Love with a Celestial.

A New York telegram says: Brooklyn bobs up a second time within a year with the betrothal of an accomplished American young lady to a Chinaman. The marriage a year ago was between Ju Sing, a Chinese missionary, and a wealthy middle-aged lady residing on the hill. They appear very happy. The parties to the present alliance are Thomas Bowe and Miss Annie Tuttle, who resides with her sisters and a widowed mother on Gates avenue. Eight years ago Tom came to Brooklyn and opened a laundry. He prospered, saved money rapidly, began to turn his thoughts to religion, devoted himself to the study of the English language, and joined the Chinese mission. Two years ago he became a member of the Moravian Church, Rev. Dr. Edward Walle, pastor. Bowe's influence among his heathen brethren grew, and he became a power in the Church. He gave up his laundry business and became a missionary. At Sunday school Bowe met Miss Tuttle. The young lady took a great interest in the proselyte, and they evinced a fondness for being together. Miss Tuttle is a member of a wealthy Brooklyn family. Her father has been dead some years. The young lady was provided with every luxury and comfort. When Mrs. Tuttle was informed of the daughter's infatuation there was a scene. The mother pleaded and the sisters implored, but all in vain. Annie turned a deaf ear and said she would marry the Chinaman in spite of all. Bowe is studying to enter the ministry and then go to China as a missionary. The nuptials will be celebrated before the departure. Miss Tuttle is of medium stature, petite, with golden brown hair, and 25 years old. She has long been a prominent member of Dr. Chamberlain's Presbyterian Church. Her celestial lover is about 28 years of age.

HE TOOK FRENCH LEAVE.

A Parson Disappoints His Expectant Bride at the Altar.

An Ottawa despatch says: The little village of New Edinboro' is in a high state of excitement to-night over the sudden collapse of a wedding which was to have taken place in St. Bartholomew's Church this evening between Rev. Ware Ami, pastor of the French Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Graburn, widow of the late Captain Graburn, of the Marine Department.

The engagement of the couple, both of whom are well on in middle life, was announced some time ago and was strongly opposed by the friends of the clergyman, who, for a while, resisted the pressure; but it is said that when he was officially informed that his marriage would not only result in his losing his living here but in his being expelled from the Presbyterian Church he gave in and one of this evening's papers announced that he has left on a visit to France.

This, however, does not appear to have been known to the bride and her friends who assembled at the church, and great indignation was expressed when it was found that the prospective groom had changed his mind at the last minute. Legal proceedings are spoken of.

Caught It From His Cattle.

A Lancaster, Pa., despatch says: Henry Stehman, a prominent farmer of Conestoga Township, has died from splenic fever, contracted from his cattle. Dr. M. L. Davis, assisted by a number of physicians, made a post-mortem examination and the condition of the liver and spleen confirmed their previous impression. The best medical authorites have held heretofore that splenic fever can not be conveyed to the human system. Dr. Davis will make a report of the circumstances to the state and national health authorities.

News for the Deaf.

A Kansas City despatch says: At the convention of physicians held in this city the committee appointed from members of the different societies to investigate and report upon the most practical and reliable artificial means for relieving deafness have reported unanimously upon the invisible device of H. A. Wales, of Bridgeport, Conn., known as the sound disc, which concentrates the waves of sound.

In London high heels are going out of fashion, and ladies' boots are becoming broader and lower and heavier. Small waists are no longer considered good style, and the dress reformers are congratulating themselves on the results of their efforts and endeavors.

THEIR SECOND WEDDING.

A Queer Sequel to a Raid by the "Rebs" Twenty-Four Years Ago.

A Philadelphia despatch says: An unusual wedding ceremony was performed here to-day. About it was an echo of the great civil war. The contracting parties were Dr. Frederick Ward Saunders, of York, Pa., and his bride of twenty-four years ago, the mother of his children. This couple had lived together for twenty-four years in the relation of man and wife and reared a family, but the evidence of their having been legally married was destroyed, and so after all these years they were again married to-day. On June 23rd, 1864, Dr. Saunders was married in York, Pa., to Miss Ellen Belle Loy. Just after the ceremony the rebs raided the town and pillaged Dr. Saunders' house, among others. Among the things caraied off was the Doctor's "marriage lines," and among the things desoroyed in York by the "Rebs" were the records of the church in which the doctor was married to Miss Loy. So every evidence of their being legally married was gone. For years they lived on together indifferent to this, but as their children grew up and their property increased, Dr. and Mrs Saunders suddenly came to the conclusion that for the sake of their children and estate, and in view of questions arising regarding to their property, they had better have a perfect record of their marriage. They came to the city and got a license to marry from the licence clerk and were to-day again joined in the bonds of holy wedlock.

A MARTYR MOTHER.

Sad Fate of a Lady while Saving her Children.

Mr. A. E. Wallace, of St. Thomas, received a telegram yesterday announcing the sad death of Mrs. Wallace's sister, Jessie, wife of Mr. J. Grant, of Winnipeg. The deceased, it appears, was the victim of a heroic effort to save her children's lives. She must have upset a lamp, and her clothes igniting, she rushed to her three sleeping children, disregarding her own sufferings. She awoke them and saw them to a place of safety. They tried to extinguish the flames. The youngest child narrowly escaped the mother's fate, for her night clothes were scorched. The parents of deceased reside in Acton. Mrs. Grant is known to quite a number of citizens, having quite recently paid a visit to St. Thomas.

Latest Northwest News.

A Winnipeg despatch says: It is authoritatively announced that the running time on the St. Paul & Manitoba road between this city and St. Paul will be cut down to 17 hours.

Two hundred and twenty-five head of cattle from the Cochrane ranche arrived here yesterday and were shipped on to Montreal to-day.

Gentlemen connected with the Manitoba & N. W. road express ignorance as to the reports circulated here to the effect that the road in question is passing into the hands of the C.P.R. Mr. Biggs, the Winnipeg lawyer who had the drawing up of the railway agreements recently made, received a telegraphic summons to St. Paul to-day from the officials of the Manitoba road. This summons is taken as giving color to the reports now in circulation to the effect that the Manitoba road are purchasing or leasing the Emerson branch of the C.P.R. with the view of competing for the trade of this Province.

Edward Papamakiss, Indian missionary, has arrived with four Indian assistants to attend the meeting of the General Board of Missions of the Methodist Church, to be held on Monday next. Most of the delegates were expected to arrive to-morrow.

The Hudson Bay Railway promoters are continuing negotiations with the Government, and it is said they desire to effect an arrangement for the completion and operation of the 40 miles of road already constructed, and are unwilling to recede from their first proposals and accept a guarantee from the Province upon $2,500,000. They claim to have assurances of a Dominion guarantee upon four or five million.

A Winnipeg despatch says: Mrs. Grant, who was badly burnt last night, died this morning. She sacrificed herself to save her sleeping children whom she awoke and took to a place of safety while her own clothes was burning. The youngest child narrowly escaped sharing her terrible fate.

A temperance convention is to be held at Regina to protest against the concessions recently made and proposed to the liquor traffic.

Hung by Her Heels.

No more dramatic scene can be imagined than that witnessed at Newark last evening, says the Newark Call. A madman held his wife by the heels hanging from a third-storey window, and the woman, head downward and expecting to be dropped to death every instant, clung desperately to an infant in her arms and filled the air with shrieks. Some men entered the house, and by instantaneous understanding two of them crept softly behind the lunatic and seized the woman's feet, while others struck down and secured the man. The woman was then carefully drawn back, still holding her infant, and both lives were saved, but it is feared that the shock has unsettled the poor woman's reason.

Splinters of News.

A young crocodile was captured yesterday at Troy, N. Y.

John Ford, a prominent citizen of Columbus, Ind., while insane from typhoid fever yesterday killed his wife and one child and severely wounded another child.

Texas fever has broken out n three dairy herds in Orange county, in which some twenty cows have died. Strict quarantine has been adopted to prevent the spread of the disease.

A Diabolical Deed.

The Wingham Times tells of one of the most diabolical tricks ever perpetrated in that vicinity. Some miserable wretch in the form of man placed Paris green and salt on the pasture field of Mr. Richard Palmer, of the 2nd concession of Morris, whereby seven fine young head of cattle were destroyed. It is a very heavy loss to Mr. Palmer, who is working a rented farm.

The condition of Mrs. Yeomans, the temperance lecturer, is not so alarming as reported. The lady will recover.

TRUE HEROES.

Men and Women Who Stayed to Face the Pestilence.

The heroes and heroines brought out by the epidemic are numbered by the hundred. Instance after instance is recorded of the unshaking devotion of husbands, wives, sons, daughters and friends in the face of that most terrible of all scourges, yellow fever. While it has been very light here, so far, and the mortality small, yet the same dread is excited by the mere name of "yellow jack." When Robert Grace, the brave watchman of the Subtropical fell ill he went immediately to Dr. Mitchell's office and stated his case. The doctor diagnosed it. "You have yellow fever, said he "and you should go to the Sand Hills at once, but you can go home and bid your wife good-by, if you desire first. The strong man grew faint a moment, then straightened up, and with a long breath said calmly, "No, I am ready to go at once. If I went home I might carry the deadly infection to my dear ones." He went to the hospital, obeyed the doctor's most minute orders, and as a result was discharged two days ago. What an effort it must have cost him to see in his mind's eye the dread disease before him, and to fell its deadly clutch, and then fully realize that perhaps he might never see those dear ones again! Yet he marched bravely away to what, for all he knew, meant death in a most horrible form in a short time.

From the returns to-night is seen that Mrs. Grace is down. Dr. Sollace Mitchell says that she emulated her husband's bravery and self-denial. She was out nursing, and this afternoon she sent for Dr. Mitchell, and he found out that she was attacked by the scourge and so imformed her. With a woman's heroism, she had him send for the ambulance and went to the Sand Hills, sending a message of love and farewell to her husband. She had a 15-year-old daughter at home, and she said that she would not bid her farewell for fear of carrying the infection to her. Other instances are related where wives refused to leave their husband's bedsides though warned of their danger, and where a husband presisted in watching by a sick wife until he was so reduced as to become an easy prey to the never satisfied scourge.

Mrs. Hopkins, who died yesterday, was one of the brave women who stood at their post. She was at the stamp window of the post-office but a day before she was taken ill.

The Herald correspondent paused at the window in his rounds, and seeing her cheerful face asked: "Aren't you going to leave, too, Mrs. Hopkins?"

"No," said she decidedly. "My place is here, and I see no reason why I should desert it."

Miss Kidd, the telephone chief, remained at her post till the scourge seized her. While many others left their posts she, in company with three assistants, remained steadfast. From their position they heard of the thousand and more wild rumors flying about regarding the plague, but like good soldiers, they remained till stricken down, one by one, until now only one remains. The telegraphers, after the first exodus of scared operators, settled down to business and behaved like veterans; likewise the newspaper men, and many others in various branches of trade. Certainly the crop of heroes and heroines is large, and Jacksonville should be proud of them. —Jacksonville Cor. N. Y. Herald.

Landlords in Scotland.

The Highlands and the Hebrides are the home of romance. There is a legend for almost every step you take. But the cruellest of these are not so cruel as, and none have the pathos of, the tales of their own and their fathers' wrongs and wretchedness which the people tell to-day. The old stories of th battlefield, and of clan meeting clan in deadly duel, have given way to stories of the clearing of the land that the laird or the stranger might have his shooting or fishing as well as his crops. At first people could not understand it. The evicted went to the laird, as they would have gone of old, and asked for a new home. And what was his answer? "I am not the father of your family." And then, when frightened women ran and hid themselves at his coming, he broke the kettles they left by the well, or tore into shreds the clothes bleaching on the heather. And, as the people themselves have it, "in these and similar ways he succeeded too well in clearing the island of its once numerous inhabitants, scattering them over the face of the globe." There must have been cruelty indeed before the Western-Islander, who once loved his chief better than his own life, could tell such tales as these, even in his hunger and despair. I know it is pleasanter to read of bloodshed in the past than starvation in the present. A lately published book on Ireland has been welcomed by critics, and I suppose by readers, because in it is no mention of evictions and crowbar brigades and horrors of which newspapers make good capital. I have never been to Ireland, and it may be you can travel there and forget the people. But in the Hebrides the human silence and the ruined homes and the almost unbroken moorland would let us, as foreigners, think of nothing else. —Mrs. Elizabeth Pennell, in Harper's Magazine for September.

A Queer Old Man.

There is living in Deep River, Ct., a devout person whose custom is to open his wife's grave in the village (Fountain Hill) cemetery, whenever one of the pets which she had during her lifetime dies, and to deposit its body by her side. Twice the ground has been opened, in the first instance to lay in the grave the remains of a pet mockingbird that died soon after the interment of its mistress, and a second time for the deposit of the household cat, which died recently of old age.

One on the Bartender.

I knew a man who for cunning could not be beaten. He liked his toddy. So in order to get his liquor free gratis, he takes two bottles just alike and fills one with water, and leaves the other empty. He gets the empty bottle filled with gin, and puts it in the same pocket with the water, and tells the bartender to "hang it up." The bartender says "No trust." "All right, boss," returns the man, and hands the bartender the bottle of water and walks out, both being quite contented. And the bartender puts back the water into his decanter of gin.

OLD MAIDS.

Women of Independence—The Salt of the Earth.

A lovely woman, a faithful daughter and kind sister, respected and beloved, committed suicide one day last week, because her sister aged 20, was about to be married, while she, at the age of 30 had not the courage to face the world as an "old maid." Every day, with a man's courage and a woman's patience, says an exchange, she had taken up the petty burdens and cares of life that it might be easier to those she loved. And yet in return she was lightly, thoughtlessly spoken of as an old maid. Yet the old maids of the world are like the salt which giveth savor. Women of honorable independence, winning their way in life where many "lords of creation" miserably fail, the grand dependence of parents and brothers and sisters. They lighten for others the burdenes of a married life which they do choose to carry for themselves. The title of "old maid" ought to be considered a badge of nobility instead of a title of failure in life.—Dunsville Advertiser

Ontario High Court of Justice.

AUTUMN ASSIZES—1888.

The Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery, and of Assize and Nisi Prius in and for the several counties of the Province of Ontario, will be held as follows:

The Hon. Chief Justice Galt

Toronto—Civil Court—Tuesday 11th September. Criminal Court—Monday, 8th October.
Simcoe—Monday, 22nd October.
Orangeville—Tuesday, 30th October.
Milton—Monday, 5th November.
Brampton—Monday, 12th November.

The Hon. Mr. Justice MacMahon.

Welland—Monday, 17th September.
Cayuga—Monday, 24th September.
Hamilton—Monday, 1st October.
St. Catharines—Monday, 15th October.
Stratford—Monday, 22nd October.
Berlin—Monday, 29th October.
Guelph—Monday, 5th November.
Brantford—Monday, 12th November.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Rose.

Whitby—Monday, 17th September.
Belleville—Monday, 24th September.
Kingston—Monday, 8th October.
Brockville—Monday, 15th October.
Cornwall—Monday, 22nd October.
Picton—Monday, 29th October.
Napanee—Thursday, 1st November.
Cobourg—Monday, 5th November.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Street.

Owen Sound—Tuesday, 11th September.
Barrie—Thursday, 20th September.
Lindsay—Monday, 8th October.
Peterboro'—Thursday, 11th October.
Perth—Monday, 15th October.
L'Orignal—Friday, 19th October.
Pembroke—Tuesday, 23rd October.
Ottawa—Tuesday, 30th October.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Falconbridge.

London—Monday, 10th September.
Chatham—Thursday, 20th September.
St. Thomas—Monday, 1st October.
Sandwich—Monday, 8th October.
Sarnia—Thursday, 11th October.
Goderich—Tuesday, 16th October.
Walkerton—Tuesday, 23rd October.
Woodstock—Monday, 29th October.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

The Hon. the Chancellor.

Toronto—Thursday, 1st November.
Woodstock—Tuesday, 18th September.
Stratford—Monday, 24th September.
Barrie—Tuesday, 23rd October.
Whitby—Monday, 29th October.
Lindsay—Monday, 26th November.
Peterboro'—Friday, 30th November.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Proudfoot.

Brantford—Monday, 17th September.
Guelph—Thursday, 27th September.
Owen Sound—Thursday, 18th October.
Hamilton—Monday, 12th November.
Simcoe—Tuesday, 20th November.
St. Catharines—Monday, 26th November.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Ferguson.

Walkerton—Monday, 1st October.
London—Monday, 8th October.
Chatham—Thursday, 18th October.
Sandwich—Thursday, 25th October.
Sarnia—Monday, 29th October.
St. Thomas—Monday, 3rd December.
Goderich—Monday, 10th December.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Robertson.

Ottawa—Monday, 1st October.
Cobourg—Monday, 15th October.
Belleville—Monday, 29th October.
Kingston—Monday, 5th November.
Brockville—Thursday, 8th November.
Cornwall—Tuesday, 20th November.

Fall Fairs in Canada.

Name of Fair.	Place where held.	Date.
Great Central	Hamilton	Sept. 24 to 28
Industrial	Toronto	Sept. 10 to 22
Provincial	Kingston	Sept. 10 to 15
Southern	Brantford	Sept. 11 to 13
Central	Guelph	Sept. 12 to 14
Barton Township	Race course	Sept. 12, 13
Huntingdon	Huntingdon	Sept. 13, 14
Norfolk Union	Simcoe	Sept. 16, 17
Southern Co's	St. Thomas	Sept. 17 to 20
N. and W. Oxford	Ingersoll	Sept. 18, 19
Western	London	Sept. 20 to 29
St. Catharines	St. Catharines	Sept. 24 to 26
Central	Ottawa	Sept. 28, 29
Northwestern	Wingham	Sept. 25, 26
Northern	Collingwood	Sept. 25 to 27
Dufferin	Orangeville	Sept. 26, 27
W. Wellington	Harriston	Sept. 27, 28
Esquesing	Georgetown	Sept. 27, 28
Welland	We land	Sept. 28, 29
Rainham	Rainham	Sept. 28
St. Ann's	St. Ann's	Sept. 29
Saltfleet	Stoney Creek	Oct. 1, 2
Palmerston	Palmerston	Oct. 1, 2
Dunnville	Dunnville	Oct. 1, 2
Barrie	Barrie	Oct. 1 to 4
Brampton	Brampton	Oct. 3 to 4
Central	Port Hope	Oct. 2, 3
Central	Lindsay	Oct. 2, 3
N. Brant	Paris	Oct. 2, 3
Cayuga	Cayuga	Oct. 2, 3
Peninsular	Chatham	Oct. 2 to
Townsend	Waterford	Oct. 2, 3
Northern	Walkerton	Oct. 2 to 5
N. Oxford	Woodstock	Oct. 3, 4
Smithville	Smithville	Oct. 3, 4
S. Grimsby	Smithville	Oct. 3 to 5
C. Wellington	Elora	Oct. 4, 5
Puslinch	Aberfoyle	Oct. 4
S. Waterloo	Ayr	Oct. 4, 5
S. Norwich	Otterville	Oct. 5, 6
Wellandport	Wellandport	Oct. 5, 6
Niagara	Niagara	Oct. 5
W. Flamboro'	Dundas	Oct. 5
Nassagaweya	Brockville	Oct. 5
Jarvis	Jarvis	Oct. 9, 10
Acton	Acton	Oct. 9, 10
Rockton	Rockton	Oct. 10
Abingdon	Abingdon	Oct. 11, 12
Halton	Milton	Oct. 11, 12
Erin	Erin	Oct. 17, 18

Missed Her Chance.

"Dear! dear!" he said as he laid down his paper and looked around the car, "but a hundred million dollars is too much for any one man to have."

"Who's got it?" asked the man on the right.

"Jay Gould."

Then for a moment everybody was silent. An old woman with a bundle on the opposite seat began to move about uneasily, something like a blush came to her cheeks, and she finally leaned forward and hoarsely whispered:

"And he isn't a widower, is he?"

Everybody laughed, and she got huffy and left the car at the next crossing. Luck always runs against some people.

Similibus, Etc.

Travis—Hello, DeSmith! You're looking better than I expected. I understood that you were completely crushed by that love affair. How did you recover?

DeSmith—Fell in love with another girl

HOW YOUR FALL HAT WILL LOOK.

A Return to Styles of Five Years Ago—Women's Hats.

It is a remarkable fact that this fall there is a recurrence to the shapes in vogue five or six years ago. The English makes are running to small hats with taper crowns. They are either cedar, black, tan or seal brown in color.

The most fashionable of the English black hats seem little at a first glance. They are a trifle fuller in the crown than those worn a year ago, but the curl of the brim, so dear to the hearts of the ultra-fashionable, remains the same. The domestic hats have a full round crown, with a heavy curl to the rim, and they are built in three different heights. As regards colors they are similar to the London shades, with this addition—a fine burr color.

The silk hat is a dashing affair, rich in every line. The bell is slight and delicate with a heavy curl. The brims are in all sorts of widths, suiting the tastes of the young or old.

A coach hat, just introduced in this country, is heavily glazed, either in white or black. A procession of coachmen wearing them would be an interesting spectacle.

The ladies will be delighted to learn that their wants have not been overlooked. Riding hats, expressly constructed for them, have a slight taper with a curling brim in perfect harmony with the upper part of the tile. The design is very attractive and is sure to meet with instant favor. Their needs in travelling headwear have also been well considered, and the result is a shape known as the "Faust." The colors are many, but the most fashionable will be the check, the red and the black.

The season for straws is well nigh at an end. To meet the demands of those who want something elegant but in direct contrast to the stiff derby, hatters have put on the market a class of soft goods which are sure to prove very popular. They are of cloth, in checks and plain goods. The crowns are round and square, to suit the varied tastes of the many people who travel on steamboats and railway trains.

The "Tyrolian" is a soft hat, and the sale of them thus far has been very large. They are something on the Alpine order.—New York Evening Sun.

A MOTHER'S VALUE

And the Remorse that is Sure to Come to a Wayward Son.

"If I could only see my mother!" Again and again was the yearning cry repeated. "If I could only see my mother!" The vessel rocked, and the waters, chased by a fresh wind, played musically against the side of the ship. The sailor, a second mate, quite youthful, lay in his narrow bed, his eyes glazing, his limbs stiffening, breath failing. It was not pleasant to die thus, in this shaking, plunging ship; but he did not seem to mind bodily discomfort. His eyes were far away, and ever and anon broke forth that grieving cry, "If I could only see my mother!" An old sailor sat by, a bible in his hand, from which he was reading. He bent above the young man and asked him why he was anxious to see his mother, whom he had wilfully left. "Oh! that's the reason," he cried in anguish. "I've nearly broken her heart, and I can't die in peace. She was a good mother! She bore everything from her wild boy; and once she said to me, 'My son, when you come to die you will remember this.' Oh, if I could only see my mother!" He died with the yearning upon his lips, as many a one has died who slighted the mother who loved him. Boys, be good to your mother.

A Curious Discovery.

As already announced, a remarkable archæological discovery has just been made in German Altenburg, a small town between Vienna and Pressburg, on the Danube. From further details now published it appears that Prof. Hauser, under whose direction the Carnuntum excavations are carried on, ever on the alert, had for a month past observed the color of an extensive corn field, which varied in every part. He found an elevated post of observation, and, after a week's close attention, declared it to be his opinion that the corn field was growing over the site of an ancient amphitheatre. His drawings showed that the oblong centre piece was somewhat concave, and the corn was quite ripe in that part, because there was much soil between the surface and the bottom of the theatre. Elliptical lines of green, growing paler the higher they rose, showed the seats, and lines forming a radius from the centre showed the walls supporting the elliptical rows of seats. The professor waited impatiently for the corn to ripen, and the moment it was out the excavations began. They have shown that the almost incredible suggestion was perfectly correct. Six inches below the soil the top of the outer wall was found, and from there the soil gradually grew thicker until the bottom of the arena was reached, the pavement of which is in perfect condition. From the theatre a paved road leads to the Camp of Carnuntum. As soon as the theatre has been entirely freed of the soil covering it, all the measurements will be taken, and it will be ascertained what arena it is.—London Times.

An Obliging Lord.

The late Lord Alfred Paget was the oldest member of the Queen's household, having held a small position as Marshal for something like 50 years. He was a rollicking old chap of the old school. He lived plainly, had a strong sporting turn, and was familiar with all the men about town in London. He fairly haunted the theatres. He was on the free list at most of them and had the privileges of the stage door. His greatest happiness was to aid in coaching a new actress or provide a late supper for a jaded ballet girl.

A Modern Bathing Suit.

"Can't you spare me little money papa?"

"How much, dear?"

"Well, I want to buy enough material to make one of the new-fashioned bathing suits."

"How much is the stuff a yard?"

"Three dollars."

"All right, my dear. Get what you want. Here is half a dollar."—Richfield News.

FAT WOMEN, ATTEND.

What You Should Wear and What is to be Avoided.

Fleshy women are dressmakers' terrors, writes a female correspondent of the Denver Republican. Nearly all fashions are devised with slender women in view, and when applied to fat women, without due discrimination, make of them nightmares. One can drape a thin woman to give her the curves and dimpled lines of a developed form. But rare is the woman who can overcome the ponderosity of flesh. With broad-busked corsets and 16-boned waists, the same bodice which the slender woman wears, strained till it fits like eelskin, is buttoned over the fat woman and makes her look fatter than she is. Not one of 200 pounds in four dozen knows how to bring out the dignity which is possible to such a figure. A fat woman in the usual plain, long habit bodice is always less well clothed than she ought to be; sometimes, if she draws her corset lacings too tight, an object which in plain English is disgusting. Half the troubles of flesh arise from treating it in a way diametrically opposite to the right one. The fleshy woman, when she observes that her waist measure is growing larger, sets her foot down commonly as resolutely as she may against such an undesirable progression. She buys the stiffest stays, warranted "unbreakable," in the market, and when the modiste fits her, two attendants lay their hands on the rebellous flesh, and push and squeeze it together, until it makes great protuberances above and below, and a groaning, squeaking, machine-confined area between. Now the fat woman makes a mistake when she discloses to a non-sympathetic world just how stout she has become. That is a little matter which is her own secret, and one which she should guard sedulously. The woman of perfect form is the only one who can afford, for æsthetic reasons, to display her figure in the close fitting polonaise or basque. The woman whose figure is too full should treat it exactly as does she whose slenderness is too fragile—disguise it with long, rather loose, lines. To come to details, the stout woman should shun the short waist or Josephine bodice as she would the plague. She should never yield to the seductions of a belt or girdle. She should never wear a basque or any garment which makes a break at the waist all the way round. The gown which gives her repose, dignity and almost grace is the gown which gives you her figure at one sweep, adding to her apparent height and taking the eye off her girth, making the proportions better. She wants the longest lines she can get and the most graceful curves. She should avoid anything which breaks up her attire into parts, leading the eye to study her in detail. She wants to be an imposing whole with a presence as attractive in its way as that of the smaller woman. The tea-gown is the first gown in years which showed her her opportunity. The tea-gown itself does not suit her, but it is very generally built on the model of a loose-fronted princess robe, and some modification of the princess gown is the stout woman's fit attire.

CORSET PRESSURE.

Ten Scientific Conclusions as to the Effect of Tight Stays.

Conclusions with respect to a few of the most palpable changes brought about by corset pressure have been tabulated by the American Analyst as follows;

1. The maximum pressure at any one point was 1.625 pounds to the square inch. This was during inspiration. The maximum in quiet breathing was over the sixth and seventh cartilages, and was 0.625 pound.

2. The estimated total pressure of the corset varies between thirty and eighty pounds—in a loose corset about thirty-five pounds, and in a tight corset sixty-five pounds.

3. Within half a minute after hooking the corset such an adjustment occurs that a distinct fall in pressure results.

4. The circumference of the waist is no criterion of tightness. The difference between the waist and measure with and without corsets gives no direct clew either to the number of pounds pressure or to the diminution in vital capacity. Relaxation and habit seem to effect these factors largely.

5. The capacity for expansion of the chest was found to be restricted one-fifth when the corset was on.

6. The thoracic character of the breathing in women is largely due to corset wearing.

7. The thoracic cavity is less affected by the corset than the abdominal.

8. The abdominal wall is thined and weakened by the pressure of the stays.

9. The liver suffers more direct pressure and is more frequently displaced than any other organ.

10. The pelvic floor is bulged downward by tight lacing one-third of an inch.

All About Fish.

The first shipment of salmon from the Skeena river was sent forward over the C. P.R. the other day. It comprised 340,000 cans and required a special train of fifteen cars.

A Boston fish dealer wrote to the Mayor of Chicago that he had shipped several barrels of fish to Chicago which had not reached their destination. "I wish," said he, "you would run around the depots and see if you can find the fish anywhere. If you do, write me and I will send the postage."

In the fishing grounds of New Brunswick the catch of sardines has been very large, so large in fact, that the supply is greater than the demand and the fish are spoiling. The price offered is from $2 to $3 per hogshead.

She will Have an Inning.

Brown (taking Robinson home)—What d'ye s'pose your (hic) wife'll say t'morrow morning, Robinson?

Robinson—She'll (hic) shay new hat an' silk dressh, Browny, ole boy, an' b'gosh she won't shay'em (hic) mor'n once, either

His Lordship Turns the Crank.

A young man, shabby and dirty, plays a street organ in London, with a big card on his breast bearing these words: "Utterly destitute! I am Viscount Hinton, the eldest son of Earl Poulett. Vide 'Burke's Peerage.'" His Lordship was a few years ago the clown and contortionist of the Surrey Theatre.

SOME RICH YOUNG MEN.

Gilded Youths Who Have Big Incomes and Spend Them.

"Billy" Wall, elder brother of Berry, has an income of $25,000 and lives at the Rossmore Hotel, writes a New York correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune. Much of his time is passed in the hotel cafe, and his friends say that never a day passes when the barkeeper does not take $20 from him. He is credited with losing $10,000 every season on the race track. One of his weaknesses is theatre parties. He does not go beyond his income, but his pockets are uniformally empty when the 1st of January comes around.

There is a crank tennis player and promising amateur actor named Valentine G. Hall. He has just graduated from Columbia College and is going to be a lawyer. While an undergraduate he spent $5,000 a year in outdoor sports.

Shirley Onderdonk, the millionaire contractor's son, is allowed $8,000 a year. He is an Adonis of 21 and a great ladies' man, like many of his fellow-students at Yale. He is also fond of driving his tandem team. He has a $1,200 valet who used to be with an English Earl, now bankrupt. He once laughingly said it cost him $2,000 a year to be one of the boys, $1,500 for society, $2,000 for horses, $1,300 for clothes and $1,200 for valet.

A youth of 20, noted for his extreme paleness among the habitues of the Hoffman House cafe, is Frank Abbott, jun. His father allows him $6,000 a year. He dresses with excellent taste and is blessed with a figure that can be fitted to set off the goods. He is gentlemanly in all his tastes—one of your quiet men about town, spending freely, but without ostentation, and affecting in the same way the ultra fashionable summer resorts.

J. Carmon Harriott, who tried for some years to rival Berry Wall as a dude, has an allowance of $18,000. He is a first-nighter at the theatre and goes to all the balls. He reckons on an expense of $75 when he takes a lady to a ball. Most liberally does he order wine at Delmonico's. Twice a year he goes abroad to look up the styles. His clothes are made at Poole's. He has a regulation English valet of exalted antecedents. In the summer he goes to Saratoga, and every pleasant afternoon drives a tandem team attached to an English dog-cart, with some stylish girl beside him and his flunky behind.

Howell Osborne, who has such a positive penchant for running away with actresses, has a large income, and is always heels over head in debt. He belongs emphatically to the spendthrift order. There are judgments for $8,019, $11,878 and $43,673 recorded against him. He was heard of at Monaco early this year, and was understood to have a yacht there. That was after the conclusion of his little affair with Fay Templeton. Fay probably stuck to him as long as his money held out.

"Fool Who Doesn't Follify."

One of the soprano songs of Gilbert and Sullivan's new comic opera, "The Tower of London," is addressed to the guardians of the castle during a particularly gloomy period of the opera, and runs as follows:

I.

Give us an experiment
In the art of merriment;
Into it we throw
Cock that doesn't crow.
Banish your timidity
And, with all rapidity,
Give us quip and quiddity,
Willy—nilly, O.

II.

River none can modify—
Into it we throw
Fool who doesn't folify,
Cock that doesn't crow.
Banish your timidity
And, with all rapidity,
Give us quip and quiddity
Willy—nilly, O.

Handsome Robert Downing, the tragedian, is soon to be married to a Miss Griffith, one of Maryland's handsomest belles and a favorite in Washington society. Her father is one of the wealthiest planters in the south.

Fanny Davenport took a steamship at San Francisco, Thursday, to make the trip hither by way of Panama. Miss Davenport's tour will open at Toronto, Oct. 22nd.

Williard Spenser will have a novelty ahead of "The Little Tycoon," who will accompany Advance Agent Rosenthal on his travels. It is in the shape of a Japanese mascot. Spenser has arranged for the importation of a Japanese 12-year-old boy.

Fresh from Vanity Fair.

The coiffure which is designed to go with the low crowned hats is low in the neck and is known as the catogan braid.

Feather ribbon is an entirely new fabric used for a trimming on fall hats. It is used as a band about the crown and has a pretty effect.

The sateen Henrietta is simply in all silk fabric which is woven like the silk wrap fabric which has always borne the name of Henrietta.

Ottoman ribbons are in shot effects for millinery and are very pretty. Velvet ribbons are also to be worn and those which embody color will be most stylish.

Low crowns are stylish on walking hats for fall wear, the lower the more stylish it is. Felt will be worn quite as generally as straw for early as well as late autumn.

Little children who wear the Directoire model gowns have the hair braided in two side braids and brought up around the head where they are fastened on top by bows of narrow ribbon.

The fall importations of felt hats show a variety of pretty colors such as red, suede, tan and dark gray known as oxide and a light gray known as Colombe. This latter is a soft dove color.

The very becoming aureole hats are in dark straws for fall wear, and are worn back from the face, the front being faced with velvet or shirred lace. A rouching of lace set next the hair makes such a hat much more becoming. The crown being very low, the outside trimming is set upon that.

They Won't Marry to Get a Home.

While driving on the road from Skowhegan to Hartland, with my son, we counted nine ladies driving two-horse mowers and seventeen young ladies driving one-horse rakes.—Pittsfield Advertiser.

In The White Mountains.

Miss Begonia—I love music. Do you play on any instrument, Mr. Smith?

Smith (who acted as college waiter last summer, absent-mindedly)—Only the gong.

A FAMOUS NURSERY RHYME.

How "Mary Had a Little Lamb" Came to be Written.

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.

Millions of children have been amused and entertained with the story of Mary and her lamb. But as the children grew older the reality which the pretty story seemed to them in earlier days gradually faded until they began to think that the picture was but the imagining of a youthful poetic mind, and Mary and her little pet were declared but a myth. But the whole story is a true one, and Mary is living to-day at No. 29 Central street, Somerville, Mass. She is Mrs. Mary E. Tyler, and she is 82 years old. The scene of the lamb episode is in the town of Sterling, a quiet place not far from Worcester. Mary's childhood home is still standing. About a third of a mile in a northerly direction was the little district schoolhouse, where the children from all the country round came, and of them all Mary was a favorite. The children all liked her for the same reason that the cows, horses and sheep on her father's farm did, simply because she had those natural qualities that drew others to her. The old school-house has long been numbered with the past, but right across from the triangular spot where the lamb went to school stands a school-house almost an exact counterpart of the old one. Of all those who attended school the day the lamb made its first and last appearance, not one, so far as is known, is living, with the exception of Mary. The lamb was born one cold March night and was almost dead when Mary found it and nursed it back to life. It grew very fond of her and "followed her to school one day," and crept under the seat. Mary was very much mortified when the lamb pattered out into the middle of the room, "and so the teacher turned it out." But it "waited patiently about till Mary did appear," after school hours. The little pet was gored to death that winter by a cow in the barn. The poem was written by John Roulstone, who visited the school the afternoon the lamb was there, and thought the episode a pretty one for some verses. There were but three stanzas in his poem—the last two were added by a Mrs. Townsend.

Nasal Catarrh.

is a dangerous disease. From its tendency to extend to the throat, bronchial tubes, and finally to involve the lungs in consumptive disease, it should be promptly cured, that these grave dangers may be averted. So confident are the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy of their ability to cope successfully with this very prevalent disease, that they have for years offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh, no matter how bad or of how many years standing, which they cannot cure. Remedy only 50 cents, by druggists.

Adapted From Dr. Johnson.

Tom Stott (an uncouth sort of a man, rushes into a gentleman's house)—Here, Mr. Button, is a parcel for ye. (Then rushes out again with equal haste.)

Mr. Button—Now, Tom, that's not the way to bring a parcel to a gentleman's house. Give me the parcel and I will show you how. I will be you and you shall be me.

Mr. B. (coming into the house very quietly with parcel)—Good morning, Mr. Button. This is a parcel from Mr. Bates. Good morning, sir.

Tom S.—'Morning, Tom, here's a dollar for you.

Tell the good news to the suffering—
At last is a remedy found,
Which might have saved, had they known it,
Many who're under the ground.
Tell of the "Favorite Prescription,"
Bid hopeless women be glad—
Bear the good news to poor creatures,
Heart-sick, discouraged and sad.

"Female diseases," so terrible in their effects, and so prevalent among all classes, can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

How to Do It.

Irate matron—Never, sir; never will you marry my daughter with my consent. I hate the very sight of you, sir, and I wish I could find some way to make you miserable.

Obnoxious suitor—Well, then, why don't you become my mother-in-law?

"The tetter-board of life goes up
The tetter-board of life goes down."

Up and down, up and down—one day a millionaire, next day "dead broke"—one day buoyant in spirits, next day gloomy as a fog—one day in seeming perfect health, next day "laid out" with a bilious attack or your stomach "on a strike." This is the way the world wags now-a-days. If you are bilious, melancholic, dizzy headed, dyspeptic, want appetite or have a torpid action of liver, kidneys or bowels, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—purely vegetable, perfectly harmless; one a dose.

Overmatched.

Visitor—You married a widower, did you not, Mrs. Hendricks? Mrs. Hendricks—Yes, I am John's second wife. Visitor—In any little domestic quarrels which occur, you know, in the best of families, does he ever refer to his first wife? Mrs. Hendricks—Never; he doesn't dare to; he's my third husband, and I can more than meet him.

Nerviline, What is it?

Polson's Nerviline is a combination of the most potent pain relieving substances known to medical science. The constant progress made in this department of science points upward and onward. Nerviline is the latest development in this movement, and embodies the latest discoveries. For neuralgia, cramps, pains in the head—exteranl internal, and local—Nerviline has no equal. Expend 10 cents in the purchase of a sample bottle of Nerviline and be convinced of its marvellous power over pain. Sold by druggists. Large bottles 25 cents, at all druggists.

An English writer declares that the custom of pairing off guests at dinner arose in the middle ages, when there was only a single plate and drinking cup for each couple, and that while the man cut up the meat the woman put the pieces in his mouth, and they both drank from the same cup.

ADELAIDE NEILSON'S GRAVE.

Where the Beautiful Actor Sleeps in Brompton Cemetery, England.

It was my fortune to know Adelaide Neilson intimately, and to possess her friendship, and this day I laid a handful of red roses upon her grave. Some other friend had preceded me in this pious pilgrimage, for a few flowers, in a glass of water, were already placed at the foot of the great cross of rough marble that marks her grave. It has been a dull and bleak day. The sky was leaden-colored, save toward the west, where were visible a few threads of white fleece, streaming across a narrow field of blue. The sun was hidden, and the wind that crossed the thick, green foliage of the trees had in it the distinct chill of autumn. But the grass was dense and bright and all around the grave there were flowers in rich growth and lovely bloom. The marble block upon which Neilson's cross reposes is completely covered with ivy. In front of the cross, at the right and the left, are two clumps of great tiger lilies, now blooming and fragrant, while all around the inclosure runs a little hedge of geranium and fuschia, both in abundant blossom and commingled with the blue stars of the lowly anemone. A tiny shrub of cedar is growing on the centre of the grave, within a sheaf of many-colored leaves. The turf has been freshly raked. Everything is orderly and neat; and, indeed, the care that is taken of this place seems almost ostentatious. The same funeral bell was tolling that tolled here eight years ago, when the actress was buried, and upwards of a hundred persons paused by the grave during the first five minutes of my stay beside it—many of them pausing to read the inscription, "Gifted and beautiful—resting."

Three years ago to-night I visited Neilson's grave under vastly different circumstances—obtaining admission to the ground at a late hour, after the gates had been closed. The moon was shining then, and the white stones glimmering among the dusky trees seemed in some strange way sentient and watchful, keeping their vigil with the dead. It was a cold and still night—silent save when the leaves stirred by an occasional gust of wind, or when the ground was jarred by the passage of a train on the neighboring district railway. What a contrast with the life and light and color and joy, the eager sympathetic multitude, the brilliant scenes of action and enjoyment that used to surround that peerless woman only a few short years ago! To-day, of all the gazers that looked upon the cross scarcely one seemed ever to have herd her name. Truly "man walketh in a vain shadow and disquieteth himself in vain." The patient little household drudge, the toiler in the factory, the nursery-maid, the vagrant gypsy girl, poring over her mother's play-books or speaking sonorous verses to her audience of dolls, becomes, in a few brief years, a princess in the art circles of the British capital, the admired associate of wits and nobles, the idol of the stage on both sides of the Atlantic, the most accomplished actress of her time in the juvenile heroines of Shakspeare; and then, at the summit of her prosperity and renown, before her youth has faded or yet the bubbles have ceased to sparkle in the golden goblet of life, she sinks suddenly into the tomb. And now, eight years later, of all that she was and all that she accomplished, nothing remains but a handful of roses withering on a piece of marble. "So runs the world away."—Willie Winter in the New York Tribune.

Returning from the Honeymoon.

Mrs. Young—Won't you put away your paper now, and talk for a while, Jack?

Mr. Young—Yes, my love. Just wait till we get to the tunnel.

YOU SUFFER

from Biliousness, Constipation, Piles, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Colds, Liver Trouble, Jaundice, Dizziness, Bad Taste in the Mouth, etc.—You need Suffer no longer.

Warner's SAFE Pills

will cure you. They have cured tens of thousands. They possess these points of superiority: sugar coated; purely vegetable, contain no calomel, mercury or mineral of any kind; do not gripe; never sicken; easy to take; mild in operation. And for these reasons are especially the favorites of women. Ask for WARNER'S SAFE PILLS.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, E. H. COOK, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from

PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DON L. 38[illegible]8.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

And still there Are

MORE

BARGAINS

TO BE GOT AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Don't forget to ask for

THAT CASHMERE,

Regular price 35c a yard, now 22 1-2 c a yard. It is a yard and a quarter wide.

Those DRES GOODS

We are selling at 12 1-2c a yard, regular price 20c a yard. Beautiful new goods.

1000 DOZEN BUTTONS !

Selling at 5c a dozen, regular prices from 10c to 50c a doz.

COME SOON

In order to secure Best Bargains.

1000 doz. Eggs Wanted

RIGHT AWAY !

Top price paid in Cash or Trade. The Famous

New Process Electric Soap,

To be Got Only at

J. G. ANDERSON'S

Mammoth Bargain House.

Priceville Items.

By our own Prowler.

The harvest is ended and the summer is nearly gone. The shrill whistle of the steam thresher is heard in all directions.

A great rush to the Industrial Exhibition this week.

There is more interest than usual centred in the Artemesia Agricultural Exhibition, to be held here on Oct. 2. Proton will be represented by 25 or 30 members. Glenelg and Egremont will come in next year. Now, if this society and the village would work together and procure a suitable site and neat buildings, this exhibition would be second to none in Grey.

We have now a mail service which enables us to answer or receive answers to communications from or to Toronto and other places the same day.

About $650 was paid out on the fair ground for cattle on Monday.

Mr. J. Stewart is said to have three ducks which lay half a dozen eggs almost daily.

The verdict of our citizens on the railway discussion is about as follows: The editor may blow his horn, Flesherton may rage, but the station shall not go further from us.

General News.

The Provincial Fair was brought to a successful close on Friday.

The floods are still creating havoc in various parts of Europe.

Eighty-seven persons were drowned by a steamship collision at the Canary Islands.

Forty-four persons were drowned and $2,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by the mexican floods.

Major Barttelot, who was leading an expedition in search of Stanley, has been murdered by some of his men, and the circumstance causes fresh fears for Stanley's safety.

At the Cardwell Conservative convention, held at Mono Mills Friday, Major Evans announced his retirement from the field and Mr. R. S. White, of Montreal, son of the late member, was nominated.

Another dynamiter has been captured in Chicago.

Fifty Germans, suspected of being spies, have been expelled from France.

The freshet in North Carolina has caused damage to the amount of $1,000,000.

Col. Adam Conkle, a veteran of 1812, died at his home near Beamsville on Sunday.

Mr. Taillon, of the Quebec Local Opposition, has been appointed a judge of the Supreme Court.

A gentleman recently informed us that he never found a satisfactory scare-crow until this summer. He made a small wind-mill, fastened a piece of loose tin to each fan, and set it up on a pole in the field. The wind made the concern revolve, the tin jangled, and the crows settled down in a neighbor's field to discuss the new wrinkle.—[Pickering News

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and that, on its way, it makes bone and muscle, brain and nerve, and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it,

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: "For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine

in use. "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

does sell." Prepared by

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FLESHERTON

Implement Agency !

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continned support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,
Reapers,
Mowers,
Rakes,
Waggons,
Buggies,
Sleighs,
Cutters,
Fanning Mills,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,
Grain Drills,
Broad-cut Seeders,
Spring Tooth Harrows,
Iron Harrows,
Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Plows,
Scufflers,
Turnip Drills,
Land Rollers.

FISH. FRUIT !

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT FLESHERTON.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island; the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks; and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works, at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

At The

Central Store,

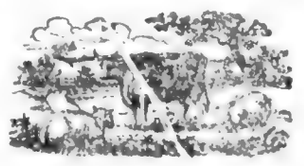
PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.



MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT.

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B [illegible]

LOAN.
Eugenia

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 379. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, SEPT. 27, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

SAVE MONEY!

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's

Noted

Jewelry Store

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Kimberley correspondence too late for this issue.

Dress Trimmings. Special novelties in these lines at M. Richardson's

A full stock of boots and shoes, all sorts and sizes, good and cheap, at W. Clayton's.

Special novelties in black goods, Mantle Cloths and Ulsterings now in at M. Richardson & Co's.

An excursion train left Flesherton station last Thursday morning for Toronto. This was the final excursion to the great exhibition, and about two hundred people took advantage of it.

A meeting of members of the base-ball club is called for Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, in Munshaw's hotel, to transact important business.

On and after Oct. 1, the Flesherton postoffice will be open from 8 a. m. till 7.30 p.m., R. J. SPROULE, postmaster.

A few prize blankets left at the Flesherton woollen factory. Call and get some of them before it is too late.

W. H. FLESHER.

We show exceptional value in men's and boy's natural wool UNDERWEAR and Cardigan Jackets. M. Richardson & Co.

The East Grey Teachers' Association meets in Flesherton on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 25 and 26, programmes of which have just been issued from this office.

Kimberley played baseball on Saturday last with the Rocklyn club, and came home with flying colors, with the score at 19 to 28 in favor of Kimberley. The return match is to be played next Saturday.

Some improvements have been made on the road to the station. Water-ways have been dug on the hills, rough places covered up and large stones picked off. Still we will never be satisfied until the hills are gone entirely.

One young man, on Thursday morning last, arose rather late for the excursion train, and legged it to the station at a two-forty gait with his coat in his hand. He caught the train, but imagine his disgust when he found that the excursion rates were good for the train which followed an hour after. He felt like stopping the train and putting himself off.

In boots and shoes our stock is now complete.

Call and inspect. If you dont see what you want ask for it. M. Richardson & Co.

Thanks, Many!

The editor was made happy on Tuesday by a gift of the prize potatoes shown by Mr. James Stewart, of the Valley. They are of the White Star variety, and are remarkable for the smoothness of their skin. They are the finest table potato we have seen. Mr. Stewart will please accept our most hearty thanks.

HATS, CAPS, and READY-MADE CLOTHING. Our stock in this branch of business is abreast with our well-sustained record of having the right makes and right prices. Come and see. M. Richardson & Co.

HAY WANTED.—Farmers having good No. 1 hay for sale will hear of a purchaser by applying to Thos. Sturdy, hay presser, 26 Catharine street south, Hamilton. N. B.—I am at present pressing in Dundalk, and will be at Flesherton, if business will warrant removal, for a few months in winter.

Prices $8 to $11 per ton.

When symptons of malaria appear, in any form, take Ayer's Ague Cure. It will prevent a development of the germs of disease, and eradicate them from the system. A cure is warranted in every instance.

The horse which was killed by lightening last week was partly cremated in a bush within the village and nearly lifted the town on Sunday with effluvia. The health inspectors ordered its removal which was done on Monday morning. —[Dundalk Herald. Readers will please observe that the horse was buried "in a bush within the village." The same bush, we presume, where they trap bears and hunt rabbits?

Millinery. Our millinery department in charge of Miss Maud Richardson, is now full and well assorted in all the new and fashionable goods of the season. Hat, Bonnet, and dress trimmings, the novelties of the season. M. Richardson & Co.

The Markdale Standard of last week has the following funny little story. What does it mean, anyway friend Spurr: J. B. Spurr, of the Dundalk Herald, visited Flesherton last week. He remained over night at the hotel, and arose from his dreamy couch about half an hour after the bus had left for the station. When last seen by the denizens of Flesherton he was hoofing it in a whirlwind of dust towards the west. We believe he overtook the train at Proton Station.

Fine Grapes.

We had forwarded to us last week several bunches of grapes, of the Salem variety, grown at kimberley by Mr. J. M. Thurston. We do not hesitate to pronounce them the finest grape ever grown in this section of country. They were fully one third larger than any shown at the East Grey Exhibition, and commanded the admiration of many callers at this office.

Lecture.

Rev. Mr. Wilson gave a very entertaining and instructive lecture on Monday evening, in the Presbyterian Church, on "Scotland's Martyrs," telling in graphic terms of Scotland's struggles and triumphs in the cause of religion. The lecture was free, and was listened to by a large and attentive audience. At the conclusion a vote of thanks, moved by Mr. Watson, seconded by Mr. Neil, was tendered to the lecturer.

Personal.

Will Wright and Stewart Bates have both returned to their professional studies, the former to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, and the latter to Toronto Medical College. They left by Wednesday morning's train.

Dr. Dixon, of Priceville, left on Tuesday to take a course in the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. John A. Wilbur and wife, of Hamilton, have been visiting at J. G. Russels for some days. Mr. Webber is employed in the Hamilton postoffice, and is now taking his vacation.

Killed on the Railway.

We made a business trip to Toronto on thursday of last week. When just this side of West Toronto Junction a conductor, who had boarded the train at Mono Road to assist the regular conductor, was knocked off the train, thereby sustaining injuries from which he died the same evening in Toronto hospital. A long iron bar on the under side of the car had become loosened, and while leaning over to see where the trouble was, the unfortunate man came in contact with a post, smashing his face and injuring him otherwise. The regular conductor was standing at his side when he was knocked off, but made no attempt to stop the train. This seemed to us a piece of heartless inhumanity. Deceased's name was Wm. Mason. He was a married man and resided at Wingham.

Concert.

The entertainment given by the Ladies' Aid of Flesherton Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening was attended by a large audience, and was a success in every sense. Mr. Joseph Blackburn occupied the chair. The program consisted of vocal and instrumental music, with one recitation by Mr. D. W. Thomson. The Parks Brothers gave a couple of duets, accompanied by Mr. Vanzant on the cornet. Mr. J. R Anderson, of Markdale, gave a couple of Scotch songs, and was roundly encored. Miss Lizzie Richardson, Miss A. Armstrong and Miss VanDusen sang solos. Our handsome young bachelor confrere of the Dundalk Herald raised up his voice in a couple of patriotic airs, Miss Damude playing the accompaniment. Mr. Spurr's singing was good, and the musical editor will be welcomed when he returns for a like purpose. The Glee Club rendered two or three pieces, but were not in their usual form. Flesherton brass band was in attendance.

Fooling a Pickpocket.

Mrs. A. S. VanDusen has the proud satisfaction of knowing that she fooled a pickpocket in bad shape during the fair on Tuesday. When going to the grounds she took the precaution to remove all valuables from her pocket-book, as she was given to understand that strangers of questionable quality were in town. While on the grounds she was jostled against by a stranger. She gave him a shove and intimated that it was better for him to keep at a distance. He apologized very gracefully, but not long afterwards he was guilty of the same act, when Mrs. VanDusen, whose suspicions had been aroused, felt in her pocket for her pocket-book and found it gone. She collared the fellow and accused him of being a pick-pocket. This he denied strenuously, but pointing to the ground said: "There is your pocket-book." "Yes," said Mrs. VanDusen, "but there is nothing in it, and that's the reason you didn't keep it." When the lady informed him that she would have him arrested, the would be thief took to his heels, and may be running yet for all we know to the contrary. Mrs. VanDusen deserves thanks for dropping on to the gentleman's racket so neatly, causing him to make himself scarce for the remainder of the day.

Artemesia fall show at Priceville on Tuesday next. Markdale on Friday.

Jenkins, late editor and proprietor of the Durham Chronicle, has been sent to jail for thirty days for contempt of Court.

COMPETITION

DEFIED!

Fine Gold and Silver Watches for Presentation or Personal use.

AMERICAN CLOCK

AND SILVERWARE.

Quality and completeness of stock to select from not equalled in Central Grey.

Sizes Complete in Gem and 18 K. Wedding Rings.

No Catch Prices. Goods as represented

OR "CASH" REFUNDED.

Can do better for Customer—"Cash or "Credit"—than any other jeweler in "Grey C."

Watches carefully and promptly repaired.

JEWELER BROWN,

MARKDALE, ONT.

Owed to Halifax.

The haddock's feet are on thy shore,
Canada, my Canada;
The halibut's at my door,
Canada, my Canada.
For smelt and gudgeon, chub and eel,
For codfish, hake and mackareel,
Arise and meet the Yankee steal,
Canada, my Canada.

Thou wilt not cower in the brine,
Canada, my Canada;
Thou wilt not drop thy fishing line,
Canada, my Canada;
Defend thy sculpin, save thy skate,
Strike for thy shad with soul elate,
Don't swear, and spit upon thy bait,
Canada, my Canada.

Deal gently with a herring race,
Canada, my Canada;
Put up your swordfish in its place,
Canada, my Canada;
If for reprisal you would sue,
Just turn your other cheek—please do,
And take a Yankee snack or two,
Canada, my Canada.

—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A COMPLETE MISUNDERSTANDING.

BY MARGARET CROSBY.

CHAPTER I.

It was a rainy day in September.

On a narrow road, flanked by tall pine-trees, in a remote part of New England, four horses dragged a lumbering stage-coach up a steep hill. On the seat beside the driver sat an old man, dressed in a baggy overcoat and a battered felt hat. He had no umbrella, and his indifference to the weather was to be inferred from the fact that he chose an outside seat in preference to the many empty ones inside the stage. He was talking to the driver with the sustained monotony of one who is secure from interruption.

"Well, as I was sayin," he said, "Deacon Bliss, he says to me, you got to cut Memento mori on them gate-posts, and that's all there is about it. You can cut your own name somewhere, with Builder under it, too, if you want to; but it stands to reason that Memento mori oughter go on the gate of a bury-in'-ground." He paused a moment, and then continued, with a latent twinkle in his faded, kindly eyes: "I did cut Memento mori on one of them gate-posts, and I cut Hezekiah Sanford in letters the same size on the other, so there's my monument fur all time, fur that wall ain't ever comin' down, and Deacon Bliss couldn't say a word. The next day as I was goin' down—"

At this juncture the driver's lips parted and emitted a short, sharp laugh. This tribute to his shrewdness was so unexpected that the old man paused and turned to him with a furtive look of questioning.

"You've got to the stone wall to soon, Squire Sanford; we ain't past Three-mile Corner, and you won't have enough to last till you get home," said the driver. The old man relapsed into an offended silence. After a moment's pause the driver said, with a jerk of his thumb toward the inside of the stage:

"Who are the folks yer goin' ter have to yer house, Squire?"

The old man turned over in his mind the feasibility of showing the annoyance that he felt at the interruption of his story; but on the consideration that Sam Hunter was too good a listener to be lost, he answered—

"One of 'em's Colonel Brennan, and the other's his brother. The young one's pretty sick—consumption, or somethin' like it, I reckon, and the colonel's brignin' him here fur a change of air. As I says to the colonel, this air will cure him if anythin' will. Why, my brother James's wife—I'll tell you about her, Sam?"

Hunter smiled grimly. "That story'll last till you get home," he declared.

The two inside passengers were not even occupying themselves by talking to each other, but were equally silent.

One was a man about 40 years old, tall, and strongly built. He sat somewhat stiffly forward on the edge of the seat, his attitude and expression statuesquely quiet. There was much that inspired confidence in the direct simplicity of his glance, shaded by a slouched felt hat, and something martial in the unconscious erectness of his bearing.

Beside him sat, or half-lay, a young man, enveloped to the throat in a heavy, loose ulster of yellowish cloth. The blonde effect of his fair hair and slight mustache was heightened by his excessive palor. His eyes were closed, and his dark lashes alone saved his face from being absolutely colorless. The clearly cut features were handsome, and the whole face was characterized by extreme sensitiveness. His long, white hands—the hands of an invalid—rested listlessly on the leaves of a sketch-book that lay on his knees. Over the shoulder nearest the open window was thrown a heavy travelling-rug, which, constantly displaced by the jolting of the stage, slipped to the floor. Each time that it did so the older man leaned across, and lifting the rug, rearranged it with awkward tenderness. A muttered "Thank you!" was the only audible notice that his action received, but the youth's level brows met each time in a quick frown of irritation. At length when this had occurred several times he opened his eyes.

"That will do, Dick. I'm very much obliged, but I'm quite warm enough without it. How much longer are we to be in this hideous machine?"

"Just beyond the top of the hill, I think," was the answer, spoken in a strong, unmodulated voice. Then, as if glad to avail himself of the opportunity to speak, he asked, anxiously: "How do you feel now, Julian? Any better than when we started? It's a poor day, but the air's far more bracing than that close city." He inhaled a long breath of the fragrant piney air. "I couldn't have breathed in that place another day. No wonder you're sick. I tell you, Julian, a week on the plains would make a different fellow of you! Even this place we're going to will do you good."

"I suppose so."

"I'm sure of it, my boy. You've spent too much time in that studio; you haven't lived an active life. A few weeks here will set you up, and then we'll try camping out. It'll be just the thing for that cough of yours. Nothing like sleeping in the open air for curing a cold."

The young man shivered uneasily.

"Can't I do anything to make you more comfortable?" continued the older man. There was only a shake of the head in reply. "Then I think I'll go on top for awhile, and perhaps you'll get some sleep."

He leaned out of the window; the summit of the hill had been reached and the thinning of the pine-trees showed the rolling country, with wooded hills, glorious with autumn tints of gold and dun and flaming crimson. The rain had stopped falling, and the dull gray of the sky was broken by patches of deep blue. Before there was time to hail the driver the stage stopped at the gate of a farm-house which stood some ten yards back from the road. It was one of those long, low houses which do not seem to be built on the ground, but to grow out of it, clinging lovingly as close as possible to the earth. Two large elms overshadowed it, and to the right there was an apple-orchard, with a distant view beyond of meadow ond woodland, and silver gleam of a large sheet of water. Close to the house, on the other side, were straggling barns and outhouses.

The two men clambered down from their high seats. Hunter went to the back of the stage and began silently lifting down down the luggage; Sanford walked up the irregular flag-stones, which lay on the grass in front of the house, forming a path to the door, while Colonel Brennan opened the door of the stage.

"Julian," he said, "here we are, my boy!" The young man lay with his eyes closed, but when his brother spoke he opened them with a dazed expression. He got out, but staggered slightly as he tried to walk up the path. His brother supported him, and as they reached the door Sanford came out, followed by an old woman, dressed in a dark calico gown and short white jacket. She led the way to a room on the right of a little hall, talking rapidly all the time.

"Oh—now—jest to think of my not bein ready for you! Why, I didn't s'pose the stage 'ud be along for a half-hour yet! But I know you'll excuse my jacket. Now the young man does look sick, don't he? But you see if this ain't the best place—"

Her flow of words was interrupted by an exclamation from Colonel Brennan.

"Julian! What's the matter?"

The dazed look in the youth's eyes deepened, his pallor became deathly, and swaying slightly for an instant he toppled over on the floor in a dead faint.

Mrs. Sanford contemplated him for a moment, in silent amazement.

"Oh, the awful! the dreadful! what under the canopy!" she gasped; then throwing her apron over her face she rushed from the room, calling:

"Winifred Amanda Sanford—do you come down-stairs this minute! The young gentleman's layin' dead on the floor, and I'm sure I dunno what to do!"

Colonel Brennan knelt down by Julian and supporting his head, his eyes fixed on the white face in an agony of apprehension

"Go and get some water," he said to Sanford; "be quick about it!"

There was a sound of hasty footsteps on the stairs, the rustle of a dress, and a tall young woman entered the door. She carried a glass of water in her hand, and crossing the room knelt down by the young man and began to bathe his forehead with a handkerchief which she dipped into the water.

"Fan him, please!" she said to Colonel Brennan; "there's fan on the mantle-shelf."

During fifteen years of a rough Western life Colonel Brennan had been almost unconscious of the personality of the few women he had come in contact with; yet at this moment there pierced through his anxiety a sense of the extreme composure of her manner. He obeyed blindly.

It seemed a long time before Julian's eyes opened. When they did, he scarcely knew where he was. Bending over him he saw a beautiful face—calm—serene—pitying. No; "goddesses do not pity," he vaguely thought. "Where am I?" The face hovered a moment before his wavering eyes, and then melted away.

"Julian!" said his brother's voice, pleadingly. "Look here, my dear fellow, how do you feel? Are you better?"

The familiar tone broke through the net-work of dreams in which he seemed to float. With the full tide of returning consciousness came a feeling of impatience at his weakness; he raised himself to a sitting position.

"Why, yes," he said, "I'm all right. That's very odd, that sensation. I never had it before."

He attempted to rise, and with Colonel Brennan's assistance he stood on his feet.

"I think I'll sit down," he said; "I'm rather dizzy yet." He dropped into a chair that stood near him, and looked around, as if more fully to take in his surroundings.

It was a small room with a low ceilling; two sides were of wood painted dark red, as was the high mantle and open fireplace. Above the mantle were little cupboards with brass knobs on the doors, that reminded one curiously of the lockers in the cabin of a ship. A brilliantly flowered paper covered the two remaining sides of the room. The furniture was of the most antique pattern, and extremely shabby. Fiddle-backed chairs, and long, uncomfortable wooden settes were arranged against the walls. The only modern things in the room were a new, shinning melodeon and a large rocking-chair, covered with black haircloth. Near the door stood Sanford and his wife. The old woman came forward with an air of mingled fright and importance.

"Well," she said, "that's too bad. For the land's sake! I was real scared when you went off like that. Don't you think he'd best go to his room and rest a bit, and and I'll send his supper up to him? There, now, if I didn't forget about them cakes!" she exclaimed. "Where's Winifred, Mr. Sanford? She'll take you up to your rooms, and I know you'll jest excuse me!" She left the room hurriedly, as she spoke, followed by her husband.

Julian turned to Colonel Brennan with a slightly puzzled air.

"Wasn't there—was there someone else here a minute ago?" he asked.

Before his brother could reply Sanford returned with his daughter. She stood in the doorway speaking to her father a moment, apparently unconscious of the intent scrutiny that Julian was giving her. She was unusually tall, and ther was a generous sweep in the lines of her figure. The setting of her head and throat on her shoulders was fairly majestic, and her soft dark hair wound around the arched head, and growing low on her forehead, contrasted with her gray eyes and the fair bloom of her skin. She might have been, in spite of the flower-like freshness of her beauty, twenty-eight or thirty; there was nothing of the young girl about her.

"I guess you'd better go up and rest," said Sanford, kindly. "I'm glad you're all square again. Winifred—this is my daughter Winifred—she'll show ye upstairs."

Winifred led the way, and Colonel Brennan followed, supporting Julian. The stairs were not wide enough for two people abreast, and the colonel fell behind. At the top of the stairs Julian wavered, and would have fallen again had it not been for the young woman, who turned quickly and threw her strong arm around him. His brother was at his other side in an instant, and together they helped him to his room, and settled him in a large arm-chair.

"Thank you!" he said warmly, to Winifred. "I should have fallen if it had not been for you."

She did not notice his speech. "I'm going down to get something for you to eat," she said, calmly. Her voice was clear and low. "Mother'll bring it up in a minute. Tea s ready, if Colonel Brennan will come down."

She drew down the blind of a window where the sun shone in on Julian's face, and then turned to go, but at the door she stopped, and with her head raised with stag-like erectness, swept a barely imperceptible courtesy and left the room.

Julian's eyes flashed as he looked after her. "Go down, Dick," he said; "I'll do very well here. It may be imagination, but I seem to feel better already!" There was a spark of animation in his manner as he said the words.

He took his pencil and sketch-book from his pocket, and began to draw rapidly.

From the stairs came the sound of stamping and gasping, and the old farmer made his appearance in the doorway, staggering under the weight of a heavy gun-case.

"Where's this to go, Colonel? In your room on t'other side of the passage? What have you got in here anyhow, that's so mighty hefty?"

"Hold on!" called the colonel, "I'll help you with those things, Sanford. Julian, I'll be back after awhile." He followed Sanford, and Julian still bent over his sketch in entire absorption, when he was roused by a voice at his elbow.

"Now, sir jest take a bite and see how much better you'll feel."

Mrs. Sanford stood before him, with a large tray, on which was a medley of eatables—coffee and boiled fish, a pumpkin-pie and a dish of green pickles. There was something in the scent of the coffee and the home-like aspect of the blue-and-white cracked china that pleased and tempted Julian. "Why, Mrs. Sanford," he said, "that looks uncommonly good."

"Now you begin and eat that. You better try them pickles. Winifred made 'em, and she's a powerful hand at pickles. I do hope you'll like everything; it's the first time we ever took boarders, but we tried to fix things nice." She set the tray table, and in doing so her eyes fell on the sketch. She snatched it from Julian with the same abruptness that characterized all her actions. "Child of grace! if that ain't Winifred!" Something in the idea seemed to touch her sense of humor. She laughed immoderately, holding it at arm's length at first, and then putting on her spectacles to examine it more closely. "Now, ain't it nice to draw like that; she is pretty as a picter, if I do say it." She spoke in a tone of rambling meditativeness. "Folks say it's strange she ain't married; but, lor', she won't look at the young men 'round here. I dunno why, but it's funny when there ain't one of them but has asked her—and she so pretty!"

Julian held out his hand for the sketch, coloring slightly as he did so. "You don't know what her beauty is," he murmured under his breath.

The old woman did not catch the words, but the tone reached her ear. The foolish vacancy of her expression changed to a keen look of curiosity for the space of a second.

"Well, I know folks do take on about her, and her pa sets an awful store by her."

"Mrs. Sanford," said Sanford, from the door, depositing Julian's trunk in the room, "supper's ready, and s'pose you come down." He was in his shirt-sleeves, and spoke with some irritation of manner. "Where did you put my duster?" he continued, with a warning look.

His wife looked deprecatingly at him.

"Oh, Mr. Sanford, I jest hung it up in the store-closet. I thought, perhaps, you'd be agreeable to tryin' your black coat for a spell in the house, now we got company."

"No, I won't Mrs. Sanford; what would I have to wear to funerals, I'd like to know? No; you get my duster—lively now! and don't you go fur to hang it up in that store-closet of your's again."

They went down the hall, Sanford expostulating and his wife apologizing, until their voices died away in the distance.

The sunlight faded in the room where Julian sat. He had finished his supper, and as the twilight grew he continued to touch up the little sketch of the haunting face he had just seen, adding lines and shadows until the likeness, which had been striking at first, was entirely destroyed. He tore the leaf out of the book, and crushed it impatiently in his hand. "There's no use trying to draw such a face," he thought, "when one has only seen it once. What lines in her head and brow? How do such people happen to have a daughter looking like a goddess? How quiet and calm she was! It's scarcely human. I couldn't tell whether she was sorry for me, or only quietly contemptuous at my weakness." The evening wind blew in at the window chillingly; with the sun's departure all warmth had gone from the air. Julian went to the window and drew it down. The room wore an air of dreary melancholy. The old four-post bed, with its white curtains, loomed strangely in the dim, gray light. At the side of the room the opening of the black-painted fire-place yawned like a cavern. Some dead leaves on the hearth executed a fantastic dance as the wind swept up and down the chimney. Before the window the branches of the trees waved incessantly. The damp air seemed to strike into the young man's breast, and his cough echoed with a hollow sound. "Why did I come here?" he thought, half-hopelessly.

On the threshold of this chill and gloom there appeared a sudden vision. In the doorway stood Winifred Sanford, holding above her head a lighted candle; the downward light illuminated her face and figure, deepening and shadowing her eyes, tinging the bloom of her cheeks, outlining the calm curve of her lips. In her other hand she carried a basket of kindling-wood.

"May I come in?" she asked, with a slight smile. "Mother thought it was getting colder out of doors, and you might like a fire."

Brennan started to his feet.!

"Oh! thank you, you're very good," he stammered, confusedly; "I won't trouble you; let me do it?"

She only looked at him in surprise.

"I always make the fires," she answered quietly, "and as you're sick you'd better keep quiet and rest."

Something in her manner silenced Brennan. Half-unconsciously, partly from exhaustion, he sank back in his chair and watched her as she knelt on the hearth, and setting the basket beside her, rapidly laid the kindling under the logs that rested on the and-irons. She touched the shavings with the candle and the flames leaped up the chimney, flashing into the darkest corners of the room. The warm glow seemed to draw out the rich womanliness of the kneeling figure, and to humanize Brennan's dreary thoughts.

"I beg your pardon," he said abruptly, "but will you let me paint your portrait some day?"

For the first time her composure varied. A deeper color came into her face, and she turned her head slowly toward him with an upward glance, in which there was the faintest semblance of coquetry.

"Yes, if you want."

"Has anyone ever painted you?" he asked eagerly.

"There never has been anyone to do it," she answered.

"Then I shall be the first." The thought seemed to give the young fellow deep pleasure. "Have you always lived here?"

"Yes, always, except when I ran away to the convent."

"Ran away," he repeated, "why did you do it?"

"I couldn't stay here always, and I never see anything."

"But what did you go for—not to be a nun?" he hazarded

"No," she said, smiling a little. "To study; to get away from here. I was tired of it. I had a friend there, and she got me in; but father came and took me away when I'd been there three months. It was a good while ago, and I haven't been away since;" she paused a minute, "we're poor," she added, simply.

She stood up and leaned against the mantle, looking down at the young man. The fire-light flickered on her face and on her violet print dress, tinging it with pink reflections. The folds of the soft material fell with the simplicity of sculpture. As if pleased with the rapt observation of the young man she stood motionless for a few minutes, and then walked toward the door, saying—

"I think I'll go now. You'd better go to bed, Mr. Brennen. It's easy to see that you're tired out." There was a note of protecting kindness in the sweet voice.

Again the little courtesy, and the vision had disappeared.

Brennan was alone once more, but the room was changed. There was the ruddy fire-light, the snapping, crackling pine logs, the warm, scented air, and whether his eyes were opened or closed the mysterious beauty they had first beheld floated before them. When his brother looked in on him, an hour later, he found him already in bed and asleep, and although he coughed at frequent intervals, he still slept, with a boyish smile on his face.

CHAPTER II.

Two weeks later, on an afternoon when there was a midsummer softness in the atmosphere, old Sanford sat an the bench on one side of the wide porch at the farm-house. He was busily engaged in whittling a piece of wood with a large jack-knife, talking steadily as he whittled. Colonel Brennan sat opposite to him, listening with grave attention. His heated face and muddy clothes, as well as the gun that leaned against the seat beside him, showed that he had just come in from a shooting-expedition.

"Yes," said Sanford, "I've wrote some sharp political satires in my day, and them also in poetry. That's something that comes by natur' and birth, and can' be trained into a man. I'll lend 'em to yer some day, colonel, or—" here his face became more animated, "I'll recite 'em to yer if you like. There's the battle of Bunker Hill, one of my historical poems. It was read at the town-hall, at Greenfield, last Independence Day, I do solemnly assure you, colonel. It begins—

"'A tear stood on the mother's brow,
As from the wall young Henry Dow
The war-tube lifted down.'

I could say it all, but p'raps you'd as lief read it. You kin judge of it better that way."

"Perhaps I can," the colonel answered, courteously.

"Then I've wrote also poems of natur'. Natur's an inspirin' subject. Jest take a day like this—" He took off his hat and let the air blow his gray locks off his withered forehead. "There's something so pure and holy in the hull look of everythin' to-day that it's like goin' into a church jest to go out into the fields. Mrs. Sanford now," here his eyes twinkled humorously, "ain't much on natur'. She looked out this mornin', and says she, 'It's a fine mornin' for bakin',' and then she went in-doors and she's b'en bakin' all day!"

The colonel's attention seemed to be wandering. His eyes were fixed on the orchard, where, through the green branches, in the distance, could be seen the gleam of a woman's dress and the outline of a man's figure. The occasional sound of voices was borne toward them by the breeze.

Sanford noticed the look.

"You needn't fret about that brother f your's, Colonel," he said; "he's all right. Winifred's out there, and he's paintin' her. That's the idea he took into his head. She's a sensible girl, a mighty sensible girl, and she'll take as good care of him as if he was her brother. How old is the boy?"

Colonel Brennen made a calculation.

"Twenty-two," he said. "I didn't think he was as old," he added, half to himself.

(To be continued.)

When the Circus Began.

"What time did young Sampson leave last night Clara?" asked her papa. "It was after midnight," replied the girl, with a haughty sneer; "we had a quarrel, and I bade him good-by forever." "If you quarreled, I wonder he didn't leave earlier." "We didn't begin quarreling until nearly 10 o'clock."

BILL NYE ACCEPTS,

And Prepares a Letter Which May be Used With Profit by Any Candidate.

New York World.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee: I have just learned by the merest accident that I was nominated some ten weeks ago as a candidate for the Presidency at the regular National Convention. Being out of town at the time, and our local postmaster refusing to forward newspapers without the payment of additional postage, I did not know about it, though I remember of telling a man last spring that if no other man in the party seemed really fitted to be its standard-bearer I would run. That was the end of it, so far as I was concerned.

When I made the promise I had an idea that possibly a better man would be found somewhere, and in that way I would be enabled to get out of it. Acting upon that supposition, I have made other arrangements, which, of course, I will now have to cancel. We had purchased and put in our coals for the winter, and also agreed to board the teacher at our house. I might name other plans we had made for the future which will now have to be entirely changed, but the above will show you that in going into this thing I am making sacrifices which are not generally taken into consideration during the heat and ascerbity of a political campaign.

If elected I will favor a higher price for the manufacturer and lower prices for the consumer.

I believe in submitting the tariff question to a popular vote of this conntry and Europe, after which I would reserve the right to do what I thought best about it.

I have not yet decided whether I would favor putting the best men into office, or whether I would let them remain where they are, in the newspaper business.

I favor some more things, but out of respect for the convention which nominated me I shall not embody them in this letter, but wait till I am elected and then jar the back teeth of those whose votes I now desire but whose opinions I despise.

My latch-string will be out during the day, and I shall aim to keep open all night. On Sundays visiting statesmen will please enter at the side of the house, and I shall ask one and all to please refrain from loud and boisterous language in the hall as they go away, even though there should be annoying complications in identifying umberallas left in the hall-rack and quids of tobacco left on the stair rail. Let each take such umbrella and tobacco as shall be allotted to him without repining, and thus elevate and ennoble the ettiquette and tout ensemble of our national political system—a system of which we are all so justly proud.

I trust that one and all will feel free to come and bring their dinners until November, for after that I shall, if elected, admit only respectable people, and very few of those. Prior to election I shall maintain a general social sink of iniquity, and I hope and trust that the various moral festers who claim that they knew me when I was poor and when my wife did her own work, and who now claim that they made me what I am, will call early, refrain from tying their team to the oleander and turn off their breaths on retiring instead of trying to blow it out.

The house will be open for visitors immediately after prayers and continue so until breakfast time on the following day. Guests and friends are requested to pass in through the folding doors leading out of the front parlor, view the remains and then continue out through the dining-room, kitchen and barn.

Memento pickets for making canes may be found in the hay-mow marked as follows:

TAKE ONE.

The apples on the large tree near the well are cooking apples and not good yet, any way.

If elected, I shall favor intemperance only in the case of sickness.

My wife joins me in the kindest regards to your committee and hopes you will always come to see us when you are in town. We are only a few miles from the station and you can easily find our house if you will follow the crowd. We think some of having a pink tea at our house on Thursday, and we would both be glad to see the National Convention and friends here before we take up the carpets. Yours truly,

Sign here:

P. S. I accept the nomination with pleasure.

Fresh From Vanity Fair.

Nuns' veilings have a wide selvage and border and are made up very simply for afternoon costumes.

The novelty in silken fabrics is the bordered armure. There were bordered woollens for spring wear and bordered cottons for summer.

Paisley borders are found on cashmeres for house dresses, and very pretty effects are produced with a sash carrying out the idea of color in the costume.

Tinsel strips are seen on some soft woollens for street costumes. In dark shades of India twill and in light shades for house wear these costumes are eqeally stylish.

Another novelty in bordered fabrics is the hair stripe with a wide border of plain material. This makes up very charmingly for an autumn walking costume, and needs no trimmings whatsoever.

The selvage in some beautiful new woollen has its width extended to 1½ to 2 inches by a silk woven stripe about it. This is the sole trimming on these simple costumes, which have a pretty effect notwithstanding their simplicity.

Rare and beautiful Eastern stuffs have a background of cloth or gold. This at $15 or $20 per yard forms the petticoat in rich costumes. The Eastern gauzes are nearly as expensive and equally fashionable. It takes but little to embellish a dress and make it quite gorgeous.

Some small Boston boys were giving a Buffalo Bill entertainment the other afternoon, and young Joe Gammon was an Indian whose business it was to be stabbed by the scout. To prepare for the act he had stuffed the breast of his jacket with newspapers, but the knife of Buffalo Bill found a joint in the armor of the redskin, and with a shriek of "Ow" the child of the forest dropped to the ground. The wound was severe enough to warrant hospital treatment.—New York Sun.

WAYS THAT ARE DARK.

The Terrible Traffic in Young Chinese Girls in Canada.

KIDNAPPED AND TORTURED.

Christian People in Victoria Rescue Them by Strategy.

A Winnipeg lester says: Rev. J. Starr, who has spent a year and a half in Victoria, B. C., is here attending the Methodist Missions' Board. In view of the prominent part that he has played in fighting the immoral traffic in girls the reverend gentleman was questioned about it. The women are captured in China and smuggled out to America, where they are sold to keepers of houses of prostitution. The ages of females stolen in this way ranged from 9 and 10 years to 20. The younger the female the more valuable is she deemed. Although most of them are kidnapped in China, some are heartlessly sold by their parents for the traffic. They are smuggled into the country under the guise of being wives to Chinamen. Once in the country they are practically slaves, being the property of the keepers, who paint them up and set them in the doorway of their dens, to solicit men as they pass.

BARBAROUSLY TORTURED.

If they do not comply they are terribly abused, sometimes being burned and bruised. One little girl, who had been rescued through his instrumentality, had one ear partially burned off, besides many burns and bruises about her body. When they enter the country a blackmail tax of $100 a head is extracted by a secret society known as "Highbinders." This is a society which is very powerful in China and every town where the traffic in girls is carried on. It is formed of Chinamen usually very wealthy. In consideration of the tax being paid the society gives the person buying the "slave" a guarantee that they will resist all efforts to rescue the person, and pay all legal expenses in connection therewith. So that in rescuing these poor unfortunates they had to fight this wealthy society, which had plenty of money and did not scruple to use it. At one time, Mr. Starr said, he had $11,500 worth of the "slaves" in his possession, so that it was not to be wondered at that his efforts to rescue would be resisted. He found it very difficult work, as the people of Victoria, and the police in particular, were very apathetic and seemed to take no interest in the matter. Fortunately there were two or three who gave noble assistance in the effort to stamp out the evil. A little home was established next to the parsonage where those who were rescued were taken and educated and taught the way of life. At first a few of them had to give the money to keep the institution going, but the Women's Missionary Society had taken it over and were now conducting it. Quite a number of poor unfortunates had been rescued; four had been sent back to China to their parents, and there were now six or seven in the home. The poor things were so abused and injured that they abhorred the business which their cruel keepers compelled them to follow. If one of the rescued did anything wrong in the home, all that was necessary to make them do right was to threaten to send them back to Chinatown. They would just as soon, said Mr. Starr,

BE SENT TO HELL.

as back to Chinatown. He told some interesting stories about the capture of these poor unfortunates. There were decent Chinamen who abhorred the traffic, and who assisted in stamping it out. It did not take long till the establishment of the home was known. Then some well-disposed Chinaman or woman would give information about a certain girl in a certain house who wanted to escape. A cab was procured, and a few of them would start for the place. The cab would be left a block away, then a Chinaman would go carelessly to the house where the girl was, ask to see her, and the moment he got his hands on her would rush out, when the others would join him, and a rush would be made for the cab. In a moment or two the whole neighborhood would be roused and a big chase made, but they usually managed to get off.

THE VICTORIA POLICE.

The chief of police was on one occasion applied to for assistance to rescue an unfortunate. He refused to send an officer along. One policeman, however, volunteered to go, and the rescuing party started. To their disgust, however, they found that intelligence of their intention had preceded them, and the girl they were after had been spirited away. Several hundred Chinese, most of them "Highbinders," were on hand to resist them if necessary. They did not carry any weapons, save a heavy cane. The Chinese were naturally cowards, and not likely to fight. The next morning a telegram was received from Nanaimo, stating that the girl they were after had been captured there and would be brought down. About 150 "Highbinders" were at the station to rescue her by force, but fortunately the provincial police had been telegraphed to, and were on hand to prevent a rescue. When the poor girl was finally got to the home, she was quite stupid from the effect of some hellish drug administered to her. She afterwards stated that she had

BEEN DRUGGED FOR DAYS.

It was with great difficulty that her life was saved, as the drug had taken a deep effect upon her system. So effective had been the campaign against the immoral traffic that for the past six months Mr. Starr did not think there had been a single prostitute landed. A Mr. Gardner, of the Customs department, who was an excellent man in every sense of the word, had been so vigilant and earnest in watching the ships that no subjects had escaped his notice. Thus to this gentleman alone much was due for the excellent results so far attained. So earnest was he for the salvation of the souls of the poor Chinese that he had resolved to go to China as a missionary, and he would shortly leave for that purpose. He had been born and educated in China and spoke the language fluently.

SOME GOOD CHINESE.

Mr. Starr said he would not like it to be understood that there were no good Chinese in Victoria. Although the scum of Chinese society usually find their way to this continent, still there were many Chinamen in Victoria whose word is as good as their bond to almost any amount of money at the custom house and banks. There are many decent men who have large establishments and who do a large business. The great objection on the coast to the Chinamen is that they never become citizens to the country. Even their bones must be sent back to China for burial. As laborers he had to bear testimony to their faithfulness and reliability. If they promised to do a certain job it would be done; if they were engaged to be on hand at a certain hour they would be there. They were sober, industrious and faithful, and if they were driven out of Victoria he really could not see what the town would do. They were the hewers of wood and drawers of water. They were the cooks, the domestics and the scavengers of the place.

A FOOLHARDY VOYAGE ENDED.

Further Particulars of Captain Andrews Venture in His Little Dory.

Captain William A. Andrews and his little vessel, the Dark Secret, arrived in New York harbor Wednesday forenoon. The Dark secret is in comparatively good condition, although its bottom has not seen water for many a day. Captain Andrews, it will be remembered, is one of those foolhardy mariners whose sole ambition seems to be to cross the Atlantic in as frail a craft as can be turned out by a boat builder. After much preparation and considerable advertising, he sailed from Point of Pines, near Boston, Monday, June 18th, 1888, for Europe, in the Dark Secret, as he christened his little boat. It is only 14 feet 9 inches long. He went alone, and did not have on board even a stray cat or a yellow dog for companionship. His larder was well stocked with jerked beef, salt pork, canned goods and hard tack. He also carries as much fresh water as his limited space would allow. Since his departure he has been hailed by several passing vessels, to whom he reported he was all right and sanguine of completing his voyage. Of late nothing has been heard of him, and by many it was though the foolhardy mariner had found a watery grave. Such would in all probability had been his fate had it not been for Capt. Bjonedss, of the Norwegian bark Nor. On Aug. 19th Capt Bjonedss of the Nor sighted something to windward during the forenoon, which, through his glass he supposed to be a portion of a shipwreck. On getting closer to, it was discovered that the object was the frail craft above mentioned. Captain Andrews had been sixty days on the water in it without tasting a warm meal, and was so weak and emaciated that he had to be assisted on board the Nor. Capt. Andrews and his brother crossed the Atlantic in a little vessel called the Nautilus, in 1878. The voyage occupied forty-five days. The Captain says he will again make the effort to cross the ocean in the Dark Secret, and will start next spring.

Yellow Fever Experience.

"How is the fever usually treated?" It isn't usually treated in any particular way. Every time that it breaks out the doctors have to experiment, under guidance of former experiences, of course, till they find out what treatment is best; for what answers well in one outbreak frequently won't answer at all well in another. Sometimes, as in Savannah the last time the fever was there, dry quinine on the tongue seems to answer best. Sometimes other means are more effective. The champagne treatment is perhaps more generally effective than any other, but there is rarely enough of that costly medicine at command to supply the need in an epidemic. The late Dr. Gabriel Disosway Ayres, of Brooklyn, once told me that, on one occasion, he was in a British West India town when the fever was present there. He was travelling with a friend and the two remained a week on the island. One evening they dined with a physician there and next morning learned that he had died during the night with the fever. "I thought it time for men who had no business there to get away," said Dr. Ayres, "and we took ship the next day for Havana. In the night my friend was seized with the fever, and I treated him with champagne without saying anything about it to alarm the passengers. When he was out of danger I told the captain, who at once and very impressively said: "If you let anybody in Havana know that you poured champagne in a man with yellow fever they'll hang you.'" The doctor inferred that the champagne treatment, though a favorite one with British physicians, was at that time unknown among the Spanish. Curiously enough, I believe any other form of alcoholic stimulation in yellow fever kills with something of the precision of a Remington rifle, and, of course, men who are hard drinkers are doomed if they once get yellow fever. For that matter such men are doomed if they get any virulent disease, and upon affection I may say they are doomed anyhow.—New York Com. Adv.

Sire of the Sutherland Sisters.

Fletcher Sutherland, the aged father of the famous seven Sutherland sisters, died at his country home near Lockport, N. Y., on Thursday, of paralysis, aged 73 years. His daughters are known the world over as the seven long-haired sisters. He was a well-known figure wherever he went, always wearing a long seal-skin coat, even in summer. He was a prominent Methodist minister at one time, but left his calling as soon as his daughters took to the stage

How to Get Him to Church.

A New York politician is so fond of being "deadheaded" everywhere that when some of his friends were debating how to get him to attend church one of them said: "Charge an admission fee and he'll be after a pass before breakfast."—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

Why the Parson Beat a Retreat.

A pastor some time since sought financial help for an important charity. Among those whom he asked to give something was a lady who, unfortunately, bore a vinegary face. She declined to give money, but promised to "lend her countenance," to the cause. He retired in dismay.

A Reader of Character.

Mendicant—Please help poor blind man?

Kind Old Lady—Blind? Why, bless me, yes; there's a dime for you.

Mendicant—Thank ye, heartily, ma'am. I knowed the minnit I see ye comin' ye was a kind-hearted ole 'oman.

AROUND AGAIN.

The Poetic Young Woman Revists the Practical but Sympathetic Editor.

"If you please, sir," said the young lady, timidly, as the exchange editor handed her a chair, "I have composed a few verses, or partially composed them, and I thought you might help me finish them and then print them. Ma says they are real nice as far as they go, and pa takes your paper regularly."

She was a handsome creature, with beautiful blue eyes, and a crowning glory as yellow as golden rods. There was an expectant look on her face, a hopefulness that appealed to the holiest emotions, and the exchange editor made up his mind not to crush that pure heart, if he never struck a lick.

"May I show you the poetry?" continued the ripe, red mouth. "You will see that I could not get the last line of the verses, and if you would please be so kind as to help me——"

Help her? Though he had never even read a line of poetry, the exchange editor felt the spirit of the divine art flood in his soul, as he yielded to the bewildering music. Help her! Well, he should smile.

"The first verse runs like this," she went on, taking courage from his eyes:

How softly sweet the autumn air,
The dying woodland fills,
And Nature turns from restless care—

"To anti-bilious pills!" added the exchange editor, with a jerk. "Just the thing. It rhymes and it's so. You take anybody, now. Half the people you meet are—"

"I suppose you know best," interrupted the young girl. "I hadn't thought of it in that way, but you have a better idea of such things. Now the second verse reads like this—

The dove-eyed kine upon the moor
Look tender meek and sad,
While from the valley comes the roar—

"Of matchless liver pad!" roared the exchange editor. "There you get it. This finishes the second so as to match with the first. It combines the fashion with poetry, and carries the right idea home to the fireside. If I only had your ability in starting a verse, with my genius in winding it up, I'd quit the shears and open in the poetry business to-morrow."

"Think so?" asked the fair young lady. "It don't strike me as keeping the theme."

"You don't want to. You want to break the theme here and there. The reader likes it better. Oh, yes; where you keep up the theme it gets monotonous."

"Perhaps that's so," rejoined the beauty, brightening up. "I didn't think of that. Now, I'll read the third verse:

How sadly droops the dying day
As night springs from the glen,
And moaning twilight seems to say—

"'The old man's drunk again', wouldn't do, would it?" asked the exchange editor. "Somebody else wrote that, and we might be accused of plagiarism. We must have this thing original. Suppose we say—now just suppose we say, 'Why did I spout my Ben?'"

"Is that new?" inquired the sweet, rosy lips. "At least I never heard it before. I don't know what it means."

"New! 'Deed it's new. Ben is the Presbyterian name for overcoat, spout means hook. 'Why did I spout my Ben?' means why did I shove my topper. That's just what twilight would think of first, you know. O! don't be afraid, that's just immense."

"Well, I'll leave it to you," said the glorious girl, with a smile that pinned the exchange editor's heart to his spine. "This is the fourth verse:

The merry milkmaid's sombre song
Re-echoes from the rocks,
As silently she trips along—

"With holes in both her socks, by Jove!" cried the delighted editor. "You see——"

"Oh! no, no!" remonstrated the blushing maiden, "not that!"

"Certainly," protested the exchange editor, warming up. "Nine to four she's got 'em; and you get fidelity to fact, with a wealth of poetical expression. The worst of poetry generally is, you can't state things as they are. It ain't like prose. But here we've busted all the established notion and put up an actual existence with a veil of genuine poetry over it. I think that's the best idea we have struck yet."

"I don't seem to look at it as you do; but, of course, you are the best judge. Pa thought I ought to say:

As silently she treads along
In autumn's mellow tracks.

"Wouldn't that do?"

"Do! Just look at it. Does tracks rhyme to rocks? Not in our paper it doesn't. Besides, when you say 'tracks' and 'rocks' you give the impression of some fellow scratching for safety. 'Socks,' on the other hands, rhymes with 'rocks,' and beautifies them, while it touches up the milkmaid, and by describing her condition shows her to be a child of the very picture you are showing up.

"I think you are right," said the sweet angel. "I'll tell pa where he is wrong. This is the way the fifth verse runs:

And close behind the farmer's boy
Trills forth his simple tunes,
And slips behind the maiden coy—

"And splits his pantaloons; done it myself; know just exactly how it is. Why, bless your heart, you—"

Snip, snip, snip. Paste, paste, paste. But it is with a saddened heart that he snips and pastes among his exchanges now. The beautiful vision that for a moment dawned upon him has left but the recollection in his heart of one sunbeam in his life, quenched by the shower of tears with which she denounced him as a "nasty brute," and went out from him forever.—Somerville Journal.

Children and Fools.

Mr. Nicefellow (playfully to adored one's little sister)—Won't you let me have a bite of that apple?

Child—No.

Adored one—You must not answer that way. It is not polite.

Child—But, sister, he got such an awful big mouth that there won't be any apple left.

An Unknown Species.

New Governess—"Now, my dear, in what zoological classification would you place man?"

Pretty Girl—"Man?"

"Yes; don't you know what a man is?"

"No, ma'am. I've been spending my winters in a convent ladies' boarding school and my summers at seaside resorts."

AN EXCITING SCENE.

Shut Up in an English Railroad Car with a Madman.

On my way from Wales to London I met with one of the most exciting scenes I ever witnessed. We were in a railway train going at a terrific velocity. There are two or three locomotives in England celebrated for speed. One they call the Flying Dutchman. Another they name the Yorkshire Dveil. We were flying behind one of these locomotives sixty miles an hour. There were five of us—four gentlemen and a lady—in an English car, which a different thing, as most people know from the American car—the English car holding comfortably only about eight persons, four of them occupying one seat facing four on the other. We halted at the depot. A gentleman came to the door, and stood for a moment as if not knowing whether to come in or stay out. The conductor compelled him to decide immediately, he got in. He was finely gloved and every way well dressed. Seated, he took out his knife and began the attempt of splitting a sheet of paper edgewise, and at this sat intently engaged for perhaps an hour. The suspicion of all in the car was aroused in regard to him, when suddenly he arose and looked around at his fellow-passengers and the fact was revealed by his eye and manner that he was a maniac. The lady in the car (she was unaccompanied) became frenzied with fright and rushed to the door as if about to jump out. Planting my feet against the door I made that death-leap impossible. A look of horror was on all the faces, and the question with each was, "What will the madman do next?" A madman unarmed is alarming, but a madman with an open knife is terrific. In the demoniac strength that comes to such an one he might make sad havoc in that flying railway train, or he might spring out of the door, as once or twice he attempted. It was a question between retaining the foaming fury in our company or letting him dash his life out on the rocks. Also it might be a question between his life and the life of one or more in the train. Our own safety said, "Let him go." Our humanity said, "Keep him back from instant death," and humanity triumphed. The bell-rope reaching to the locomotive in English railway trains is on the outside of the car, and near the roof and difficult to reach. I gave it two or three stout pulls, but there was no slackening of speed. Another passenger repeated the attempt without getting any recognition. We might as well have tried to stop a whirlwind by pulling a boy's kite-string. When an English engineer starts his train he stops for nothing short of a collision, and the bell rope on the outside edges of the car is only to make passengers feel comfortable at the idea that they can stop the train if they want to, and as it is not once in a thousand times anyone is willing to risk his arm and reach out of the window long enough to work the rope the delusion is seldom broken. To rid ourselves of our dangerous associate seemed impossible. Then there came a struggle as to which would have supremacy of that car, right reason or dementia. The demoniac moved around the car as if it beonged to him and all the rest of us were intruders. Then he dropped in convulsions across the lap of one of the passengers. At this moment, when he thought the horror had climactertated, the tragedy was intensified. We plunged into the midnight darkness of one of those long tunnels for which English railway travel is celebrated. Minutes seemed hours. Can you imagine a worse position than to be fastened in a railway carriage, eight feet by six, in a tunnel of complete darkness, with a maniac? May this occurrence never be repeated! We knew not what moment he might dash upon us or what way. We waited for the light, and waited while the hair lifted upon the scalp and the blood ran cold. When, at last, the light looked in through the windows, we found the afflicted man lying helplessly across one of the passengers. When the train halted it did not take us long, after handing over the poor unfortunate for medical treatment, to disembark and move into another car.—London Letter in the Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Chance to Make Money.

There has not, in many years, been a better opening for a giant than now, so the showmen say. Any man who measures seven feet and a half can almost fix his own price. That stature has never been exceeded so far as modern authentic history tells, except by Chang, the Chinaman, whom Barnum exhibited for several years. He lacked only three inches of being eight feet. Chang was an educated Mandarin of refined tastes, and after accumulating $50,000, enough to make him a Vanderbilt in China, he returned to his native land. No offers have since tempted him to become an exhibit again, and he used to declare that only a desire to journey in all civilized lands induced him to make his tour, which lasted six years. Peter Fekuti, the Hungarian giant, whose death was reported here last week, was to come to America next winter. He was seven feet four and very heavy. The American giants of recent times, Captain Bates, Captain Goshen and Anna Swan, were all less than that in stature, and they are all dead of consumption, the common destroyer of such overgrown persons. There is not at present in the show business in this country, according to the manager of the largest museum in New York, a giant exceeding seven feet counting out his hair and bootheels.—New York cor.

Misunderstood.

Minister (who has just driven his horse to a wedding in the country)—Can I hitch out here?

Prospective Bridegroom—Wall, no. Guess Sal and the folks'd rather have the hitchin' done in the house.

An impertinent New York reporter, while interviewing Mrs. Langtry about her intended trip to California, recently, asked: "Is there any truth in the report that you may return to us entitled to bear another name?" Mrs. Langtry, who is the personification of patience and amiability, did not order the presumptuous interviewer out of the house. She blushed, raised her fan and replied: "I have not obtained any divorce. While I remain the wife of Mr. Langtry it would be scarcely delicate, to say the least, to discuss the probability of my marrying another man."

—Potatoes are selling at 25c. a bushel in Battleford, N.W.T.

A Confession.

Do you remember, little wife,
How years ago we two together
Saw naught but love illumine life
In sunny days or winter weather?

Do you recall in younger years
To part a day was bitter pain?
Love's light was hid in clouds of tears
Till meeting cleared the sky again.

Do you remember how we two
Would stare into each other's eyes
Till all the earth grew heavenly blue,
That speech was lost in happy sighs?

Do you another thing recall,
That used to happen often then:
How, simply passing in the hall,
We'd stop to smile and kiss again?

Do you remember how I sat
And, reading, held your hand in mine,
Caressing it with gentle pat -
One pat for every blessed line?

Do you recall how at the play
Through hours of agony we tarried?
The lovers' griefs brought us dismay;
Oh, we rejoiced when they were married.

And then walked homeward arm in arm,
Beneath the crescent moonlet new,
That smiled on us with silent charm;
So glad that we were married too.

Ah me, 'twas years and years ago
When all this happened that I sing,
And many a time the winter snow
Has slipped from olive slopes of spring.

And now—oh, nonsense! let us tell;
A fig for laugh of maids or men!
You'll hide your blushes? I'll not. Well—
We're ten times worse than we were then.

W. J. HENDERSON, in the Spectator Century.

GIRLS WILL BE BLIND

Chewing Gum Injures Their Eyesight—Over-indulgence Almost as Hurtful as Too Much Strong Drink—An Awful Warning.

"If the girls only knew that their eyes are being ruined by chewing gum they would shrink from it as they would from a viper," said a Chestnut street optician yesterday. "We all know to what an extent this chewing gum is carried on, and what a nasty habit it is. I would advise the girls to stop it at once. If they have a big wad in their mouths while reading this interview let them throw it out and 'swear off,' as the drinkers say, for in one respect these dainty girls are like drunkards. If they are chronic gum-chewers they are heir to all the infirmities that afflict the chronic whiskey drinkers. I have three girls who were addicted to the habit, but I broke them from it after a great deal of persuasion and some trifling punishment. The oldest girl has evidences of the habit, though, and will carry them to her grave."

"How are the eyes affected?"

"Well, the muscles of the jaw connect with the spine, and from the spine there are little fibrous tissues running in all directions. A number of these extend to the eyes and are called optic nerves. Now, if you will watch a person eating you will notice a palpitation of the temples when the lower jaw moves up and down in the process of mastication. This is caused by the working of the optic nerves, which keep the inner part of the eyes in motion and exercise the nerves as much as is needed to keep them in a healthy condition. These nerves are more tender and sensitive to a degree than one would imagine. When they are overworked they become shrunken and enfeebled, and then the process of deterioration in the eyesight begins. Of course the shrinking of the nerve draws the eye back into the socket, and as it is connected by slender threads of tissues to the pupil of the eye this also becomes affected. The consequence is that the eye becomes weak and loses its color, it becomes an unnatural-looking gray, and the vision is so much impaired by it that eye-glasses must be resorted to.

"One of my girls wears glasses just because she chewed so much gum. Her eyesight is practically ruined, and she has crows'-feet wrinkles about the outer corners that were caused by the flesh of the cheek being forced upward by the action of the jaw. She is also troubled with indigestion from the same cause. These are all symptoms exhibited by a person who drinks whiskey plentifully, and hence the comparison. Parents ought to take this matter in hand and see if they cannot rid their girls of the habit. It is a filthy one outside of the terrible effect it has upon the human system. If the parents will keep from their girls some of their little perquisites until they stop chewing gum they would soon give up the habit."—Philadelphia Record.

A Storm of Cabs.

Policeman (to citizen clinging to lamp-post)—Shall I hail a cab, friend?

Citizen—G-grashus no (hic), offshur; don' (hic) hail any more cabs; they're hailin' all 'roun' now.

Consolation.

Edwin—Dearest, your cruel father kicked me down the steps last night.

Angelina—Do not complain, darling; submit to fate. Just think how lucky you are. Supposing I lived on the third floor.

From the Sublime to the Ridiculous.

The ocean is immeasurably grand to look at in its majestic moods, but the sublimity ceases the minute you attempt to swallow it by the mouthful. Martha Vineyard Herald.

Where Ignorance is not Bliss.

Emily—"Oh, Arthur, how cruel! See that poor worm wriggle!"

Arthur—"That's all right. I cut him in two first, so he's perfectly dead, only he hasn't discovered it."

Aged violins of celebrated makes become quite valuable. A Stradivarius violin of 1716, made for the Marchese Pamparati, has passed from the hands of an Italian player, Bertuzzi, into the possession of a London gentleman, the price being $4,000

Business man—Has your husband much trade in the west? Shoe manufacturer's wife—He seldom refers to business matters in any way, but I judge that he has business connections in Chicago. He remarked last night that he had just received a large shoe contract.—Philadelphia Record.

Lord and Lady Lansdowne have arrived at Bowood for a stay of several weeks, after which they are going to pay some visits in Scotland, and they will be invited to visit Balmoral before they leave for India. They will start from London for Bombay on October 11th or 18th.

There is a time when the laziest man can hurry. It is when the train stops 10 minutes for refreshments.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, SEPT. 27, 1888.

A change is about to be made in the proprietorship of the Owen Sound Times. We understand that Mr. Rutherford will take over the paper and run it in connection with his job office. We are glad to hear this, as it is an evidence of the stability of the Empire. Friend Creighton has a better berth now than running a country weekly, and the paper of which he is the head can boast a superiority over any daily newspaper in Canada. It is simply a magnificent success.

The deadly yellow fever has been making terrible havoc in the far south. Jacksonville, Florida, is its base of supplies, to use a military expression, and of late it has been sending advance corpse into adjacent cities. In Jacksonville it numbers its victims by the hundred daily. In that city, up to Sept. 23, 1,878 cases were reported, of which 212 had proven fatal. The dread disease has also shown itself in Atlanta, Jackson, Decatur, and other minor places. Yellow fever is the bane of the torrid zone, while smallpox holds about the same position in the north, although not quite so deadly in its march, thanks mostly to a better sanitary condition.

We are indebted to Mr. Peter Holman, of Flesherton, for copies of two foreign newspapers—Le Figaro, of Paris, and the Swiss Herald, published at Nice and Geneva. The Herald is a tourists' paper, and Le Figaro is one of the oldest of French dailies, having been founded in 1854, under the able editorial management of such brilliant writers as M. Rochefort, Sarcey, Villemessant, Scholl, Banville, and two or three others. A French correspondent says that "Figaro, of the important newspapers of the world, is the least reputable and most frankly mercenary." The circulation of the paper is from sixty to eighty thousand copies each day. M. Albert Wolff is the most important writer for Figaro. He is brilliant, but he is the homeliest man in the world, and we have his picture right here to verify our statement.

General News.

Gen. Boulanger is in Morocco.

The Toronto plumbers' strike is over and the cigarmakers' is on a fair way to settlement.

Angus Jacobs, the Caughnawaga Indian who killed his wife, was found guilty Thursday of manslaughter.

The C. P. crop reports state that there will be 15,000,000 bushels of wheat available for export from Manitoba and the Northwest, of which 11,000,000 are in perfect condition.

Hon. Edward Blake arrived home Friday, much improved in health.

The total gate receipts at the Industrial Fair were $59,604, against $51,070 last year.

Four cases of small pox have been discovered in Toronto.

When the system is debilitated by disease, it should be strengthened and renewed with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine invariably proves itself worthy of all that can be said in its favor. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicines. Price $1. Six bottles $5.

Died.

Fawcett—At Kimberley on Sat. morning, 22 inst. Mary, infant daughter of James Fawcett, aged seven weeks.

FLESHERTON'S BIG DAY.

THE EAST GREY EXHIBITION A GRAND SUCCESS.

Exhibits Good in Nearly Every Class—Flesherton Wins the Cup—A General Description—Notes of the Fair.

FIRST DAY—MONDAY.

The East Grey Agricultural Society have been favored with exceptionally fine weather for their exhibition this year. The first day of the fair opened warm and cloudless, which angured well for a big influx of visitors. Heretofore the "first day" has simply been a day of preparation and visitors have been nil. This year attractions were offered, in the shape of baseball and lacrosse matches, which had the effect of drawing to the grounds between two and three hundred people. The Owen Sound lacrosse team were to have been present to compete for a cup, bnt failed to materialize. However, the afternoon was quite fully occupied in witnessing two very interesting baseball games, of seven innings each, between Redwing, Priceville and Flesherton clubs. The games started about two o'clock, Priceville being pitted against Redwing, Flesherton having drawn the blank. Priceville had no apparent difficulty in getting away with their first apponents, the score being 20 to 4, in innings as follows:

Priceville—2 1 2 5 1 6 3—20
Redwing—3 0 0 0 0 0 1—4

The Redwings then dropped to the rear and watched Flesherton knock out Priceville very nearly as ignominiously as they had been. We have always maintained that Flesherton has the material for a first-class baseball club, and now we are in a position to offer proof to the fact. Our boys all appeared in good form, and surprised every spectator on the grounds, as well as their apponents, by most brilliant playing all around. The clubs were a tie at the end of the first three innings, in fact at the end of the fourth innings Flesherton was only one ahead. Then, in the fifth, the home club succeeded in rolling up six runs, and Priceville, in the first half of the seventh, only succeeded in counting one, thereby making it unnecessary for Flesherton to play the seventh. The score stood thu:

Flesherton—4 0 8 1 6 4—18
Priceville— 5 1 1 0 0 1— 8

This gave to Flesherton the handsome and costly cup presented by the directors. It is a very hannsome souvenier, and something that our boys may be, and are, very proud of. W. A. Brown, of Markdale, filled the onerous position of umpire, and did it, we think, to the entire satisfaction of all parties. "Kicking" was conspicuous by its absence.

About five o'clock the Agricultural Hall was opened to visitors. The display here was much above average. In fact no such collection, taking all departments into consideration, has ever been shown here. The fruit collection was very fine. It was a sight to gladden the eyes of fruit-lovers, and must be a surprise to many outsiders who have heretofore considered this as a not first-class fruit-growing section. Luscious plums, large and small apples of all varieties known in Canada, grapes, pears, etc., were present in large quanties and of the very finest quality. There was a very fair showing of vegetables, Mr. Norton, of Holand, taking several prizes. The grain shown was excellent in quality, although there was not a very large display. Ladies' work was scarcely up to the standard, although there were some very fine specimens shown. The competition in butter and cheese was not very keen—not as keen at it should be, by a long way. This is one article which it would pay farmers to take more pains with than they do. So much butter of inferior quality is foisted upon the market that it tends to keep the prices low. Most of the butter shown was good—not any of it coming under the head of inferior, and the first and second prize articles were prime.

SECOND DAY.

This was the great day of the show, and opened as auspiciously as did the first, with a bright and cloudless sky. Vehicles began to come in at an early hour, and by noon there was a large crowd of people in town, on business and pleasure bent. All the departments were open. It was expected that the Owen Sound lacrosse club would have been down on the morning train to give our boys a tussle, but once more they did not manterialize. Our confidence in Owen Sound lacrosse men is very badly shaken. However, two scrub teams were got up from Flesherton young men, who played an exhibition game.

In the hall a large crowd of people viewed the exhibits. Among many shown we noticed two magnificient sets of harness, shown by D. Clayton, Flesherton's harnessmaker; a fine display of stoves by F. G. Karstedt; a very neat case of fancy chinaware, by M. Richardson & Co., which also contained the silver cup won by the baseball club on the previous day; a fine parlor suite, by friend Moore of the Flesherton furniture warerooms, etc. Articles in the hall were very tastily arranged, under the instruction and supervision of several of Flesherton's professional merchant wiudow-dressers.

An exhibition which interested the ladies very much was that made by the Singer Sewing Machine Company. They had three machines on exhibition,—a magnificent drop cabinet, a plain machine, and an old-fashioned one as a comparison with those embodying the late improvements. It was interesting to note the radical changes that have taken place in the construction of this old and standard machine. We see before us now an instrument that approaches as near, one would think, to perfection, as it could be brought. Almost noiseless, shuttle very simple and inserted underneath. It will do etching with single stitch, and the tension is adapted to any kind of thread. There is also a buttonhole maker attachment. The shuttle is an oscillating hook, and of the most simple construction. Mr. Carson is agent for the machine in Flesherton.

The poultry exhibit was above average, in fact good, several grand specimens of geese and ducks being shown; the other fowl were just medium.

Mr. J. H. Heard had a fine display of wagons and buggies on the ground, consisting of two lumber wagons, two democrats, and two buggies, all finished in the highest style of Mr. Heard's well-known art. This was the finest display ever shown by the firm.

In the live stock department lay the weakest point of the fair (with the exception of horses), spectators remarking that the show of cattle and other stock appears to be degenerating year by year. This is hard to account for, although a partial explanation may lay in the fact that farmers are going more and more into grain and fruit raising than they have formerly. Horses, also, appear to claim more attention than heretofore, and by the exhibt made on Tuesday we would judge to some purpose. There were some grand specimens of equine flesh shown, and the exhibit was the best which Flesherton has seen.

We have devoted so much space to a general description of the fair that it is impossible to furnish our readers with the prize list this week. That will follow in next edition.

It is a pleasing duty to state that the East Grey Exhibition of 1888 has been an unqualified success, the receipts amounting to more than double those of last year. This was no doubt owing partially to the pleasant weather which favored it, but we are loath to place all to the credit of the weather. We would fain hope that it is rather an awakening of the yeomanry to a sense of the importance attachable to the home fair, which is of much more benefit to them than the large general fairs which have sprung into existence within the past few years.

Notes of the Fair.

The fakir was out in full force, and raked in many dollars. When will our people, young and old, learn the lesson of wisdom and let this class of villains alone!

A lady had her pocket picked, but caught the thief in time to make him disgorge her pocket-book.

The R. T. of T. gave a hot dinner in the town hall, which was partaken of by a large number.

The ladies of the Methodist church gave a cold lunch on the grounds.

The foot race was a dismal failure, only two starters appearing, —, Bruce, of Thornbury, and J. Gibbons, of Flesherton. Bruce took first.

There were no entries for the bicycle race.

The directors wore smiling faces on Tuesday evening.

We hope the smile will be more pronounced next year.

Among the visitors from Markdale we noticed Mr. Routledge and wife, of the Standard, W. A. Brown, Esq., and wife, and R. L. Stephens and wife.

Tea Meeting at Priceville.

The tea meeting held at Priceville on Monday evening under the auspices of the Methodist Church, was an unqualified success. A large number of people were present. Speeches were given by Revs. Mr. Buggin, of Markdale, Shilton, of Flesherton, and McLeod; also Dugal Maclean, of Priceville, Mr. McLean's address being the hit of the evening. As Mr. McLean remarked, if he had received the seven years' chances of other speakers "he could knock the spots off them." He succeeded in doing it as it was. Miss Whitmore gave a recitation, which she rendered in a pleasing manner. Mr Brander gave a humorous recitation which was received with much applause, entitled "Sugar for Naething." Rev. Mr. Ottewell, to whose energy the people of Priceville are indebted for the excellence of this entertainment, informs us that it was one of the most successful concerts ever held in Priceville. About a dozen went over from here, including the Flesherton Glee Club, which rendered several pieces quite nicely. The quota from Flesherton was composed of two loads—ten in one rig and two in the other. Mr. Earl Strain and—well somebody else used the single rig.—

New Station.

Work has been commenced on the building of a new station at this place. A gang of men are now filling up the depression on the east side of the track, and when this is done the new building will be erected, larger and finer than the old one. Two new side tracks have been laid which were found necessary, owing to the largely increasing shipping trade done at this point. Our wishes for the bending of the track have not been met, but that is not our fault. A "man can but do his best," and if others fail in their duty "a man" has the satisfaction of carrying a clear conscience, which the other fellows have not. Flesherton has grown and throve for years with the station where it is, and Flesherton is going to thrive still more, even if there never comes an upheaval of dry bones and a nearer connection with the railway.

DRESS GOODS—NEW FALL DRESS GOODS. In this line we have made special efforts this season to place before our customers an unusually attractive line—See them.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

APPLES FOR SALE.

Choice apples for sale by
M. R. HAMMOND,
Postmaster, Kimberley.

Farm to Rent.

100 acres, being lot 35, 5th Con., Artemesia, 80 acres improved. Apply to
HENRY DOWN,
Flesherton P.O.
Or at the place. tf

Strayed or Stolen.

From Lot 35, 5th Con., Artemesia, 2 heifers, 1 year old, red and white. Information thankfully received by
HENRY DOWN,
Flesherton P.O.

Piano For Sale.

A beautiful 7 octave upright Dominion Piano nearly new, at a bargain. Apply at Advance office.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 80 to	5 00
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 50	0 55
Oats	0 30	0 30
Peas	0 50	0 55
Butter	0 15	0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 15	0 15
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 50
Pork	6 50	6 50
Hay per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	19	23
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 60

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M., J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.,

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Manslaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AG'T, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton,
Or to J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont

THIS PAPER may be found on file at [illegible] Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where Advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot of

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

REMOVAL!

F. G. KARSTEDT,

Having purchased the stock of WM. STRAIN, is now in a better position than ever to take the lead in

STOVES,

TIN,

COPPERWARE,

And Metal Work of all kinds.

Eavetroughing a Specialty.

F. G. KARSTEDT,

STRAIN'S BLOCK, FLESHERTON,

A Positive Cure. ✢ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✢ A Pleasant Cure.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

A terrible accident occurred last Monday night about three miles from Thornbury. Mr. Sampson of Toronto while on a fishing excursion, camped near Archie Laundry's place on the lake shore. During the night the camp fire caught the tent and before Mr. Sampson and party were aware of the danger their blankets and bedding were in flames. Mr. Sampson was badly burned about the head and arms and his son received great injuries about the feet. Both had to be taken by first train on Tuesday to the city for treatment, and are reported doing well. —[Thornbury Standard

Mr. James Hare, a respected farmer living near Holland Centre, met with a serious accident on Saturday, which will probably render him helpless the rest of his life if it does not even yet prove fatal. They were hauling in oats that day, of which a load had just been driven into the barn, and Mr. Hare was standing on it pitching off, when the horses suddenly stepped forward and the jerk threw him backwards off the load. He fell heavily, the back of his head and shoulders striking the floor first and rendering him insensible. He was carried to the house and medical aid at once summoned, when, after he returned to consciousness it was found that his body was completely paralyzed from the neck down. Mr. Hare, who is the father of our respected Township clerk, is upwards of 70 years of age, and Dr Oldham, who is attending him, considers his case a very critical one. —[Chatsworth News.

Grey Assizes.

Sutton v. McLaughlan.—Verdict for plaintiff.

Farrar v. Gilray.—Tried at the Spring Assizes here, when verdict was given for defendants. Upon application of plaintiffs a new trial was granted. Verdict for plaintiffs.

QUEEN v. FAREWELL.—This was a case of criminal libel. The defendant, Jerome Farewell, editor of the Union Standard, was charged by Alex. Crosse, the prosecutor, with publishing in his paper a letter and his comments thereon, which libelled him. The reasons given for bringing a crimial action instead of a civil suit, was that Farewell was not supposed to be worth anything. The defendant relied on the defence that he had nothing to do whatever with the newspapers, having sold out a couple of years ago to Elias Lemon of this town, and produced the Bill of Sale. Mr. Lemon testified to the same effect. The jury found a verdict of "Not Guilty," Jno. Creasor, Q. C. and W. Dyre for prosecution. Mr. Fullerton for defendant.—[O. S. Times.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVean, 262 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,

FLESHERTON.

HEARD'S

Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

FREE $85 solid GOLD WATCH sent for $100 until lately. Best $85 watch in the world. Perfect timekeeper. Warranted. Heavy Solid Gold Hunting Cases. Elegant and magnificent. Both ladies' and gents' sizes with works and cases of equal value. ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one FREE. How is this possible? We answer—we want one person in each locality, to keep in their homes, and show to those who call, a complete line of our valuable and very useful HOUSEHOLD SAMPLES. These samples, as well as the watch, we send free, and after you have kept them in your home for 3 months and shown them to those who may have called, they become your own property. It is possible to make this great offer, sending the SOLID GOLD watch and COSTLY samples free, as the showing of the samples in any locality, always results in a large trade for us; after our samples have been in a locality for a month or two we usually get from $1000 to $5000 in trade from the surrounding country. This, the most wonderful offer ever known, is made in order that our samples may be placed at once where they can be seen, all over America. Write at once, and make sure of the chance. Reader it will be hardly any trouble for you to show the samples to those who may call at your home and your reward will be most satisfactory. A postal card on which to write us costs but 1 cent and after you know all, if you do not care to go further, why no harm is done. But if you do, send your address at once, you can secure FREE one of the best solid gold watches in the world and our large line of COSTLY SAMPLES. We pay all express, freight, etc. Address GEO. STINSON & CO., Box 413, PORTLAND, MAINE.

STONE FLOUR!

STONE FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Desires to inform the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr. Loucks would inform the public that he has never sold roller flour, and never intends to; also, that he has always had stone flour on hand and for sale since last winter, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

FISH, FRUIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT FLESHERTON.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

The Advance
TILL JAN. 1, 1889,
For 20 cts

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

FLESHERTON Implement Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broad-cut Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Rakes,	Iron Harrows,
Waggons,	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Buggies,	Pivots,
Sleighs,	Scufflers,
Cutters,	Turnip Drills,
Fanning Mills,	Land Rollers.
Spring Tooth Cultivators,

ROYAL WEDDING DRESSES.

The Magnificent Costumes Worn at the Great French Wedding Yesterday.

POEMS IN SILKS, SATINS AND LACE.

A cable correspondent supplies the following additional particulars of the wedding of the Duke of Aosta to Princess Letitia in Turin yesterday:

The cavalcade escorting the carriages, which was composed of officers clad in mediæval Savoy costumes and divided into four troops, were dressed respectively in blue and green. It is the first time since 1859 that a member of the Bonaparte family has made a marriage into one of the reigning families in Europe.

The wedding robe of Princess Letitia was of white silk, the style of the First Empire, adorned with rich silver embroidery and wreaths of orange flowers. She wore a splendid diadem in diamonds. The grand mantle was of white silk, and was over six and a half yards in length. Attached to the corsage, it formed an immense train. On it were embroidered in silver 360 bees and 160 eagles, the emblems of the house of Bonaparte. The three sons of the Duke of Aosta presented their future step-mother with a pearl necklace which cost $60,000.

The Queen of Italy looked well in heliotrope silk. The Queen of Portugal was dressed in a rich cream brocaded silk.

After the wedding, all the characters in the fete having assembled at the palace grounds, the scene presented was most brilliant and picturesque. The flower basket was now full of life and the brightness of varied colors in costumes of cavaliers standing on its outer edge gave additional animation and a black mass of at least 100,000 people collected around completed the most imposing picture. Twelve bands played together a wedding march arranged upon Mendelssohn's.

Kossuth sent the following telegram to Prince Jerome:

"An old man, an exile from my native land, divided from the past by an abyss, I yet retain deeply graven in my heart one feeling—that of gratitude. There was a time when I was entitled to speak in the name of Hungary. That time no longer exists; yet I may state that many Hungarians, like myself, are mindful of all that Prince Napoleon accomplished for the freedom of Hungary, and that they unite with me in sending their congratulations on this solemn occasion."

The two most magnificent dresses were worn by Queen Margheretta and Princess Mathilde. The former wore for church a mauve satin, brocaded with rippled lines in the same color and having a directoire coat in a pale silver gray brocade of the same pattern, made with long, square ends at the back, reaching to the skirt hem. This coat has a deep vest in mauve brocade, elaborately embroidered with steel cord and steel and crystal beads; the skirt breadths part in front over straight folds of the gray brocade, each side of the opening being edged with embroidery to match the vest; the short dolman wrap of the gray brocade is also bordered with similar embroidery and is lined throughout with plain mauve satin.

The Princess Mathilde wore a tulle of bluish pearl color, the front and sides and skirt elaborately embroidered with gold and bordered with gold lace, and the former dotted all over with spots formed of a single gray pearl and one gold spangle combined. The edge skirt front was finished with deep fringe in gray pearls and steel beads, falling over a band of gold lace. The train, over four yards in length, is in pearl gray faille brocaded with bouquets of red and pink roses, with their foliage intermixed with gold flowers. This magnificent silk was manufactured at Lyons over twenty years ago expressly for the Empress Eugenie. After the death of Napoleon III. the Empress presented it to the Princess. The sides of the train are each caught together in a single long, narrow fold, which is held in place by bow knot shaped ornaments in gold passementerie, and it is lined throughout with gold yellow satin.

The Duke of Aosta and Princess Letitia have been at the royal palace since Thursday, receiving deputations and presents. Probably the most worthy of mention is the gift of 400 ladies of Turin—a Sedan chair, richly embellished, and intended to remind her of a lost art of Turin. Also a gift from the municipality, a tapestry chest in the style of the seventeenth century, containing specimens of the richest brocades, silks and velvets of Italy.

So ended the long talked of marital fete. Henceforth Princess Letitia is sister-in-law to her own mother, stepmother to one set of cousins and aunt to the remainder, while the Duke becomes son-in-law to his sister, nephew to his brother and brother-in-law to his nephews.

A Pretty Experiment.

Suspend from the ceiling a thread which has previously been soaked in very salt water and then dried. To this fasten a light ring and announce that you are about to burn the thread without making the ring fall. The thread will burn, it is true, but the ashes it leaves are composed of crystals of salt and their cohesion is strong enough to sustain the light weight of the object attached to the thread.

Another form of the same experiment is to make a little hammock of muslin to be suspended by four threads, and, after having soaked this in salted water and dried it, as before directed, to place in it an empty egg-shell. Set the hammock on fire; the muslin will be consumed and the flame reach the threads which hold it, without the egg falling from its frail support.

With great care you may even succeed in performing the experiment with a full egg, in place of an empty shell, taking the precaution, however, to have it previously hard boiled, that you may escape an omelet in case of failure.

Longevity.

"Longevity! I should say longevity did run in our family," said Mrs. Spriggins. "Why, John was six foot two, Bill was six foot four, and George he had more longevity than any man I ever see. He was six foot seven if he was a foot."

Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton has gone to Marienbad to recuperate from the dissipations of fashionable London.

A SORROFUL SPECTACLE.

A Young Man Finds His Bride in Her Coffin---She Fell Dead at a Dance, While He was on His Way to the Wedding.

A Detroit telegram says: A sad little cortege left 31 Twentieth street before 9 o'clock this morning for Woodmere Cemetery. All that was mortal of Mary Cowan, a good-looking girl of 21, was laid to rest in that city of the dead. Robert Crawford, who lived at Delray, was the unwelcome suitor of the girl, the latter's step-parents turning a cold shoulder upon his advances towards Mary. She was, however, determined to marry Crawford, and the wedding was set for last night. Their acquaintance had been of about a year's duration, and within the last three weeks she left her step-parents' home and went to Delray to live with Crawford's sister, Crawford himself being absent on a lake steamer. On Saturday night some of Mary's friends invited her to indulge in a last dance before her marriage, and she accepted it somewhat against her inclination. During the progress of a quadrille, towards the close of the evening's pleasure, Mary suddenly became faint and dropped limp and lifeless in her partner's arms. She was quickly given air and sprinkled with water, but she did not revive and physicians were called. By the time the latter arrived the girl was dead. The doctors made an examination and found that she had been very tightly laced. On opening the corset the flesh was found to be doubled over under the pressure of the stays. The physician's verdict was that she had expired from the bursting of a blood vessel, caused by overheating and tight lacing. Mary was always a remarkably healthy girl, and the doctors in view of that fact could arrive at no other conclusion. The corpse was brought to Detroit Sunday and was viewed by a large number of friends. Young Crawford arrived at his sister's house last night to claim his bride and was nearly prostrated with the sad intelligence. Unknown to the dead girl's step-parents he appeared at the funeral services at the house this morning. He was the picture of grief and he was too late to get a view of his affianced's face before the lid was shut down. He remained outside during the most of the ceremonies, and then, moved by a strong impulse, he made his way into the house and requested that the lid be raised. His wish was granted; he took one last, long lingering look at the loved features of the dead; then, burying his face in his hands, he, sobbing, turned away and moved sorrowfully out of the room.

DOWN TO DEATH.

Heartrending Details of the Great Hurricane in Cuba — Hundreds Dead, Thousands Homeless.

A Havana despatch says: In Caibarien the damage done to property by the recent cyclone is enormous. The total number of lives lost in the city and its suburbs is forty-six. The situation at Vuelta Abajo is sad indeed. The tobacco crop is a total loss, and over 3,000 houses, shanties and other small houses are totally destroyed. Then thousand people are left homeless and in great misery. The greatest damage caused on the island by the storm was at Sagua and in Isabella. Over 1,000 buildings were destroyed. The sea rose six feet. Many of those who escaped death from flying timbers were drowned. The loss of life in Sagua alone is over 400. A passenger train in Isabella running thirty miles an hour was caught by the wind. The rails were bent as if they were hairpins, the train being precipitated into a marsh which completely covered it. Seventy-two lives were lost. In Sagua the only building standing is the residence of Domingo Madariaga on the coast at a place called Higueratta. The Spanish schooners America, Anita, Segunda, Ignacia, Esperanza and Atoona are ashore and total wrecks. In Ceiba del Agua over 100 houses were destroyed. The damage caused by this terrible hurricane is estimated at over $10,000,000. Over 800 persons lost their lives. Thousands of persons are homeless and perishing from hunger. A special from Caibarien says that seventy-two bodies, victims of the late hurricane, have been recovered.

Facts Not Generally Known.

A club of society women in London is going to start a large poultry farm near London. Bee culture is also included in the scheme.

The city of Pueblo, Mexico, has just had a hailstorm so violent that her streets and roofs were blanketed with white, and all traffic for the time suspended.

Topaz is not a particularly valuable stone, but it has now gone to the top as the latest fashion for beautiful, white-throated women's necklaces. The result must be a rapid advance in price, which change, with some people, will only add to its liquid, golden charm.

From the report that of 560 convicts received in a Pennsylvania jail last year only eighty had learned a trade, the lesson is drawn that every boy ought to learn a trade. But it may have been that the eighty went to jail in consequence of practising the very trades they had learned.

In New Mexico the Spanish language is the language of the courts, the council and the assembly. Legislative debates are carried on in Spanish, and laws are framed in that language. English is a secondary tongue, and a person is at a decided disadvantage even in transacting business unless he is familiar with Spanish.

All in the Family.

Employer—So you think you ought to have an increase of salary?

Clerk—Yes, sir; I will soon need double my present pay for I intend to marry.

Really, sir, I should like to accommodate you, but my business is not profitable just now, and every cent I add to your wages must come out of the small margin on which I support my family.

"Oh, that's all right. The money won't go out of the family. I intend to marry your daughter."

Signs of Portent.

Fan—Oh, Lil, when is your friend's marriage coming off? Do tell her to have pity on her friends and let it be soon, so we shall hear about something else.

Lil—You won't have much longer to wait. She and Tom have quarreled every day for a week, and I believe that's the last stage of necessary preparation.

HOOSAC TUNNEL ADVENTURE.

Workmen Overcome by Gas in a Tunnel are Rescued before the Express Ran In.

A last (Sunday) night's North Adams Mass., despatch says: A terrible disaster was narrowly averted in the Hoosac tunnel yesterday afternoon, when 69 workmen employed in the tunnel were overcome by the coal gas from a passing locomotive. The men were divided into three gangs, 39 being masons employed in repairing the brick arch, 22 in the electric light gang, and 8 in the track gang. The extra freight train No. 31 went east shortly after 9 o'clock, followed soon after by No. 49 west, filling the tunnel with smoke. When the second extra 31 came up the grade with a heavy freight, the engine had lost steam, so that when the train went into the tunnel the fire box was filled with fresh coal. The masons, working about 1,000 feet from the west end, were only slightly affected by the gas as the train passed, but shortly after the flagman towards the west shaft reported to Overseer McGrath that the trackmen in the 3,000 foot section and the electric light men in the 6,000 foot section were overcome by gas. Express No. 33 had just entered the tunnel from the west, and McGrath ordered it flagged, which proved a wise precaution. He then ordered all the men from their work to rescue the track and electric light men. Push cars were forced into the tunnel and the rescuers found the men lying all along the track, some partly and some wholly overcome. All the men were placed on the cars and brought out into the open air. Eighteen men were found unconscious in the 6,000 foot section, nearly all of them being on the east-bound track. Had the east-bound express been allowed to pass the slaughter would have been terrible. Some of the men were so badly overcome that it was several hours before they were fully restored to consciousness. It is thought that two of the men will die.

Latest Northwest News.

Miss MacPherson, of immigration fame, is in the city.

Hon. Edgar Dewdney, in his speech on nomination day, says he is against prohibition being continued in the Northwest.

According to the Calgary Herald, over 4,000 head of cattle have already been secured for export from the Alberta ranges.

The Hudson Bay promoters had another interview with the Lieutenant-Governor to-day. They said they received a promise of a guarantee upon $2,500,000, and, withdrawing their former objections, they will accept this if they can do no better.

The Methodist delegates at present in Winnipeg have been interviewed on the question of a union of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. The general opinion was that, while such a fusion was desirable, there were difficulties in the way that would prevent such an amalgamation, at least in the near future.

The Local Government have decided to bonus the Hudson Bay Railway scheme to the extent of $2,500,000 and no more, the conditions to be of a cast-iron nature and to call for a completed road. It is said that the company will accept the offer, although they wanted $4,500,000. They hoped to induce the Northwest Legislature to pass at its next session legislation calling upon the Dominion Government to hypothecate a portion of the subsidy which the Northwest Provinces yet unorganised will receive in the future and to aid the Hudson Bay Road with it.

The Methodist Board of Missions has considered the items of the schedules, showing in detail the amounts asked for the support of missionaries on various foreign fields. The total amount asked for the Japan work was $22,479. The amounts for Indian work in the several conferences were as follows: Toronto Conference, $3,300; London, $3,835; Niagara, $2,220; Guelph, $1,978; Bay of Quinte, $1,723; Montreal, $1,205; Manitoba, $16,020; British Columbia, $15,227; grand total asked for Indian work, $45,503. The amounts asked for conferences severally, for domestic missions, were as follows: Toronto Conference, $12,840; London, $11,414; Niagara, $5,014; Guelph, $12,120; Bay of Quinte, $18,564; Montreal, $24,350; British Columbia, $8,543; Newfoundland, $23,885; Nova Scotia, $14,446; New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, $15,434.

W. Bissett, farmer, of Minecta, was killed by falling from a load of grain, the wheels passing over his head.

David Ogilvie, hotelkeeper, of East Selkirk, while duck-shooting yesterday, accidentally discharged the contents of his gun through the calf of his leg. He died last night from loss of blood.

The Methodist Mission Board has adjourned. Much time was spent in discussing the British Columbia report. Rev. Mr. Starr presented the case and pointed out, that while the Methodists had a great hold among the Indians on the coast, their work was being discredited by the reports of the Government agents and others that the Methodist missionaries were sowing the seeds of sedition, inciting the Indians to rebellion, and, in addition, were guilty of immoral practices with the squaws. These representations were made to the Government, and it was charged that the removal of the Metlakahtla Indians to Alaska was due to missionary persuasion. The Board regarded the question as a most serious one and a long time was spent in discussing the various aspects of it. It was felt that the honor of the Church demanded an immediate investigation. A commission of three fathers was proposed, a start to be made at once. It is most probable that this proposal will be adopted and that an immediate start will be made.

How the World Changes.

The Scottish Leader says: "How different the world will be in a century may be gathered from two or three inventions that are just now being critically examined. An electrical carriage was tried the other night in St. James' street, and proved a complete success, running up and down the road as rapidly as though pulled by a team of horses, and absolutely under control. And now an enterprising inventor purposes to build rowing boats wholly of aluminium, the lightest known of all metals, and one of the toughest. A third invention promises a chemical substitute for silk."

Solomon Asher, a Philadelphia dancing master, who has just returned from an extended trip in Europe, says that Americans are everywhere regarded as the best dancers in the world.

A SOUTH SEA ROMACE.

The Lonely Inhabitants on the Island Ojee.

A New York telegram says: Two years ago Charles Murtagh, jun., 16 years old, the son of a well known citizen of Brooklyn, while looking over a large map of the world noticed in the South Sea a cluster of islands. The furthest was the island of Ojee. A boy's pride to write a letter to such a place seized him, and he asked his grandfather about the matter. Grandfather Murtagh had been a seafaring man in earlier days, and among his bosom friends had been a Captain Green. The latter left these shores many years ago, and had never been heard of afterwards. As a freak Murtagh told his grandson to address the letter to Green, and the letter was delivered to the captain of a vessel bound for Australia.

Last Monday the boy received a letter in answer. The edges were badly crumpled, and the missive had the appearance of having been handled over and over. The letter was opened, but no date was found therein. Farther down it was seen to have been written in July, 1887. The letter young Murtagh wrote really reached a man named Green, an inhabitant on the island. The writer and a number of other white people were alone on the island.

More than thirty years ago a vessel left New York for St. Helena, and the commander was Captain Green. There was a crew of 14 men, besides two women. Everything went well until the vessel almost reached the Canary Islands, when a gale sprang up. The ship foundered, the crew took to the boats, and finally, after many months' drifting, landed on the coral reefs of the island of Ojee, 7,000 miles from their original destination. There were no signs of habitation visible. They were castaways, with no immediate prospect of hearing from home unless by the chance of passing vessels coming that way. So it continued for years. Those on the island intermarried until the population reached 54. Plenty of game was found on the island. Finally a whaling vessel came that way, and some of the survivors went on board and engaged as seamen. The original number on the island finally dwindled year by year. Many died, until now only three men and nine women remained. The writer next said that for four years there had not been a vessel in sight. The letter had been written some time, but could not be dated, as it was not known when the next vessel would pass the island. The writer declared it a lonesome spot, but now there were plenty of cows and pigs, besides other cattle. Plenty of game kept him alive for years.

A Sad, Sad Tale.

A stranger with a sad, tired look and a manner indicating that he wished to escape general observation, came wearily into a little western town the other day. He stopped at the town well to slake his thirst and bathe his flushed face and brow, and while he drank a denizen of the town drew near to quaff of the cooling water. He, too, had a careworn face and an air of general discouragement.

"Stranger here, ain't you?" he asked of the wayfarer.

"Yes—stranger now, but I used to live 'round here."

"No—did you? Lately?"

"No; its nigh on to ten years since I left."

"And you ain't been back since?"

"No. There's been a good many changes, I see, since then, and I don't reckon there's many left I useter know."

"Mebbe not; who'd you know?"

"Well, lemme see—there was a woman named Watts I useter to know—Sally Watts."

"Did you know Sally Watts? asked the denizen of the town.

"Knowed her well. I—I—did you ever hear of Sally?"

"Yes, I——"

"Don you know Sally Watts?"

"Yes—I—I——"

The wayfarer looked carefully around, lowered his voice and said cautiously:

"See here, mister, I've a favor to ask. It ain't much. Would you mind not mentionin' to Sally Watts that a stranger was 'round astin' fer her? She'd know it was me, an' I'd ruther have a hyener on my trail than Sally Watts. She's an idee I'm dead, an' I want her to cling to that idee. If you know Sally Watts, mister, mebbe you know how nigh she comes to bein' kin to the devil. If she ain't a Zantippy I never see one. Lookee here stranger; you've got a sympathetic kind of a face and I b'leeve you know how to feel fer a feller that's went through what I've went through with, an' I feel as if I'd like to confide in you. Stranger, I useter be married to Sally Watts?"

The recipient of this confidence gave a little gasp and wrung the hand of the poor wayfarer, saying with deep fervor:

"Pity me, man, I'm married to her now!"
—Detroit Free Press.

Bagging at the Knees.

Barclay Warburton, a Philadelphia dude, being asked how he kept his trousers from bagging at the knees, replied: "I only wear a pair of trousers one day and I don't know what my man does with them after that. To prevent their bagging for the twelve hours in which I wear them I have them lined around the knees with cardboard and I never sit down." Being asked what a man is to do who cannot afford 365 pairs of trousers a year Mr. Warburton replied: "Wear kilts as the Highlanders do."

Not Dangerous

"Julia, perhaps I am staying too late. Is not that your father tapping on the floor overhead?"

"Yes, Arthur, but don't go yet. He isn't dangerously mad until he goes tearing along the hall beating the gong."

The French court has rendered a decision which, if it were to be followed in this country, might give no end of trouble to spectacle and burlesque managers. Mme. Schaeffer, an actress at Rouen, absolutely refused to wear tights in a piece for which she was cast, whereupon the manager refused to pay her salary. She sued him, and the court decided that "the obligation to show one's legs was not of necessity a part of the dramatic profession," and gave judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

THE CANADIAN HOT SPRINGS.

An Apparently "Infernal Hole" in the Rocky Mountains—Some Wonderful Sights.

(E. Sprague in Toronto Globe.)

To the tourist the most interesting points will be the hot springs, flowing from different elevations of Sulphur Mountain. They are owned by the Government, which, at the lower spring, near the town, has erected very ornamental buildings for the use of bathers. The water at this point issues in two distinct ways from the mountain, offering the peculiarity of both inside and outside natural bathing facilities in warm water. Within, scooped in the cave is a large grotto containing a pool 90 feet in circumferance, from whose bottom issue several springs at a very high temperature, cooled, however, by a stream of cold water falling from one of the walls at the height of four feet and reducing the water to a tepid state. This cave was formerly entered by a ladder through a small opening in the roof, just large enough to admit a man's body. A small outlet to it was subsequently discovered, which has been enlarged and converted into a tunnel 100 feet long, now giving access to the grotto. The pool is lined with concrete and surrounded by a wooden platform furnished with benches. Seated upon one of these, gazing first down into the dark waters, then up to the lofty roof and walls carved by the action of the sulphuric springs into every imaginable variety of stalactite and fungoid formation, inhaling the brimstoney vapors at a temperature of 95°, no more weird or infernal spot could be dreamt of. Truly Stygian resorts in which devils might well disport themselves. Without, not 100 yards from the cave, is a basin, a large open pool just at the base of the mountain, which has been enclosed and converted into an ideal swimming bath; here the water can be regulated to any depth by means of a waste pipe. It is of a clear blue indigo color and may be seen issuing from the bottom in round indigo blue spots. The temperature is quite as warm as that of an ordinary hot bath, and this may be enjoyed in the open air under a green hill beneath a brilliant blue sky brilliantly reflected in the clear pool. Two miles from the town and hotel is the upper or hottest spring high on the side of Sulphur Mountain. At this point the water gushes from the rock at 120° Fahrenheit, and from it is conveyed by iron pipes to the C.P.R. hotel below. The best accommodation at this spot is afforded by Dr. Brett's excellent bath-house, which provides every convenience for bathing and swimming. The Government have made no improvements here as yet, probably owing to the distance from the town, beyond cutting a good road at the side of Sulphur Mountain.

Sudden Collapse of Peruvian Paper money.

Reports received in Washington from Callao describe the sudden collapse of the paper money of Peru. Part of this currency, amounting to 20,000,000 soles, was issued by the banks at Lima ten years, and guaranteed by the government. The remaining 40,000,000 soles is government money. Its purchasing capacity declined several years ago to one twentieth of that of silver, but in the absence of any other circulating medium, it continued to be used by the people. Finally, in the brief period of ten days, confidence was lost in it so rapidly that it was virtually repudiated in all business transactions not directly connected with the government which receives it in half payment for duties on imports, and pays it out to its employees. The amount of silver in circulation in Peru is very small. The banks and Commercial houses of Lima and Callao could not produce 2,000,000 soles. The experience of Peru is but a repitition of that of every other country that has violated the scientific law in establishings as a circulating medium an article that has no exchangeable value itself, and is not made redeemable in a commodity that has—only swift and disastrous.—From the Science.

A Child's Awful Death.

Thursday afternoon [illegible] ty-five tourists visited the summit Pike's Peak. Between 2 and 3 o'clock a severe electric storm, accompanied by a heavy fall of rain, occurred. The visitors took refuge in the signal station. Laura Cook, aged 14 years, daughter of George D. Cook, of Chicago, was standing in the doorway while the storm was at its height. Suddenly, and simultaneously with a deafening crash, a blinding light filled the room, and the spectators were horrified to see the blue blaze of a lightning bolt strike the unfortunate girl full in the face and circle downward around her body. She was knocked lifeless to the floor, and a fearful sight met the eyes of her friends. Her head was swollen to an enormous size, and her body and limbs were cut in strips and horribly mutilated. The incident is a peculiar phenomenon, and old mountaineers claim it to be the first serious electrical disturbance ever occurring above the clouds in the history of the state.—Colorado Springs Special to Omaha Bee.

A Lovely Woman

Overheard one say of her, "By heaven! she's painted!" "Yes," retorted she, indignantly, "and by heaven only!" Ruddy health mantled her cheek, enthroned on the rose and lily. Yet this beautiful lady, once thin and pale, with a dry hacking cough, night-sweats, and slight spitting of blood, seemed destined to fill a consumptive's grave. After spending hundreds of dollars on physicians without benefit, she tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; her improvement was soon marked, and in a few months she was plump and rosy again, the picture of health and strength.

A Reverse Rule.

"My calling," said the letter-carrier "differs materially from all others." "In what way?" asked his friend. "Most people get their walking papers when they are discharged, don't they?" "Yes." "Well, I got mine when I was appointed."

A porter in a Cincinnati whiskey house went into a room where some empty casks were stored, carrying a lighted candle in his hand. Knocking the bung out of one of the barrels he stooped over to examine it, when a terrific report was heard, and he was hurled across the room. He was badly injured and the building was set on fire.

Marian.

(A Provencal Folk Song.)

" Mount' as passa ta Matinado,
Mourbieu
Marioun."

O where have you spent your morning, tell,
Yes you, Marian ?
Why drawing water, down at the well,
'Ti true, good man.
Who met you and whispered in your ear,
Yes you, Marian ?
'Twas one of the village girls, oh hear,
'Tis true. good man
Ain't a girl in breeches a novel sight,
Say you, Marian ?
Well, perhaps her skirt was a trifle tight,
'Tis true, good man
A girl with a sword ! I've ne'er seen one,
Have you, Marian ?
Well, her distaff hung down as she spun,
'Tis true good man.
Has a girl a moustache? Come, that's a good joke,
For you, Marian !
She was eating mulberries as she spoke,
'Tis true, good man,
I never knew mulberries ripen in May,
Did you, Marian ?
A bunch might be left from last year, I dare say,
'Tis true, good man.
Go gather a basketful then for me,
Yes you, Marian !
But the birds may have eaten them since, you see,
'Tis true, good man.
Come say your prayers now, I'll cut off your head,
Yes you, Marian !
But what will you do with the body when dead,
Tell true, good man ?
Oh, out of the window I'll fling it, you beast,
Yes you, Marian.
That the cats and dogs may all come to the feast,
Tell true, good man ?
I'll do for you this time, though for it I'll swing
Yes you, Marian.
But a rope around one's neck is an unpleasant thing,
'Tis true, good man.
You bad, lying scratch cat, I'll blacken your eye,
Yes you, Marian.
'Twas my cousin, the conscript, who bade me good-bye.
What, Jean ? Then why couldn't you say so at once,
Yes you, Marian,
Cause I like to tease a bit you old dunce,
'Tis true, good man.
You tease me too much, 'tis a shame and a crime,
Yes you, Marian.
Well, just keep your temper another time,
I'm true, good man.

—M. R. Weld in the Academy.

LITTLE NELL.

The Old Man Loved His Grandchild, Though He was a Drunkard.

An old man and a litile girl walked into a downtown saloon rbout 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It was not the first visit. The white-aproned bartender regarded them curiously. The half-a-dozen loungers lowered their voices in respect to the little tot of femininity. Nervously fumbling in his pocket the aged toper called for a drink. The little girl left his side and with a fugitive glance at the bartender stole over to the lunch table. From noon until 2 o'clock a generous and tempting array of viands is generally provided in this peculiar resort. It had been removed a few minutes before the old man and his little compaion arrived. Raising on tip-toe the little girl looked over a clear expanse of snow-white tablecloto. A pitiful expression of disappointment passed over a face pinched with hunger and privations. The old man was just raising a glas of whiskey to his lips lips when the little girl rushed across the room and clutched him by the arm :

" Grandpa ! grandpa !" she exclaimed in a shrill childish treble, "don't drink; the lunch is all gone !"

The trembling hand withdrew the glass that had almost touched his lips. A look at the table verified the child's statement. He had already paid for the drink. Motioning the bartender to the end of the long polished bar, the old man said :

" Please give me back the money. I must go without the drink if I die for it. It's all we have in the world, and the little girl has had nothing to eat since morning. Please give me back the money."

" Here's a quarter ; don't come in here again," replied the bartender.

Hand-in-hand they went out, he with his head down and she with a glad look in her eyes. He started to go into another saloon, but she held him back. They walked half a block and entered a cheap restaurant.—Chicago Tribune.

Odd Items.

A Jeffersonville (N.Y.) bootblack has a card on his back stating that he will not black a drunken man's shoes.

Wonders never cease. A peach tree near Smyrna, Del., for three years past has seemed as dead as Hector, but this year it is loaded with fine fruit.

A colored woman in Atlanta, Ga., is the youngest of thirty-seven children, and, although not yet 38 years old, is herself the mother of twenty-seven children.

It is stated upon medical authority that readers should refrain from damping their fingers in turning over the leaves of library books, as this is a sure way to attract any stray bacilli that may be lurking around.

Pennsylvania has some girls worth having. In the haying season, a gentleman during a short drive counted nine young women driving two-horse mowers and seventeen managing horse rakes.

Mr. Stinyes, of Augusta, Ga., got married one day and eloped the next with an old sweetheart, whom only he swore he could love, and now there is a large and angry mother-in-law and law suit hovering in the horizon.

In digging a well near Goldsboro', N. C., the diggers came upon traces of an extinct volcano, and at once reported it to the state geologist, who will pronounce upon the discovery authoritatively in a few days.

A Georgia man is ready to swear that common soda is the most sovereign thing on earth for the bite of either mad dog or snake—notwithstanding that there is not the remotest possibility that fishing parties and so on will substitute it for the usual antidote.

Two farmers near Bowling Green, Ky., came upon a drove or flock or herd of weasels in the woods the other day. There were thirty or forty of the little fellows and they seemed to know that there is strength in numbers, for they evinced no fear at the approach of the men, but drew up in a solid mass and showed fight so determinedly that the farmers didn't molest them.

Children, who have been cautioned not to tease their little brother Elmer, as he was cutting a tooth, waited expectantly a few minutes. Then Ned spoke up; "I say, auntie, has he cut it yet?"

YRON'S BRUSSELS BALL-ROOM.

Where " Hush ! Hark !" Startled the Beauty and the Chivalry.

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered there
Her beauty and her chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily ; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes looked love to eyes which spake again,
And all went merry as a marriage bell ;
But, hush ! hark ! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell.

So wrote Byron in " Childe Harold" (Canto III), as all the English-reading young men and young women in the world well know. Therefore, many people will read with interest the following extract from a Homburg letter by William Frazer in the London Times. Mr. Frazer this summer went over Waterloo field. He writes :

" One pathetic incident of this battle has escaped the notice of poets and painters. I can remember my father saying that on the evening of Quatre Bras he noticed many officers lying dead in the silk stockings and buckled shoes which they had worn at the Duchess of Richmond's ball on the previous night, their servants having joined the column earlier, making it impossible to change their full dress uniforms. On returning to Brussels I determined to find, if possible, the scene of the ball given by the Duchess of Richmond the evening before Quatre Bras.

" Some time before leaving England I conversed with a lady who danced with my father at the ball, and who has, as you will see from her name, which I enclose, the best means of knowing where it took place. The lady, giving me at the same time a list of those who were invited, told me that Lord Byron's allusion to 'that high hall' was 'nonsense.' She added that the ball took place, not in the Duke of Richmond's house, but in a coachmaker's depot, a low-roofed room, at the rear of it, the street being named Rue de la Blanchisserie. I made many inquiries in England and in Brussels.

" I at last ascertained that the site of the Duke of Richmond's house was now covered by a large hospital in the Rue des Cendres. I visited the hospital, and one of the nursing sisters politely pointed out a wing which had formed part of the Duke's house. I examined the garden behind this wing ; neither in this nor in the building itself was there any trace of a ball-room. I observed above the wall of the hospital the roof of a high building, and inquired what it was. The Sister replied that it was the brewery of the Rue de la Blanchisserie. I walked round to this street, and was informed by the proprietor of the brewery that he knew nothing on the subject. After some conversation I asked if he could tell me of whom his father purchased the property ; he replied of a coach-builder named Van Asch. I inquired if the coach-builder had a depot. " Yes, a very large one ; it is now my granary." He then took me up on the first floor and I found myself in the room, the remembrance of which will live as long as the English language. It is 120 feet long, 54 feet broad, and about 13 feet high, the floor smooth enough to be danced on to-night." This room answers precisely to the description given to me ; it is immediately in the rear of the Duke of Richmond's house, it is in the street named, it belonged in 1815 to a coach-builder, and is capable of holding at least 400 persons.

" I do not think further proof can be required. I have the permission of the proprietor to give his name, V. Vanginderachter, brasseur, Rue de la Blanchisserie, 40 et 42. He most courteously added that we would be glad to show the room to visitors."

A Disgusted Humorist.

Marshall P. Wilder, the humorist, in relating his recent experiences in London, said :—" Sometimes it was dreary work trying to be funny. Once I went to a reception, or assembly, at which none but Greeks were present. I have never seen so many magnificent dresses at one time. The women were exceedingly beautiful and richly attired, and all the men were handsome. Well, I went through my programme and tried my best to raise a laugh, but the audience sat and listened without moving a muscle. Just as I was ending the hostess came to me and said sweetly :—' Now, Mr. Wilder, please do something funny !' They carried me out in a hand basket and I reached my rooms in a collapsed condition. It was simply crushing."—Rochester Democrat.

Tender Solicitude.

Ethel's 4-year-old brother frequently amused himself by thumping Ethel's steady caller over the head with his tiny fists. He was thus employed one evening when he suddenly stopped, exclaiming : " Sister said me musn't hit oo on the head."

" Did she ? Why ?" asked Cholly, evidently pleased with the young lady's solicitude.

" Tause," prattled the artless one, " she said it might dent it."

A Double Case of Absent Mindedness.

Church choir soprano (who sings during the week in comic opera, to tenor)—I declare, Mr. Highsea, I'm mortified half to death! Do you know that while we were singing that anthem I forgot myself and winked at that old bald-headed Deacon Heavywate in the front pew?

Mr. Highsea—Too bad ! The deacon will be indignant.

Soprano—No, he won't—that's the worst of it. He forgot himself, too, and made a reach for the pulpit flowers.—Time.

A Post-Mortem Inquiry.

Customer—I say, waiter, this venison hasn't been hung.

Waiter (new to the line)—'Ung, sir? In course not, sir. I believe it was shot, sir. —Fun.

Nobody Fooled.

What the girl with the parasol and her companion are thinking — " It's awfully mean to lead him on so when I am already engaged ; but it is such fun ?" What he thinks—"This is a low sort of business for a man who's to be married in October. They are no end of sport, though, and I could have either of them for the asking."

M Zola's new novel, " Le Reve," is to be published in October, and it is announced as a work so unexceptionable in its moral tone that it can safely be placed in the hands " of the most modest young girls and the most pure-minded women."

CURRENT TOPICS.

A snug fortune awaits the man who can invent a cheaper substitute for India ink, which, by the way, comes from China, not India. Experiments are being made, but so far in vain.

Miss Charlotte M. Young, the novelist, is a devoted member of the church of England. With the proceeds of her novel, " The Heir of Redcliffe," she fitted out the missionary schooner, the Southern Cross, for the use of Bishop Selwyn ; and $10,000 from the profits of " The Daisy Chain " are said to have gone to the building of the missionery college in New Zealand.

An eccentrict will will be tested in the courts at Pesth in December. A physician, Dr. Goldberger de Buda, left $250,000 to accumulate for the benefit of his posteity until the interest would be sufficient to relieve destitution everywhere. The trustees calculated that they could effect a distribution when the capital reached $1,000,000,000, but they declined to act. The will will now be contested by claimants in America, London and Madrid.

The sergeant who was on guard at the fortress of Ham at the moment when the late Emperor Napoleon III. effected his escape has just died at Fraize in his 68th year. He and the soldiers about him were offered wine by the then Prince Louis Napoleon, into which a narcotic had been infused. The prisoner kept them in conversation until one by one they fell asleep, and, the coast being clear, he slipped away.

On Blizzard Monday young George Cosine, of Hicksville, Long Island, found a beautiful girl face downward in the snow. She was moaning in great distress. Mr. Cosine took the young woman up in his arms and carried her to the nearest pharmacy, where she found stimulants and extra wraps. Mr. Cosine's interest went further—he hired a sled and escorted the lovely maiden to her home. Rewarding him, the rescued lady, Miss Mary McEwen, has become his wife. The wedding took place on Sanday evening.

This from the Sydney (N. S. W.) Freeman's Journal, just received by mail, will serve to remind us that ours is still the summer end of the earth and that they are having roaring winter down in the antarctic regions. A heavy snowstorm occurred at Armidale on Friday night, and on Saturday the streets were covered with snow. Heavy falls of snow are reported from Orange, Inavereli, Tenterfield and other townships, and the weather up country generally is decribed as being bitterly cold.

At Trouville, a fashionable resort for the French, a pretty girl wore her hair floating upon her shoulders, with butterflies, brilliantly-tinted small birds and dragon-flies fastened upon it, so as to look as though captured in a golden mesh. Her small bonnet was covered with birds and butterflies, and her light-blue gauze dress was dotted over with others, and several kinds of insects as well. She represented Air. Her sister, a dark-haired girl, was Water. Her sea-green gown was trimmed in eccentric fashion with seaweed, and her hair, floating like her sister's, was similarly decked.

How absurd it is for people to make a show of themselves when they formally enter their life contract ! Read this current item about certain unbalanced young people : " Thirty-eight couples have been married at the Iowa fairs and captured more or less valuable prizes for the publicity of their nuptials, and of these thirty-seven have been divorced within thirteen months."

A patent has been granted for a waterproof compound adapted to be applied to the floors and walls of buildings to prevent the access of water and dampness, and which will also withstand extreme and varying temperatures of air, and which will be practically indestructable. The composition consists of the following ingredients, combined in substantially the proportions stated, viz. :

New Zealand (or Portland) cement, 100 pounds; cream of tartar, 3 ounces; pulverized ivory, 1 ounce ; quicksilver, 1 ounce ; isinglass, 4 ounces; marble dust, 5 pounds ; sand, 200 pounds ; rain water, 1 pail.

In compounding the ingredients a small quantity of cement, for instance, one pound, is mixed with the cream of tartar, quicksilver and isinglass and water enough to make a very thin paste, and the composition is let stand about twenty-four hours. If the weather be coid the composition should stand in a warm place. The remainder of the cement, the pulverized ivory, marble dust and sand are mixed dry, and the standing compound is thereupon added, together with enough rain water, about half a pail, to produce a plastic mass capable of being readily laid with a trowel or similar implement. After the compound is laid upon a suitable foundation, such as wood, earth, brick or metal, it becomes very hard, equal to steel, and capable of a very high polish.

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

If every tongue that speaks her praise,
For whom I shape my tinkling phrase,
Were summoned to the table,
The vocal chorus that would meet,
Of mingled accents, harsh or sweet,
From every land or tribe, would beat
The polyglots of Babel.

Briton and Frenchman, Swede and Dane,
Turk, Spaniard, Tartar of Ukraine,
Hidalgo, Cossack, Cadi,
High Dutchman and low Dutchman, too,
The Russian serf, and Polish Jew,
Arab, Armenian and Mantchoo,
Would shout, " We know the lady."

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

How it Works.

Rich manufacturer—Well, how did you succeed at Castle Garden ?

Secretary—Finely. Engaged 20 Hungarians, 15 Poles, 17 Italians, 18 Bulgarians, 16 Russians, and a miscellaneous collection whose nationalities I didn't stop to ask.

Rich manufacturer—Glorious! That will end the strike in my factory. Now take this check over to the President of the High-Tariff League for the Protection of American Labor.—Philadelphia Record.

A Common Experience.

First youth—By jinks, Harry, what's the matter ? Did Clara Vere de Vere refuse you?

Second youth (sadly)—No, she accepted me.

" Then what in creation are you looking so blue about ?"

" I spent so much money courting her that I haven't enough left to buy an engagement ring."

REAL IRISH STORY.

" Where Has My Sweetheart Gone ?" Answered in Time.

This from the London Globe sounds romantic, but the writer vows that he is telling Cupid's truth :

Just eight years ago a young Dublin engineer and the daughter of a wealthy rmer, who was also engaged in the Dublin provision trade, were married. The bride had managed the provision business for her family and was described as an amiable and lovely girl. After marriage the wedding party went to Glendalough and a most enjoyable day almost up to the hour of returning was spent, the company being a large one, when some misunderstanding occurred between the newly wedded pair. The bridegroom left the company in anger and walked the eight miles back to the city in time to catch an evening steamer to Liverpool; from that period until Thursday in last week he was never heard of. The bride felt her desertion keenly, but she stuck to her business. Her father meantime died and she was left in charge of great responsibilities. The wanderer was forgotten or believed to have died and some time since another succeeded in obtaining her affections. The wedding was arranged for an early day and invitations had been issued when the long missing husband put in an appearance in the city. He had been all these years in New Zealand and he had made money, which he had come home to share with his wife who, " strangely enough " adds the correspondent, " felt all her old love for him revive. He was very nearly being late, but his timely arrival saved a vast amount of after misery to all concerned."

No matter what the school of physic,
They each can cure an ache or physic—
At least 'tis said they can ;
But as Science turns the wheel still faster,
And quacks and bigots meet disaster,
To us there comes a man
Whose merit hath won countless zealots,
Who use and praise his " Pleasant Pellets."

The " Pleasant Purgative Pellets " of Dr. Pierce, though gentle in action, are thorough, and never fail to cure biliousness, diseased or torpid liver, and constipation.

Natural Selection.

" Men usually marry their opposites," said Cholly, reflectively. " That is true," said the old man, a little surprised at Cholly's unusual brilliancy. " All the married men I know have married members of the opposite sex." " I mean," said Cholly, " that a tall man is apt to marry a short woman and vice versa ; I wonder what kind of a woman I will marry?" And the old man opined that he would be liable to marry a girl with some sense.

The New Pain King.

Polson's Nerviline cures flatulence, chills, spasms and cramps.

Nerviline cures promptly the worst cases of neuralgia, toothache, lumbago, and sciatica.

Nerviline is death to all pain, whether external, internal, or local.

Nerviline may be tested at the small cost of 10 cents. Buy at once a 10 cent bottle of Nerviline, the great pain remedy. Sold by druggists and country dealers.

" The Flattering Tale."

Old lady (" down upon followors ")—" That young man who is just going out, I suppose, is your brother, Jane ?" Maid—" No, 'm. Not my brother, m'um—which he's a young man, m'um—most r'spect'ble, m'um—as I've 'opes of !"—Punch.

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching an stinging ; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becomin very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It equally efficacious in curing all Ski Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Quite Another Affair

Mr. Bachelor (very cordially)—Allow me to congratulate you, dear boy. I hear you've married a widow.

Dear Boy (doubtfully)—You're mistaken ; she married me.

" An idler is a watch that lacks both hands ;
As useless if it goes, as when it stands."

Alas ! how many women, though household and children need their care, are necessarily idle, because suffering from diseases peculiar to their sex. To all such Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a precious boon, speedily curing internal inflammation, leucorrhea, displacement, ulceration, tormenting periodical pains, prolapsus, " bearing-down " sensations, morning sickness, bloating, weak stomach, nervous prostration, and tendency to cancerous disease. In all those ailments called " female complaints " it is the most reliable specific known to medical science.

Juke of the Zoo.

Knights promise to become as common in Canada as " professors," or as colonels in the United States at the close of the war. Sir Charles Tupper has gone up even a step higher, and is now a full fledged baronet, the " Sir " thus becoming hereditary. If this keeps on Harry Piper, of Toronto, will be made a " Juke."—Rigetown Standard.

Reprisals.

Tradesman (to Old Gentleman, who has purchased a lawn-mower)—Yes, sir, I'll oil it, and send it over imm——

Customer (imperatively)—No, no, no !—it musn't be oiled ! I won't have it oiled ! Mind that ! I want noise ! And, look here—pick me out a nice rusty one. My neighbors' children hoot and yell till ten o'clock every night, so—(viciously)—I mean to cut my grass from four till six every morning !—Punch.

Life at Mt. Desert.

He (who has been accepted)—Were you ever engaged before? She—Only once this summer. He—What? And here it is the last of August! She—But I only came last week.—Life.

A Scotch mother in Philadelphia was a delighted spectator the other day when her fifteen sons danced the Highland fling together at a Scottish picnic.

MACHINERY OUTDONE.

How Playing Cards are Cut—Facts About the Handling of Eggs.

" Speaking about the accuracy of machinery," observed a scientific man the other day to a New York Mail writer, " the degree of accuracy to which the human hand can be trained is equally wonderful.

" Playing cards are required to be cut with the sides quite parallel to each other, because if a pack be trimmed by the machine slightly wider at one end than the other, and they become turned ' end for end' in dealing, the excess in width of some cards over others at the end of the pack will be double the variation in any one card, which would facilitate cheating, a very minute variation being perceptible. The men who test these cards for this, make calipers of their finger and thumb, and, by passing them along from one to the other, detect a difference in width between the two ends which it is difficult to measure by any other means.

" There are men employed in factories where dried yeast is made whose business it is to put the yeast into packages weighing a certain amount each. It is on a table in front of them in a large plastic mass, and there are the scales for weighing it. But the men do not use the scales. They simply separate from the mass with their hands a lump of it and put it up, and you may choose at random and put it on the scales, and it will weigh exactly the right amount, the scales beam just balancing.

" When large numbers of eggs are handled and shipped to market, there is a process known as ' candleing ' eggs, which consists in taking them up in the hands (usually two eggs in each hand at a time), and holding them up before a lighted candle. The light shining through them reveals to the practised eye the exact condition of the contents. But some of the men soon get so that they do not need the use of the candle, the mere contact of their hands with the shells denoting the condition of the egg just as infallibly and much more quickly. And they distinguish in that way not merely eggs which are decidedly bad, but those which are just barely beginning to lose their freshness.

" Here are three different ways in which extreme skill of the hands is shown by persistent training. First, in detecting slight differences in magnitude ; second, in weight, and lastly, in texture or character of surface handled."

Misleading

" What in thunder do you mean by coming in here to get your head bandaged?" said an indignant proprietor to a battered tramp. " This is a plumber's shop and ain't no hospital, by a jugful."

" Why don't yer take in yer sign then ?" said the battered tramp, pointing to the legend " Tanks Repaired."

A Terrible Revenge.

Miss De Pink—No, Mr. Suitor, it can never be. I shall never marry a widower. The idea ! Catch me walking in any other woman's shoes.

Mr. Suitor (departing)—I had no intention, Miss De Pink, of offering you my late wife's shoes. You couldn't get them on.

A Transformation.

" Miss Screechowl sang at the musical last evening," said one musician to another, and she effected a wonderful transformation."

" Indeed ! How ?"

" Well, she sang ' It Was a Dream,' and turned it into an orthodox nightmare."

A Crisis for a Quaker.

" Is it true, mamma," inquired a little girl, " that a Quaker never takes his hat off?" " It is true, my dear," answered the fond mother, " it is a mark of respect which he thinks he should pay to no man." " But then tell me, mamma," answered the clever child, " how does a Quaker manage when he goes to have his hair cut ?"

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS generally

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

for us. Cash Furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address, C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N. Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U.S. in the Hide line, have sent their representatives to investigate Mr. Page's business, and after a thorough examination and comparison the Reporter gives him this endorsement

" We believe that in extent of light-weight raw material collected and carried, Mr. Page holds the lead of any competitor and that his present stock is the largest held by any house in this country."

And the Review says:

" After a most thorough investigation of Mr Page's business as compared with others in same line, we have become fully satisfied that in his specialty, light-weight stock, he is unquestionably the largest dealer in this country, while in superiority of quality he is confessedly at the head."

Query: If Mr. Page's business is the largest in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more Skins than any of his competitors in the same line?

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,037 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by Richard Proctor, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. Astor, Judah P. Benjamin Judge Gibson, Dr. Brown, E. H. Cook, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus post free from

PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DUNL. 39 88.

LUBIN'S

BAKING

POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

And still there Are

MORE

BARGAINS

TO BE GOT AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

Don't forget to ask for

THAT CASHMERE,

Regular price 35c a yard, now 22 1-2 c a yard. It is a yard and a quarter wide.

Those DRES GOODS

We are selling at 18 1-2c a yard, regular price 20c a yard. Beautiful new goods.

1000 DOZEN BUTTONS !

Selling at 5c a dozen, regular prices from 10c to 50c a doz.

COME SOON

In order to secure Best Bargains.

1000 doz. Eggs Wanted

RIGHT AWAY !

Top price paid in Cash or Trade. The Famous

New Process Electric Soap,

To be Got Only at

J. G. ANDERSON'S

Mammoth Bargain House.

On The Wing.

By our Travelling Reporter.

In passing through Kimberley the other day I had occasion to remain over night. I concluded to procrastinate by visiting the town. I first met the young and talented school master who I am proud to say is alive to his business, and we are pleased to find that Kimberley has been so fortunate in securing a teacher who is an example the young and rising generation may not fear to copy.

Next we called on Mr. W. Stewart. We thought by his stature he would be quite above us, but in a few minutes' conversation we discovered an individual of no ordinary talent. We questioned him on Township affairs, and being an old incumbent we must express that Euphrasia has indeed been fortunate in securing his services.

Mr. Hammond, the merchant there, speaks for himself. Who would pass through Kimberley and miss his genial smile.

We found Mr. Plewes to be quite a talker, yet he is very intelligent, and we have no doubt but he is much appreciated. Mr. Thurston needs no puff from us. Come once and see.

Passing through Flesherton we met the Editor of the Advance. On entering his sanctum two devils met us, but lo and behold you, on a while's conversation we found them to be human characters, clothed in their right minds, with intellects thoroughly balanced and quite capable of handling type with any firm north of Toronto. In conclusion we say success to Kimberley, and long life to the printer's devils.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

The buzz of the threshing machine and the shouts of the ploughboy are again filling the land.

A great many youths from this vicinity took in the exhibition. They say that the sights were worth seeing, but sleeping in the Union Station over night did not catch them worth a cent.

Mr. and Miss Brown, of Singhampton, are the guests of Mrs. Wm. Jordan.

Rev. James Coburn very acceptably filled the pulpit here on Sunday last.

Two of our professional men got caught in a clothes line which had been carefully tied across the road, while returning from the band meeting on Tuesday evening last. One of them took the rope home with him, while the other fellow is rejoicing that he got off so easy, considering it is leap year.

Miss Acheson and Miss Cornfield are on the sick list.

The Inistioge echoes are : That hiring livery rigs is not profitable work. That Hunters have been visiting Inistioge recently. And that if our postmaster does not put a letter box in the postoffice something will happen to him.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

Quite a number round and around Eugenia went to Toronto Exhibition.

Miss Lizzie Crowe is visiting friends in Toronto.

The Methodist church here is undergoing long needed repairs, A stone foundation has just been completed and some brick is already on the ground for the purpose of bricking it. Work, I understand, is to be begun in about two weeks. A new roof is to be put on and the inside is to be completely overhauled, so that when the work is done it will be one of the finest country churches in Artemesia.

Miss. Aggie Gorley, of Toronto, is spending a few weeks visiting her parents and friends here.

Our British Columbia Letter.

This summer has been quite different from former ones, and particularly favorable for the crops on high lands. June and first half of July were nearly all rain, which gave the crops a fine start. Beautiful sunshine followed, and up to date, the temperature ranging from 80° to 86° in the shade. Everything seems deceptive in this climate. Your own eyes convey wrong impressions to the mind in regard to distance, size, etc. Why this is I will not try to explain. Ask an arrivrl what size a certain tree is, and ten to one it is twice the size he guessed. In this connection one of the numerous stories may not be out of place : A tourist left word at a hotel that he was just going to take a morning walk before breakfast, up to a certain mountain which appeard only distant some two miles. Not returning in a reasonable time, the rest of the party went in search and caught up to him about noon, standing partly undressed beside a small creek that one could easily step across. When asked his motive for undressing, he said everything was so deceiving, he did not know but what it might turn out to be half a mile wide, and he might have to swim across.

Salmon have been very scarce this season, wrath-provoking mosquitoes plentiful. The Alaska affair is a humbug. Spectators of every grade trying to boon the country. Crops good. Weather A. 1. Immigrants getting fooled. Time rolling along "alle samee."

J. M. WEBSTER.

Haney P. O. B.C., Sept. 17 1888.

Visitors to the fair MONDAY and TUESDAY next are invited to call and inspect our magnificent fall stock, and premises, when an attractive display of new goods will be found. M. Richardson & Co.

W. C. T. U. Department.

Two Beggars.

An old man of sixty rapped at the door of the writer and asked the privilege of working for a breakfast. The meal was given him and he ate with a relish. Rising to go, he stood with his gray hair uncovered, with his hard face touched with a bit of emotion, and said, in substance : "I thank you sincerely for this food. I was hungry. And while I thank you I want to warn you against coming to the condition I am in. When I was young I worked hard and made money. I spent it in the saloons. I put hundreds of dollars there. Now I am too old to work. I must wear rags for clothes and beg for a living. The saloons drive out and give me nothing. Last night I was driven from one and would have been in that terrible storm but for the kindness of a man who let me sleep in his shop."

A few days later another man of about the same age came begging for a dime. He claimed to be a cripple ; the hospitals were full. The dime was given him, in an hour he was seen to buy beer at a neighboring bar.

These are but samples of what may be learned every day by a little inquiry. There are thousands of old and young men reduced to beggary by drink. Licensed saloons tempt and rob and curse them till they are penniles, and send them adrift to beg from sober people or to steal. And in a good many cases these pauper makers stand behind their bars receiving the money which Christian charity has given these victims. Through the poor besotted beggar whom he has reduced to beggary, the saloon keeper reaches out to rob sober people and fatten off of the sympathy which his own curse kindles. A business like this cannot buy respectability by any amount of taxes, and in God's sight no number of signatures and votes can relieve it of the deepest infamy.—[Central Baptist.

TO THE DEAF.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 21 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it FREE to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 30 St. John St., Montreal.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes :

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes :

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy ; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began takirg Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT,

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island; the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal ; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same ; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks ; and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works, at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 62, 2nd west, Artemesia, two sows in pig—one aged and the other young, black, and black and white spotted. Information thankfully received as to their whereabouts.

W. C. PARKER.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

FARM for SALE

Being part of Lot No. 10 Con. 5, Euphrasia, containing fifty acres. The above property is situated about one-and-a-half miles from the village of Kimberley, all under cultivation and magnificent land.

Apply to
A. ALDOUS,
Kimberley P. O.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 380. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, OCT. 4 , 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

SAVE MONEY!

BY BUYING YOUR

WATCHES

CLOCKS AND JEWELRY,

Spectacles, Silverware, Etc.,

During the month of September, 1888, at

Russell's

Noted

Jewelry Store

We will give a DISCOUNT of

20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1 and over,

In order to clear out some of our immense stock, to make room for

LARGE FALL IMPORTATIONS.

In Watches we have the famous Waltham, Hampden, Illinois, Springfield, Columbus, in gold and silver cases, in ladies' and gents' sizes, bearing warrants from 3 to 5 years.

The finest make of American walnut spring and weight Clocks, bearing warrants from two to four years. An $18 Watch for $14.40; a $20 Watch for $16; a $12 Watch for $9.60.

In Silverware we have the most beautiful selection ever shown in this county, at equally low prices. Ladies' Brooches and Barpins, Earrings, Necklets, Guards, etc. Gents' Tie pins, Cuff Buttons, Chains, Charms, etc., at the same terrible reductions. Also the most lovely and large selection of

Ladies' Gem Engagement Rings

and 18 K. WEDDING RINGS ever shown in this section of the country. Come at once and get the choice of the great reductions, and remember that the only place to get your Watches, Clocks or Jewelry repaired is at

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Special reductions on goods for presentation purposes

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Two inches of snow on Wednesday. Ugh!

Is this winter, anyway? and what have we done to deserve it now, if it is?

The job of filling in at the Flesherton bridge was let on Monday afternoon to Mr. Wm. Varty.

We are pleased to note that Mr. Jos. Stafford, 4th line, Artemesia, was successful in passing the supplementary examination at Toronto University.

The new post office will not be ready for occupation until the latter end of next week.

A full stock of boots and shoes, all sorts and sizes, good and cheap, at W. Clayton's.

New Lard, Bologna Sausages, etc., to hand at Blakely & McConnell's.

To-day (Thursday) is Division Court day in Flesherton.

Mrs. Connell, of Guelph, who has been visiting at Mrs. Gordon's, returned home on Sat. last.

On and after Oct. 1, the Flesherton postoffice will be open from 8 a. m. til. 7.00 p.m., R. J. SPROULE, postmaster.

Flesherton Glee Club sang at a concert at Markdale on Friday evening last, and received a great ovation. They were in good form, and were encored to the echo.

Eugenia and Lady Bank correspondence crowded out this issue. Also an interesting article on temperance by an esteemed contributor, and Kimberley school report. Have patience with us and we will catch up in a week or two.

Baldness may be prevented, and a thick growth of hair stimulated, by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. This preparation also restores the natural color to gray hair, and renders it soft, pliant, and glossy.

The first snow storm of the season struck Flesherton on Saturday last, with considerable force. Notwithstanding this there are tomato vines in our garden which have not even been touched by the frost.

The letter in this issue from Mr. S. D. Gandin, now in New Hampshire, will be read with much interest by his numerous friends in this vicinity. It is well written and overflowing with information.

Sunday was a genuine winter's day in Flesherton. The snow came down as though it intended to make sleighing, but melted as fast as it fell. It came again to the extent of two inches on Tuesday night.

Life becomes almost a burden when the body is racked with the suffering which arises from scrofula. If any taint of this disease lurks in your blood, Ayer's Sarsaparilla will expel it. The entire system may be thoroughly renovated by taking this medicine.

HAY WANTED. Farmers having good No. 1 hay for sale will hear of a purchaser by applying to Thos. Sturdy, hay presser, 26 Catharine street south, Hamilton, N. B. I am at present pressing in Dundalk, and will be at Flesherton, if business will warrant removal, for a few months in vel. &c.

Prices $8 to $11 per ton.

Off The Track.

Owing to a freight train being off the track in the vicinity of Chatsworth, the morning train from Owen Sound did not arrive till twelve o'clock, m., on Saturday, and passed the up mail at this station.

Married.

MAGEE-HAWKINS.—In Flesherton, on the 24th Sept., by Rev. T. Watson, Mr. James McGee to Mrs. Ann Hawkins. Both of Meaford.

Died.

McInnes—Near Priceville, on Sept. 26, Mary Ann McInnes, aged 17 years and 6 months.

Missionary Grants.

J. W. Armstrong, Esq., attended the annual Missionary meeting of the Guelph Conference of the Methodist Church, at Kincardine, on Friday last, returning on Saturday. There were some $7,000 set apart for this conference, of which $200 were granted to the Eugenia and Euphrasia mission.

Glenelg Agricultural Exhibition.

The Glenelg Agricultural fall show took place at Markdale on Thursday and Friday of last week. Exhibits in the majority of cases were not as numerous as at the show here, in fact it was considerably inferior all through, with the exception of fowl. Markdale show can boast of the finest exhibit of fowl in the County of Grey. A great drawback to the Glenelg exhibition is want of space. Room for exhibitors is too limited. There were a large number of visitors on the second day, and we would judge that the show was very successful, from a financial standpoint.

Mutual Improvement.

Now that the long evenings are at hand, would it not be a good idea for the young people of Flesherton to form a mutual improvement society of some description to while away the hours and benefit themselves? A society of this kind could be made very interesting, as well as instructive, by the study of elocution, composition, historical research, social questions, and many other subjects, suitable for a society like this. We would like to assist in the formation of such a society, if some one would move in the matter. Even were nothing but the study of authors and history taken up, it would pay—morally speaking. What gentleman or lady will claim the honor of being first to attempt the organization?

Lockup.

A village like Flesherton, without some kind of a lockup, is at a great disadvantage, as proved last fair day. The crooks were swarming and there was no place to fasten them up if arrested. Consequently they were not arrested: for what constable could be expected to arrest and take charge of an individual for some hours probably all night—until a magistrate could be found to try the case. As one gentleman remarked to us, "even a lockup like Dundalk's would be better than nothing." That was a pretty piece of sarcasm, though. We would require something that would hold the victim, at least. But twenty-five dollars would go a long way toward erecting such a receptacle, and it would be money well spent. As it is now, crooks feel perfectly free to play their nefarious calling at our fairs and other gatherings, as their arrest is, in a manner, out of the question.

Artemesia Exhibition.

The Artemesia fall exhibition came off at Priceville on Thursday. The weather was unfavorable, but did not prevent a large turnout of visitors. The exhibition was fully up to the standard, with, probably, the exception of cattle, which were numerous, but of poor quality, as they have been at all the fairs which we have visited. Roots, grain, and fruit were good, and a magnificent lot of excellent butter was shown. Ye editor is now reveling in some of the prize bread, baked by Mrs. Henry King, of Priceville. The competition for our prize was keen, and closely contested, but Mrs. King's art evidently "took the cake" and we took the bread. We are sorry that, owing to the crowded state of our columns, we are unable to give a more extended account of the show, but will probably have something more to say about it next week, when the prize list will be published.

The editor of the Dundalk Herald is a bachelor, as nearly everyone knows by this time. Last week he gave his readers a half-column account of his love affairs. We have been through the mill, but must acknowledge that we could not quite understand this confession, and know not whether to congratulate or pity.

The Imp and the Farmer:

OR HOW THE DEVIL WENT CALLING

The farmer hath harvested all his grain
And is busily counting up his gain
While the breezes of fall are blowing
He sits in the kitchen, and thinks, and thinks
While the firelight flashes, then slowly sinks
And leaves the bright coals aglowing

The dog lies dreaming before the hearth
[illegible]
While the farmer sits there thinking
And under the spell of the amber glow
Strange thoughts and fancies quite free
As the coals are slowly blinking.

Now deep in the glow of that red hot coal
The farmer first sees a ghostly soul
Then the form of a sooty imp
And straight, with a squeaking, wriggle
A voice comes up from the coals
And these are the words we distinguish

"Oh, man look well to your subscription
Your subscription is fading away, mind you
While in luxury you revel."
And then as the farmer's hair arose
The imp skipped upward and backward
As he yelled, "I'm the printer's devil."

Next day the farmer drove into town
With a shamefish face he came rolling down
To the office of "The Advance"
He planked down a V., and then explained
"As for devils' visits, I'm not constrained
To give them another chance."

MORAL.—Will some more of our readers please examine the coals closely.

Very little, excepting shows, is attracting the attention of our respected contrefers at present. The Durham Chronicle published no less than three prize lists last week, while the Review only published one. And we think the Review did the wiser act. Possibly when brother Mitchell "disses" his italic caps he will think so too.

The Wiarton Echo, commenting on a steam buggy shown at the late Industrial Fair, remarks: "It requires, however, a much smoother country than this to make them a success." We should sneeze to ejaculate if it wouldn't. Only wrought iron trucks are appropriate to that section of country, with a generous supply of blasting powder to open up the way.

The Dundalk Herald is threatened with a libel suit.

COMPETITION

DEFIED!

Fine Gold and Silver Watches for Presentation or Personal use.

AND SILVERWARE

Quality and completeness of stock to select from not equalled in Central Grey.

Sizes Complete in Genuine 18 K. Wedding Rings

No Catch Prices. Goods as represented

OR "CASH" REFUNDED

Can do better for Customers—"Cash" or "Credit"—than any other jeweler in "Grey Co."

Watches carefully and promptly repaired.

JEWELER BROWN.

MARKDALE, ONT.

Rover in Church.

'Twas a Sunday morning in early May,
A beautiful, sunny, quiet day,
And all the village, old and young,
Had trooped to church when the church bell rung
The windows were open, and the breezes sweet
Fluttered the hymn books from seat to seat.
Even the birds, in the pale-leaved birch
Sang as softly as if in church!

Right in the midst of the minister's prayer
There came a knock at the door. "Who's there,
I wonder?" the gray haired sexton thought,
As his careful ear the tapping caught.
Rap rap, rap rap—a louder sound,
The boys on the back seats turned around.
What could it mean? for never before
Had any one knocked at the old church door.

Again the tapping, and now so loud
The minister paused (though his head was bowed),
Rappety-rap! This will never do,
The girls are peeping, and laughing, too!
So the sexton tripped over the creaking floor,
Lifted the latch, and opened the door.

In there trotted a big black dog,
As big as a bear! With a solemn jog
Right up the centre aisle he pattered,
People might stare, it little mattered.
Straight he went to a little maid,
Who blushed and hid, as though afraid,
And there sat down, as if to say,
"I'm sorry that I was late to-day:
But better late than never, you know,
Besides, I waited an hour or so,
And couldn't get them to open the door
Till I wagged my tail and bumped the floor.
Now, little mistress, I'm going to stay,
And hear what the minister has to say."

The poor little girl hid her face and cried'
But the big dog nestled to her side,
And kissed her, dog fashion, tenderly,
Wondering what the matter could be.
The dog being large (and the sexton small),
He sat through the sermon and heard it all,
As solemn and wise as any one there,
With a very dignified, scholarly air'
And instead of scolding, the minister said,
As he laid his hand on the sweet child's head
After the service, "I never knew
Two better listeners than Rover and you!"

—James Buckham.

A COMPLETE MISUNDERSTANDING.

BY MARGARET CROSBY.

"Well," continued Sanford, "Winifred's a good seven year older than he is, and she's as well calc'lated to take care of other folks as she is to take care of herself. None of the fellows round here's been able to take her off her own hands yet, and I must say I ain't sorry, fur she's the light of my eyes." He paused for a moment and then added: "Yer brother's pretty sick, I reckon.' Colonel Brennan's eyes wandered toward the orchard again with a pained expression. "Still,' concluded Sanford, rising and kicking off the porch the little pile of shavings that had collected at his feet, "if this weather holds he'll get better."

He sauntered away toward the barn, still whittling as he went.

Colonel Brennan sat motionless, thinking deeply. His thoughts ran monotonously in a circle, always coming back to the same point. What was to be done for Julian? For the last few days he had certainly seemed to be better; but before—he shuddered as he remembered a week of constant rain and cold weather, when Julian's cough had increased as his strength had diminished, and when he had looked imploringly at his brother, as if beseeching a rescue from the death that seemed so near. There was a painful realization that all his care and tenderness had been inadequate to his brother's needs. Winifred Sanford alone had the power to help and influence him, and Colonel Brennan had come to depend upon her entirely where Julian was concerned. She had gradually given up all her time to the young fellow, treating him with the authoritative kindness of an older sister, which he accepted with an alternation of the petulance of an invalid and a sort of veiled adoration which no one was aware of but Winifred herself, although she betokened no consciousness of it.

Colonel Brennan's attitude toward her was curiously characteristic. He felt the warmest gratitude for her kindness to his brother, and a profound respect for what seemed to him the marvellous tact and knowledge shown in her care of him. Her beauty he barely noticed. The whole personality of the only woman he had ever loved, the young wife he had lost years before, had been so different, that, with his single-hearted devotion to her memory, admiration for a style so unlike was impossible. He was ill at ease with all women, but less so with this one, who swept the rooms in the morning with her sleeves rolled up, showing her strong white arms, handling the broom with a dexterity that compelled his admiration, even though her less practical charms did not. His heart sank when he thought that the time would soon come when he and Julian would be alone. The physician's orders were to return to New York in a month from the time of their leaving there. If Julian were no better on his return, Florida was to be tried as a last resource. "If we could only take Winifred Sanford with us," thought the colonel despairingly; "but that would be impossible." Some novel idea made the blood slowly mount to his bronzed face. Marriage would make such a thing possible? "Never!" he said aloud, almost fiercely. The next thought, following the first like lightning, was—What sacrifice would he not make for Julian? He started to his feet abruptly, and, taking his gun, followed in Sanford's footsteps to the barn.

In the orchard the still softness of the day seemed to be concentrated. Not a leaf on the gnarled branches of the apple-trees stirred a hair's breadth. On the rough grass the great red and yellow apples lay untouched. Under one of the largest trees Julian Brennan was seated before his easel, painting intently, now and then speaking to Winifred Sanford who stood before him. He had posed her by a low-sweeping branch, one arm stretched out, the hand grasping the bough. Her head was slightly raised in her customary majestic poise, and her eyes looked far away over the valley. The sun was low and flickered through the rusty-brown leaves and on her pink dress. One side of her face was shadowed by the leaves of the tree, but the other was bathed in the full sunlight. This light, which glorified her radiant health, only served to accentuate the wasting haggardness of the young man. He had grown perceptibly thinner in the last two weeks, but his face wore a look of deep content.

"You see that Dick and I always lived apart," Julian was saying. "Why, I scarcely know him! When I was a little chap, two or three years old, he lost his wife. He was awfully cut up by it, and is still, I believe. He went into the army, and after the war, to the West, and only came back a few months ago, when he heard I was ill. He's very good to me, but we haven't much in common; he doesn't know the difference between an oil-painting and a chromo, and I don't know a gun from a rifle! I believe he almost suffocated in my studio, and I suppose a week of his ranch life would kill me. Since my father and mother died I have had rather a lonely life, but I have always had my painting—it's been everything to me."

"And you were poor, too?" said Winifred, interrogatively.

"Oh, as far as money is concerned I have always had enough of that; but that doesn't make a fellow happy. It's useful; it's a means to an end; but I have sometimes wished that I had worked hard all my life, as Dick has; I would have a right to loaf then."

He looked up from his easel as he spoke. At the commencement of his last speech a singular beaming expression came into Winifrid's face, transfiguring it out of its usual calmness. It still lingered as he looked at her.

"Keep that expression!" he cried, ecstatically. "Raise your arm a little. Stop. I'll show you." He went to her, and placed her arm in the position he desired, touching it reverentially. He went back to his easel and for a minute painted in silence. Then he went on in a lower tone than before.

"The truth is, since I've been here I've been happier than I ever have been before; you are so good to me—you are so—" He paused and drew in his breath with a long inspiration, looking at her almost anxiously. She dropped her eyes so that her dark lashes rested on her cheeks, and then raised them, meeting his imploring ones composedly.

"I'm very glad," she said, graciously. "I like to be good to you." She said no more, but stood passively while he went on painting.

This superb creature's charm did not lie in conversation; it was in her beauty, the tone of her caressing voice when she did speak, and the perfect grace and harmony of every action. Whether she was sweeping and dusting the room, carrying pails of water with Lucinda, the "help," from the pump to the house, or only standing still, every line and curve was faultless and rested the eye and spirit of the beholder. She had a certain holy, Madonna-like purity and calm which was entirely exterior, a natural, physical gift, that had no connection with the inward workings of her mind. That and her character were equally commonplace. Although moderately capable and practical, she possessed but two remarkable attributes—the power of concealing her motives and a perfect appreciation of the value of her beauty. She was keenly aware that this had not brought her the change in her life that she had obstinately determined upon. There was but one road for success, marriage—not with one of her class, but a gentleman. Poverty in any rank of life she secretly despised. It was to be all or nothing for her.

The sun sank lower until it touched the horizon. The air began to grow cooler.

"Mr. Brennan," said Winifred, "it's growing late—you'd better come in now."

The youth leaned back wearily. All the enthusiasm had died out of his manner.

"Yes," he said, languidly, "I might as well. I've got that confounded pain in my chest again." He scrutinized first his picture, then Winifred. "It's no use trying to paint you! I want Tyrian dye to mix with black for your hair, and the transparency of that sky for your skin." He flamed up again with these words.

Winifrid gathered up the easel and painting materials, and stood waiting for Julian to move. He got up slowly.

"Just walk to the edge of the bank with me first," he said; "there's going to be a sunset!"

Winifred walked slowly to the outside of the orchard. Julian watched her with a dawning surprise in his face.

"Aren't you going to give me your arm?" he said, boyishly. "I'm not so uncommonly strong all at once."

She came back to him and he took her arm, leaning on it as they walked slowly away. The contact with her strong, fresh vitality seemed to give him strength, for he walked more steadily. When they reached the rapidly sloping ground they paused. The valley was bathed in a golden haze, as if the sun was shining through an atmosphere of powdered gold-dust. The lake lay like a plate of burnished brass. While they waited the sun sank out of sight, and the brilliancy faded from the landscape. At the horizon was the immeasurable golden distance that remains when the sun sets in a clear sky.

"Look!" cried Julian, pointing to it. "Was there ever anything so beautiful?" The excitable young fellow was on fire for the moment. "Ruskin calls it the type of infinity. There isn't a doubt but that the sky, day and night, shuts us in, like a great 'inverted bowl.' One can even see the end of the ocean where its meets the horizon, but that light goes on and on. It's like seeing all the way through space!"

Winifred understood not a word of this—therefore remained silent. Julian looked at her, but she turned away with seeming shyness. For the first time since he had known her her manner lost its air of confident protection.

"I think we might as well go back to the house," she said. "I heard mother calling me just now." Her shyness communicated itself to Julian. He still leaned on her arm as they walked back to the house, but did not speak to her.

"How good you are to me," he said, suddenly. "What should I have done without you these weeks? I suppose you despise a fellow who is such a broken-down wreck as I am?" He watched her narrowly as he spoke.

"I don't see why that should make any difference," she answered. "You are as much of a man, even if you are not strong."

Something in her words seemed to give him the deepest pleasure.

"Thank you!" he said, with proud gratitude, "I sha'n't forget those words."

"When are you going away from here?" she asked, irrelevantly.

"I—I don't know exactly," he stammered, his face falling. "I believe that Dick is under orders to take me off in two weeks. You don't want me to go, I hope," he added, with an uneasy laugh.

"No," she replied, simply. "Winter's coming on, and it's lonely here then."

His face flushed deeply.

"Would you, could you, imagine such a thing—" he began impetuously. The words died on his lips as Colonel Brennan came rapidly toward them from the house.

"Why, Julian!" he exclaimed, "do you mean to say you're only coming in now?" He came to the side where Winifred was not, and drew Julian's arm affectionately through his. "Ought you to let the boy stay out so late, Miss Sanford?" He addressed her with respectful deference. Julian looked from Winifred to his brother.

"How well you two people take care of me," he said.

The words chimed in with Colonel Brennan's thoughts and gave them a fresh impulse in the direction which they had taken.

"You think so, do you, my boy," he replied, gently.

CHAPTER III.

It was evening in the little parlor of the farm-house. A kerosene-lamp gave its unequivocal light from the high mantel where it stood. The brass knobs of the red-painted cupboards and the flashes of the gorgeous wall-paper shone brightly in its light. There was another lamp on the table where Colonel Brennan and Sanford sat, with a checker-board between them. Sanford, clad as usual in a crumpled linen duster, was engrossed in the game. He considered profoundly before each move. If his play was successful, he would cast a triumphant look at Colonel Brennan; if it was not, he drew in his breath, rubbed his head, and frowned.

Colonel Brennan played seriously, but absently, with the air of a man whose mind was occupied with other thoughts.

In a corner sat Mrs. Sanford, regarding them with vacant admiration. As Winifred came into the room by a side-door, a moment later, her mother turned toward her, and, pointing to the players, said in a loud whisper, "Now, ain't they a picter? The young man's gone to bed, and he said he didn't want no beef-tea, so you can go up as soon as you want, Winifred."

Her daughter did not reply, but seated herself by the fireplace, looking meditatively at Colonel Brennan. Suddenly her father struck the table sharply with his fist.

"There now, colonel, I've got you!" He swept Colonel Brennan's last two men from the board with an air of triumph. "And 'twas as much of a miracle as one of them in Scripture, for I had the odds all against me."

"Sh, now, Mr. Sanford," interposed his wife, reprovingly.

"Yes, it was; for I couldn't explain how I did it," he answered, argumentatively. "Now, every one of them miracles in Scripture can be explained on scientific grounds. I've explained some myself. Look at Elijah, going up in the fiery chariot—'tweren't nothing but a fire balloon!"

"Mr. Sanford, I'm going to bed. Air you comin'?" said his wife, conclusively.

"Well, I'm thinkin' some of it now," he replied, humorously.

As they stumbled through the dark hall, Mrs. Sanford remarked, abruptly:

"I declare to goodness, ef I don't think Winifred Sanford could have that man ef she wanted to, and yet she's takin' up with the young one. It passes belief what she wants, but she always was queer."

Sanford was behind her, and only caught her daughter's name.

"What's that about Winifred?" he asked.

"Nothin,' Mr. Sanford, I was just speculatin' on the queerness of some folks."

After their departure Colonel Brennan walked to the mantel and leaned against it, gravely regarding Winifred. He had given this young woman, of late, a great deal of silent, serious observation.

"How do you think the boy is, Miss Sanford?" he began, awkwardly.

He usually spoke of his brother in this way. It was part of his unconscious feeling for what seemed to be Julian's extreme youth.

"I think he is better."

"You are very kind to him."

She dropped her eyes slightly. "Oh! it is a pleasure."

"I really think that you have an influence over him that no one else has." He seemed to battle with his embarrassment. "I know no one to whom I am under such obligations as I am to you, Miss Sanford, or for whom I feel a deeper respect. I—I have never had a woman for a friend. Living a rough, hard-working Western life, I have been cut off from women's society; but I should like, with your permission, to consider you my friend"—these words were uttered with a direct sincerity that took the edge off his shyness—"that we might"—he paused for an instant, as if seeking the right words in which to express himself—"that we might act in concert, as it were."

A woman of the world might have been puzzled to know exactly what to reply to such a speech; but Winifred's power of divination and her experience were both meagre enough to give her no difficulty in answering. She always knew enough not to commit herself unless she chose to do it, and the object was very plain. Her lips parted in their exquisite smile.

"Why, yes; I'll be your friend, of course."

These words seemed to satisfy Colonel Brennan. Winifred moved toward the door, but stopped before going out.

"Your brother's cough is better, but he's very weak," she said.

Colonel Brennan paled a little under his tanned skin.

"Then you see that, too? He must get stronger—I'd give my life to save the boy." He spoke with fervent energy.

The young woman received this with one of her sympathetic silences, which might be construed as one pleased. The next moment she was gone.

CHAPTER IV.

Julian's portrait of Winifred Sanford was finished. He felt it to be the best thing he had ever done, and yet he did not care to have any one see it just yet; an inexplicable feeling, even to himself. His brother had gone out shooting that afternoon, and had not yet returned, which furthered him in the indulgence of his fancy. He carried it to his room, and, leaving it there, turned the key in the door, and put it in his pocket. This unusual exertion told on him; but the sunny warmth of the day drew him into the open air. He walked slowly and feebly across the orchard to a quiet meadow where the hay-stacks still stood, drying for the winter. Throwing himself on the loosened hay at the bottom of one of the largest stacks, he lay watching the little clouds that drifted across the sky. A sort of rapture of content possessed him. With his thoughts of the future the thought of Winifred Sanford was inextricably mingled. It seemed as natural to love her as to breathe. She was as necessary to him as the air he lived in. The difference in their ages caused him no uneasiness. It was something he had never realized. He thought vaguely that his brother would be surprised when he knew all he hoped; but with all Colonel Brennan's unconsciousness of her beauty and charm, and his romantic devotion to his first love, Julian thought that he must feel what seemed to him Winifred's perfection and, that his happiness would be a happiness to his brother.

As he lay there he became aware of a presence near by. Winifred Sanford moved slowly across the grass toward him, and stood looking down at him.

He tried to get up, but she motioned him to keep his position, and sat down beside him, leaning against the hay-stack. He raised himself on his elbow and watched her in that position. She wore a large straw hat, tied down with a pale flowered ribbon. There was less of majesty and more of yielding tenderness in her beauty than usual.

"What did you do with my picture?" she asked; "mother wants to see it."

"Not yet," he answered, pleadingly. "In a day or so I will."

"You paint very well," she said.

"It's the best thing I've ever done. It isn't any wonder—you've inspired me. I've planned a dozen pictures since I've lain here. You will see how my pictures will sell now."

She regarded him seriously with her shadowy eyes.

"Why do you sell your pictures when you are rich?" she asked.

A slight shadow crossed Julian's face.

"I wonder what put that into your head? I have hardly a cent in the world beyond what Dick gives me. Dick has all the money; he's made no end of money in the West, and although he's been very generous to me I can't expect to live on him always. It's quite possible that some day he might want to marry again. I have my profession; I shouldn't be quite grovellingly poor without Dick, but I shall never be rich."

Winifred listened attentively, but without any change of expression. The shadow passed from Julian's face as he watched her. She seemed by reason of her exquisite serenity to be raised above the consideration of such accidents as poverty or wealth.

Julian leaned toward her.

"Winifred!" he almost whispered.

A loud voice broke the silence.

"Winifred!" called old Sanford from the orchard, "your ma says please come to the house directly; and it's my advice, Mr. Brennan, that you come in shortly. Weather's changing, and there's going to be a tempest pretty soon, or my name ain't Hezekiah Sanford."

Winifred stood up. "Don't go! I beg you," said Julian ardently; "I want to speak to you. I have something to say to you."

He rose also, and caught one of her hands in both his, with a rapid, involuntary movement.

She quietly drew her hand away.

"I must go now."

"Tell me that I may hope!" he cried.

She smiled vaguely. "If you like to hope, you may."

With these words she left him. He did not attempt to follow her, but stood watching her, with all the hope and passion of a first love in his young face. He flung himself on the ground again, with an inarticulate murmur.

The slight breeze died away entirely, and the air became oppressively still. In the almost suffocating quietness Julian's confused thoughts became vague and peaceful. He lay bathed in dreamlike expectancy for a long time, while the sky darkened with leaden clouds, and the twilight fell rapidly. The wind rose, blowing in fitful gusts, then sinking into stillness once more.

When Colonel Brennan came in from shooting, it was already quite dark, and one or two great drops of rain fell as he reached the farm-house. Mrs. Sanford stood on the porch watching the coming storm with a scared face.

"How is Julian?" he asked, anxiously.

"Now don't you worry—he's all right!" she exclaimed. "I see him go up to his room awhile ago, before the storm came up, and just now, when I went up there to see what I would make him for his supper, his door was locked, so I didn't disturb him. I thought likely he was resting. Winifred was askin' me just now, too, and I told her I never see anything like the way you two folks take on about that boy."

Colonel Brennan's face lost its anxious look. He followed Mrs. Sanford into the sitting-room.

"Will you tell your daughter that I would like to speak to her for a few minutes, if she will come here," he said; "I shall consider it a favor."

Something in his grave manner seemed to impress Mrs. Sanford.

"Oh, the awful!" she said abruptly; "yes, I'll tell her." She lighted the lamp on the table, and precipitately left the room.

With the first violent shower of rain Julian roused himself, chilled and startled. His first sensation was one of profound loneliness. This feeling deepened as he struggled with difficulty, almost blinded by the blasts of wind and rain, toward the farm-house, guided in the darkness by the lights in the windows. As he neared it there was no sign of any uneasiness or search for him. He heard Mrs. Sanford's voice in the kitchen, in cheerful conversation with Lucinda. At length he reached the house and leaned against the frame of one of the parlor windows, unable to go farther, his heart beat violently from exhaustion. The shutters were closed, but through the slats he saw into the brightly-lighted room. By the table stood his brother and Winifred Sanford. He could see both their faces, and in spite of the roar of the wind, their words reached him distinctly through the open window.

"I can't give you my first love," his brother was saying. "I suppose that is over for both of us, but I can give you a loyal affection and trust. I will do all in my power to make you happy. This is not said to influence you—I know that it could not—but everything that money can do to make your life a pleasant and easy one shall be done. What do you say?"

He waited gravely for her answer.

A triumphant smile came over Winifred's face.

"I say yes," she answered firmly, looking straight into his eyes.

Colonel Brennan took one of her hands in his, and, bending down, kissed it, not tenderly, but gratefully.

"You have made me very happy, and now you must help me make Julian happy," he said.

At these words Winifred turned her head slightly aside, but her smile lost none of its triumph.

As he listened the life seemed to go out of Julian's body, and to rush back with indignant strength. He staggered away from the window, and rushed blindly through the darkness, not knowing where he went. The fury of the storm was an outlet for the burning grief and dismay that panted within him. He had reached the outskirts of the wood beyond the hay-field, when his momentary strength suddenly left him. He flung his arms up, with a loud groan, which was caught by the wind and whirled away, almost before it was uttered, and stumbling, he fell heavily, striking his head against the gnarled trunk of a tree. He lay motionless, while the storm raged over him. The volume of steadily descending rain seemed limitless. The minutes lengthened into hours before the blasts of wind and rain had spent their strength. They gradually decreased until there was silence, except when a soft shiver of wind in the branches of the trees caused a quick patter of rain-drops on the dead leaves which covered the ground.

The moon pierced through the trees, touching with her pale light the dark shadow under them that still lay motionless.

With the moonlight came voices, but there was no answering voice to guide them to him whom they sought. * * *

The next day Colonel Brennan sat by his brother's bed, where the young man lay, a mere shadow of life. Since they had found him the night before, he had lain thus—still, white, unconscious. After one glance, the doctor, who had been summoned in haste from the village, had told them that he was dying. The reasons that he gave were many and conclusive, but to Colonel Brennan the one inevitable fact was sufficient.

The strong man leaned over Julian in helpless agony.

"Julian!" he implored, "what does it mean? I can't understand it! Don't leave me. I was going to make you so happy. Speak to me only once!"

For a moment there was only silence. The bright afternoon sunlight filled the room as Julian's eyes opened slowly, as if stirred from his lethargy by his brother's penetrating appeal.

Winifred Sanford's portrait, standing on the mantel opposite, was the first thing the young man's eyes rested upon. Warm and glowing in the mellow light, to his numbed senses it was no semblance, but an exquisite reality.

He held out his hands with momentary strength and passion.

"Winifred, Winifred—I love you!" he murmured. Then his eyes closed again.

Colonel Brennan caught the words. His face became white.

"Oh God!" was forced from his lips. "It can't be that Julian!—it can't be——"

At these words Julian's eyes opened again, and this time there was a singularly lucid expression in their depths—a look of full recollection and intelligence.

"It's just as well that I'm going, dear old fellow," he murmured. "It has all been a mistake."

He relapsed into unconsciousness and in the night passed quietly out of life.

* * * * *

Two weeks later, Richard Brennan and Winifred Sanford were married at the little Methodist Church of Granfield. They were to go to New York immediately after their marriage, and from there to sail for Europe. Winifred looked supremely content, but Colonel Brennan wore a baffled, haggard air. His manner to his wife was kind, but he seemed to shrink from the congratulations of those of the Sanfords' friends who came to the wedding, filled with fluttering curiosity.

As Mr. and Mrs. Sanford drove home in the two-seated waggon, after parting with their daughter, Mr. Sanford said, with a rueful sigh:

"Winifred's quiet, maybe, but it's goin' to be a long sight quieter without her."

"His brother's dead, but that ain't all," Mrs. Sanford replied, with more than her usual irrelevancy. "Winifred'll get on anyhow! She's quiet all the way through; she don't feel much. She has made a rise and no mistake; but I dunno as I ever see a bridegroom look as mortal miserable as that one did to-day."

THE END.

The Style in Square Shoulders.

Fashionable girls in New York are apparently gone daft on the question of square shoulders. Anything to equal the pose which young women now affect in their tight-fitting costumes, when they occasionally trip into town from Newport, Narragansett or other towns is difficult to imagine. While they are on their feet they are beautiful to look upon and beyond criticism or cavil. It is when they are seated that the great and glaring flaw of the present artificial and fashionable construction of the American young girl becomes evident. While they succeed in holding their shoulders back, it is impossible to keep the neck at the same angle, when seated, unless their faces are held at the same level as the floor. Hence their heads necessarily droop forward, leaving a long and noticeable distance between the neck and the back of the high collars. It gives the effect of cutthroat suffering. But it is remedied when the girl leans forward again or rises to her feet. Then everything fits in with the correct and shapely beauty that is the second nature of America's most beautiful and famous product.—New York Sun.

Three New Dances.

Three new dances were introduced at the Dancing Masters' Convention held in New York city this week. The dances are called the "glide mazurka," introduced by Prof. A. M. Lomas, the "diamond lanciers," and "the Berlin," by Prof. Pitt Rivers. The only difference between the "glide mazurka" and the old dance of that name is that the waltz is substituted for the polka step. The effect is graceful, but the "glide" in this respect will not be without its usual complications, sometimes peculiar, and oft times disastrous. The "diamond lanciers" is facile and graceful, and is destined to become very popular. "The Berlin" possesses a slow, graceful polka movement which can be converted into a waltz, a polka or a schottische.

"I'm Hurried, Child."

"O mother, look! I've found a butterfly
Hanging upon a leaf. Do tell me why
There was no butter! Oh, do see its wings!
I never, never saw such pretty things—
All streaked and stripped with blue and brown and gold—
Where is its house, when all the days are cold?"
"Yes, yes," she said, in accents mild,
"I'm hurried, child."

"Last night my dolly quite forgot her prayers;
And when she thought you'd gone down stairs
Then dolly was afraid, and so I said:
'Just never mind, but say 'em in the bed,
Because I think that God is just as near,'
When dolls are 'fraid, do you s'pose He can hear?
The mother spoke from out the ruffles piled;
"I'm hurried, child."

"Oh, come and see the flowers in the sky—
The sun has left, and won't you, by-and-bye,
Dear mother, take me in your arms, and tell
Me all about the pussy in the well?
And then, perhaps, about 'Red Riding Hood?'"
"Too much to do! Hush, hush! you drive me wild;
I'm hurried, child."

The little one grew very quiet now,
And grieved and puzzled was the childish brow;
And then it queried; "Mother, do you know
The reason 'cause you must be hurried so?
I guess the hours are littler than I,
So I will take my pennies and will buy
A big clock! Oh, as big as it can be!
For you and me."

The mother now has leisure infinite;
She sits with folded hands, and face as white
As winter. In her heart is winter's chill,
She sits at leisure, questioning God's will.
"My child has ceased to breathe, and all is night!
Is heaven so dark that Thou dost grudge me light?
The time drags by."

O, mother sweet, if cares must ever fall,
Pray, do not make them stones to build a wall
Between thee and thy own; and miss the right
To blessedness, so sw ft to take its flight!
While answering baby questions you are
But entertaining angels unaware;
The richest gifts are gathered by the way
For darkest day.

Temperance Notes.

Dr. Geo. A. Brooks, of London, England, leader of the Prohibition party of that country and one of the most eloquent orators of the English platform, will visit America this month.

From South Africa comes the news that a new church of Talus has adopted the resolution: "No member of this church shall drink the white man's grog or native beer, nor touch it with his lips."

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Rockford, Ill., have published a wide awake five column four page paper for distribution at their county fair. The paper bears the name Our Hobbies, and presents the different lines of work carried on by the society.

It may not be generally known that John Alden, the celebrated publisher, is a staunch temperance man. He gave up a good position in Chicago because he would not consent to sell tobacco. He is just bringing out a special number of his well-known magazine entitled "Literature," devoting the September issue to temperance work.

Mrs. Maria Bateman, of the Boston W. C. T. U., is a regular visitor among the women imprisoned at the Tombs every Sunday afternoon. This lady has also extended her efforts to the Charlestown court room, in behalf of the unfortunate, and has been cordially welcomed by the presiding judge.

Mrs. Ellen W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn, N.Y., for years an acceptable pulpit speaker in that city, will give the annual sermon at National Convention, Sunday, Oct. 21st, in Metropolitan Opera House. It is expected that Bishop Fallows will speak at some time during the convention.

A good and earnest temperance worker, Mrs. Sasaki, the Secretary of Tokio (Japan) W. C. T. U., has resigned her office and devotes her time to the editorial work of the Temperance Magazine. Her successor is Mrs. Takeo, well educated in both the Japanese and English languages, and who graduated with honor from the Tokio Normal School when quite a young lady.

At the meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society lately held in Milwaukee, a resolution was adopted favoring the strict enforcement of all laws compelling the closing of saloons on Sunday and prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors and drunkards; and agreeing to petition the State Legislature to pass a law to prevent saloons from doing business within 200 feet of a church or school-house.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the celebrated philanthropist, who expends her entire annual income in doing good, has decided to present an elegant flag to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at its approaching convention in Metropolitan Opera House, New York city. It will be Mrs. Thompson's idea of a "woman's flag," emblematic of peace, purity and justice. The motto will be "For God and Home, and Humanity." The border will be made up of flags of all countries and will predict "the Parliament of Man the Federation of the World."

Each W. C. T. Union of Brooklyn, N.Y., appoints some of its members to visit the jails two days in each week. They not only take part in the regular religious exercises but labor personally with the prisoners trying to influence them to lead better lives. A movement is on foot to establish a home to which those wishing to prove by their actions the sincerity of their repentance can go after their release from prison, and from which they can be recommended to some honest and respectable employment. The Jail Committee of Hamilton have found it a necessity to have such a house, and one has been conducted in a small way for the past year with good results.

No statistics are needed to assure you that temperance reform lies at the bottom of all further political, social and religious progress. Drink is the curse of the country. It ruins the fortunes, it injures the health, it destroys the lives of one in twenty of our population, and anything which can be done to diminish this terrible sacrifice of human life and human happiness is well worthy of all the attention and study we can give it. * * * The agitation will go on without us if not with us. If we are silent, the stones would cry out. If there is in the whole of this drink business any single encouraging feature, it is to be found in the growing impatience of the people at the burden which they are forced to bear, and their growing indignation and sense of the shame and disgrace it imposes upon them.—Joseph Chamberlain, M. P., President of the London Board of Trade and Chairman of National Educational League of England.

SALMON FISHING REGULATIONS.

That was a sad story of the shooting of Mrs. Susan Howes on the New Brunswick salmon stream, and scarcely less sad is that of Miss Annie Phillipine, the sister of one of the young men suspected of the crime, as given in the Andover correspondence of the St. John Sun: Not many years ago the father of Annie, Henry Fritz, Eugene and Mary Phillipine lived in very comfortable circumstances in London, and Annie, his eldest child, received a very liberal education in Switzerland and France, the countries from whence her parents came. But Annie's mother died, and in the course of time Mr. Phillipine took unto himself another wife. Then followed reverses in business, his wife refused to share his humble lot and returned to the comfortable home of her people, but Phillipine set out with his little family for America, hoping in the new world to win back the smiles and favors of capricious fortune. At Halifax he secured a clerkship with Messrs. Darley Bentley & Co., agents for the ocean steamship line operated by the Societie Postale de l'Atlantique, while the boys and Annie tried their hands at farming in the Annapolis valley, with the result that so often attends the efforts in this line of city-bred emigrants from the old world. Their father rendered what assistance he could out of his slender income, but that only served to delay the downward progress. Two years ago the five children settled on the Tobique and twelve months later their father died Annie seems to have been the bond that kept the boys together on the farm. Under the direction and control of a capable farmer they might have done as well as hundreds of others who build uphomes in the forest, but they had little or no knowledge of farm work, and lacked the steady application necessary to success, the latter possibly owing to the mutations of the life through which they had passed. At times they worked in the woods; at times they tilled their land; occasionally they labored for their neighbors. No one with whom your correspondent talked gave them a bad name, or credited them with the nerve to originate an evil deed. They were rather of that class who, leading a restless life, follow where bolder men lead. Everybody who knows her speaks in the highest terms of Annie, who has been mother, sister and Christian counsellor to the boys. Without a murmur this noble girl, fitted by education for a higher life, immured herself in the forest depths that she might care for the orphans left in her charge.

The young lady told the Court that when her brother Henry started out to catch a fish in the river near by, there was nothing save a few potatoes in the house to eat. And this delicate girl of 24, who for two years has acted as the head of a family of five orphans in a strange land, bitterly reproached herself for having given a tardy assent to Henry's proposition to take a mild revenge on the armed men who drove him from the pool whence he was trying to replenish the empty larder. "I felt maddened," said Annie, that "Henry was fired at, but if I had forbidden him he would not have gone out to frighten those men the next day." The Sheriff of Victoria, when he went up to the Phillipine house to summon this witness, found the family on the verge of starvation. The wife of Sheriff Tibbetts states that when Annie was brought down to Andover, she was utterly destitute of under-clothing. Without food or money, or sufficient raiment to protect her from the cool night air, her only thought was to save her brother from the gallows. Do you wonder, says the Sun, that tears rolled down the cheeks of the sturdy farmers in court, and that women sobbed as if their hearts would break, as they listened to Annie Phillipine's evidence and realized that while aiming to prove he had not fired the fatal shot she was but forging link after link in the chain of evidence identifying her brotner as a participant in the terrible deed? Had she been his wife, the law would have closed her lips as tightly as if sealed by death, but being only his sister her testimony was not debarred by statute.

Henry Phillipine went to the Tobique River, in New Brunswick, to catch a fish to feed his starving brothers and sisters. Mr. Howes, of Boston, fired a gun to frighten away the poacher. The next day, Phillipine and some other young men fired at the Howes party, as they say, with no worse intent than to frighten them, but Mrs. Howes was shot and killed. The settlers express their horror at the crime and desire to see its perpetrators punished. At the same time they take advantage of the opportunity to protest against the system which preserves the fishing for wealthy aliens and prevents the native population from obtaining food for their families. From the Sun's account of the tragedy and comments thereon we learn that the lower part of the Tobique is by no means a wilderness. It is peopled by intelligent and, for the most part, industrious, law-abiding settlers, who will compare favorably with any like community in the Maritime Provinces or the New England States. Deeds of violence are practically unknown, though the dwellers along the river bank have pretty strong ideas about "fishing rights," and bitterly resent the selling of the best pools to "absentee landlords." Much that is calculated to deceive the public has been set afloat concerning the fishery regulations and leases. No man is prevented from fishing in what the law prescribes as a legitimate way in front of his own land. He can sell that privilege to another as freely as he can sell the right to cut hay or logs on his own farm. There is some ungranted crown land on the upper part of the river, from which the local government probably receives fifty to one hundred dollars a year for the right to catch salmon there, but the chief owner of wild lands is the New Brunswick Railway Land Company, which controls the fishing within its territory. The lessees of the several pools combined together this year to rigorously suppress poaching, and have caused notices to be posted all along the river that trespassers on their reserves will be punished to the full extent of the law. Whether the enforcement of the law has been at all rigorous, as compared with former years, is difficult to determine. There have been some convictions and forfeitures, but it is pretty clear that the poachers have been more scared than hurt. Be that as it may, much ill-feeling has been aroused and sweeping threats have been indulged in on both sides. It is contended that so long as the owners enjoy the right to fish in the waters that run through their lands they have nothing to complain of, no matter how the fishing privileges on the crown lands are disposed of, and on its face this appears to be a reasonasonable contention. But many of the settlers do not think so. Said one, in reply to the Sun's inquiries: "The law as it exists has been framed for the protection of the rich man from the States and is intended to prevent the poor residents from catching fish even for their own use. You know very well that salmon are only to be found in quantities in pools here and there along this or any other river. Cast your fly, if you are rich enough to own a proper outfit, for miles and miles and the fish will not rise. They are either not there, or if there are intent on making their way along the stream. You might waste days and days and not land a single fish. If you want to catch one with the legal apparatus you must go to the pools. You are not allowed to use a net or a spear even in front of your own door to save your family from starvation. A common hook and line will not land a salmon in the same way that you catch a sturgeon or a halibut—by main strength—for the mouth of this fish is so tender that the hook will tear out as soon as any great force is applied. You must have a forty or fifty dollar outfit, swell rods, reels, lines and ever so many flies, for the salmon has a very capricious taste. Now how many of us can afford to put the price of a waggon into fishing tackle that we can only use in front of our own farm, with the possibility of not catching a salmon from one end of the year to the other? The prohibition to use spear and net does not in the least worry the men who are rich enough to lease pools and spend ever so much money for fancy outfits. The law might with equal fairness prohibit the shooting of partridge or duck except with a gun costing over $100. I hold that when men living along a river want a fish they should not be forbidden to feed their families by means of a spear or net. Prohibit netting and spearing in the pools or wherever salmon congregate in numbers, if you will, but do not take away all of our substance and give it to the stranger. The salmon is a food fish, intended for the use, not amusement, of man. Protect it in every legitimate way for the benefit of the people who pay the taxes and make New Brunswick what it is; but do not turn our free country into a private pleasure park for the millionaire alien."

How Stanley's Expedition Started.

Mr. Herbert Ward, the African explorer, met Mr. Stanley and his followers as they were setting out on their present expedition. "I never," he says, "in my life was so struck with any sight as with Stanley's caravan on the march. Egyptians, Soudanese, Somalis, Zanzibaris and others, nine hundred strong. It took me two hours to pass them, and then I met the second in command, Major Barttelot, a young fellow, burnt very dark, with a masher collar fixed on a flannel shirt, top-boots, etc. He was carrying a large bucket that some fellow had abandoned. 'I say, are you Ward?' he shouted. 'I am Ward,' I said, 'and I now belong to your expedition.' 'I am very glad to hear it,' he replied; 'Stanley has spoken of you; and so you are coming along; that's right—very good business!' He seemed to be full of tremendous spirits, looked very fit, and I admired him immensely. Tippoo Tib, the notorious slave trader of Stanley Falls, has come round from Zanzibar with Stanley, and in his silken robes, jewelled turban and kriss, looks a very ideal Oriental potentate. It is thought 'good business,' as Captain Barttelot would say, getting him for an ally. He had forty-two of his wives along with him. Some of them are handsome women. One little stout lady, decked out in magnificent costume, appeared to be rather free in her behavior, I thought; she winked at me, decidedly. I gave her two fowls, and we parted on a friendly footing."

Glorified Spinsters and Bachelors.

As for "the Glorified Spinster," we decline to think her glorified at all. She is simply a woman who lives a more or less unnatural life of self-dependence—the degree of the unnaturalness depending on the degree of her self-dependence and the completeness of the disappearance of that religious devoutness which prevents loneliness from degenerating into self-dependence—just as a glorified bachelor, if there be such a being, is simply a man who lives a more or less unnatural life of anxiety for himself, instead of for others, on behalf of whom his nature craves to act. There is no gratification in any kind of mutilation, and it is as much a mutilation of the feminine nature to live the self-dependent life without the power of constantly entering into the feelings and wants of others, as it is a mutilation of the masculine nature to live a life of self-dependence in which there is no large element of constant responsibility for the external necessities of fellow-creatures.—London Spectator.

The Parson Gets in Firstly.

"Well," pleasantly remarked Brother Doeg, as he greeted the pastor on his return from the long vacation (six weeks is a long vacation for a preacher), "well, you have come back to work at last. And what do you suppose the devil has been doing all the time you were away on vacation?" "I don't know," replied the parson, for it was he, "but if he has been any busier in some of the pews than he was before I went away, he needs a great deal longer rest than I've had, and he needs it a great deal more, too, poor fellow." And Brother Doeg forgot what he had intended saying and couldn't think of anything new until after the pastor had announced the first hymn.—Deacon Burdette.

One Way to Make Money.

There are more ways than one of making money, and there is a man in this city who is profiting by one of the other ways. All photographers use a paper impregnated with a silver solution. This man makes periodical visits to the photograph galleries and secures this paper. He burns it and refines the ashes, securing quite an amount of silver. His bargain is for 20 per cent. of the silver produced, and some weeks he secures over $100. It is hard work, but he makes a fair living at it.—Chicago Herald.

The richest and most influential Chinaman in Chicago is Hip Lung, the Mayor of the Celestial colony there and the laundry king of the city. He is a little man physically. His fortune amounts to $200,000.

A STEER ON THE STAIRS.

Lots of Excitement in a South Park Flat.

Strange noises came from the direction of the front door of 2,803 South avenue. The second flat is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. John Fowler and their son William. The strange noises grew louder.

"Burglar," whispered Mrs. Fowler with a shudder.

"Nonsense," replied Mr. Fowler, "no burglar would be fool enough to make such a racket as that."

Mr. Fowler got up and lighted the gas in the hall. Presently Mrs. Fowler heard him say:

"Well, I never!"

When the gas blazed up Mr. Fowler was amazed to see standing on the stairs just below the first turn a large Texas steer, with the back yard gate on one horn and the front hall hat tree on the other. The steer looked at Mr. Fowler and Mr. Fowler looked at the steer. The steer seemed to have no explanation to offer as to why he should call at that hour of the night. So Mr. Fowler inquired:

"What do you want here? This is no china shop."

The steer dropped the back-yard gate and shook the hat tree at Mr. Fowler. Then he pawed up a yard or two of stair carpet, and bellowed in a rich baritone voice that awoke everybody in the block. The steer climbed a step or two higher.

"Shoo!" said Mr. Fowler, waving the front flap of his nightgown at the animal "shoo! scat! Get out; you're not wanted."

But the steer only pawed up another yard of carpet and shook the hat tree at Mr. Fowler.

The steer, having recovered his wind, had made up his mind to come up those steps at a jump. Mr. Fowler got inside and shut the door barely in time. The animal knocked, but was refused admittance. Then he hung the hat tree on the door knob, pawed up some new carpets, bellowed sonorously and started up the stairs to the third flat. Meantime quite a crowd of neighbors had gathered in the front of the house. Presently a couple of men in slouch hats and spurs, with coils of rope in their hands, came up.

"Seen anything of a strange steer?" they inquired.

"You'll find him up stairs in that house," said a bystander.

The cowboys dashed up the stairs. They had a rope around his horns in a jiffy, and he came down humbly enough. The cowboys explained that the steer had got away from them at the stock yards.—Chicago Tribune.

Fresh From Vanity Fair.

Some charming models in children's head gear are just imported: they are Directoire shapes in drawn velvet on silk and nothing more becoming could be devised.

Scarlet of a yellow tint is pronounced bad, hence it will not be worn the coming season except by children whose bright complexions will stand such trying color, although by right it is not at all a child's color. Veronese red will be worn by children also and with more satisfactory results.

The combination of red and purple is not a pretty one, nor is purple and green, yet both will be worn the coming season, and the fashion which sets its seal upon these combinations is French. Modistes were the first to put these trying colors together, but now the modistes and milliners both essay to make something stylish if not very harmonious out of these difficult shades.

There is an innovation in the polonaise which is ever a convenient and useful garment. The waist is shirred or smocked and a girdle is worn with it; the sleeves are of the mutton leg variety and are gathered into a wide cuff of velvet or other trimming; the petticoat may be plain or with a shirred ruffle on the edge. A very pretty model for a young girl is such a costume in a woolen fabric, plaid or plain.

No Leveler Like Misfortune.

Robert Garrett is the richest patient in the records of lunacy. When you find the representative of $10,000,000 in such a sad condition it certainly seems sensational. What an estate to go into the hands of a guardian? It may be remembered that Robert Garrett was holding a private conference with William H. Vanderbilt at the time the latter died. They were in Vanderbilt's office, and no one else was present when death seized one of these magnates of wealth, while the other gazed on the scene with horror. Garrett's mind soon afterward began to fail, and various theories have been advanced. It is well known that they were rivals for the western traffic, one representing the Baltimore & Ohio nd the other the Central-Hudson. How strange that of these two contending capitalists the one should be resting in his tomb on Staten Island while the other is in a state of mental eclipse, which to him is little better than a living death. Who would have forecast such a fate? But the great have their share of misfortunes, as Shakespeare says:

> "Yes, like enough high battled Cæsar will
> Unstate his happiness—and things outward
> Do draw their inward quality after them
> To suffer all alike."

True enough, there is no leveler like misfortune, and the loss of reason is one of the greatest that can befall anyone of the race.—Macaulay Cor. Rochester Democrat.

Of Course He Had It.

Doctor (in passenger car)—Is there a gentleman from Kentucky on board?

"Yes, sir; I'm from Kentucky."

"Well, there's an injured man in the baggage-car and he needs some liquor; let me have a little from your bottle, please."

Independent of Marriage.

Jack (who has come into a fortune)—Now that I have all this money, Dick, I don't know what to do first.

Dick—Why don't you marry?

Jack—Never! The fortune has done away with all necessity of marrying.

A Boomerang

He (a new arrival at a country hotel, to unknown lady)—Aw—have you been long a captive in this—er—menagerie?

She—You can hardly call me a captive; perhaps keeper would be better, for I am the wife of the showman and have to help feed the animals.—Bazar.

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon is about to publish a book entitled "The Cheque Book of the Bank of Faith."

NEW COSTUMES FOR BEAUTIES.

Some Visions of Loveliness in Frocks.

MRS. LANGTRY AND MRS. POTTER INVEST

A Paris correspondent cables that he interviewed Mrs. Langtry in Paris and asked her about the new dresses which she has gone there to obtain for her next season on this continent. "Are they pretty?" queried the correspondent.

"Pretty!" echoed Mrs. Langtry. "Don't let me say—ask Worth. I call them frocks: he calls them creations. I think he is right. They are very elaborate.

"He comes to me and says, 'I will make you one like this and another like that, and I say, 'Oh, not another single one.' Then he persists and says, 'Just let me tempt you with this,' and he begins to explain and it sounds so nice that—well, I find another 'magnificent creation,' as he calls it, added to the list."

"Give me an idea of some of these 'creations,' please."

Mrs. Langtry beamed, for where is the woman worth the name who does not discuss dress with gusto?

"Well," she replied, "I have from fifty to sixty dresses for my new plays. You may imagine, therefore, that it is no easy job to remember exactly each dress. Indeed, I have not seen them all, and a great many more 'creations' will be revealed to me next week in Paris. Among those I have seen so far these are the ones that have taken my fancy most. My favorite is a directoire style of dress. The skirt is made of white and black embroidery, which is copied from designs in the Museum in Lyons.

"Another remarkably beautiful costume is a ball dress. The bodice is white, crossed with a sash like the Order of the Garter. I am to pin all my jewels on this sash. No. 3, to my mind, in point of loveliness is an orchid dress, quite a novelty. It was designed from lovely, rich orchids. The most vaporous dress, as far as you can imagine, is made to imitate the delicate flower of pale Ophelia, mauve in the centre, growing darker and darker at its ends. Let me see again. I have two dresses of a peculiar striped velvet made very simply, after the style worn in Gainsborough's Mrs. Siddons in the National Gallery. One is old blue and pink, the other pale blue and maize.

TEA GOWNS FOR STAGE WEAR.

"Tea gowns are the things nowadays, to my mind, for the stage. They give freedom of action and are very adaptable to stage surroundings. Felix has made the most lovely tea gowns. One particularly is remarkably pretty. It is in the Empire style. The skirt is embroidered in all colors and a deep jewelled belt goes 'round the waist. Another is a pale pink crepe de Chine. The train is attached to one shoulder and one hip. In another the back is of silver gray brocaded plush, and the front is of white and silver silk gauze, embroidered in silver, and the train is bordeer with the darkest Russian sable.

"For a coat I have a novelty. It is of chamois leather color, embroidered all over with gold and silver, opening over a waistcoat of silver fox fur."

MRS. POTTER, THE NEW YORK BEAUTY,

is also in Paris, and she told the correspondent that when she lands in New York, at the end of this week, she will wear the latest description of fashionable costume in the gay capital. It will be a dress of russet brown China crepe, which is of all her gowns the most unique and becoming. The lower skirt hangs in simple folds, made rather full; the upper skirt is short in front and made with irregular pleats on the side, which have no hems, the finish being raw edge of the material. The bodice, slightly pleated in the front and back pieces, is confined at the waist by an absinthe moire ribbon in long ends and loops to the bottom of the skirt. The neck is festooned with green China crepe, around which will be worn a voluminous scarf of the same green color and material. The most remarkable feature of this costume is the sleeves, which are rather Turkish in appearance, but have been named the Capulet. A hat of brown velvet, made high in front, with a low flat crown, will be worn with the costume.

Among the stage dresses which M. Worth has completed for Mrs. Potter is an evening gown of brocaded gray silk, with a court train and an overskirt of white mousseline de soie. The bodice is low necked and the short sleeves are trimmed with a chiffon de mousseline de soie and a long fringe of silver and steel beads, which hang from beneath the arms and reach to the bottom of the waist.

One of the most original compositions of M. Worth for Mrs. Potter is a wrap called the Cora. Two in this fashion have been made. One is of absinthe colored cloth, to be worn with the boy's costume in "Rosalind," and the other for driving—is of brown cloth and covers the entire dress similar to an Irish cloak, but differing in the shoulders, where, instead of being full or pleated, it fits snugly and opens at the left side, with an armlet arranged on the right. There is a front seam and one on each side, down which and around the neck are bands of black and gold galon.

A reception dress which Mrs. Potter bears to America is of dark blue velvet and is made very plain. It has no trimmings, with the exception of black jet fringe, which hangs beneath the arms and around the neck.

Something Like a Memory.

A writer in the New York Times says: "A most remarkable instance of memory has just come to my notice. Its possessor is a lady member of Dr. Howard Crosby's church in New York. Without having taken a single note, she will when she goes home write out every word of her pastor's sermon, and she tells me she never makes a mistake of a "the" or an "and" that every sentence not only embodies his idea, but gives it in his exact language. For twenty-five years this lady has been performing these feats of memory, and during that time she has written out some 2,000 sermons. The manuscripts of some of them she has bound and presented to Dr. Crosby. They make forty large volumes.

When a Cincinnati husband was asked in court if he dragged his wife out of bed by the hair he said he couldn't really remember, as that was a very busy morning with him.—Detroit Free Press.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE

Scheham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON
THURSDAY, OCT. 4, 1888.

The Canada Citizen gives some interesting statistics with reference to committments to jail for drunkness in the seven counties which lately repealed the Scott Act, during the last year which they were under the operation of that law, and the last year they were under a license law. The total figures are, for the former, 36, and the latter, 160. There is a whole volume of conviction contained in those figures.

It appears that friend Fawcett's motto, which we took exception to, was only temporary. The Review says:

"Our permanent motto: The welfare of the people is the supreme law: How do you like it, brother Thurston?"

Well, it's an improvement—a decided improvement—but we would like to see a clause added, making "the welfare of the printer the supreme object." Kindly attend to this, brother, and our satisfaction will boil over.

John Charles Dent died in Toronto last week. Mr. Dent was a native of England, and came to this country when quite young. Since that time he has made himself an enviable name in Canadian literature in the capacity of an historian. For a time he published and edited "Arcturus," a high-class literary perodical, in Toronto, which only ran about a year, when it suspended for want of support. Mr. Dent was but 35 years of age, and Canada loses one of her most promising literary characters in his death.

The Hamilton Times publishes a long editoral, dealing with the injustice of the present land system of this country. In a poor, weak way, it tries to palm off some of Henry George's theories as its own argument, and says: "What's the use of a man working like a slave in a factory, day after day, week after week, year after year, to earn money and hand it over to the landlord and the land speculator?" The Times' agitation for a reform in this is all right, but when it asks, "Dost like thy taskmaster, workingman?" and "if so keep right on voting the Tory ticket," we would rise to remark that the Grits were in power several years ago, and "the oldest inhabitant" does not remember any perceptible diminution in the scale of rents during that period! The theory is strong, but the application weak.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Miss Thurston of this place is more than busy, in fact overtaxed. She has no less than five pupils taking lessons in music and they receive instruction, all separate, in different places, and at different times. Miss Thurston's musical abilities are said to be of a very high order.

Many of our friends and neighbors have returned from the Toronto exhibition, highly pleased with what they saw.

Another new portable saw mill is about being erected on the 3rd line by that enterprising gentleman, Mr. Walker.

The new bridge over the Beaver on the 4th line is completed and is certainly a monument to the skill of Mr. J. R. Fawcett, contractor.

Farmers are well pleased with the return of grain in all cases when they have threshed, especially the fall wheat. Messrs. Wiley and Best threshed 500 bushels of fall wheat for Mr. T. Ellis one afternoon lately. It was thought that potatoes would be a poor crop, but it will be otherwise—they are good, especially the late crop.

Prize List East Grey Agricultural Society.

Following is the prize list of the East Grey fair, held in Flesherton on Monday and Tuesday of last week. In all cases the person named first took first prize.

HORSES.

DRAUGHT.—Pair draught horses, John Somm, W. McLaughy. Brood mare, S. Stokes, A. McMullen. 2 year old gelding or filly, F. Cairns, S. Sheardown. 1 year old gelding or filly, Wm. Chard, B. Wright Spring foal, W. Buchanan jr., A. McMullen.

GENERAL PURPOSE HORSES.—Pair general purpose horses, John Hill, R. Porteous. Brood mare, R. McAfee, W. C. Parker. 2 year gelding or filly, J. Hill, R. Porteous. 1 year old gelding or filley, R. McAfee, R. McAfee. Spring foal, A. Madill, R. McAfee.

ROADSTER AND OTHER HORSES.—Pair roadster horses, W. McConnell, A. Beattie. Pair carriage horses, D. Stinson, D. Thompson. Buggy horse, Dr. Sproule, W. McConnell. Saddle horse, D. McLean, J. A. Lever.

CATTLE.

Durham heifer, 2 years old, Jas. Mercer. Ayrshire bull, 2 years old, A. Cairns, sr., A. Cairns, sr. Ayrshire cow, A. Cairns, sr., R. Oliver. Ayrshire heifer, 1 year old, A. Cairns, sr. Ayrshire heifer calf, A. Cairns, sr. Devon aged bull, R. Oliver. Devon, 2 years old bull, R. Oliver. Devon cow, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Devon heifer, 2 years old, R. Oliver. Devon heifer, 1 year old, R. Oliver. Devon heifer calf, R. Oliver. Grade cow, Jas. Mercer, J. O'Brien. 2 year old heifer, Jas. Mercer, J. Mercer. 1 year old heifer, Irwin Fawcett, I. Fawcett. Pair working oxen, D. Stinson, Irwin Fawcett.

SHEEP.

COTSWOLD.—Ram lamb, R. Oliver. Pair aged ewes, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Pair Shearling ewes, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Pair ewe lambs, R. Oliver, R. Oliver.

LEICESTER.—Ram lamb, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Pair aged ewes, R. Oliver. Pair ewe lambs, R. Oliver.

SOUTHDOWN.—Aged ram, T. A. M. Ferguson. Shearling ram, R. Oliver. Ram lamb, R. Oliver. Pair aged ewes, T. A. M. Ferguson, R. Oliver. Pair Shearling ewes, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Pair ewe lambs, R. Oliver, J. Mercer.

SHROPSHIRE.—Shearling ram, J. Buskin. Ram lamb, J. Buskin, J. Buskin. Pair aged ewes, J. Buskin. Pair Shearling ewes, J. Buskin. Pair ewe lambs, J. Buskin, J. Buskin.

SWINE.

BERKSHIRE AND OTHER BLACK BREEDS.—Aged boar, R. Oliver, C. Irwin. Aged sow, D. Thompson, W. Mitchell. Sow pig, C. Irwin, W. Mitchell.

SUFFOLK AND OTHER WHITE BREEDS.—Boar pig, C. Irwin. Sow pig, J. I. Graham, C. Irwin.

POULTRY.

Pair Brahamas dark, W. J. Cooey. Pair Brahmas, light, J. McGee, W. J. Cooey. Pair Leghorn white, W. Barnhouse, W. J. Cooey. Pair Leghorn brown, C. Bellamy, J. McGee. Pair Hamburg, golden penciled W. J. Coote. Hamburg, silver penciled, J. McGee, J. McGee. Houdans, J. McGee. Spanish, white face, W. W. Trimble, W. W. Trimble. Game, black red, J. Smith, J. Brodie. Plymouth rock, J. H. Heard, J. H. Heard. Bantams, black red, T. A. M. Ferguson. Aylesbury ducks, W. J. Cooey, J. H. Heard. Other ducks, J. McGee, T. A. M. Ferguson. Geese, W. J. Cooey, Jas. Beecroft. Turkeys, J. A. Lever, T. A. M. Ferguson.

GRAIN AND SEEDS.

FALL WHEAT.—Clawson, D. Stinson, R. Ruthvan. Other variety, R. Ruthvan, D. Stinson.

SPRING WHEAT.—Russian, J. Brodie, D. Stinson. Other variety, J. Stewart, W. J. Cooey. Barley, J. Brodie, J. Mercer. Oats, white, J. Brodie, J. Mercer. Oats, black, D. Stinson, W. Norton. Peas, small, J. Mercer, J. Brodie. Peas, large R. Ruthvan, J. Brodie. Indian corn, white, T. A. M. Ferguson, J. Holley. Indian corn, yellow, T. A. M. Ferguson, W. Norton. Collection beans, J. McGee.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.

Potatoes, early rose, Irwin Fawcett, J. Ferris. Potatoes, other variety, J. Stewart, W. Buchanan, jr. Collection potatoes, C. Bellamy. Mangold, globe, J. Ferris, W. Norton. Mangolds, long, W. Norton, J. I. Graham. Turnip, Swedish, J. Holley, D. Thompson. Turnips, other field, J. A. Lever, J. I. Graham. Turnips, table, T. A. M. Ferguson, J. Miller. Beets, Long Blood, R. Oliver, J. Ferris. Beets, other variety, D. Thompson, J. I. Graham. Carrots, field, T. A. M. Ferguson, W. J. Cooey. Carrots, Early Horn, J. I. Graham, W. Norton. Parsnips, J. Ferris, R. Oliver. Onions from bulb seed, D. Thompson, J. Ferris. Onion, potato, W. Norton, J. Milner. Cabbage Winningstead, D. Thompson, J. Milner. Cabbage, Drumhead, D. Thompson, Mrs. Bulmer. Cabbage, other variety, D. Thompson, J. Milner. Cauliflowers, W. Norton, J. Milner. Colory, white, R. Oliver, A. Beattie. Celery, red, J. Miller, Jas. Ferris. Pumpkin, J. Holley, D. McMullen. Squashes, J. A. Lever, E. Gordon. Citrons, W. Norton, J. H. Heard. Tomatoes, W. Norton, W. Barnhouse. Watermelon, Mrs. Bulmer, W. Norton.

FRUIT.

FALL APPLES.—Red Astrichans, I. Fawcett, J. Brodie. Duchess of Oldenburg, I. Fawcett, W. Buchanan, jr. St. Lawrence, Jas. Stuart, T. Kells. Gravenstein, R. Ruthvan, R. Gilray. Alexandria, I. Fawcett, H. Weber. Collection, Jas. Stuart, J. Brodie.

WINTER APPLES.—Northern Spy, J. I. Graham, J. Brodie. Baldwin, Decision witheld until apples are properly named. Spitzenburg, J. I. Graham, D. Graham. Golden russets, J. I. Graham, D. Graham. Roxbury russets, J. I. Graham, D. Graham. Pomme Grise, W. J. Cooey, R. Ruthvan. Snow apples, Dr. Sproule, D. Graham. Collection, D. Graham, J. I. Graham.

PEARS.—Bartlet, W. Norton, J. Brodie. Flemish beauty, R. Gilray, J. Brodie. Clapp's favorite, J. Brodie. Louise Bonne de Jersy, J. Brodie, D. Graham.

PLUMS.

Lombards, J. W. Armstrong, T. A. M. Ferguson. Smiths Orleans, W. Norton. Golden Drop, J. W. Armstrong, W. Buchanan, Jr. Victoria, J. H. Heard, T. A. M. Ferguson. Reine Claude, J. Brodie. Gages, A. Madill, H. Weber. Collection, T. A. M. Ferguson, R. Gilray. Coll. Crab Apples, J. I. Graham, Jas. Stuart. Grapes, White, J. H. Heard, W. Barnhouse. Grapes, Colored, J. H. Heard, J. I. Graham.

DAIRY OR OTHER PRODUCE.

Butter, 5 pounds, J. Abbott, I. Fawcett. Butter 15 pounds, W. Norton, Jas. Ferris. Butter, tub, Jas. Ferris, J. Milner. Cheese, home made, W. Norton, G. Stewart.

MANUFACTURES.

Lumber wagon, J. H. Heard. Democrat wagon, J. H. Heard. Buggy, covered, J. H. Heard. Buggy, open, J. H. Heard. Cutter, single, J. H. Heard. Cutter, double, J. H. Heard.

Set heavy team harness, D. Clayton. Set carriage harness, D. Clayton. Pr. gent's sewed boots, J. Smith, W. Barnhouse. Pr. gent's stoga boots, J. Smith, W. Barnhouse. Pr. ladies boots, J. Smith, W. Barnhouse.

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

Pr. Blankets, Mrs. Milner, H. Flesher. Fulleloth, factory made, R. Heron. Flannel, all wool, R. Heron, H. Flesher. Flannel, union, Mrs. Milner, W. Norton. Rag carpet, S. Stokes, Mrs. Milner. Stocking yarn, W. Buchanan, H. Flesher. Woollen mits, R. Ruthvan. W. Norton. Woollen socks, W. Norton, J. Abbott. Patchwork quilt, Mrs. Gilray, Miss Norton. Knit or crochet quilt, Miss Norton, Miss Ferris. Quilt, any other kind, Miss Norton, Miss J. Stewart. Col. Berlin wool work, Mrs. Milner, Mrs. Gilray. Arrasene work, Mrs. Munshaw, Miss Damude. Braiding in cotton, Miss Ferris, Mrs J. A. Lever. Embroidery in silk, Miss Armstrong, Miss Richardson. Embroidery in cotton, Mrs. Milner, Miss Norton. Embroidery in worsted, Mrs. Milner, Miss Norton. Crochet work in cotton, Mrs. Gilray, Mrs. Milner. Crochet work in wool, Mrs. Milner, Mrs. Gilray. Point and honiton lace, Mrs. Milner, Mrs. Munshaw. Fancy knitting in wool, Miss Norton, Mrs. J. Beecroft. Wool work on canvas, Miss Armstrong, Miss Norton. Needlework, ornamental, Miss Norton, Mrs. Munshaw. Manx Art, hand made, Miss Norton, Mrs. J. A. Lever. Leather work, ornamental, Miss. J. Stewart, Mrs. Gilray. Macrame lace, Mrs. Munshaw, Miss. Norton. Pr. worked slippers, Mrs. Milner, Miss Norton. Tatting, Mrs. Milner. Wax Fruit, Mrs. Milner. Wax Flowers, Mrs. Gilray, Miss Armstrong. Col. Photos, Mrs. Bulmer. Crayon drawing, Miss Armstrong, Miss Gordon. Pencil drawing, Miss Damude, Miss Armstrong. Water color painting, Miss Armstrong. Oil painting and drawing, Miss Damude, Miss Armstrong. Feather wreath, Mrs. J. Buskin, Mrs. Gilray. Cotton Batton wreath, Mrs. Gilray, Mrs. Milner. Farmers. wreath, Mrs. Milner. Cretonne work, Mrs. Milner.

PLANTS

Table Bouquet, Mrs. Beecroft, Miss E. Gordon. Foliage Plant, Mrs. C. Bellamy. Geranium, Mrs. Damude, Mrs. Munshaw. Hanging basket, Mrs. Damude, Mrs. Munshaw. Calla Lilly, Mrs. Damude, Mrs. Munshaw. Begonia, Mrs. C. Bellamy, Mrs. Bulmer. Cut Flowers, Mrs Beecroft, Miss E. Gordon. Coll. Plant Mrs. Beecroft, Mrs. C. Bellamy.

General News.

A strong impression prevails in Washington and many other places—that the Retaliation Bill is dead.

A house-to-house inspection in Buffalo has brought to light seventeen cases of smallpox, which have been kept concealed from the health authorities.

Emperor Francis Joseph narrowly escaped being shot during artillery practice at Stemfield.

The Ontario Wheel Company's works at Gananoque were burned Sunday; estimated loss, $25,000

Premier Greenway, being interviewed at London, expressed himself as satisfied that there was no great fear of a hitch in connection with the Red River Valley road.

APPLES FOR SALE.

Choice apples for sale by
M. B. HAMMOND,
Postmaster, Kimberley.

Piano For Sale.

A beautiful 7 octave upright Dominion Piano nearly new, at a bargain. Apply at Advance office.

A few prize blankets left at the Flesherton woollen factory. Call and get some of them before it is too late.

W. H. FLESHER.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

WEEKLY EMPIRE

CANADA'S LEADING PAPER.

(Height, 11 inches.)

THE EMPIRE since its establishment has met with unprecedented success, and already stands in the proud position of Canada's Leading Journal; but, in order to place the WEEKLY EDITION in the hands of every Farmer in the Dominion this fall, the Publishers have had prepared a Handsome and Life-like Bust of

SIR JOHN MACDONALD,

To be given to every subscriber to the WEEKLY EMPIRE PAYING ONE YEAR IN ADVANCE.

ONLY $1 PER ANNUM.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

Address THE EMPIRE, Toronto

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Notice to Contractors.

THE WORKS for the construction of the canal, already mentioned, advertised to be let on the 2nd of October next are unavoidably postponed to the following dates:

Tenders will be received until

Wednesday, the 7th day of November next.

Plans and specifications will be ready for examination at this office and at Sault Ste Marie on and after

Wednesday, the 24th day of October next.

By Order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 27th September, 1888

STONE FLOUR!

STONE
FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Desires to inform the public in general that the rumor lately circulated, to the effect that he has been selling roller flour, is utterly false. Mr. Loucks would inform the public that he has never sold roller flour, and never intends to; also, that he has always had stone flour on hand and for sale since last winter, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 80	to	5 00
Fall Wheat	$0 78	to	0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78		0 80
Barley	0 50		0 60
Oats	0 30		0 30
Peas	0 50		0 55
Butter	0 16		0 16
Eggs, fresh	0 15		0 15
Potatoes bush	0 40		0 50
Pork	6 50		6 50
Hay per ton	7 00		8 00
Hides	4 50		5 50
Wool	16		18
Sheepskins	0 50		1 00
Geese	0 05		0 05
Turkeys	0 7		0 8
Chickens per pair	0 20		0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40		0 50

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office Strain's Block Residence, Wm. Wright's

Partnership.

E. T. HIXON, M.D.C.M. — J. C. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

All Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel 1 and 2 of each month. To intending patients, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore

P McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, &c. Conveyancer &c. Agent for purchasers and sellers of Farms and Town Property. Issuer of Marriage LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton.

Or to J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising may be made for it.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot of

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

REMOVAL!

F. G. KARSTEDT,

Having purchased the stock of WM. STRAIN, is now in a better position than ever to take the lead in

STOVES,
TIN,
COPPERWARE,
And Metal Work of all kinds.

Eavetroughing a Specialty.

F. G. KARSTEDT,

STRAIN'S BLOCK, FLESHERTON,

A Positive Cure. ✝ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✝ A Pleasant Cure.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

The rate of taxation in Orangeville is 22 mills on the dollar—Brampton 23.

The Dundalk Herald gives its readers fair warning that in three weeks it will take a holiday and suspend publication.

A new paper is about starting in Bolton, to be called, we believe, the Bolton Advertiser.

Mrs. Hugh Watt, wife of the gentleman who founded and conducted for some years the Meaford Monitor, died at that town last week of typhoid fever. The case is a sad one. Mrs. Watt was visiting old acquaintances in Meaford, when she was taken ill. The Mirror says:—It is two years or more since she last saw her husband, he being medical superintendent of an hospital at Barkerville, Cariboo District, B. C., and Mrs. Watt having left there to stay in Toronto with her two sons while they are attending college. Mrs. Watt would have been unable to reach Meaford in time to see his wife before death ensued, even had he started when he first received word of her illness, the journey requiring some 10 or 12 days. The same cause prevented his attendance at the funeral. The two sons were present at the mother's bedside when she passed away. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the Meaford cemetery.

About two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon Minnis' sawmill, in Holland, about four miles from this place, was the scene of a shocking accident. Chas. Garbutt, a young man 21 years of age that day, son of Mr. Wm. Garbutt, was engaged in cleaning away the rubbish from under the shingle saw, when it caught his left arm just above the wrist, cutting and mangling it horribly. The saw was not running under full power and either in the saw tearing through the flesh or the young man's efforts to get away he was thrown over and the saw caught his right side cutting a horrible wound from the groin to the right breast, but fortunately not cutting through the bowels. The arm was horribly torn and lacerated, the muscles and arteries were cut through and splinters knocked off the bone with the points of the teeth and the flesh torn from the bone up to near the elbow. Dr. McCullough was sent for and dressed the wound on the body, by which time Dr. Oldham was also sent for, and assisted in dressing the lacerated arm. Hopes are entertained that it can be saved.—Chatsworth News.

The 12th annual convention of the provincial W. C. T. U. meets in Sarnia from the 12th to the 14th of October. It promises to be a meeting of unusual interest. Each county will be represented by a shield showing the number of unions in the county, and number of members.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

WHEN VISITING

Flesherton

DON'T FAIL TO

EXAMINE THE STOCK OF

J. E. MOORE,

of the FLESHERTON FURNITURE WAREROOMS, both in the exhibition building and at our store,

Nos. 1 and 2 Durham Street.

See Beautiful Plush Parlor Suites in Walnut Frames. Bedroom Setts. in a number of Styles, from $11 to $30 per set in Elm, Mahogany and Walnut Woods.

The justly celebrated NEW RAYMOND SEWING MACHINE—The best in the world.

And the well known, tried and tested KARN ORGAN,

Will both be shown. All kinds of repairs and Needles kept in stock. I will pay, as well as interest you, to walk through our Show Rooms and see goods and get prices. Don't forget the place.

FLESHERTON FURNITURE WAREROOMS

Durham Street, Flesherton.

Our Undertaking Department

is complete. A good stock of polished and cloth-covered Coffins and Caskets on hand.

A first-class Hearse in connection.

Photos,
Photos,
Photos.

We are now turning out stock far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MES. BULMER,

FLESHERTON

HEARD'S
Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

A DEAD MAN'S DIARY.

Revelations of the Life and Actions of Emperor Frederick.

GERMANY ASTOUNDED, ENGLAND GRATIFIED

Frederick the Father of German Confederation—Bismarck's Intrigues and Bavaria's Unwillingness.

A Berlin cable says: The publication of the Emperor Frederick's diary is everywhere recognized as an event of the greatest national importance. Official and political circles, however, that are intimately versed in the innermost history of the construction of the German empire, have been astounded by the publication, whilst the whole German people are stirred to their very depths by the relations which show the real greatness of the deceased Emperor Frederick, his influence in creating the empire, and his noble aims for its future.

The National Zeitung complains of the indiscretion of the publication as shown in the selection of the passages, and says it was obviously not intended by the Emperor Frederick that they should be made public. It instances the revelation that at Versailles there was much friction between the Emperor, then Crown Prince, and Prince Bismarck over the declaration of the existence of the German Empire; that Prince Bismarck drafted the letter in which the King of Bavaria is made to appear as having reluctantly invited King William of Prussia to assume the Imperial dignity, and that in October, 1870, Prince Bismarck informed the Grand Duke of Baden of his determination to wage persistent war against the Papal doctrine of Infallibility, and to otherwise assail the influence of the Catholic Church in Germany. It is argued that a disclosure of the nature of this last revelation is alike wanton and impudent, and will tend to revive the slumbering fires of the Culturkampf again and to direct the rage of the clericals against Prince Bismarck, as the sole origin of the policy of the repression of Catholics.

LIBERAL ORGANIZATION.

The diary commences with the date July 11th, 1870. On the 29th of the same month Frederick wrote: "My principal thought is how to carry out a Liberal organization in Germany after peace has been secured." The diary details conversations with his father, Bismarck and Ruggenbach on the subject, and he wrote that they were slowly coming around to his views. On October 9th Bismarck confessed that he had not thought the desire for an imperial crown was so strong among the German people, and that he was mistaken in 1866 in treating the question with such indifference.

DESIRE FOR PEACE.

Under date of October 18th Frederick writes: "This birthday reminds me of the seriousness of the task I shall some day have to solve in German politics. I hope I shall not live to see more wars. Evidently there are many who look forward with confidence. I also am certain of the fulfilment of the task, because I know that I will prove myself worthy of this confidence."

BAVARIA'S OBSTINACY.

The following pages revealed the slowness of the negotiations, Bavaria obstinately refusing to consent. The Grand Duke of Baden was one of the warmest supporters. Even Prince Bismarck seemed discouraged at the attitude of the southern States. An entry, under date of Nov. 14th, details a conversation wherein Emperor Frederick urged the forcing of the South Germans. He said to Prince Bismarck: "Let us act firmly and imperiously. You will see I was right in saying you were not sufficiently aware of your power." Prince Bismarck protested that it would drive the Southerners into the arms of Austria, and remarked that only Emperor Frederick entertained the idea of acting with a majority of the States against Bavaria. He thought it would be better to let the suggestion emanate from the Reichstag.

A HEATED CONVERSATION.

A further somewhat heated conversation between Emperor Frederick and Prince Bismarck appears to have borne fruit. Under date of Nov. 21st Emperor Frederick writes that Prince Bismarck has been induced to take up the subject seriously. Prince Bismarck intimated to the German sovereigns that unless they offered the imperial dignity to the King the Reichstag would. This menace had its effect. After Bavaria had offered the crown to the King an entry under date of Jan. 18th, 1871, expresses the hope that our ancestors' dreams of German unity are fulfilled. He then describes the coronation.

A UNITED NATION.

On March 7th Emperor Frederick writes: "Even the greatest imprudence will not undo that which has been gained. Such experience as I have had in the last decade cannot be in vain. I shall have a strong hold over the united nation, because I shall be the first sovereign who without reserve adheres to constitutional institutions."

INDISCREET REVELATIONS.

Another of these indiscreet revelations is pointed out to be the statement of the deceased Emperor that during the negotiations at Versailles, it was proposed to proclaim as King of France Leopold II., King of the Belgians. M. Thiers said he would favor the scheme, if it implied a union of Belgium and France. The diary does not state the reason for the abandonment of the proposal; but the French people will accurately surmise that Prince Bismarck's project to create a Franco-Belgian monarch implied the disruption of France into several states, and the acquisition by Belgium of the northern provinces. The project is certain of revival if France should be crushed in the coming war.

TOUCHING FEATURE OF THE DIARY.

The most touching feature of the diary is the evidence of the unfailing kindness of the Crown Prince Frederick's disposition and his diffidence of character. On July 24th, 1870, the eve of the French campaign, he writes: "At the baptism of my last-born, the King was too much affected to hold the child. Which of us will come back? I am appointed to act on the flanks of the principal army. I shall scarcely be able to carry out the great enterprise." When victory was declared on the side of the Germans, he comforts a French colonel, a prisoner, who had said, "We have lost everything," by replying, "You are wrong in saying you have lost everything. Having fought like brave soldiers, you have not lost your honor." On the day of the battle of Sedan he writes, "Die Weltsgeschichte ist das Weltgerecht," comes to me from my school days. Napoleon comes up in the middle of a potato field near Douchery. Bismarck and Von Moltke run up to him, he wants passage for his army into Belgium. Bismarck speaks to Napoleon. He tells him that the King insists upon an unconditional surrender; the capitulation is signed; I proposed Wilhelmshohe as a place of residence for Napoleon, and advised the King to ride and meet the Emperor."

INTERVIEW WITH NAPOLEON.

The Crown Prince then describes the interview as related to him by the King. Napoleon assured the King that he had only given in to public opinion when he resolved upon war. He showed marvellous ignorance of the German armies. He thought the force before Sedan was the Red Prince's army. He asked where Prince Frederick Charles was: The King answered: "With seven army corps before Metz." Napoleon drew back with every sign of painful surprise; his face contracted itself painfully, and for the first time he knew that he had not had the flower of the German army opposed to him. After a half-hour's interview, the King and the Emperor came out. The latter, perceiving me, held one hand while with the other he wiped away the tears which were running down his cheeks.

THE ATTITUDE OF ENGLAND.

Referring to the attitude of England after the German triumph was assured, he writes on October 20th: The Queen, who follows our actions with touching sympathy, telegraphed to the King exhorting him to "high-souled dealing."

Commenting on the fact that each side appealed to Heaven in its own behalf, there occurs on December 25th the following entry: "It is really a piece of irony on the message of good will that each party calls on God to aid its cause. In every success we incline to prove by it that we have the support of Heaven against our opponents."

THE DAILY STRUGGLE.

The last entry before the return to Germany displayed the nobleness of the men:—"March 8th.—When I see my endeavours to help the oppressed acknowledged by Germany and her neighbors and that the people are gaining confidence in my future I feel quite happy. Moral earnestness in political convictions can only be the result of inward struggles, which must be continued daily, and for which oneself is responsible."

THE ENGLISH PLEASED.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Rarely have Englishmen been so overjoyed at Continental revelations purely personal in character as in the case of Kaiser Frederick's diary. People here seem to imagine Frederick's reputation mainly a matter of English concern. Dr. Mackenzie's treatment and the attack on the Empress deepened this feeling. The discovery that Frederick was the actual maker of German unity is received as a tribute to English perspicacity, and the further discovery that the Prince was capable almost of bullying Prince Bismarck into actually bullying the South Germans to acknowledge German unity is received here as an English victory. Dr. Mackenzie's book is not yet published, but is certain beforehand to be championed, though he avoids politics altogether. The truth is that the Crown Prince, instead of being more English than German, was more German than Prussian, and if the full details are published it will come out that his passion for German unity was largely inspired and fed by the Prince Consort.

SELKE'S ROMANTIC STORY.

He Rescues a Girl from a Watery Grave and is Left $150,000.

A New Haven, Conn., despatch says: A romantic story comes to light in this city. Here is Charles W. Selke, 22 years of age, a mechanic. Selke tells the following: "Four years ago I was cook on a vessel belonging to Taunton, Mass. On the afternoon of September 22nd, 1881, we ran into the harbor of Newport. I left the ship about sundown for a trip in the city. I had been ashore but a short time, and was walking on the beach, when I saw a young girl jump or fall from a rowboat, 50 feet from the shore. I went to her rescue and came near losing my own life in attempting to save her. She was about 16, and very pretty. I had swam ashore with her and had laid her on the beach, when a gentleman came running down from one of the cottages. He was the girl's father, and had missed his daughter. I told him how I had rescued her, he asking my name and something about my condition in life. He took his daughter and myself to the cottage and placed $1,000 in my hands. We sailed the next day. The gentleman gave me his name and New York residence, but asked me to promise never to tell his name. I promised. He invited me to call on him any time, as he would be glad to see me. I called on him in New York three or four times. He died in May last. I received a letter from the executor of the estate shortly after asking me to come to New York. I went and listened to the reading of the will, and learned I had been left $150,000 upon certain conditions. I can go no further. Another promise prevents me from letting these conditions be known."

Nothing will induce Selke to divulge the name of his benefactor. The conditions prescribed are that he shall marry the girl. He says he is undecided, but will probably refuse to marry.

A Remarkable Dream.

A Mobile, Ala., despatch says: In the wreck at Hurricane Bayou, on the Mobile & Birmingham Road last June, several men were killed and the bodies of two young men who had ridden on the baggage car platform could not be identified. Yesterday Mrs. John L. Devine and Mrs. M. Morris, of New Orleans, visited the potter's field and had the bodies disinterred. Mrs. Devine recognized her son, Louis, and Mrs. Morris recognized her brother, John Murphy. Mrs. Devine recently had a remarkable dream, which resulted in the finding of the bodies.

As a new industry, Scotland is advised to gather ice.

NONE HAS DARED TO ARREST HIM

For Three Months a Murderer Has Wandered in the Adirondacks.

A Jayville, N. Y., despatch says: In the Adirondack forest to-day roams a man whom the law wants, but none has dared to arrest. Charles Brown, a lumberman in winter, a guide in summer in the Saranac region, went into George Berkley's hotel June 23rd. He asked for liquor, but it was refused him. When Berkley came out, an hour later, a bullet from Brown's Winchester sent him to his last reckoning.

Shouldering his gun, the murderer, without saying good-by to his wife and children, plunged into the forest. Sheriff Dustin, of Franklin County, offered a reward of $1,000 for his capture, and officers have been looking for him in every part of the woods. Three days ago Brown turned up here, ragged and desperate. A friend gave him food and shelter and kept his secret. To him Brown told the story of his wanderings.

"I have not had a minute's rest from the time I shot Berkley," he said, "and it doesn't seem as though I could find a spot where I am not known by some one. The day I shot Berkley I went in a boat I stole south as far as I could on the Upper Saranac and from there to Long Lake, where I stopped over-night at 'Bill' Carey's camp. Carey knew me and told the men in the other camps. Next morning two men came to the camp and talked with me. They acted as though they wanted to arrest me, but did not dare to do so. As I went through Long Lake village I was recognized again, and about two or three miles out five men drove by me in a waggon. Pretty soon I saw the men coming back towards me on foot. Then I struck off in the woods and got away from them. I had a long tramp around Blue Mountain Lake, and finally brought up half-starved at Potter's, on Cedar River. Potter knew me and gave me away to three other men who were outside while I was eating lunch. When I came out one of the men gave me a cigar, but none of them tried to detain me. At a lumber camp on Moose River some one recognized me. I begged ammunition enough to carry me through, and for three weeks I had nothing to eat except the game I killed with my rifle and the berries I picked by the way. About two weeks ago I determined to have a square meal and came out to Muncy's Hotel, at Little Rapids. A man stopping there spotted me at once and said he meant to arrest me. I told him if he attempted it I would shoot. He gave it up. Then I came here."

He declared that he would not give himself up before the winter. He secured ammunition and left for Long Pond. Should he persist in his efforts to avoid arrest there are plenty of hunting camps in the woods that will afford him shelter through the winter, and in which no one will disturb him, but without suitable clothing and depending on the forest alone for food the hunting camp would probably prove his grave.

A BOGUS WEDDING.

A Winnipeg Damsel Entrapped Into a False Marriage.

A Winnipeg despatch says: A sensation on the street to-day was the illegal marriage performed between James W. McLee and Eliza Harriet Bettsworth, daughter of a respected C. P. R. employee working in the city. The man in question is James McKay, lately an employee of the C. P. R. ticket office in this city. Some weeks ago McKay alias McLee cultivated the acquaintance of Miss Bettsworth. Possessing a pleasing manner and a glib tongue, he succeeded in winning the girl's affections, and representing himself as a single man, though married, his attentions were reciprocated by the apparently unsuspecting girl. Matters went on until an offer of marriage was proposed and accepted, and McKay took her before a friend of his on August 2nd, and the rigmarole was gone through of pronouncing McKay and Bettsworth man and wife. No marriage license was produced, and the girl became suspicious. McKay, accompanied by Strachan, went to the office of Fonseca, "issuer of marriage licenses," and there procured a proper form of marriage license, which set out in the usual way that James W. McLee and Eliza Harriet Bettsworth, spinster, aged 24 years, were licensed to become man and wife, etc., the rest of the blanks being filled out in the usual way by Mrs. Fonseca, who has issued innumerable licenses "for better or for worse." McKay's bondsman signed Charles Strong on the license, but was really W. R. Strachan. A man named Degan, employed in Golden's auction rooms, was the man who tied the nuptial knot. McKay drove to St. Boniface in a hack this morning and took the train south, so that he is now safe across the line. At Fonseca's office he swore deliberately that he was a single man, and had the consent of the girl's parents to the marriage, all of which it is unnecessary to characterize as false. Strachan and Degan have been placed under arrest.

An Old But Brave Baggage Agent.

A Boston, Mass., despatch says: Patrick Tracy, aged 60, for 16 years baggage agent of the Old Colony Railroad at Hyde-Park Station, was killed to-day while trying to save the life of Mrs. Mary Young, aged 69, of Sharon, who had fallen in front of a train while crossing the track. Mrs. Young was injured in a probably fatal manner, and would have been instantly killed but for Tracy's action.

How They Do It in Kentucky.

An Erlanger (Ky.) despatch says: The Democratic barbecue here to-day was a stupendous affair. Fully 15,000 people were on the grounds. Judge W. E. Arthur presided at the meeting this afternoon when Speaker Carlisle, Senator Blackburn and others spoke. Fifteen head of cattle, forty sheep and 100 lambs were roasted for the feast.

The costliest house in Washington is the Worden mansion, the millionaire owner of which has made a large fortune in Washington real estate. It is of white stone and looks like a Venetian palace, with a handsome tower and a spacious court-yard. It is finely furnished and the walls are hung with beautiful pictures.

The printer girls in the United States are to have an organ entitled the Printer Girl, run by their order in Topeka, Kas.

MAJOR BARTTELOT'S EXPERIENCES

Interesting Extracts From His Letter—Tippoo Tib's Faithlessness—The Difficulties of the Expedition.

A London cable says: Following are extracts from Major Barttelot's letter, which was addressed to Mr. Mackinnon, Chairman of the Emin Relief Committee: "I have the honor to report to you that we are about to make a move, though with far less numbers than I originally intended. Tippoo Tib has at last, but with great reluctance, given us 400 men. I have also obtained from another Arab, called Muni Somai, 30 more carriers. We shall move not earlier than the month of June, and our forces will be as follows: Soudanese, 22; rifles, 22; Zanzibari, 110; rifles, 110; loads, 90; Manyema, 430; muskets, 300; loads, 380. The officers who are going are: Major Barttelot, in command; J. S. Jameson, second in command; W. Bonny and Sheik Muni Somai, in command of the Manyema force. Sheik Muni Somai is an Arab, of Kibuyeh, who volunteered to accompany the expedition as commander under one of the native contingents. My intentions on leaving this camp are to make my way along the same route taken by Stanley. Should I get no tidings of him along that road, to proceed as far as Kavalli, and then if I hear nothing there to proceed to Kihero. If I can ascertain neither at Kavalli or Kihero his whereabouts, no matter how far it may be, I will endeavor to reach him. Should he be in a fix I will do my utmost to relieve him. If neither at Kavalli or Kihero I can obtain tidings of him I shall go on to Wadelai and ascertain from Emin Pasha, if he be there still, if he has any news of Stanley, also his own intentions as regards staying or leaving. I will persuade him, if possible, to come out with me, and, if necessary aid me in my search for Stanley. Should it, for sundry reasons, be unnecessary to look further for Stanley, I will place myself and force at his disposal to act as his escort, proceeding by whichever route is most feasible, so long as it is not through Uganda, as in that event the Manyemas would leave me, as I have promised Tippoo Tib that they shall not go there, and that I will bring them back or send a white officer with them back to their own country by the shortest and quickest route on the completion of my object. This is always supposing Emin Pasha to be there and willing to come away. Rumor is always rife and is seldom correct. Concerning Stanley I can hear no news whatever, though my labors in that direction have been most strenuous. He is not dead, to the best of my belief and that of the Arabs. Concerning Tippoo Tib I have nothing to say beyond that he has broken faith with us, and can only conjecture from surrounding events and circumstances the cause of his unreasonable delay in supplying men and the paucity of the supply. This morning I had loads for Tippoo Tib's, and Muni Somai's men stacked and Tippoo Tib came down to see them. Prior to issuing orders he took exception to the loads and said they were too heavy. The heaviest was 45 pounds, and his men could not carry them. Two days before he had expressed his approbation of the weight of the very same loads he refused to-day. The whole business has become thoroughly distasteful to him, which his professed friendship for Stanley cannot even overcome. His treatment of us this morning showed that most thoroughly, but should he not act up to his contract, I hope it will be taken most serious notice of when it comes to the day of settling up. He has got us tightly fixed at present, but it should not always be so. The loads have been weighed and handed over, powder and caps issued to the Manyema force, and we are all ready to start, which we shall do to-morrow morning. I have told you of all now that I can think of, but I would bring finally to your notice that Tippoo Tib has broken his faith and contract with us. The man Muni Somai, I think, means business, and, therefore, I trust, all will be well.

HOW ABOUT ITS EFFICACY?

Fr. McGlynn Suddenly Called on to Administer the Sacrament.

A New York despatch says: For the first time since he was excommunicated from the Roman Catholic Church Dr. McGlynn on Thursday exercised his priestly functions by administering the sacrament. Just as he was entering the Cooper Union to attend the meeting of the united labor party, an excited man rushed up and said a man was dying. At the head of the stairs leading into the hall the man lay gasping. Dr. McGlynn hastened to the place. He knelt down, while those around removed their hats and some knelt beside the clergyman. Dr. McGlynn made the sign of the cross above the dying man and moved his lips repeating the form of prayer for granting what is known to Catholics as conditional absolution. Then the priest took from his pocket a well-worn wallet, which had done similar duty on many such occasions, and took from it a minute substance. Holding this between his finger and thumb for a second while he continued to pray, he placed it between the lips of the unconscious man, who, as he received it, gave up the ghost. Thus the sacrament of extreme unction of the Catholic Church was administered. Another brief prayer and all was over. Dr. R. Q. Stanton, who was passing at the time, applied his ear to the heart of the prostrate man and pronounced him dead. There was no more for the priest to do, so Dr. McGlynn arose and left the corpse to the care of a policeman. No clue to identification could be found.

A Long Street Car Line.

There is a street car line in Buenos Ayres, S.A., on which sleeping coaches are used. The line is about 200 miles long and horses are used in transportation. When a man goes a day's journey on the cars he takes a sleeper, each of which is provided with four folding bunks. The cars are about eighteen feet long. Horses are employed because they are plentiful. Fuel is scarce and consequently dear.

Bismarck's sleeping room in his country seat at Friederichsruhe is very simply furnished. The bed and chairs are of pine and entirely unadorned, and there is nothing about them beyond their unusual size to distinguish them from the beds and chairs found in the homes of the humblest German peasants.

THIRTEEN YEARS FOR EACH EYE.

Gouger Bohan Sentenced to a Long Term of Imprisonment.

A New York despatch says: William Bohan, who gouged out his wife's eyes, was called upon to answer the second indictment against him yesterday. He had abandoned all idea of a defence after his conviction on the first indictment on Monday. He pleaded guilty.

Judge Garretson then addressed the prisoner. He said: "Bohan, you have been convicted on two counts by an impartial jury. There is a horror attached to the crime with which you are charged that sends a chill through one. Your wife has been a faithful woman. She has supported you, has filled your pocketbook and has almost impoverished herself in your interests. You are deserving of no mercy."

There was an impressive hush in the court room, and every one present listened with eager ear for the sentence that was to follow.

For the first time Bohan grew pale. He stood up in answer to the call of the clerk. He had nothing to say, and was sentenced to fourteen years and six months' imprisonment on the first count and twelve years and six months on the second count.

When the prisoner heard the sentence his eyes filled with tears. He asked permission to see the sightless victim of his cruelty, and she was led into an inner room, where they met.

When she heard his step Mrs. Bohan reached out her arms expectantly. She groped around uncertainly to find him. He was abashed at first, but finally threw his arms around her and broke down completely. He sobbed upon her shoulder while she sought to console him. Bohan then turned over to his wife the deeds of his property.

Bohan, after he had been locked up in jail, repeated his former statement, that the whole matter was an accident. He said he loved his wife and would not harm her. Warden Quinn searched him after his return to the jail, as there had been rumors that he would attempt to take his life.

Advertising for a Husband.

A young woman, who was a cook in Kensington, attended at Hammersmith Police Court, London, the other day, for the purpose of obtaining a warrant for the apprehension of a person who she said had defrauded her of £33. The detective handed a written statement to the Magistrate, from which it appeared that in July she advertised as follows: "A respectable young woman would like to correspond with a respectable young man; Church of England; over 5 feet; a country one preferred." In answer she received a letter, and saw a young man, who represented that he was a chemist's assistant at Woolwich and expected to pass an examination. She saw him several times, and on his promising marriage she bought a quantity of furniture and met him at Charing-cross, where she gave him £33 to purchase the chemist's shop at Woolwich. She saw him again and then he stated that his uncle was ill at Northampton. He left her on the understanding that he was going to Northampton to see his uncle and would return. She had not seen him since, and she further stated that she had parted with her money thinking that he would marry her and buy the shop. Mr. Paget, after reading the statement, said it was a breach of promise, but not false pretence. He said if girls would advertise for husbands and meet young men he could not help them. He saw no reason for the warrant, but she could bring an action for breach of promise of marriage. The applicant left the court with the officer.

Newspaper English.

"Such wretched English as we get in our newspapers!" exclaimed a certain Chicago clergyman not long since. "There is no polish in the work. It is clumsily done. Words are badly chosen, shades of meaning are lost in bungling composition, and sometimes there are grammatical errors. I don't see why our newspapers cannot be better written." One night last week this clergyman happened to be in the Chicago Tribune office. Near where he stood talking with one of the editors of the paper was a reporter writing. On the desk in front of him lay his open watch. With one hand the young man was moving a pencil with amazing speed, and with the other was manipulating a cigarette with that skill and ease which only come of long experience. The clergyman's curiosity was roused. "Why the watch?" he inquired. "Oh," replied the editor, "the young man has just come in from his assignment. He has been busy all afternoon gathering information concerning a matter of considerable public interest. He has been doing some lively hustling and is probably tired. He is also hungry. But his superior has told him that he is to have his copy finished at a certain hour. In two hours he must write a column and a half. That is why his watch is out. He is timing himself. If he finds that he is falling behind he will work all the harder to catch up. That is the way newspapers are made. Would you like to write your sermons in that fashion, and then have somebody go over your work at his leisure and criticise your style and your choice of words?"

A Jackdaw In Church.

The London Times says:—Our Canterbury Correspondent writes;—The audacity of the jackdaw of Rheims has been equalled, if not excelled, at Monkton, in Kent. During Divine service a jackdaw, belonging to Mr. Stapleton Cotton, made its way into the sacred edifice with the congregation, and not only took a lively part in the responses, but also became exceedingly talkative at other times. The whole congregation were in a titter, the clergyman himself with difficulty kept a straight face, while the school children present broke out into open laughter. Things became so bad that the clergymen was compelled to order the children out of the church. Then an effort was made to capture the intruder, which had perched itself boldly upon the reading desk. The bird, however, flew to the rafters above, where it remained (still talkative) till the end of the service.

"The really efficient laborer," says Thoreau, "will be found not to unduly crowd his day with work, but will saunter to his task surrounded by a wide halo of ease and leisure." We were thinking of this as we came down in our barouche this morning.

The Disappointed.

There are songs enough for the hero
  Who dwells on the height of fame;
I sing for the disappointed—
  For those who missed their aim.

I sing with a tearful cadence
  For one who stands in the dark,
And knows that his last, best arrow
  Has bounded back from the mark.

I sing for the breathless runner,
  The eager, anxious soul,
Who falls, with his strength exhausted,
  Almost in sight of the goal.

For the hearts that break in silence
  With a sorrow all unknown,
For those who need companions,
  Yet walk their ways alone.

There are songs enough for the lovers
  Who share love's tender pain;
I sing for the one whose passion
  Is given all in vain.

For those whose spirit comrades
  Have missed them on the way,
I sing with a heart o'erflowing
  This minor strain to-day.

And I know the solar system
  Must somewhere keep in space
A prize for that spent runner
  Who barely lost the race.

For the pain would be imperfect
  Unless it held some sphere
That paid for the toil and talent
  And love that are wasted here.

—Ella Wheeler-Wilcox.

THE BARNARD COMET.

It May Become Visible to the Naked Eye in November.

The Albany Express says: "Prof. Boss, of the Dudley Observatory, has computed the orbit of the Barnard comet discovered on the 2nd inst. Further calculations will be necessary to determine its true orbit, and present results are merely approximate. As nearly as can be ascertained now, the comet is about 190,000,000 miles from the earth and 170,000,000 miles from the sun. It will probably reach its perihelion about December 10th. The comet and the earth are moving toward each other, and their approach is at the rate of 3,000,000 miles per day. Naturally it will increase greatly in brightness, but as it was extremely faint at discovery, it is yet matter of doubt whether it will become visible to the naked eye. At present it rises about 1 a. m. at a point a little north of east; but later on it will rise before sunset and be visible during the entire night. The present physical appearance of the comet indicates that it is intrinsically bright and that it will probably develop a large tail, but the display it will make as seen from the earth depends entirely upon the distance from the sun when nearest. The present calculations make this 125,000,000 miles, with a very large margin of uncertainty. Should it turn out to be as small as 110,000,000, the comet will be a brilliant object in the November skies. Prof. Boss intends to repeat his calculation near the end of September, when a great number of observations will have been accumulated, which will make it easy to determine the orbit with greater certainty."

Device for Packing Apples.

A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer, who has had experience in gathering and packing apples, describes as follows a device and gives some practical instructions in the matter. Gather the apples as soon as they are ripe, which is as soon as you can pull them easily from the twig. Sort them while picking, leaving all small and imperfect ones on the ground. I would like to impress it upon the mind of all fruit growers that it does not pay to put small or imperfect apples in the barrels. Small apples fill the spaces between larger ones; they do not measure any, and lower the price of the product. Put all sound and perfect fruit in bushel boxes, and take them to some central point to pack in barrels. Make a table, say 6 feet long, 2½ to 3 feet wide with sides 6 to 8 inches high. Have the legs long enough so that a barrel will go under one end. The other end should be four inches higher, so the apples will have a tendency to roll toward the end where the barrel is. Empty the fruit from the boxes into this table, set the head of the barrel with smooth apples. Now, by holding one hand half way down to catch the apples, you can let them drop in from the table. The advantage of a table is that you can see any defective fruit, and, by turning them half over as they go into the barrel, you see all sides of them. Again, your hands being free, it enables you to sort them much better than from baskets, and more, it saves handling. Every time fruit is handled you lose 10 per cent. A man with a true eye and quick hands will fill barrels as fast as another can head them.

Don't Learn to Carve.

Never learn to carve, young man. There is no fun in it. A knowledge of the art saddles you with a responsibilty which, while it may procure you invitations to dinner, sits heavily on the soul and brings wrinkles on the forehead. If you do not perform the work artistically you are criticised. If a tough foul gets away from you and takes refuge in a lady's lap you are laughed at and made an enemy of the fair one whose dress you soil or spoil. You offend Jones if you send the choicest cut to Smith, and vice versa. You must send the best away and reserve only the least to be desired for yourself. The waiters make you the subject of their remarks, and by putting their heads together and jerking their thumbs over their shoulder in your direction embarrass you dreadfully; you know by the fiendish leer on their faces that you are set down as a blacksmith. If the room is warm you are thrown into a violent perspiration; your color wilts, necktie gets awry, your appetite leaves you, and when your labors are finished you begin your dinner with the air of one who has been in a pugilistic mill and come out second best. Don't learn to carve.—Nebraska State Journal.

A Colossus.

A 9 years old lad named Hamel, belonging to Etchemin, just above Quebec, is attracting a good deal of local attention as a future colossus. Although only 9 years old, as already stated, he has all the appearance and size of a well grown young man of 20. He measures 44 inches around the waist, 26 inches around the thigh and 15½ around the calf of the leg.

DR. DONALD C. HOOD has collected many facts relative to the use of salicylic acid for rheumatism. Of 728 patients treated with salicylates 523 were relieved of their pain within seven days; whereas, of 612 patients treated by other methods, only 140 were relieved within the same time.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE "silent Von Moltke" isn't at all silent at home. He is, on the contrary, a charming, lively and amiable companion. He is very fond of the wife of his nephew, who presides over his household, and of her children. He loves whist and roses, and of these flowers cultivates a great variety.

A BODY of Russo-Polish Jews, who for the past eight months have been exploring Palestine in order to report on the districts most suitable for their scheme of emigration, have returned to Russia. Their report is that the soil of Palestine is unlikely to repay cultivation, and that also they would be subject to attacks from Turks and Arabs. This report, however, will not be taken as final.

GASPADIN ASHINOFF has, at his own expense, conquered twenty miles of territory on the east coast of Africa along the Indian Ocean, and has named it Moscow, and set up there an independant government, of which he is the head. He keeps an army of 1,000 men, 130 of them Russians and the rest Abyssinians, and after a hard fight has secured from the native king from whom he seized the territory a treaty recognizing him as a sovereign.

A FAMOUS French lady, the Countess Pellegrini Boy, has just died in Italy. The Countess was the daughter of Gen. Boy, who fought in the campaigns of the revolution and the empire, and she married Count Pellegrini of Parma, one of her father's aides-de-camp, in 1811. After the fall of Joachim Murat the Count and his wife returned to Parma, where the former died some years ago. The Countess, who was born in October, 1789, lived in the utmost retirement, and to the last remained a grande dame of the eighteenth century.

THE Rev. Alexander Hannay, D. D. Secretary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and his companion, Mr. Henry Lee, of Manchester, left England six weeks ago as a deputation to the Congregational Churches of Australia and New Zealand. A letter from Dr. Hannay describes the tropics and the Southern Cross as delusions. He likens the Southern Cross to a skeleton kite; and as to the tropics, the temperature was suggestive of overcoats, and the sky was as full of clouds as the sky in the West Highlands when a storm is gathering.

THIS is from the New York Sun: "Too late to be of much use this year, but in time to be adopted extensively next summer, the girls have learned the beauty of the flannel-shirt idea, and many of them have put it into operation. A flannel shirt exactly like those made for the men, boy's size, worn instead of a dress body, and belted at the waist, is very charming and comfortable beyond imagining. Dealers in men's furnishing goods in fashionable shopping districts are making frequent sales to the girls of shirts made to sell to the girls' small brothers."

THE London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes: "I remember the poet Browning saying how helpful Carlyle was to him when he was a young man, and he has still a great admiration for the illustrious writer. The public will be pleased to learn that Mr. Browning has entrusted to Mr. Norton, for the purpose of publication, some letters that passed between Carlyle and himself more than fifty years ago. A portion of this correspondence, which is of great interest, will shortly appear in the second series of the 'Letters of Thomas Carlyle,' which cover the period from 1826 to 1835."

C. N. JORDAN estimates that he has signed his name millions and millions of times as bank president and Treasurer of the United States. When he was President of the Third National Bank he signed his name as often as 15,000 times in one day, and he used up from fifteen to thirty pens a day. His coat sleeves suffered greatly in the work, but they could be repaired, while the flesh on his wrist, which suffered the most, could not be repaired, though he rubbed it freely with vaseline and cold cream. Mr. Jordan writes with a light stroke, and he says as Secretary of the Treasury he consumed only one-third as much ink as his predecessors.

A SANITARY Congress for South America has recently been held at Lima. Articles relating to the public health were signed by the delegates from Bolivia, Chili, Equador and Peru. They declare the object of the Congress to be to establish an international system among the States of South America, and to check the development and spread of infectious diseases, especially yellow fever and cholera, as well as the plague. Intelligence offices are to be established, and a system of inter-communication by which the appearance of any infectious disease may be known at once. They also adopted detailed regulations relating to disinfection and quarantine.

M. PRILLEUX, a Frenchman, has just discovered an infallible remedy for the potato disease. This is the recipe—Put thirteen pounds of sulphate of copper and the same quantity of chalk into twenty-two gallons of water, and souse the plants with the mixture. An experiment made from the 5th to the 16th August saved the diseased plants thus treated, while 32 per cent. of those which were left to themselves went to the wall; but the disease must be taken in hand as soon as the first black spots have been perceived on the leaves. The remedy is simple enough, and so is the application, which has been favorably received by the Paris Academy of Sciences.

THE suicides of Paris sometimes do droll things in taking leave of a world that proves too much for them. The Figaro of August 23rd supplies an instance. A carpet dealer having by a long run of hard times been brought to that particular state of despair known to our French friends as weariness of pulling the devil by the tail, took a header into the Seine. Somehow or other the water refused to drown him. Recognizing the force of the adage which says that drowning is impossible to one born to be hanged, he returned to his lodgings and quietly hanged himself, having first written this cheerful note: "Friends and neighbors who cut me down, take a bit of my rope and maybe it will bring you good luck."

IN France last year many more women than men applied to the Court for divorce and judicial separation. The figures were as follows, For divorce, 1,848 men, 2,733 women; for judicial separation, 453 men, 2,564 women. Colonel Robert Ingersoll, in a recently published interview, declared as the last word of American free thought that women should be free to demand divorce at discretion, but that men should only be allowed to claim it on certain clearly defined breaches of the nuptial contract by the wife. The proposal is noteworthy as indicating the way in which the pendulum is swinging to-day. The law, long unduly favorable to the husband, will probably in future err if at all in being too favorable to the wife.

AN interesting meeting was held recently in Exeter Hall, London. The occasion was a farewell to Mrs. Booth-Tucker, daughter of the "General," and fifty missionary officers who were about to set sail for India. It was announced that during the last year $35,000 had been spent upon land and buildings in India and some $25,000 for the maintenance of the work. The Governor of Ceylon, it was stated, had granted the army the privilege of working among the prisoners, and had further promised an annual grant of money. The missionaries now going out go voluntarily and without guarantees, and they have promised to wear the dress of the natives and as far as proper to adopt their customs. The "General" handed his daughter her "commission," and ordered her to be a faithful servant of Jesus Christ and a loyal and obedient soldier of the army.

ACCORDING to the British Medical Journal half of all who live die before 17. Only one person in 10,000 lives to be 100 years old, and but one in 100 reaches 60. The married live longer than the single, but out of every 1,000 born only 190 are ever married. Of 1,000 persons who have reached 70 there are of clergymen, orators and public speakers, 43; farmers, 40; workmen, 33; soldiers, 32; lawyers, 29; professors, 27; doctors, 24.

A CALIFORNIAN company has been organized to manufacture soap out of a material that is skimmed from a boiling spring in in that state. The substance hardens by exposure to the air, is like soft clay, and is supposed to be a mixture of borax, alkali and lubricating oil.

WORKING FOR FATHERLAND.

The Remarkable Growth of Berlin and the People's Great Patriotism.

Under the heading of "New Berlin" many interesting particulars of the progress of the Prussian capital since 1871 have been gathered by Prof. Palcezy, who contributed them as a feuilleton to the Neue Freie Press. There are now, it seems, twenty-five public libraries in Berlin, with more than 100,000 volumes. Vienna's twenty-nine public squares are compared with forty-eight possessed by Berlin. Though Vienna has its Prater and Paris its Bois de Bologne, Berlin surpasses both in Grunewald, with its immense extent, its hills and vales, its woods and lakes, villas and hunting lodges. The northern limit of Berlin now lies close to the houses of Charlottenburg, the largest suburb. That city expends yearly more than 10,000,000 marks on the poor, and mendicants in the streets are unknown. The citizens take pride in serving their city without reward More than 12,000 of them are now working for the town gratis, while the number of paid officers is comparatively insignificant.

More than half of the thirty-one magistrates who carry on the direction of affairs in the "red house" have no salary, though their office is no sinecure. The unselfish devotion to the general well-being is the guaranty for the further development of the city. It is only four years ago that the Prussian Landtag voted 4,000,000 marks for the increase of the royal museums of Berlin. Several millions of marks have been recently voted for deepening the bed of the Spree and for improvements of the Upper Spree Canal, which will greatly facilitate the trade of the city. The city railways cost enormous sums. The Ministerial palaces, though simple in style, have luxurious and commodious interiors. Four monumental post-offices and the magnificent Polytechnic at the west end of the Thiergarten are the boast of the city. The new palace of the Reichstag in the Konigsplatz is rising from its foundations, and in less than three years it will probably be the greatest ornament of the city. A striking illustration of the progress of Berlin is the almost unexampled increase of the students in the university, who numbered in 1887 no less than 6,888. At this moment the university of Berlin is the most frequented in the world; that of Vienna comes next. The number of professors is about 300. The pupils in the new Polytechnic number more than 1,200, and all the other schools are in a flourishing condition.—London Daily News.

Origin of the Campaign Rooster.

The campaign rooster of politics which ornaments the columns of partisan journals the day after a successful election has a strange origin as a party emblem, says the New York Sun. There was a Democrat editor in one of the towns of Indiana named Chapman. One of the Democratic managers of that date thought things were not going as prosperously for the party as they should go. He wrote to stir the politicians, and among other things he said: "Tell Chapman to crow" and claim victory. This letter, by accident, fell into the hands of the Whigs. They printed it, and in the whole campaign, from one end of the country to the other, the words "Tell Chapman to crow" were ringing in derision. The Boston Herald, which is pretty good authority, adds that the year following this episode the late Colonel Charles G. Greene, of the Boston Post, when the Democrats began to win victories, turned the laugh upon the opponents of Democracy by getting out the cut of a rooster in earnest. This was the origin of the crowing fowl in American politics.

A Doctor Appreciated.

Jeweller Henry Popper, of New York, called on Dr. Markus Maskiewiez, of that city, yesterday and handed him a $300 gold watch.

"Why, what's this for?" asked the doctor in surprise.

"You saved the lives of my two children, who suffered from diphtheria, and I can never forget you," spoke the man. "Don't decline such a small gift from me."

The doctor accepted it. He it was that recently saved the life of a Brooklyn woman who had previously robbed him of his watch; and it is very likely that Jeweller Popper was prompted to make the gift after reading the recently published item to that effect.

SAVED HER LOVER'S LIFE.

A Would-be Suicide's Bullet Checked by the Appearance of His Sweetheart.

Miss Sylvester did not like to jilt her lover, for they had spent many happy hours together, but he was only a poor clerk on a small salary and she was tired of penury. When Waldo Lynn, a rich old bachelor, proposed to him she accepted him, but she was very sorry afterwards for having been so hasty.

The trouble was that young Christopher would not give her back her letters when she broke off the engagement, and she was very much afraid that he would show them to Mr. Lynn. Get these letters back she must, and this is the way she set about it. She had a friend on the same floor where her former lover boarded, and as luck would have it, his door was not locked on the day she called there, so she slipped stealthily into his room.

She felt rather ashamed of herself, too, for all about the place were arranged little presents she had worked for him during their engagement. Tears came to her eyes when she opened his desk and took out her letters, which had been labeled: "Letters from my darling Lillie," but she put them away in her pocket quickly.

She walked softly to and fro over the carpet and looked at the room. How prettily he had framed her picture! How he had cared for her little presents! Had she driven him away? Where was he going? Oh, there was his own photograph.

"Heigh-oh!" sighed Miss Sylvester. She took it in her hand. "How handsome he is!" she whispered. "How good he looks! I often think that Mr. Lynn really has a cruel expression. After all, what will his money be to me if he is miserly? He has such a close-shut, thin-lipped mouth. People are always mean with mouths like that, they say. Oh, dear; he's been writing a letter."

She picked up the portfolio and saw the words:

"DEAR MOTHER—When I wrote you last I told you how happy I was. To-night I sit down with an aching heart to tell you that it is all over. I believe my heart is broken. She has jilted me for a rich man, and I, fool that I am, cannot even hate her. She asked for her letters back. I could not bear to give them. They are all I have left. I——"

No more had been written.

"Am I crying?" asked Miss vester of herself. She was, and bitterly. "Is that what he wanted the letters for?" she sobbed. "There—I won't take them," and she slipped them from her pocket, unlocked the desk, and replaced them in their box.

"At least I may leave him with that consolation," she said. "How I wish I had never seen Mr. Lynn; and, oh! how I wish I had never come here," she added, wringing her hands, as the horror of her position once more crept over her. It was growing dark; the gong was ringing for dinner. What would happen next?

The next thing that happened was this—Some one came upstairs. The door opened and Mr. Christopher entered.

Miss Sylvester had retreated to a closet, but it was dark enough to allow her to peep through a crevice. Mr. Christopher flung himself into his chair and uttered a groan. Miss Sylvester peeped out a little further. He was, as well as she could see in the darkness, pulling his hair with both hands. Then he groaned again.

There was desperation in the tone, and it terrified Miss Sylvester to such a degree that she did not shut the door after he had lit the gas. Through the aperture between the door and the jamb she watched him closely; saw him stoop over his valise, open it, take forth several white articles and a blue one, and then stand erect, holding a revolver under the gas jet.

Evidently he was about to commit suicide, and forgetting all else save that his life was in danger, Miss Sylvester flew out of the closet and across the room, and clinging wildly to his arm, sobbed forth these words:

"Oh, James, dear! I didn't know you loved me so truly. O, please forgive me! I hate Mr. Lynn; I hate him. I never cared for any one but you."

The pistol fell to the floor, and though Mr. Christopher might now, indeed, have had his revenge on the girl who had used him very badly, he only clasped her in his arms and kissed her.

However, the proprieties must be observed, and in five minutes more Miss Sylvester was outside of the street door.

Somebody must be unhappy in this world. This time it was Waldo Lynn. But bachelors of 40 are tough, and have too much experience to suffer greatly over a broken engagement. Besides, Miss Sylvester and Mr. Christopher were evidently intended for each other.—St. Paul Globe.

Home Life.

Wife—What is the matter, John? You are the most impatient man I ever saw.

Husband (struggling to button his shirt)—I can't find the dinged button-hole.

Wife (placidly)—Have you looked under the bureau for it?

The Burdens of Womanhood.

Thousands of women are silently suffering untold misery simply because they shrink from consulting a physician in those numerous complaints arising from functional irregularities and disorders. Many a modest girl and woman prefers to bear her heavy burden in silence rather than to go to the family physician for advice. All sufferers from this class of disorders can, however, find prompt and sure relief in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a specific in such cases, and has brightened the lives of countless women by restoring them to perfect health.

No Fear of That Policeman.

"Now you children, I'll tell you what it is; if you make any more noise in front of my house I'll speak to that policeman!"

Chorus of Juveniles (much tickled)—That policeman! Lor', we ain't afeerd of him! Why, that's father!

An aged widower got married recently for the fourth time, notwithstanding that he had a house full of grown-up children. While the marriage ceremony was being performed audible weeping could be heard in the back room. One of the guests who had heard the sobs asked one of the children who it was. "That's Emily," was the reply; "she always howls when papa gets married again."

THE SOVEREIGNS OF ENGLAN

The Ages at Which They Died—From the Conquest to William IV.

The following table, showing the ages at death of all the English Kings and Queens since the conquest, and the diseases of which they died, will no doubt be interesting to our readers. The statistics were prepared by the late Cornelius Walford:

Name.	Age at death.	Cause of death
William I.	60	Rupture and fever.
William II.	43	Shot by an arrow.
Henry I.	67	Surfeit of lamphreys.
Stephen	49	Piles.
Henry II.	55	Grief.
Richard I.	43	Shot by an arrow.
John	49	Poison or grief.
Henry III.	65	Age.
Edward I.	67	Diarrhœa.
Edward II.	43	Murdered.
Edward III.	65	Course of nature.
Richard II.	33	Consumption.
Henry IV.	46	Apoplexy.
Henry V.	33	Pleurisy.
Henry VI.	49	Murdered.
Edward IV.	41	Ague.
Edward V.	12	Smothered.
Richard III.	42	Killed in battle.
Henry VII.	52	Consumption.
Henry VIII.	55	Ulcerated leg.
Edward VI.	15	Consumption.
Mary	42	Smallpox.
Elizabeth	69	Course of nature.
James I.	58	Ague.
Charles I.	48	Beheaded.
Charles II.	54	Apoplexy.
James II.	67	Course of nature.
Mary II.	33	Smallpox.
William III.	52	Fall from horse,
Anne	49	Apoplexy.
George I.	67	Paralysis.
George II.	77	Died suddenly.
George III.	82	Course of nature.
George IV.	68	Bursting of blood vessel.
William IV.	72	Course of nature.
Victoria	69	Whom God preserve.

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this climate. It is not confined to any particular season, for whilst most general in the winter seasons, yet many suffer its excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years this form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well as in efficacy. Among the most powerful and penetrating combinations, placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to or more certain than Polson's NERVILINE. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia, or any other painful complaints. Nerviline is sold by all druggists at 25 cents a bottle, also trial bottles at 10 cents.

The Appreciative Lion.

Fat Man—We want to see the animals.

Keeper—You can't come in here. If the lion sees you he will become soo excited.

Don't be Humbuged

with that foolish idea that Catarrh cannot be cured! The world moves and medical science is progressive. The proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will pay $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh, no matter how bad or of how long standing, which they cannot cure. Remedy sold by druggists. at only 50 cents.

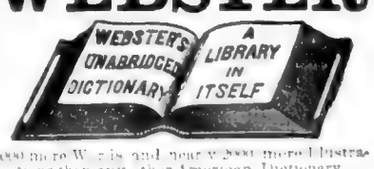
Poison the fountain, and the stream is impure; poison the blood, and its taint is carried through the entire system—those innumerable veins and arteries carry disease and death instead of life and vitality. As a result, you have Headache, Scrofula, Dyspepsia, Kidney Disease, Liver Complaint and General Debility. An inactive Liver means poisoned blood; Constipation means poisoned blood; Kidney disorder means poisoned blood. The great antidote for impure blood is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Acting directly upon the affected organs restores them to their normal condition. A word to the wise is sufficient.

A Good Act.

Ed. Corrigan, the Chicago horseman, appears to have some show of warmth in his heart. A few days ago he presented Mayor Roche with $1,068 out of the profits of the running races there, for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers.

The baby King of Spain has the cholera infantum. Probably this is owing to the negligence of his Minister of the Interior.—New York World.

WEBSTER



3000 more Words and nearly 5000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.

WEBSTER IS THE STANDARD

Authority in the Gov't Printing Office, and with the U. S. Supreme Court. It is recommended by the State Sup'ts of Schools in 36 States, and by leading College Pres'ts of U. S. and Canada.

It is an invaluable companion in every School and at every Fireside.

Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

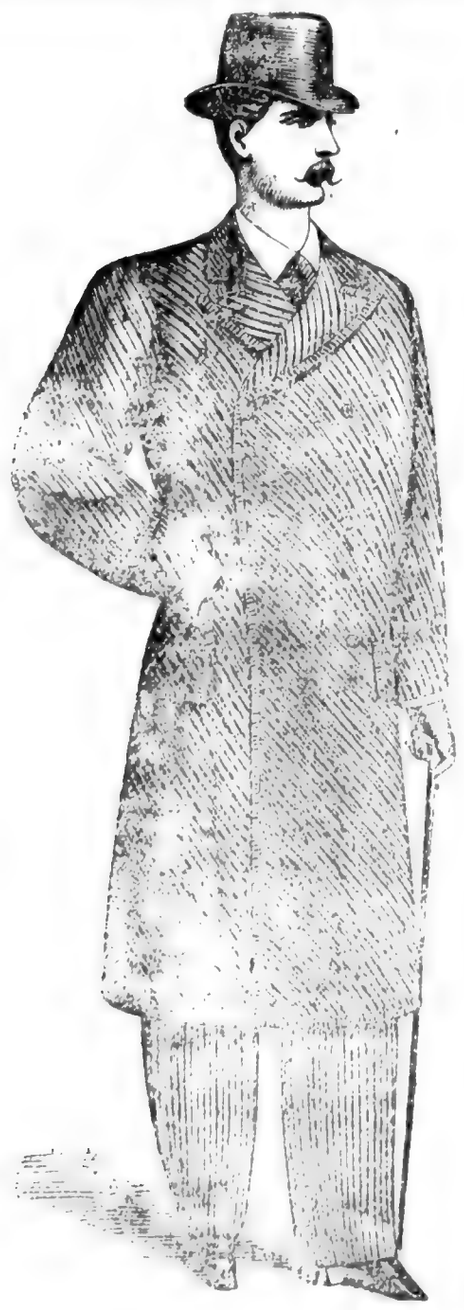
DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, E. H. COOK, Prin. N.Y. State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND



YOUR

Special Attention!

IS CALLED

TO THE

DECIDED BARGAINS

IN DRESS GOODS, MANTLINGS, ETC.,

AT-

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

A beautiful range of plushes in the latest shades, at a surprisingly low figure.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES!

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots of the best manufacture at rock bottom prices. Button and Lace Boots in great variety at prices sure to suit you.

THE TOP PRICE PAID

For Butter and Eggs

A lot of choice Butter in Tubs or Rolls wanted by 1st November.

At Cash Price for Trade.

J. G. Anderson, SPROULE'S BLOCK

An Interesting Letter from New Hampshire.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir.—Thinking that a letter from my pen regarding the far away state of New Hampshire might be perused, not without pleasure, by at least some of the many readers of the Advance, I have thus ventured to trespass on your valuable space. Leaving the Queen City on 25th of July, via C. P. R., I arrived the following evening at my destination, Plymouth, N. H., a wealthy town with a population of some 2,000. This part of the state is noted fer the beauty of its wild mountain scenery. One who has not been among such mountains can form but a faint idea of the scene. As we gaze in a poetic muse, we write.

Majestic mountains! In thine ambitious pride,
Lifting thy tall peaks till shrouded in the sky.
Oh! everlasting hills, thy rugged grandeur
speaking in praise of thy Creator.
But now as still we gaze, thy head,
Quickly evolving from the rolling clouds, is all aglow,
Tinged with the glory of yon setting sun,
Which sinks to rest behind the western hills.

Points famous to the tourist are, Mounts Washington, Prospect, Profile Hill, and Bald Knob, ranging from 3,000 to 5,000 feet in height. As you may imagine, visitors from the city further south are very numerous during the hot months of summer. For their accomodation large boarding houses are built, and these are usually well filled with anxious seekers after health and pleasure. The financial benefit derived from this is, only too often, counterbalanced by the diffusion throughout the rural districts of the vices and follies of the city, with but little of the redeeming virtues.

New Hampshire is now under total prohibition, and apparently the law works well, as it is commonly said to be very difficult to buy any intoxicants of any kind.

Hard cider has long been a favorite drink in the farming community, and he is thought a very temperate man indeed who will not provide his men with their daily allowance of this beverage. Thus we see the force of custom, even though known to be an injurious one.

The farms here are usualy large, but so broken by hills that only about one third is capable of cultivation, being flats or "intervals" between the hills. The staple crop is hay, with oates, corn, and beans on a smaller scale. On the farm managed by my brother 100 tons of hay are cut annually, selling at $15 per ton.

Although settled for a century and a half yet, in improved machinery, and ways of doing work, this state is far outstripped by Ontario. Yet men of great wealth are very common, but it is wealth which, in the most of instances, has been accumulated some years ago. Lumbering is extensively carried on here all the year around. Pine, spruce, and oak, grow in great abundance on the mountains, down which the logs are drawn on slides, to portable saw-mills placed at their base. The pine lumber is extensively used in making packing boxes, paper, car wheels, etc. This industry is a source of almost inexhaustable wealth, as a fresh suply of pine may be cut from the same land about every thirty years.

As will have been noticed by the reader of the public press, the Presidential campaign is now becoming very interesting to the American citizen. Large political flags, bearing the names of the rival candidates, are to be seen in every town and village, floating in the breeze.

I had an opportunity, a short time ago, of attending a political demonstration, or "flag raising" held in honor of the Republican candidates, Harrison and Morton. Gen. Harrison is said to be a direct descendant of that Harrison who fought for the cause of liberty, in the army of Oliver Cromwell. About 500 persons were present, and a pleasing contrast to such gatherings in Ontario was the presence of many ladies, all seemingly interested in the question at issue. Short, though able speeches, were delivered amidst the greatest of enthusiasm. The gist of the speakers, remarks was; "America for Americans," free opposition to Commercial Union with Canada, and to President Cleveland's proposed readjustment of the tariff.

From statistics before me, I have gleaned the following facts: In this county, Grafton, with a population of about 12,000, they have 143 paupers, entertained at the public expense to the tune of $25,266.04. These are mostly Americans with some Irish, but, I am glad to say, not a Canadian among the number. Thus it costs every man, woman and child of the county, on an average, over half a dollar per head to support paupers. Let the chronic grumbler re taxes in Grey County pause and consider the above and be thankful.

Fearing least I have already taken up too much space, I will close with good wishes for the continued prosperity of The Advance.

Yours truly,
S. P. GAUDIN.

To the Deaf.—A Permanent cure for Deafness and Head Noises, in the need of 23 years' standing, by a simple remedy, will send full description of it FREE, to any Person who applies to Nicholson, 50 St. John St., Montreal.

FISH, FRUIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT FLESHERTON.

Strayed or Stolen.

From Lot 35 5th Con., Artemesia, 2 heifers, 1 year old, red and white. Information thankfully received by Henry Down,
Flesherton P.O.

At The

Central Store,

PRICEVILLE,

Unprecedented Bargains in every department during the present month in order to make room for Fall Purchases.

Highest Prices Paid for Butter, Eggs, &c.

Call and inspect our goods and compare prices before making purchases.

A. McCABE.

FLESHERTON

Implement Agency!

J. G. Carson

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,	Grain Drills,
Reapers,	Broad-cast Seeders,
Mowers,	Spring Tooth Harrows,
Rakes,	Iron Harrows,
Waggons,	Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Buggies,	Plows,
Sleighs,	Scufflers,
Cutters,	Turnip Drills,
Fanning Mills,	Land Rollers.
Spring Tooth Cultivators,

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill; now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B. SLOAN,
Eugenia.

Hon. C. Edwards Lester,

Late U. S. Consul to Italy, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," "America's Advancement," etc., etc., etc., writes as follows:—

New York, August 1, 1886.
122 E. 27th st.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.,

Gentlemen:—A sense of gratitude and the desire to render a service to the public impel me to make the following statements:

My college career, at New Haven, was interrupted by a severe cold which so enfeebled me that, for ten years, I had a hard struggle for life. Hemorrhage from the bronchial passages was the result of almost every fresh exposure. For years I was under treatment of the ablest practitioners without avail. At last I learned of which I used (moderately and in small doses) at the first recurrence of a cold or any chest difficulty, and from which I invariably found relief. This was over 25 years ago. With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral within 24 hours.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to vast numbers of persons; while in acute cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light but frequent doses. Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is in any house. I speak earnestly because I feel earnestly. I have known many cases of apparently confirmed bronchitis and cough, with loss of voice, particularly among clergymen and other public speakers, perfectly cured by this medicine. Faithfully yours,

A Priceless Blessing

C. EDWARDS LESTER.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT.

Nice, Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Bradshaw's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for fifty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island, the construction of locks etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel way at both ends of the canal; construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS (cheques will not be accepted) must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 7th August, 1888.

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 32, 2nd west, Artemesia, two cows to appraise need and the other young, black and white spotted information thankfully received as to their where-bouts.

W. C. PARKER.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established [illegible] years. The old reliable nursery. [illegible] push, energy, good habits and clean record always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROS. NURSERY COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

FARM for SALE

Being part of Lot No. 10 Con. , Eubrasia containing fifty acres. The above property situated about one-and-a-half miles from the village of Kimberley, all under cultivation and magnificent land.

Apply to ALDOUS
Kimberley P.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 381. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, OCT. 11, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

THIS SPACE BELONGS TO RUSSELL,
THE NOTED JEWELER.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Beechnuts, boy, broken branch, bones busted.

A new sidewalk has been laid on Peter street. This will be the prettiest street in the village ere long—in fact is now.

Mr. C. J. Conron has rented the Feversham flour and oatmeal mills. Gristing and chopping every day. First class oatmeal for cash or exchange for oats.

J. G. Anderson's store front which has been undergoing repairs for some time is now completed. This improvement will enable Mr. Anderson to display his large stock of goods to the very best advantage.

Many forget that the hair and scalp need cleansing. Extensive use of Ayer's Hair Vigor has proven that it is the best cleansing agent for the hair—that it prevents dandruff and stimulates the hair to renewed growth.

"For years I suffered from loss of appetite and indegestion, but 'ailed to find relief until I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine entirely cured me. My appetite and digestion are now perfect." —Fred. G. Bower, 496 Seventh st., South Boston, Mass.

Streetsville Review: Bro. Thurston of the Flesherton Advance, sends us some very creditable specimens of fine job printing. Your work is bound to attract attention, friend Will.—Considering that this praise comes from a first-class and artistic job printer, such as the business men of this vicinity know friend Fawcett to be, it falls with a pleasant tinkle on our ear, and we murmur, amid our blushes, thanks!

Thanksgiving Day.

The Governor General has set apart Thursday, Nov. 15, as a Thanksgiving day for the Dominion.

The Greatest Offer yet.

We will send The Advance to new subscribers from the present date until the end of 1889 for only one dollar. Roll in your subscriptions now—the sooner you do so the more you get for your money.

Ploughing Match

The annual ploughing match of the Artemesia Agricultural Society will be held on the farm of Andrew Beattie, Esq., Toronto and Sydenham road, on Wednesday, Oct. 17, 1888, beginning at 10 a.m. sharp. For full particulars see large posters.

Departed Hence.

Mr. W. A. Milburn, long and favorably known in this vicinity, he having been in business in Flesherton for some time, until last spring, when he sold out to Mr. R. P. Legate, carriage maker, departed last Thursday for Victoria, British Columbia. He has the best wishes of a large circle of friends for his future success in the Pacific country.

Boyne Bridge.

The masonry and carpentering work on this bridge being all completed, last week Mr. Varty commenced the filling in. So far as we are able to judge the workmanship is of first class character, and is creditable to the mechanics; but the engineer displayed a shortsighted policy in making the bridge so narrow. At least that is everyone's verdict. The building of the bridge has cost $365, thus far.

Wanderers Return.

Mr. Matthew Richardson and lady, who have been on a tour through England and Scotland for the past two months, returned home Wednesday evening of last week. They express themselves as highly pleased with their mammoth excursion, and look as though it had been productive of much benefit in a physical as well as mental sense. Mr. R. says their trip was a very pleasant one, although they were detained some little time by fogs in the Gulf.

M. Richardson & Co. are now in the market to purchase all kinds of grain, dairy, and other farm produce.

A full stock of boots and shoes, suitable for fall and winter wear, at Wm. Clayton's.

Mr. G. Sproule, late of Vancouver, B. C., returned to Flesherton last week looking hale and hearty. We believe he purposes remaining here for some time.

Dr. Carter has changed his residence, and may be now found at Mr. J. G. Russel's. The office still remains in the old place, Strains block.

Rev. Mr. Orr, of Mono Mills, preached a very interesting sermon in the presbyterian church here last Sunday. Rev. W. Mills, of Sunderland, will occupy the pulpit on Sabbath next.

J. R. Brodie, Esq., is the printers' friend. We received from him on Tuesday a basket of apples, of the Sherwood's Favorite variety, which we pronounce the most toothsome, and the handsomest we ever ate. Many thanks.

Owing to the public accomodation of the village being limited, difficulty will be found in securing lodgings for all the schoolteachers who are to be present here on Oct. 25th and 26th, at the South Grey teachers' convention, it is requsted that persons who can conveniently make accomodation for one, two, or more, will to make the fact known to Mr. Irwin, principal of our public school.

Cattle Fair.

The cattle fair held here on Monday last was the best, in every respect, which we have had for some time. There were a large number of cattle offered and sold quite readily at fair prices. The class of cattle were much superior to those offered at any of the late fairs.

Anniversary Services.

The second anniversary of Flesherton Baptist Chapel will be celebrated on Sunday next, Oct. 24, when Rev. D. A. McGregor, B. A., of McMaster University, Toronto, will preach in the morning at 11 and in the evening at 6.30. Special offerings at each service in aid of the building fund. Mr. McGregor will also preach at Priceville the same day at 2.30 p.m.

Inistioge S. O. T.

A public installation of the Inistioge Sons of Temperance was held in the Methodist Church, at that place, on Friday evening last. The entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, speaking, recitations, etc., was given for the purpose of raising funds to build a hall in connection with the Church, for entertainment purposes. We have to thank the management for an invitation to be present, and regret our inability to do so.

Maxwell Cattle Fair.

The first of the Maxwell monthly selling fairs was a decided success on Friday, Oct. 5th. About 120 head of cattle, a large number of sheep and pigs were offered for sale. There were six buyers here and a large number of cattle and sheep were bought. Most of those that were not sold were too young. Almost everyone was satisfied, and we hope to see more buyers at our monthly fair, to be held here on Friday, Nov. 2nd, 1888. Dr. Scott, Sec'y. Farmers' and People's Institute.

Enterprise.

We love to see an enterprising young man. But when the enterprise causes haste, and haste error, we would like to give the young man a bit of advice. Last Tuesday evening, at Priceville, after the show, the Durham Review scribe put the directors of the affair to considerable inconvenience by demanding the privilege of securing the prize list for publication, and as it was not properly prepared, the consequence was that Mr. Review's prize list was fairly bristling with errors—several articles left out and wrong names given. We really think the enterprise didn't amount to a great deal in this case. You had better reprint the list from our columns, Mr. Review.

Comfort for cold feet. Wm. Clayton has received a large supply of winter-wear, felt boots, stockings, rubbers, etc.

High Honors.

William H. Wright, son of John Wright, who lives near Flesherton, has been studying law for the past three years and has passed a most successful examination at Osgode Hall, taking the highest honors, with scolarship and prize of one hundred dollars. This is especially creditable to young Wright, as he came in competition with a large number of students who have had superior educational advantages, many of them holding University degrees. We learn that he has obtained a good position in a law office in St. Catharines.

Promoted.

We glean a little news from a Peterboro paper that will be of interest to many of our readers. Mr. R. H. Henderson, well known in this vicinity, and lately of the C. P. R. freight department, Peterboro, has accepted an engagement as tavelling railway representative of the Travellers' Accident and Life Insurance Company. His duties will be to solicit policies from the railway men on the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, Credit Valley, C. P. R. and other lines, his district on the Canada Pacific extending only from Havelock to Toronto. The inducements andprospects held out make the situation a profitable one. Mr. Henderson has our sincere congratulations.

MEDICAL HALL,
Flesherton,
To The Front
—FOR—
School Books, Writing Paper, Envelopes, Slates, Pencils, Inks.

PAINTS,
Ready mixed, cheapest in Town. Brushes, Oils, Turpentines, White Lead, and Dry Paints.

SPICES,
Whole, ground and mixed for pickling purpose.

COFFEE,
What is Coffee; Cocoa, Chocolate.

Baking Powder.
Absolutely the best in town. A present with each package.

DRUGS
Of all varieties. Patent Medicines in full supply. Lime Juice, Syrups, ect.

TOILET SOAPS,
And Perfurmery.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Colts for Sale.

Mr. Arthur Johnston, of the Meaford Road, Vandeluer P.O. has three fine filly colts, rising two years old, which he desires to dispose of. Buyers will do well to inspect these animals.
A. JOHNSTON.

RAM LAMBS for SALE.

Five finely-bred Leicester Ram Lambs for sale. Any person desiring good breeding stock will do well by applying to
JAS. STEWART,
Kimberley P. O.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$5 00 to 5	50
Fall Wheat	$1 00 to 1	00
Spring Wheat	0 95	1 00
Barley	0 50	0 50
Oats	0 29	0 30
Peas	0 56	0 57
Butter	0 16	0 16
Eggs, fresh	0 16	0 16
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 50
Pork	6 50	6 50
Hay per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	16	18
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 20	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

General News.

Violent storms have prevailed in the North Sea, causing the loss of many lives.

The Manitoba Ministers are entering charges of crimial libel against the managers of The Winnipeg Call and Free Press.

Counterefeiters at Belleville are supposed to be sending out bogus Bank of British North America bills, which are circulating in different localities.

Some fiend, apparently, in Toronto, sent three boxes of poisoned candies to Galt. The children of Mrs. John Cherry, who received one of the boxes, were poisoned, and one of them died.

This Year's
MYRTLE
CUT and PLUG
SMOKING TOBACCO
FINER THAN EVER.
See
T & B
in bronze on
EACH PLUG and PACKGAE.

COMPETITION
DEFIED!

Fine Gold and Silver Watches for Presentation or Personal use.

AMERICAN CLOCK
AND SILVERWARE.

Quality and completeness of stock to select from not equalled in Central Grey.

Sizes Complete in Gem and 18 K. Wedding Rings.

No Catch Prices. Goods as represented
OR "CASH" REFUNDED.

Can do better for Customers—"Cash" or "Credit"—than any other jeweler in "Grey Co."

Watches carefully and promptly repaired.

JEWELER BROWN,
MARKDALE, ONT.

LONDON HORRIFIED AGAIN.

Two More Women Brutally Murdered and Mutilated.

NO CLUE TO THE FOUL FIEND.

Who May Be a Lunatic of the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde Stamp.

A last (Sunday) night's London despatch says This morning the whole city was again startled by the news that two murders had been added to the list of mysterious crimes that have recently been committed in Whitechapel. At an early hour it was known that another woman had been murdered, and a report was also current that there was still another victim. This report proved true. The two victims, as in the former cases, were dissolute women of the poorest class. That the motive of the murder was not robbery is shown by the fact that no attempt was made to despoil the bodies.

THE FIRST MURDER

occurred in a narrow court off Berners street at an early hour this morning, beneath the window of a foreigners' Socialistic club. A concert was in progress and many members of the club were present, but no sound was heard from the victim. The same process had been followed as in the other cases. The woman had been seized by the throat and her cries choked, and the murderer with one sweeping cut had severed her throat from ear to ear. A club man on entering the court stumbled over the body, which was lying only two yards from the street. A stream of warm blood was flowing from the body into the gutter. The murderer had evidently been disturbed before he had time to mutilate his victim. The second murder was committed three-quarters of an hour later in Mitre square, five minutes' walk from the scene of the first crime. Policemen patrol the square every ten minutes. The body of the unfortunate woman had been disembowelled, the throat cut and the nose severed.

THE HEART AND LUNGS

had been thrown aside and the entrails were twisted into the gaping wound around the neck. The incision shows a rough dexterity The work of dissection was evidently done with the utmost haste. Pending the report of the doctors, it is not known whether or not a portion of the viscera was taken away. The doctors, after an examination of the body, said they thought it must have taken about five minutes to complete the work of the murderer, who then had plenty of time to escape the patrol. Mitre square, the scene of the second murder, is a thoroughfare. Many people pass through the square early on Sunday morning on their way to prepare for market in the notorious Petticoat Lane The publicity of the place adds to the

DAUNGNESS OF THE CRIME

The police, who have been severely criticised in connection with the Whitechapel murders, are paralysed by these latest crimes. As soon as the news was received at police headquarters a messenger was despatched for Sir Charles Warren, Chief Commissioner of Police. He was called out of bed and at once visited the scene of the murder. The inhabitants of Whitechapel are dismayed. The Vigilance Committees which were formed after the first crimes were committed had relapsed their efforts to capture the murderer. At several meetings held in Whitechapel to-night it was resolved to resume the work of patrolling the streets in the district in which the murders have occurred.

THE VICTIMS.

The Berners street victim was Elizabeth Stride, a native of Stockholm, who resided in a common lodging-house. The name of the other victim is not known. In consequence of the refusal of Home Secretary Matthews to offer a reward for the arrest of the Whitechapel murderer, the people of the East End on Saturday petitioned the Queen herself to authorize the offering of a reward. Dr. Blackwell, who was called to view the remains of the Berners street victim, gave it as his opinion that the same man, evidently a maniac, had committed both murders. The Berners street victim had evidently been dragged back by a handkerchief run around the throat. The inquest will be held at 11 o'clock on Monday morning. Four doctors will be on the jury. The inquest in the Mitre square murder will probably be held on Tuesday.

A London cable has the following in regard to the Whitechapel murders: All of these have similarity of subject, time and method. The killing is done between midnight and dawn, the victims are women, cries are never heard. No fabled vampire was ever more noiseless than this mysterious murderer. One woman's head was severed from the trunk in Aldgate, adjoining Whitechapel, and another woman's face, throat and thorax were disgustingly mutilated in a little square not far from the Tower, into which three streets opened, and where there were excellent means of observation. The best idea of the awful degradation of the men who frequent the Whitechapel slums can be gathered from a description of the women, whose ability to keep alive proves the existence of men so low as to consort with them. These wretched women swarm the streets by thousands, even now, but keep close together and look sharply around for murderers, even while pretending to laugh, and asking each other whose turn to be cut up will come next. The language in which they speak of the fiend who has made it his business to murder them it is impossible to reproduce. Such profanity and hideously foul language as may be heard coming from the group of women of any Whitechapel corner can probably not be heard anywhere else. Some of these poor animals have actually grown old in their misery, shrivelled, horrible, gin-soaked hags, who fight and quarrel on the gutter's edge, and to approach within yards of whom is torture.

The younger women, the queens of these slums, are even more distressing to look at. Some are mere girls, almost children, but all celebrate any stroke of fortune by getting drunk. Bright colors distinguish them. Light blue is the favorite color. Cheap brocades, dragging in the mud, and ostrich feathers as sadly out of curl as the dissipated owners' hair, are favorite outward signs of such prosperity as may be attained in Whitechapel. The poor creatures when born were dropped upon the surface of the worst pool of human degradation that can be boasted by any great city on earth, and all they can do is to sink deeper down into it, fighting and drinking cheap gin as they go.

Infants brawling through heaps of refuse in the slums, never having been made jealous by the sight of clean, fat babyhood, were fairly contented, and their parents evidently found their lives much enlivened by the sensation which has come upon them. The scenes of both murders were swarming with curious crowds, preference being given to the place where the most savage murder occurred, and up to to-night morbid citizens were busy lighting wax matches in the dark corner of Mitre square, trying to discover blood stains.

No new theory worth entertaining has been put forward. That advanced by your correspondent on September 8th, namely, that the murderer, whether a maniac or not, must possess some knowledge of surgery, is accepted as proven. The attempt to connect the crime with some American medical student who is supposed to have offered large sums to various hospitals for an anatomical specimen has been given upas ridiculous. The anatomical specimen in question can easily be obtained for a few shillings. It is suggested that the murderer must be a respectable-looking individual, as in the present state of terror the most degraded Whitechapel women would not dare trust themselves with a rough. But that is rubbish, for every social law in Whitechapel is based on want and hunger, and the lowest brute on earth with means to procure gin would quickly find a Whitechapel woman eager to help him drink it. The murderer must be very strong, since he appears to have been able in each case to overcome his victim with ease and stifle any loud outcry. Besides being strong, the murderer must have a terribly sharp knife, for I have just come from the mortuary where the first of last night's victims lies. The gaping wound in the throat shows plainly the division of the jugular vein and the windpipe and the notch caused by the knife coming in contact with the vertebræ. The wounds on the throat of the Mitre square victim are almost identical.

Scene in Church.

An extraordinary scene occurred in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Bradford, England, the other Sunday morning before Mass, a sergeant of the Essex Regiment having been attacked and badly cut about the ear by a woman sitting in a pew behind him who had previously armed herself with a pair of scissors. The woman was at once secured and given into custody, and afterwards admitted to the police that she had attacked the wrong man, having mistaken the sergeant for a man who had for years persisted in annoying her It was subsequently ascertained that the woman, who is an American on a visit to friends in Bradford, had at one time been an inmate of an asylum in New York.

The Grand Trunk Railway.

At the ordinary half-yearly meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway Company at London, Eng., on the 30th of October, a resolution will be submitted, authorizing the directors to acquire the first mortgage bonds of the Toledo, Saginaw & Muskegon Railway Company, by exchanging therefor a portion of the 4 per cent. perpetual debenture stock now held by the company. Traffic contracts between the Beauharnois Junction and the Grand Trunk Companies will be ratified.

Got the Queen's Bounty.

The wife of a laborer named Searle, living in Linford street, Battersea, England, having given birth recently to two boys and a girl, the matter was brought under the notice of the Queen by the Rev. A. Werninck, of St. Andrew's, Battersea, and Her Majesty has sent the usual donation of £3.

Not a Complete Wreck.

Mrs. Lott—And has nothing been saved from the wreck?

Job Lott (tragically) — Nothing absolutely nothing—except my honest name!

Mrs. Lott—H-m! With that, and the trifling assistance of the property you transferred to me three months ago, may be we can start again!

Two Opportunities.

"Suppose you should run out of bread at sea, Mr. McFinnegan, what would you do?"

"Live on the mate, begorra."

The proper answer would have been: Get a roll from the ocean.

DISILLUSIONED.

I was desperately, madly, devoutly
In love with a woman, so fair
That, as usual, I thought her an angel,
With halos encircling her hair.
She was older than I—but what of it?
Her age but enhanced her, for then,
She was not so unselfish—preferring
A boy to society men?
But one day I got over my "spasm,"
And out of love's arms I soon slid
When I heard that, when chaffed by some women,
She called me "a snippy young kid"

—Judge.

Rev. Samuel Fear, superannuated Methodist minister, Elora, and the oldest minister in the Guelph Conference, completed the 86th year of his life the other day. To celebrate the event he went on horseback from his residence, Elora, to Mr. Hugh Hamilton's blacksmith, half a mile, to have his horse shod. There are few ministers of the Gospel who reach Mr. Fear's age, and fewer still who show such signs of vigor 76 as he does at 86.

There are extraordinary rumors that Princess Maud of Wales is betrothed to Grand Duke Nicholas. Princess Maud is not yet 19, and Grand Duke Nicholas has turned 20. The pair have had an opportunity of knowing each other well. They enjoyed the measles together at Copenhagen last year. But the fact that they are first cousins is likely to restrain the Prince of Wales in the project. The story is a simple fable, but the Empress Dagmar and the Princess of Wales rather favor some such match.

Archdeacon Sanders, of Exeter, who died a few weeks ago, showed himself to be more philosophical and more merciful to his survivors than most prominent clergymen, for he left directions in his will that all his manuscript charges and sermons were to be burnt by his executors.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY

The 48th session of Queen's College, Kingston, began yesterday. It is expected that the attendance of students will this season reach 475.

At Montreal yesterday the jury returned a verdict of not guilty in the case of Cazs, accused of murder at Coteau Landing. Jacobs, the Caughnawaga wife-killer, was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

William Steele, of Stratford, who eloped from that place recently with a Mrs. Haddock, was arraigned before Judge Elliot at London yesterday morning charged with the larceny of certain houshold effects, the property of Mr. Haddock. Judgment was reserved.

The boy Hurst, one of those injured in the boiler explosion at Whitby on Monday, died yesterday morning. The father, John Hurst, and Gibson, the other two dangerously scalded, have been taken home. Hurst will recover, but the physicians will as yet extend no hope for Gibson.

The new medical school was opened in London yesterday morning without any splurge or splutter or red tape formalities of any kind. About 60 students were present, and Dr. Waugh delivered the opening lecture on surgery. It is expected the roll, in the course of a few days, will embrace about 80 students altogether.

Typhoid fever is on the increase in London, and some seven or eight cases have been reported at the Health office within a week. Cards have been placed on houses where the disease prevails, and every precaution is being taken to prevent the disease from spreading. Several cases of diphtheria have also been reported lately.

The new chapel in connection with the Sacred Heart Academy, London, was consecrated yesterday morning by Bishop Walsh, assisted by a number of the clergymen of the diocese. Besides the chapel the new addition includes a fine hall, music rooms and other improvements, the whole costing $25,000. The chapel is especially designed for the accommodation of students and nuns at the academy and will seat 200 persons.

Mr. F. Jehin Prume, the eminent violinist, who returned to Montreal yesterday morning from Europe, met with a painful accident last night at Plattsburgh It appears that his son boarded a wrong train after supper, and Prume leaped into the train after him to tell him of his error. The moving train was stopped about 600 feet from the station to allow them to jump off again, and while wending his way back along the track Prume fell into a culvert almost 20 feet in depth. He was unconscious when his son and friends came to his aid. A doctor was immediately summoned, and it was found that Prume had fractured his arm and received several ugly wounds about the head and face.

Billy Chambers, a Brockville tough, was run in on Saturday for being drunk. He was found in his cell shortly afterwards hanging by the neck by his waist-strap to the bars of the cell door, and was with difficulty restored.

D. Cunningham, keeper in the Kingston Penitentiary, has been informed that beyond doubt it was his son who perished in the hotel burned on Saturday at Jack Fish, on the Canadian Pacific Railway. A telegram from Operator Scott says only his bones remain.

The yacht Sunbeam, whose going down with five men near Brockville on Sunday last has been fully reported, was grappled in a depth of 90 feet on Sunday and towed ashore, but none of the bodies were clinging to her. Diver Jelly, of Ogdensburg, was there yesterday, but refused to go down at the place where the yacht was found.

On Sunday afternoon six young lads from Brighton set sail from the dock in a small sail boat to visit the Murray Canal. The trip to the canal was safely made and the return was nearly accomplished, when a gust of wind struck the boat and capsized her. Four of the boys clung to the boat and their cry for help was heard. Mr. Covell and a friend rescued the lads from their perilous position, saving them from a watery grave. The two boys drowned were Bert Stanberry and Jake Scriver. They were about 16 years of age. Their bodies have not yet been recovered.

A curious case of suicide occurred on Sunday in a little house quite near the Trocadero, Montreal. A lad named Eugene Bloc, 14 years of age, fell in love with a plaster cast of Venus that was in his father's house. Young Eugene would gaze at the statue for hours, and would get up at night to look at it. This lasted a month The father became angry, as his son did not work and neglected his studies. So the father broke the statue into pieces. Eugene was so much affected that he went to his bed-room, twisted a sheet around his neck, and strangled himself. Next morning the lifeless body of the young Pygmalion was found by the parents.

Prof. Geffecken states that he had Emperor Frederick's permission to publish his diary three months after his death.

A despatch from Auckland, N. Z., says the British Consul at Raratonga has been instructed to proclaim a British protectorate over the Cook Islands.

Advices from Zanzibar state that communication with the towns on the southern coast is interrupted. Capt. Curson and Lieut. Walters landed at Lindi under the guns of the flagship and rescued a German employee in the face of a thousand hostile natives.

No steps whatever are being taken in London for a Congo expedition. So far as the English committee is concerned, it is paralysed. The German expedition is making progress, and the result is likely to be that the Congo will become German. Fainter and fainter grow hopes of Mr. Stanley, and the fear is now that the white man on the Bahr-el-Ghazel is not he.

Advices from Africa say an expedition consisting of 300 Houssas, led by English officers, left Winnebah, on the Gold Coast, to punish the Tojo negroes for murdering Capt. Dalrymple. The expedition was met by a well-armed force of natives and a severe encounter took place, resulting in a defeat of the natives with a loss of 300 killed. The Houssas also suffered heavily, 64 being killed and most of the survivors wounded.

M. Janssen has been appointed by the Belgium Government Governor of the Congo State in place of Gen. Strouch, resigned. In future the post will be held by three functionaries, one in the Congo State, one in Brussels to attend to administrative duties and a third on leave, ready to relieve either of the others. Captain Thiess will devote himself to the finances of the Congo State, and Captain Conquillot will attend to native affairs.

Turkey signs the Suez Canal Convention. This neutralizes that waterway, and slightly, but perceptibly, increases the English hold on Egypt. There is, however, a cloud on the horizon. Suakim demands a larger garrison, disturbing Egyptian finance; and, if the Soudanese grow troublesome at Wady Halfa, and the financial balance be overthrown, the international commission comes into play, to the exclusion of the sole English interest. The situation at Suakim is disquieting, but not immediately dangerous.

A royal salute announced the arrival of Emperor William at Munich yesterday. He was received at the railway station by the Prince Regent and the members of the Royal family. The Emperor and the Regent embraced and kissed each other repeatedly. The Emperor expressed the pleasure it gave him to visit the capital of the country which had played so important a part in the history of the Empire. He hoped he might be granted power to devote himself to the good of the country, in the same spirit that animated his grandfather In conclusion, he asked the burgomaster to convey to the citizens of Munich an expression of his gratitude for the splendid reception that had been accorded him. The party then drove to the palace amid the acclamations of the people.

An engineer captain has been arrested at Portsmouth for showing an American over secret parts of the Spithead forts.

Patrick O'Brien, Nationalist member of Parliament, was released from Kilkenny jail yesterday. He had been in prison for seven months for offences under the Crimes Act. He looks worn and pale. He was given an enthusiastic reception by the priests and people of the place.

The Corn Millers' Association, at a meeting held at Leeds yesterday, advanced the price of flour 1s. 6d. per bag of 18 stone, making a rise of 7s. per bag within seven weeks. The advance is due to the poor condition of English and the increased values of foreign wheat.

The trunk of a woman was found in a recess of the new police offices on the Thames embankment yesterday afternoon. The head, arms and legs were missing. The remains, which were in an advanced state of decomposition, were wrapped in rough cloth and tightly bound with cord. It is believed that the arms recently found at Pimlico and Lambeth were cut from this body.

An inquest was held at London yesterday on the body of the woman found murdered in a narrow court off Berners street Sunday morning. A sister of the victim was called and deposed that she awoke at 12 o'clock on Sunday morning and heard kisses and a sound which she thought was made by a person falling to the ground. She was convinced that her sister was dead, and after reading the accounts of the murder in the newspapers went to the morgue and recognized the body of the murdered woman as that of her sister. The house in which the witness resides is several miles from Berners street. The murder is believed to have been committed about 12 50 o'clock Sunday morning.

The President has signed the Chinese Bill, and transmitted it to Congress with a long message.

On Sunday evening Roy Cummings, the 15-year-old son of Norman Cummings, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and a companion climbed to the top of the new 100 feet stand pipe of the hydraulic company. After viewing the city they started to descend, when Cummings was taken with a fit, and despite the efforts of his companion to hold him on the ladder, fell to the ground and was crushed to death.

Mr. O. T. Sabin, 50 years of age, for thirty years a resident of Detroit, committed suicide on Sunday evening. Sunday being a very disagreeable day, he and his wife did not go driving, as they usually do, but sat in their pleasant home at 683 Third avenue, and passed the day in reading and conversation until about 4 o'clock, when Mr. Sabin got up and left the house by the rear door. About an hour later Mrs. Sabin, wondering at his long absence, went out to the barn to see what he was doing, and not finding him below she went upstairs, and was horrified to see him hanging to a beam dead. No reason is known for the act. His business was not extensive, but was safe. He owned some property and had about $5,000 in the bank. He was not involved in the recent corner in September wheat.

What Sawdust is Good For.

The uses for sawdust are steadily multiplying, and it is in ever increasing demand. It is used very extensively in packing goods for shipment. For stabling purposes it is used quite largely, being cheaper and cleaner than straw. Many thousands of cords are used yearly in the manufacture of terra cotta. It also enters largely into the construction of apartment houses, for filling walls and floors to deaden sound. These are but few of the uses for which sawdust is in demand. Shingle excelsior, when made of cedar, is an excellent moth exterminator, and is much used in packing. Planer shavings are used for all kinds packing and also for bedding in stables, stock cars and stock yards.—Boston Budget.

A Jealous Lion.

M. Bidel, the French lion-tamer, tells a story of [illegible] and lioness who had for many years dwelt together in one cage, and whose "mutual endearments were incessant, demonstrative and touching." A bachelor lion came to live next to them, and one day, the door between the two cages being left open, the lioness slipped through to visit the bachelor. "The betrayed husband was beside himself with passion; there were anguish and hatred in his face, and it was plain that his heart was broken." When the lioness was driven back to her cage she was instantly killed by her husband.

The Dominion Government are still without news concerning Mr. Ogilvy, of the Geological Survey, who left last summer with Dr. Dawson for the Yukon gold country, and has not been heard of since February last.

Baron Rothschild's Alphabet of Success.

The following "alphabet" is printed on a neat card and hung up in coffee taverns and places of resort and business in Great Britain—an example which might well be followed in Canada:

Attend carefully to the details of your business.
Be prompt in all things.
Consider well, then decide positively.
Dare to do right, fear to do wrong.
Endure trials patiently.
Fight life's battle bravely, manfully.
Go not into the society of the vicious.
Hold integrity sacred.
Injure not another's reputation nor business.
Join hands only with the virtuous.
Keep your mind from evil thoughts.
Lie not for any consideration.
Make few especial acquaintances.
Never try to appear what you are not.
Observe good manners.
Pay your debts promptly.
Question not the veracity of a friend.
Respect the counsel of your parents.
Sacrifice money rather than principle.
Touch not, taste not, handle not intoxicating drinks.
Use your leisure time for improvement.
Venture not upon the threshold of wrong.
Watch carefully over your passions.
Xtend to every one a kindly salutation.
Yield not to discouragement.
Zealously labor for the right,
And success is certain.

Notes about the Fever Fiend.

King-Hall, the New York World correspondent at Jacksonville, is now pronounced out of danger, and, with care, he will be on the street in a day or two. He will go to Pablo for a few days to drink in the strengthening sea air.

The mortality from yellow fever at Jacksonville has been increased rather than decreased by the cold weather.

"Fear," says the New Yerk World, "is worse than fever."

George Francis Train wants to go to Jacksonville and put an end to the epidemic by means of the faith cure

The Florida fever has given a scare to some Southern California towns, and they are busy cleaning dirty streets and localities.

Mules Sometimes Die.

A mule belonging to the strawboard factory deliberately drowned himself last Monday. This is the second mule belonging to the factory that has within a short time killed himself by drowning. The mule is generally reputed to be a philosopher, and it is possible that the two suicidal mules, in view of the fact of being compelled to help draw large loads of straw, calmly determined that life is not worth the living.—Chester (M. D.) Register.

A Cat Market in Paris.

A cat mart has been started here. What fun it will be to read the quotations and market reports, which last may probably run thus: Tabbies, dull; toms, buoyant; kittens, lively; Angoras, depressed; brindled, very brisk; Persians in great demand; tortoise shells, heavy. The French, from the concierge to the Prime Minister, are keenly alive to cat beauties. Did not the redoubtable Richelieu allow a pet tabby to use his Cardinal's hat for her nursery? —Paris Letter in London Truth.

Man vs. Pony.

A novel race was witnessed in England recently between a Mr. Stowel, County Court Bailiff of Shaftesbury, Dorset, who rode a pony, and Mr. Swain, the landlord of the Crown public house, of the same town, who was on foot. The race was for £1, over one mile, and was run around a hayrick, which the competitors had to turn eighty times. The bailiff on the pony beat the landlord by two laps.

Fell Dead at His Sweetheart's Feet.

George McCurdy, aged 27, while walking along the street late at night with his betrothed, Miss Lucinda Gonder, was seized with a hemorrhage of the lungs and dropped dead on the sidewalk, dragging Miss Gonder down, who was endeavoring to help him along to a physician. On seeing her lover dead Miss Gonder fell over in a swoon, and was with difficulty resuscitated. - Canton (O.) special in Cleveland Leader.

A Successful Experiment.

First Preacher—You appear to be having remarkable success, brother.

Second Preacher—Yes, my people have been very liberal since I changed my plan of taking the collection. I now have it done before the sermon.

Has that made a difference?

A very great difference. If I find the collection is small I preach a two hour's sermon on 'charity,' but when it is large I give them a 20 minutes' sermon on the delights of heaven."

Contradictory.

"Pawtucket!" shouted a brakesman on a New England Railroad.

And an old lady from the West glanced about inquiringly, but when the same silver-tongued automaton, after some hours, opened the door and bawled: "Nantucket," she stared at him until he banged it shut, when she turned to a fellow-passenger with the remark:

"It's more'n likely he tuk t himself, and then lied about it!"

An Overpowering Temptation.

"Miss Maud," he said, "I have come in this evening to ask you a question, and I have brought a ring with me. Now, before you try it on I want to tell you that if you feel inclined to be a sister to me I will have to take it back, as my father objects to my sisters wearing such large diamonds." And Maud said she would keep the ring.—Jeweler's Weekly.

Rural Crops.

There is an apple tree near Kentville, N. S., which last year produced 25 barrels of luscious gravensteins.

St. Helena (Cal.) public schools were closed some days ago for three weeks, to allow the pupils to pick the grape crop.

The London barber who shaved sixty men in sixty minutes is again discounted, this time by a Philadelphia artist, who performed the operation upon twenty men in eighteen minutes. This, of course, is away ahead of all records, but it is questionable whether the shaving was as well done as the average customer would like. Most men would rather spend a minute or so overtime in the barber's chair and come out with clean, smooth faces.

And now Amelia Rives-Chanler is troubled with insomnia.

Be Patient With the Living.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor,
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing—
What tender truth shall we have gained,
Alas! by simple dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defects discover;
Then hands that would not lift a stone
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steepy hill path, will scatter flowers
Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living!
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience, e'en when keenest edge
May whet a heedless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamor,
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

—Good Cheer.

Extraordinary Adventure in a Train.

The wife of a forgeman named Wilkinson, who resides in Warrington, England, has just been the victim of an outrage which she alleges was perpetrated by a fashionably-dressed "lady" while travelling between Warrington and Norwich, on the London & Northwestern Railway. Mrs. Wilkinson tells a most extraordinary story, from which it appears that on Tuesday evening week she left Norwich, having been on a visit to some relations, and took train home to Warrington. She occupied a seat in an ordinary third-class compartment, in which sat another woman with two children. They were at that time the only occupants of the compartment, but immediately before the departure of the train a young "lady," fashionably attired, jumped into the carriage and took a seat opposite them. A few moments after the train had been in motion the stranger passed a few general observations and at the same time rose and changed her seat for one between the two women. There was nothing in her manner to excite the suspicions of the occupants of the compartment, but the "lady" had not been long reseated before the women and children became unconscious. On returning to consciousness some little time afterwards the women missed their stylish traveller, who seems to have quitted the carriage at Greenbank station, taking with her the contents of the purses of both women, amounting to nearly £2. Singular to state the four unconscious occupants of the compartment came to their senses simultaneously. The women on looking round found that their purses had been abstracted from their pockets, and were lying empty on the seat. Mrs. Wilkinson states that her purse contained £1 1s 6½d, while the other woman, who comes from Runcorn, had in her possession about 17s, part of which had been given to her to make some purchases for a relation at Northwich. The matter has not been reported to the police as the parties appear to think that the probable arrest and prosecution of the 'fashionable lady" would involve them in considerable expense.

Give It to the Preacher.

The exodus of young men from New Brunswick is so great that Rev. Mr. Mowatt, a Presbyterian minister in Fredericton, felt called on to refer to it in a sermon one Sabbath recently. It was the exodus from his own congregation that impressed him with its serious aspect. He said he was appalled at the number of the young members of his congregation who had called upon him during the year for church certificates and to say good-bye. The great majority of the exodians went to the United States. Referring to Mr. Mowatt's remarks, the Fredericton Gleaner says: "It is too true that too many are leaving us. And is it not time that our people should take some serious thought of the exodus? It is no empty wish to leave their cheering firesides and friends that impels the young men and young women of our city to go elsewhere. It is not that they have taken a dislike to our city and its people. It is simply force of financial circumstances which impels them thither * * * * * Is not the fault with our own people? We admit that the restriction trade policy of the Dominion Government is sapping the very life from our industries and general business; but when we have the opportunity to make our voice heard and its power felt we somehow or other forget our duty and vote for the continuance of the very evil we at other times so loudly complain of." It will now be in order for the Tory organs to charge Rev. Mr. Mowatt with "disloyalty," "running down the country," etc." He has stated what he knows to be a fact, and that is sufficient reason in the eyes of the average Tory newspaper why he should be denounced.—Montreal Herald.

A Slight Mistake.

The Dean of Durham (Dr. Lake) is very quick to seize an occasion. A large meeting of temperance reformers was held in Durham the other day. At the conclusion of Evensong in the cathedral, the Dean, seeing a larger congregation than usual, went to the lectern, and there in a hospitable speech welcomed the visitors to his cathedral. He commended their work, and compared it favorably with that of the Crusaders of old. The evident amusement with which the Dean's remarks was received may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that the temperance folk had taken their departure from Durham some hours before, and the Dean's hearers consisted of a host of "cheap trippers," who had availed themselves of the licensed victuallers' excursion to the Durham flower show.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Time Required.

Husband—It takes you half an hour or more to find your pocket, doesn't it?

Wife (sweetly)—Yes, about that, John, dear; but it takes you longer than that at times.

The Montreal Nationalists are boasting that even if they lost the election they made the Government spend a heap of money and compelled their candidate, Mr. Lepine, to denounce the execution of Riel.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Inspectress Anna M. Parks noticed the fulness of the skirts of Mrs. Matilda Bender, a passenger of the steamer Rhaetia, just arrived at new York. She was requested to step into a private room, and was there searched. Five pairs of satin slippers, three yards of crape, three yards of dress goods, four yards of alpaca and a pair of trousers, which she wore, were found.

Amongst the Cree Indians of Canada the husband lives in the wife's house, but never speaks to his parents-in-law till his first child is born, and, though the father is not a member of the family, his child is, and so confers on him the status of "father of so-and-so," which becomes his name, the whole being then brought to a logical conclusion by the family ceasing to cut him.

The kicker is a developer; the croaker is an incubus. The kicker incites to improvement; the croaker to indignation and resentment. The kicker only is heard when he is given one-dollar accommodation at three-dollar rates; the croaker would be just as noisy if he was getting three-dollar accommodation and paying nothing. The kicker is a lively, jovial, progressive fellow: the croaker is a dismal nuisance who lags superfluous on the stage.

Reform in the matter of shirt-collars is demanded. John Crentz was found dead in Druid Hill Park, Baltimore, on Thursday night. A thin blue mark over the windpipe led the coroner to declare that the direct cause of the man's death had been a collar two inches high that he was wearing at the time of his demise. The popularity of high collars gives an unpleasant significance to this disaster.

Mr. Jackson, the husband of the late lamented authoress Helen Hunt Jackson, was married recently, and is now residing at Colorado Springs, Col. He married a niece of his first wife, and there is still, therefore, a Helen Hunt Jackson. The grave of the first Mrs. Jackson, known to fame as "H. H.," is literally covered with visiting cards left by tourists, who climb the mountain near Colorado Springs to visit the last resting place of this remarkable woman.

The eighth annual report of the English Inspector of Retreats under the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, for the year 1887 has just been issued. Sixty-six patients in the aggregate were admitted to the seven retreats during the year as against seventy-three in the previous year. Several patients received their discharge for various reasons at the request of the licenses from the local justices before the effluxion of time. Very satisfactory work was reported from all retreats.

The Forth bridge, which has been styled the "Last wonder of the world," has been under construction six years, and will require another year for completion. The proportion of this vast and costly structure can hardly be realized from the figures. There are eleven spans, two of which measure no less than 1,710 feet each, making the most majestic arches the world has ever seen. The extreme height of the bridge is 361 feet; the foundations are some 91 feet below the surface of the water, and there is a clear headway of 150 feet for ships of all sizes to pass under.

The United States War Department has recently been collecting statistics of the number of horses in several countries of the globe. Russia has 21,570,000 horses; America, 9,500 000; the Argentine Republic, 4 000,000; Austria, 3,500,000; Germany, 3,350,000; France, 2 800 000 and 300 000 mules; England, 2,790,000 horses; Canada, 2 624,000; Spain, 680 000 horses and 2,300,000 mules; Italy, 2 000,000 horses, Belgium, 383,000; Denmark 316,000; Australia, 301,000; Holland, 125 000, and Portugal, 88,000 horses and 50,000 mules.

The Queen has granted permission to Mr. Fred. Kitton to engrave, for his forthcoming collection of Dickens' portraits, the pencil sketch of the novelist now in her possession. This drawing, which was made from life by R. J. Lane, the Associate Engraver of the Royal Academy, represents Charles Dickens as he was in the Pickwickian days. It was bought by the Queen from Mrs. George Cattermole (Miss of the artist, who so ably assisted in illustrating "Master Humphrey's Clock." This interesting portrait is now being engraved for the first time, and will doubtless add considerable value to Mr. Kitton's book.

The Pittsburg Dispatch recently said; "The faith-cure people seem to avoid Jacksonville, yet they have a chance there to make the best possible test of their theories." This challenge to the faith-healers did not long remain unaccepted. Rev. John L. Willetts, of Salem, O., writes to the Dispatch that a woman in his congregation is ready to go to Florida, provided the doctors will promise not to meddle with the patients intrusted to her, but leave them entirely in her hands. She thinks that not a single one will die under her treatment. Mr. Willetts believes that three-fourths of his congregation would follow him to Florida on the same terms, but it is said that in the present critical condition of affairs the authorities are not willing to countenance any experiments.

The two hundredth anniversary of the death of John Bunyan, "The Glorious Dreamer," as he has been called, was recently celebrated. Large numbers of people, among them many Americans, visited the grave in Bunhill Fields, now tastefully enclosed and planted with trees and flowers, a graveyard where lie the remains of Thomas Bradbury, Cromwell's sons—Richard and Henry—Daniel Defoe, Dr. Isaac Watts, Dr. Waugh, one of the founders of the London Missionary Society, and many others of earlier and later renown. At the Bunyan Meeting House, Bedford, Dr. Brown, the pastor, and the biographer of Bunyan, improved the occasion by preaching from the words, "He was a burning and a shining light" (John v. 35), to a crowded house.

Dr. Fening, a German Government official, professes to have discovered a new derivation for the name England, or the English. The word, he contends, does not originate, as has for a thousand years been supposed, from the Angles, or from the district of Angeln, in Schleswig, but from the Engern, a numerous and very powerful Saxon race, formerly living near the banks of the Weser. He bases his theory partly on the statements of the old British monk, Gildas. He lived considerably earlier than Bede, and speaks only of the Saxons who colonized Britain. Dr. Bening points out that, in Schleswig, Engelland is very small, and now has barely eight thousand inhabitants; moreover, it lies on the Baltic, not on the North Sea, like the country of the Engern.

There is a humorous as well as a serious side to the law. The old-fashioned way of leaving a shilling to the legatee with which to buy a rope to hang himself has been improved upon. Probate was granted last week of the will, dated 18th June, 1887, of a testator who died recently in London and left all his residuary estate to two grand daughters, having appointed as sole executrix a daughter to whom he bequeathed £25, and to his wife one farthing, which he directed the executrix to forward to her by post, unpaid, as an indication of his disgust at the treatment which he had received at her hands, and especially in respect of the abusive epithets, such as "old pig!" and others, which she used in circumstances which he explained, but did not think justified such opprobrious language. The will has evidently been carefully drawn, although not apparently by a solicitor, and is engrossed in a clerk-like manner, and duly executed by the testator.

Early Autumn Farm Notes.

Raw carrots, sliced, are appreciated by horses and cows at all times.

Turn the sod under after frost appears if you wish to kill the cutworms.

Do not put fresh skimmed milk into the churn unless you want to waste one-fifth of your butter in the buttermilk.

There are many instances where thirty-five bushels of grain might just as well be grown on one acre as twenty, if the right variety had been sown.

The small potatoes can be utilized by boiling them for stock. They are as valuable for that purpose as the larger ones.

Old brush, rubbish piles, etc., afford excellent harboring places for rats, and unless removed the rodents will work down and burrow under the barn walls.

Never allow a seedling tree to grow unless you intend to graft it. It is a waste of time, as no dependence can be placed on the quality of fruit from seedlings.

Rail fences are not cheap if the annual value of the land occupied by them is taken into consideration. Wire is much better as well as more durable.

Toads are the policemen of the garden. They speedily transport insect depredators to a place where they will do no more harm. And this interior jail is quite capacious.

Mr. Havmeyer, of New Jersey, has twenty-four silos of 2,000 tons capacity. He recently opened one that was filled seven years ago and found its contents in excellent condition.

Sprouts growing around the base and bodies of fruit trees are very unsightly, even though they may do no great harm, and should be removed without delay as soon as they appear.

Corn cut for fodder while in bloom, either to be dried or silced, contains but 13 per cent. of solids. If left until ears are formed and the kernels begin to glaze it will have 25 per cent. of solids.

The famous cow Rioy Marchioness is dead. She was bought in 1875 for the magnificent sum of $6 615 although then only 5 months old. She has produced ten calves, all noted animals of great merit.

The great preponderance of testimony shows that soft food is better for cattle than is dry feed, and that in the dairy it is no trouble, with plenty of ensilage, to keep up the summer flow of milk all the year.

As soon as an animal is fully matured it ceases to gain, except in fat, unless very thin. It is the young animal that makes the heavier gain in weight, but it is easier to fatten a matured animal than a younger one.

Weeds that have not perfected the seeds can be used for bedding, after being dried, and then thrown on the manure pile, but if the seeds ripen they will be carried back to the land in the manure.

One True Gentleman.

This incident, told by James Payn, suggests a new and novel definition of a gentleman: "A lady singer, a little passee as to years, and whose voice was not so good as it used to be, failed to please the pitiless throng; they groaned and hissed, whereupon a person in the gallery called out, reproachfully: 'Let the bloomin' old cow have fair play.' Then the lady came down to the footlights, and with marked distinctness expressed her satisfaction, that in the assembly before her "there was at least one true gentleman."

A Tax on Marriage.

A London Daily Chronicle St. Petersburg telegram says that in Yarkand the Chinese authorities have imposed a most curious tax, namely, 5 cop on all women who intend entering the bonds of wedlock. A traveller who has been there informs me that all merchants who visit Kashgar are obliged to take a wife. As soon as they leave the town the wife obtains another husband, and thus the 5-cop tax brings in a considerable revenue to the Government.

When Tried, Make a Note Of.

An old New England housekeeper says: "No insect that crawls can live under the application of hot alum and water. Take two pounds of alum and dissolve it in three or four quarts of boiling water, then apply it with a brush while nearly boiling hot to every joint and crevice in your closets, bedsteads, pantry shelves, the cracks in the floor and the crevices in the skirting or mopboards."

Dr. W. L. Candee, of Milwaukee, Wis. who is nearing the century mark in life, saw the first steamboat ascend the Hudson and rode upon the first railroad built in the United States—between Albany and Shenectady. He was intimately acquainted with Robert Fulton, the inventor of steamboats.

"How does the new girl strike you?" asked a citizen at dinner lately. "She hasn't struck me yet," answered his wife, meekly. "But she has done almost everything else."

Aunt—Has any one been at these preserves? (Dead silence.) Have you touched them, Jimmy? Jimmy (with the utmost deliberation)—Pa never 'lows me to talk at dinner.

"SPACE COSTS MONEY."

Some Plain Words to Those Who Can Fit on the Cap.

The Galt Reformer publishes the appended remarks to its patrons, and as they apply—happily only to a few in this city—they are reproduced for their special benefit.

"We again call the attention of the public to the fact that our space costs us money, the same as a merchant's stock costs him, and they have no more right to expect us to give it to them free than they would have to expect a dry goods man to give them so many yards of cloth or a grocer to give them so many pounds of sugar. We have given dead-head notices of sports and entertainments in consequence of which they were very successful. We have given dead-head notices of church services, in consequence of which there was a good attendance and large collections. We have given columns of reports, and the promoters of these events have thought we were well paid and under a compliment to them if they sent us a few tickets gratis. One gentleman even told us that he thought there would be no necessity of getting any bills for an entertainment if we wrote it up well. Yet had we suggested that there was no necessity of paying him a salary if he would just do the work required of him gratis, this same gentleman would not have thought it was the correct thing. Fortunately for the printer these are only the exceptions, most people recognizing the fact that any printing they got was done at a reasonable rate, and was full value in itself and that the advertising should be paid for—that the complimentary tickets were an invitation for a reporter to be present and take cognizance of what was going on, that this in the majority of cases was an inconvenience to the reporter himself who would naturally rather be attending to his own private affairs. Newspapers are now generally giving up the dead head advertisement principle; they find, like the railroads, that it does not pay, that in fact they cannot afford it. Labor and paper cost money. News is one thing, an advertisement is another, though there is more or less news in all advertisements. Many readers consider the advertisements the most important part of the paper, because from them they get the information desired, but if all the advertisements were put in free there would soon be no paper, or else subscribers would have to pay a great deal more for their papers than they do now."

Personal Points.

Mrs. Keefer is having a very satisfactory trip through the Maritime Provinces, speaking in the interests of temperance and of woman's work in relation thereto.

A Mr. Bell, of Lahave Islands, Nova Scotia, aged 86 years, is daily engaged in fishing, and goes six miles a day to haul his nets.

A museum has been erected to the memory of Lady Brassey in her husband's palace in London. Curiosities from all parts of the world are gathered there, and form, it is said, a remarkable collection.

Nearly three months ago Mrs. Youmans was attacked with muscular rheumatism, a day or two after her return from the Montreal convention. She is now suffering from inflammatory rheumatism in its most acute form, resting only while under the influence of opiates. Her friends hope she may soon be able to be removed to Dansville, N. Y., where she may have the benefit of special treatment given there, but at present this cannot be undertaken with safety.

The Scottish American says of Mrs. Burnett Smith (Annie S. Swan), who has been on a visit to Rev. Mr Morton, of the Congregational Church, Hamilton: "She is the most popular Scotch novelist of the day. She intends spending a short season of recreation in Canada and the United States. We may be sure that wherever she goes the authoress of "Aldersyde" will be warmly welcomed.

A Thief's Gall.

The Chicago Inter Ocean of Sunday last has the following: J. Ross Robertson, proprietor of the Evening Telegram, Toronto, Canada, dined yesterday with a party of friends. Comparative honesty between Canadians and Americans was the facetious table talk. E. A Cummings and R C Givens were present. While the party were about to leave a citizen came in and coolly took Mr. Robertson's silk umbrella and overcoat and walked out of the door. It was so cool a job that all were dumbfounded. Mr. R. soon jumped to his feet and rushed to the door and caught the man on the pavement. 'Excuse me, sir!" he said; "you have my coat and umbrella!" "Ah!" the man said; "indeed? Why, my dear sir," looking at the umbrella, "a mistake sure. Here they are." "You are the most polite thief I ever saw," said Mr Robertson. "Yes, I've been in the business a long time. Say, Cully, please don't have me collared." "Why, no, indeed; they ought to send you to Congress—a man with your gall. I live in Canada, where they only sneak umbrellas and coats at night. "Good day, sir." The episode gained the Canadian editor the debate and cost the Chicagoan about $11 50.

A Relic of the Manitoba Rebellion.

Railway men in making the grade on the north bank of the Assiniboine, at Winnipeg, turned up the skeleton of a man, supposed to be that of Scott, shot by Riel's orders in the first rebellion. Military buttons were found, and Scott is said to have worn a similar kind on his clothing when shot. The bones have been carried off by relic hunters. The skeleton was only 20 inches under the surface and was within a short distance from where the tragedy occurred twenty years ago.

If there is anything that makes a thrifty Yankee mad it is to have a checked satchel, worth with contents about $5, turn up just after he has put in a lost baggage claim for $50.

Prof. Kolransch has recently estimated the quantity of electricity in a flash of lightning. He finds that from 7 to 35 flashes would be required to keep an incandescent lamp burning an hour.

Think of a man going to the gallows with the photograph of the girl he murdered in one hand and a small American flag in the other! That was the wretched spectacle afforded at the last San Francisco execution.

Caught by a Thread of Hair.

As Alice and I walked out one day,
In March's windy weather,
A gust blew one of her curls astray,
And we were close together.

A single thread, cast softly there
Around my button-hole,
The more we tried to untwine we made,
The more the hair resisted.

And somehow our fingers got entwined,
Her cheeks grew hot with blushes,
I said "Let's never the hair unbind
And the March wind stirred the rushes.

All this was many a year ago,
But still, that day I bless,
Her hair is silver, while mine is snow—
Her answer—you can guess!

That single hair proved a band of steel,
To bind us to each other
Together we share our weal and woe
And though wed, I am still her lover.

Is Marriage a Failure?

A correspondent says to us and asks: "What do your readers think of these rules to make marriage a success

Rule 1—Never under any circumstances let the wife introduce her husband to her mother.

Rule 2—Never let the wife ask her husband for money, but always pay her bills out of her own private income.

Rule 3—Never let the wife ask her husband where he is going or where he has been; and, at whatever hour of the night he returns, let him always find his wife waiting up with his slippers ready, and the spirit stand on the table.

Rule 4—Never let the wife ask the husband to come home to dinner at any fixed hour; and if he doesn't come at all take no notice.

Rule 5—Always have one or two pretty young lady friends staying in the house in order that your husband may have some one to talk to.

Rule 6—When the babies begin to come, put them out to nurse until they are of an interesting age, and have left off crying. Then buy all their clothes yourself, and when they go to school get your papa to pay for their education.

Rule 7—Never ask your husband to take you anywhere unless he offers to. Then be careful not to have a headache or to trouble him to get you anything. If after the play or the opera is over he wants to go to his club, say: "Don't bother to see me to the carriage, dear." Kiss him and let him go. If he objects to the kissing omit it.

Rule 8—When your husband sees you, always wear a smile. Never be ill or out of sorts, and never fail to let your husband know that you consider it a very great honor to have married him, and that you are filled with a sense of your own unworthiness for such an exalted position.

The strict observance of these rules will enable many a wife who is asked "Is marriage a failure?" to reply with a large and triumphant "No."

Our Sanity Never Secure.

Each mind feels a certain wave of unhappiness when it looks in upon itself and marks how many wheels must be in perfect order to secure what is called sanity. In such moments of introspection the thought comes that not only is the thinker crazy, but all men and women are not a little crazy; that perfect sense is impossible. A professor in a Chicago college walked into a canal in broad day light. He was thinking of something else than the canal and of his good black suit of clothes. He enjoyed his scientific reverie, but he got wet. He had to retire to his home and change the external wrappings of his wise, pompous soul. The man who was telling this story of the unfortunate professor walked out of a railway car at the next station and left his valise in the rack to go on and on and never to be found. Thus, while the canal wet the clothes of one rational being, the railway carried away all the clean shirts of another. A third man got off at the first station to wait for the next train to bring him his railway ticket and his bunch of keys. In an hour the ticket and keys came, but his big valise had been left behind and the trunk was not locked.

The persons designated as insane are a little less rational than the average, but in each person in the circle of nations there is going on a perpetual struggle between what is called the vital principle and the millions of atoms—the atoms being liable to stampede like a herd of wild cattle.—Professor David Swing in Chicago Journal.

Don't!

A health crank out West is preparing a manual of "Hygienic Donts." Here are a few specimens: Don't drink alcholic or malt liquors. Don't drink coffee, tea or cocoa. Don't drink hot water, for it parboils and destroys the stomach. Don't drink cold water, for it paralyzes the digestive organs. Don't drink milk, for it causes consumption. Don't eat bread, either leavened or unleavened; they are both deadly. Don't eat pork. Don't eat raw vegetables or fruit, for they both contain living organisms. Don't eat them cooked, for cooking induces deleterious chemical changes. Don't walk fast, as it uses up your life. Don't walk slow, as it makes the muscles flabby."

A Sequence in Courtship.

A suburban Boston poet has discovered that the order of sequence in courtship is first to get on good terms with the girl; second, with the dog; and third, with the parents.

During the month of August 12,894 immigrants arrived in Canada, and the total arrivals from January 1st were 116,037, or an increase of nearly 14,000 as compared with the same period last year.

The Empress of Japan is becoming one of the best informed women of the time. She is a student of German, Russian, French and Italian, and has certain days on which Japanese is a forbidden language.

Rev. R. T. Cunningham, of Bowden, England, was suddenly seized with illness on September 10th while attending a meeting of the Manchester Presbytery, and expired within a few minutes afterwards.

The Methodist congregation at Owen Sound, finding their present church too small for the congregation, propose the building of a handsome edifice west of the river in Bay Ward.

Mr. Gladstone was flogged but once at Eaton. So the English papers say in a "Personal" current there. He got the gad because he pluckily stood up for a boy who was a little deeper in the mud than Pupil Gladstone was in the mire.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, OCT. 11, 1888.

The election in Cardwell last Wednesday, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Thomas White, resulted fittingly in the return of his son Robert White, by a majority of 112. The election, in many respects, was one of the most interesting which has taken place for some time. Mr. Stubbs, the opposing candidate, was also a Conservative, but not a nominee of the party. He came out on his own hook as a local candidate, receiving the full Reform vote, and a good portion of the Conservative. Yet he was left out in the "cold, cold world," and in the face of events Mr. White's victory was a grand one.

FLESHERTON'S BUSINESS.

A Resume of the Business and Business Men of Flesherton.

The village of Flesherton has been written up, in a general way, in these columns, upon more than one occasion. This week we go into it upon a more elaborate scale, and furnish our readers with a short description of all the more important business enterprises of the place. We issue a large number of extra papers, and those who are not subscribers will please consider it as a gift should a copy fall into their hands.

M. RICHARDSON.

Readers of The Advance, and especially those who are among the numerous customers of Messrs. M. Richardson & Co's general store, will appreciate our reference to this popular and prospering business and the advantages which the firm possesses in supplying the public with their wants of everything in the mercantile line.

First we may say that Flesherton is fortunate in the possession of a business such as this one. In it the citizens of our town and people of the surrounding country enjoy all the advantages offered by smaller establishments in the cities. The record of this firm is as successful as it is long and one which any firm might be proud of. Established nearly a quarter of a century, doing an extensive trade over the surrounding country, with a wide acquaintance in the wholesale markets, the firm is in the very best position to keep the business to the front. Our readers are too familiar with their commodious brick establishment and the immense assortment of goods displayed to give any detailed description of here. We cannot refrain from noticing the fine appearance the interior presents, the splendid system and general order observed. Each and every department, consisting of dress and mantle goods gloves, hosiery etc., hats and caps, gent's furnishings, carpets, and house furnishings, ready made clothing, groceries, boots and shoes and hardware is simply complete. The firm has in the past imported a considerable quantity of stock and in this particular we may mention the recent trip of the senior partner, Mr. Richardson, across the ocean, from which he has just returned. While in the Old Country he had an opportunity of visiting personally the great manufacturing centres with the result of better facilities being opened for their importations handled, want of space will not permit of any detailed description. It consists of everything in the line of staple and fancy dry goods, dress and mantle goods, gloves, hosiery, etc., tweeds, worsteds, etc., hats and caps, gents' furnishings, carpets, and house furnishings, also groceries and ladies' shoes. The business well deserves its large trade.

R. TRIMBLE.

It affords The Advance pleasure in reviewing the business interests of the town in refering to the old established, well known and popular business of Mr. R. Trimble, general merchant.

This business is too well known over the country to require any extended mention.

Mr. Trimble has been established over a third of a century, having been engaged in the mercantile trade 35 years, and is one of the oldest established in Grey County and the pioneer institution in Flesherton. It is unnecessary for us to say that the business has exerted a marked influence in stimulating the volume of business and in drawing trade to the town. The deserved popularity the business has acquired has been secured by a careful study of the wants of the people, by handling a superior class of goods and by the fair dealing for which it is well known. Mr. Trimble has devoted his energies to meeting the wants of the people in his line and his large trade and well stocked store show how he has succeeded. The stock is an excellent one, which for want of space we are unable to give any detailed description of. The different departments are as follows: Dress goods department, gloves, hosiery etc., hats, caps, and ready made clothing, of which there is a large assortment, carpets and house furnishings. The boot and shoe department contains a heavy stock of all grades and sizes. In the grocery branch is a full line of pure family groceries, provisions, meats etc.

The upper story is used for the storage of merchandise, ready made clothing, hats, caps etc. In addition is a large wareroom for provisions, crockery etc. The stock is an extensive one and well assorted.

W. RICHARDSON.

The aim of this issue of The Advance being a description of the mercantile interests of Flesherton, a business that will come in for a prominent mention is the popular drug, stationery and fancy goods store conducted by Mr. W. Richardson. Readers of The Advance, and particularly those among the numerous customers of Mr. Richardson's business, will appreciate our reference to this well-conducted store, and the advantages it offers in supplying the public with everything in the line. The subject of our sketch enjoys the advantages of long and practical experience, and we may say is a chemist and druggist of more than ordinary ability. He has been established upwards of 20 years, and we have no hesitation in saying that he has one of the best equipped and most ably conducted stores of the kind in this section of the country. One of the essential features of drug business is knowledge to discriminate in pure drugs. Every ingredient which enters the composition of drugs here, is subject to the most careful examination before using. The stock is large and complete in every department. It consists of pure drugs of all kinds, druggists' sundries, the leading patent medicines, etc., books, including school supplies etc., stationery and a fine display of fancy goods. The stock also contains wall-papers, borderings etc., also a full line of paints, varnishes, and dye stuffs of all descriptions. Prescription work is carefully attended to.

J. E. MOORE.

There is no line of business in our town in a more advanced condition than that carried on by Mr. J. E. Moore, furniture dealer and undertaker. Since establishing about a year ago, Mr. Moore has met much more that ordinary success, in developing a large trade. The Advance is pleased to note the progress of this business and the deserved popularity it has acquired, the result of a careful study of the wants of the people, by handling a superior class of goods and by the fair dealing for which it is well known. Mr. Moore has devoted his energies to meeting the wants of the public in his lines and his well stocked store and large trade show how he has succeeded. An inspection of Mr. Moore's warerooms will convince that he is able to supply the public with anything in his line according to the taste and means of all. The stock is an excellent one and is large and varied. It consists of all kinds of household furniture, parlor and bedroom sets, centre and extension tables, sideboards, lounges, spring beds and matresses, etc. Special attention is given to the undertaking department, being fully supplied with evrything required in the line, hearse, and funeral supplies of all kinds, etc.

S. SPIRIT.

Next in our business review, we will refer to Flesherton's popular flour and feed business carried on by Mr. Stephen Spirit. The Advance is pleased to note the success which has attended Mr. Spirit's efforts. He has worked up a flourishing trade and has made his business very popular with the general public. The success he has achieved has been attained by handling a superior line of goods and giving careful attention to business. At Mr. Spirit's store the public find a choice and well assorted stock, consisting of the best brands of family flour, all kinds of feed etc., provisions, meats, etc. The business is one which supplies a want in our mercantile line and during the time Mr. Spirit has been established, about one year, he has been conducting it in a successful manner.

W. CLAYTON.

Our business record would be very incomplete without reference to Flesherton's old established and well known boot and shoe business, carried on by Mr. W. Clayton. It affords The Advance pleasure to note the successful manner in which his business has been conducted. Mr. Clayton has been established upwards of 27 years and during the long period the business has been before the public a large yearly trade has been done. The public have found from experience that their wants in this line can be supplied here in a satisfactory manner. Mr. Clayton enjoys the advantages of long and practical experience, and is in the very best position to keep his business to the front. His store is always found well stocked with a line of boots and shoes secured from the best wholesale dealers, and of all styles and sizes from the ladies' finest French kid to the mens' and boys' heavier wear, also rubbers and overshoes. Boots and shoes are also made to order from the best of material, and repairing done. The stock also includes a full line of goods.

The business well deserves its large trade.

J. G. RUSSELL.

We have pleasure in devoting space in our business review to a description of Flesherton's popular jewelry business, conducted by Mr. J. Russell. This business is too well and favorably known over the surrounding country to require any extended mention. Mr. Russell has been established about 5 years and has met with very gratifying success in devoloping a large trade. He has devoted his energies to supplying the public with everything in his line and his well equipped store and large trade show that he has succeeded. The deserved popularity the business is secured by a careful study of the wants of the people, by handling a superior class of goods and by the fair dealing for which the business is well known. Mr Russell enjoys the advantages of long and practical experience and is a jeweler of more than ordinary ability. His neat and attractive store, which is handsomely fitted up with fine wall and counter cases, etc., contains a stock as fine as the markets afford, consisting of gold and silver watches of the best makes, clocks of great variety and jewelery of all descriptions, ladies' gold and colored sets, rings, chains, charms, brooches, etc., also silverware, spectacles, etc. Special attention is given to the repairing department.

F. G. KARSTEDT.

Next in our business review, we have pleasure in refering to Flesherton's popular and well conducted stove, tinware, and hardware business carried on by Mr. F. G. Karstedt. Among the enterprising business young men of the town the subject of our sketch takes a prominent place. Mr. Karstedt established about one year ago and has met with more than ordinary success in developing a large trade. From the inception of the business most commendable enterprise has been displayed and the trade has been largely increased. Mr. Karstedt is thoroughly practicle in every detail of the business and is in the very best position to offer to the public all the advantages of the trade. The popularity the business has acquired has been secured as the result of handling good goods at resonable prices and fair dealing. The stock is in fact an excellent one and consists of, in the stoves department, a full line of the best makes of coal and wood stoves. Mr. Karstedt is able to offer advantages in this line. In tinware is all kinds of housefurnishings in tin, iron and copper wares. Special attention is given to jobbing and eavetroughing, furnace work, hot air heating, etc. Mr. Karstedt recently bought out the stock of W. Strain.

D. CLAYTON.

Flesherton's popular and well conducted harness manufacturing business, carried on by Mr. D. Clayton, should not be omitted from this review. Among the businesses of the town which have gained prominence for the high standard to which they have been raised, this one occupies a prominent place. Mr. Clayton has been established about 4 years and has met with most satisfactory results, developing a trade over the surrounding country. He has acquired for the past a deserved popularity, having the reputation of turning out a class of work second to none in the country. He enjoys the advantages of long and practical experience and is in the best position to keep his business to the front. All kinds of harness, light and heavy, double and single collars, etc., are manufactured and a good stock is always on hand of, besides harness, everything usually found in a first-class harness shop, as whips, combs, brushes, etc. The business well deserves its large trade.

MUNSHAW'S HOTEL.

A good public hostlery where the public can obtain suitable accommodation is an important instinution in any town. In this respect Flesherton is in advance of most places of its size. Mr. Munshaw's hotel is one which is second to none in northern Ontario. The hotel is a large brick structure and one that is creditable to the town. Its popular and able management has made it a favorite with the general public. The hotel is excellently furnished throughout and affords every comfort and convenience to guests. Good stabling is also in connection and a buss connects with all trains. Mr. Munshaw has been conducting the hotel apout 26 years and is well and favorably known to the general public. The town is fortunate in the possession of an hotel such as this one.

PHOTOGRAPH STUDIO.

Among our busines notices, Flesherton's popular and well conducted photograph studio should be prominently mentioned. In this particular it affords The Advance pleasure to state that the town has one of the best photographic studios in this section of the country. Mrs. Bulmer is deserving of credit for the high standard to which she has raised her business and the excellent work she turns out. The studio is handsomely fitted up with all the latest appliances for scenery, etc., all kinds of photographic work is done, from an ordinary portrait to the most elegant cabinet. Engraving is also done under the different processes. Any one who appreciates artistic work should call on Mrs. Bulmer.

GEO. MITCHELL, BANKER.

Among the business institutions of a town one of the most important for the easy transaction of business is a bank. Since June last Flesherton has enjoyed the advantages of an institution of this kind, established by Mr. Geo. Mitchell, a gentleman of large banking experience. He does a general banking business, including the negotiation of drafts, notes, receiving deposits, etc. The bank is located second door north of Richardson & Co's.

J. H. HEARD.

This large establishment is so well known over the county that it is unnecessary to enter into details. Mr. Heard manufactures all kinds of buggies, wagons, and democrats, in a style equal to anything north of Toronto, as his exhibits at the shows will testify. He also does a general blacksmithing business.

JAS. SULLIVAN

Is the oldest tinsmith in Flesherton. Repairing, eavetroughing, etc., done in a superior manner.

Other businesses, which we have not space to mention fully, are: The Medical Hall, Dr. Christoe, proprietor; R. P. Legate, carriage maker; the cheese factory, by Stewart Bros.; Flesher's woolen factory; Bradley's roller and flouring mills; Mr. Damude's large tannery, and R. J. Sproul's sash and door factory.

Artemesia Council.

Council met in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Monday, Oct. 1st. All the members present. A letter was received from W. J. Monaghan, road commissioner of Osprey, asking that the hill on town line, Osprey and Artemesia, opposite lot 1, 3rd range, north, be cut down, and offering to expend $10 if the Council would grant a like amount.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: Thos. Gunn, grading and raifing on town line, Artemesia and Glenelg, $2.50; various parties, for work and material on Boyne bridge, $365; John Boland, letting and inspecting work done on Valley road, $4. Ten dollars was granted to meet a like amount from Osprey for cutting down hill before mentioned. It was moved by Messrs. Cairns and Sharp, that Mr. Boland meet Mr. Gilray on hill between Emphrasia and Artemesia to repair hill.

The people of Ramsay County, Dakota, are reported to be in a state of starvation and are appealing for aid.

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and that, on its way, it makes bone and muscle, brain and nerve, and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it,

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: "For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine

in use. "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

does sell." Prepared by.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $6 a bottle.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office Strain's block Residence, J. G Russell's

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON. M.D.C.M.. J. G. HUTTON. M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c, &c..

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store., Markdale. Money to Loan..

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issuer of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton.

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact every thing in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.
Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton.
Or to J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at [illegible] Advertising therein (10 Spruce St.) where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot of

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

REMVOAL!

F. G. KARSTEDT,

Having purchased the stock of WM. STRAIN, is now in a better position than ever to take the lead in

STOVES,
TIN,
COPPERWARE,
And Metal Work of all kinds.

Eavetroughing a Specialty.

F. G. KARSTEDT,
STRAIN'S BLOCK, FLESHERTON,

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RE-NEW'ER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Lady Bank.

Correspondence of The Advance.

As you have not heard from us for some time, I thought I would jot down some few items to let you and your readers know that we are still flourishing in this thriving community. Several changes have taken place lately, some hearts made happy by making one of two, others made sad by having their pet ones rudely taken from them and carried beyond the Georgian Bay, about which we may hear more hereafter.

The harvesting is nearly completed in this section, there are only two or three slothful farmers who have not quite finished yet. The sound of the reaper has given way to the hum of the thrasher and the husky voice of the ploughboy. There are several machines going the rounds, but Mr. Heron's steam thrasher takes the lead. He has employed good and experinced hands and according to accounts gives entire satisfaction Mr. Wm. Osburn has also purchased a machine and does good work. We wish him a prosperous season.

Owing to the bad harvest weather a great deal of the grain was taken in rather wet and farmers are almost compelled to thrash immediately on account of the grain heating. The yield is much better than was at first expected and the quality fully up to the average.

Mr. E. Hanly is erecting a fine dwelling house. Mr. Stocks has already completed the stone work. Mr. Heron of Maxwell has the contract of the wood work, Mr. Monaghan, of Feversham, has the plastering, and the brick work is still to let, according to last account. This is the first brick dwelling in the neighborhood, and when completed will be one of the finest and most commodious.

Mr. T. Paul has purchased a fine pony with which he contemplates running the mail and buss between here and Feversham once a week. He says he is now going to give up jockeying and settle down to farming.

Quite a number from the neighborhood took in the Toronto Exhibition and a goodly number also visited the Great Northern.

Mr. J. W. Tyson has bought Mr. W. T Paul's for the sum of $1100 and contemplates moving as soon as circumstances will permit. Mr. Tyson is a modern Hercules—a perfect storehouse of strength—but he will find full scope for all his energies on that farm among the stones

Eugenia.

From our own correspondent.

On Wednesday (Sept. 26th) Mr. Mckenzie Duncan of Tryone and Mrs. Sloan, widow of the late James Sloan, were quietly married at the residence of J. B. Sloan, Esq., Eugenia. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Watts of this place.

The bride was beautifully attired in garnet velvet decorated with flowers. The small bonnet which she wore was trimmed with the same material, and she looked exceedingly handsome, so did also Miss Maggie Gorley, the bridesmaid. The groom was supported by his brother Joseph.

After the ceremony the happy couple left for their home in Tryone. We join in wishing them long life and much happiness.

Priceville Stage.

To the Editor of The Advance

After several years' delay the village of Priceville has been provided with all the stage accommodation necessary for the convenience of the villagers and residents of the neighborhood. On visiting this section lately I was much pleased to observe this improvement, as I expected to hear all parties expressing themselves as well pleased with it. However, to my great surprise, I found that many instead of being satisfied were doing their utmost to discourage and cry down what their more enterprising fellow-villagers had worked so hard for.

I think, Mr. Editor, you will agree with me that this style of doing things is very different from what goes on in your own flourishing village that I have had the pleasure of visiting. I find each and every one vieing with the other in working for the interests of the place they live in, and the accommodations of all kinds of hotels, stores, liveries, etc., are of the best, each person in his own way working for the benefit of the other. This is as it should be, and shows the good common sense of your fellow villagers.

No wonder the Village of Priceville is going down hill and its people getting scattered over the Province in search of some place where they can feel that they have some interest in pushing ahead, without finding a block placed in their way at every step. This selfish and old fogy system is played out. Some of the people in Priceville have sense enough to see the advantage of regular daily communication with the outside world. Those who do not see it let them go on in their ignorance, but those of you who have your own interest and that of your village at heart support all schemes for improvement, if for no other reason than that it will pay. PUBLIC.

An Albany, New York, distillery was prohibited by law from allowing its refuse to flow into the Hudson, because the nuisance killed the fish. But the manufacture of alcoholic poison by the same distillery, for the murder of human beings, is licensed and protected by law.

This is a remarkable case of inconsistency, and is matched by a case in Chicago when the proprietors of a distillery were prohibited from feeding the refuse of the distillery to cattle, but protected by law in supplying their vile product to human beings.

It is surprising to note how much greater value is placed by some people upon the lives of fish and cattle than upon man, who was created in the image of God.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed a night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON

HEARD'S
Carriage Works,
FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

FISH, FRUIT!

OYSTERS

AND GAME.

Ice Cream and Cooling Summer Drinks in Their Season.

A Good Stock of Confectionery Always on Hand.

ORDER YOUR

FLOUR AND FEED

FROM

S. SPIRIT FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON
Implement
Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,
Reapers,
Mowers,
Rakes,
Waggons,
Buggies,
Sleighs,
Cutters,
Fanning Mills,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,
Grain Drills,
Broad-cut Seeders,
Spring Tooth Harrows,
Iron Harrows,
Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Plows,
Scufflers,
Turnip Drills,
Land Rollers.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

The Advance for $1 till Jan. 1, 1890.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Notice to Contractors.

THE WORKS for the construction of the canal, above mentioned, advertised to be let on the 23rd of October next, are unavoidably postponed to the following dates

Tenders will be received until

Wednesday, the 7th day of November next.

Plans and specifications will be ready for examination at this office and at Sault Ste Marie on and after

Wednesday, the 24th day of October next.

By Order
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 27th September, 1888.

—NEW—

FALL GOODS!

—AT THE—

Central Store,

Priceville,

Having received our Fall Stock of Dry Goods we are in a position to offer the best value in the trade. Our stock is very complete, and having been selected with great care we have confidence in a quick discerning public that they can appreciate a well bought article.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Our new stock has arrived and comprises something good and serviceable for Men and Boys, in fact

BOOTS THAT R BOOTS!

for every member of the household. Our

Teas, Sugars and General Groceries

still continue unapproachable. Our motto being good Goods and Low Prices. Come and see us

Central Store, Priceville.

A. McCAIBE.

APPLES FOR SALE.

Choice apples for sale by
M. R. HAMMOND,
Postmaster, Kimberley.

Strayed or Stolen.

From Lot 35, 5th Con., Artemesia, 2 heifers, 1 year old, red and white. Information thankfully received by

HENRY DOWN,
Ieserton P O

FATAL FALL THROUGH SPACE.

Young Man Carried to a Great Height Hanging to a Balloon,

AND THEN DASHED TO THE GROUND.

A Horrifying Spectacle Presented to the Visitors at the Ottawa Fair.

PROF. WILLIAMS' NARRATIVE.

A last (Wednesday) night's Ottawa despatch says: Thomas Wensley suffered death here to-day in the most appallingly tragic manner, in the presence of twenty thousand horror-stricken spectators. Among the attractions at the fair being held here is a balloon ascension, in which the aeronaut, when he reaches the height of some two thousand feet, leaves his air ship and reaches the earth by means of a parachute. A great portion of the afternoon was occupied in inflating the monster sphere with hot air. A score of men surrounded the canvas holding it down. Just previous to the ascent, the aeronaut crawled in and got into his cage, arranging with the men that he would shout "Let go" as soon as he was ready. He did so, and every man dropped his hold except one. When the balloon became clear of the ground the gazing multitude were amazed to see a man clinging by his hands to the side of the balloon and out of reach of the aeronaut. The great bag rose like a bird, and in an instant was 20 feet in the air, but brief as the time for thought was, a score of people screamed for the man to drop. He seemed not to heed them, but clung to his perilous hold. For a moment many thought that he was a confederate of the performer, but it was soon clearly seen that the unfortunate fellow was rushing up into space with nothing to save him from an awful death but his own weak hands. The great multitude gazed on the terrible scene being enacted in their sight, hushed into death-like silence. Up and up went the balloon, and the hope grew on the trembling sightseers that the unwilling voyager was caught in some of the tackle and would suffer no worse fate than whatever might befall the balloon. This hope was doomed to almost instant extinction, for when about a thousand feet had been traversed, he let go his hold and began his fearful descent to earth. "God help him!" burst from a thousand throats. Men's faces grew white, and hundreds hid their faces. Heart sick women wept hysterically, and many fainted outright. Such a scene can only be witnessed once in a lifetime. The poor wretch fell for twenty feet in a perpendicular position and then slowly turned horizontally on his back. His arms and legs were spread out, and he had all the appearance of an inanimate object as he rushed with sickening velocity earthward. He fell just behind the dwelling of a Mr. Holt, who lives on Bank street, which forms the western limit of the fair ground. The thud which his body made on striking the earth was distinctly heard by the horrified people who lined the western part of the grounds. The body was picked up and taken into Holt's house, where it lay awaiting recognition. It was not long before it was identified as that of Thomas Wensley, about 25 years of age, son of a man of the same name employed in the Civil Service as an engineer. As the body lay with the clothing on, it gave no evidence of the frightful impact it had sustained; but an examination showed that the neck was broken, the right arm fairly shivered, and probably many of the other bones of the body fractured. There was not a speck of blood visible on his person. Hundreds of curious people seemed fairly mad to see the body, and Chief McVeity and his men had a hot quarter of an hour's work keeping them back. The people then began to speculate how the unfortunate young fellow had gone up with the balloon. It was quite evident that he was not entangled in the ropes, but was merely hanging on and could have let go at any time. Why did he not let go at once; why did he not let go when the people shrieked to him to do so? The only theory consistent with soundness of mind was that he had a very firm hold of the balloon, and was switched into the air before he was aware of it; and, finding himself then at a dangerous distance from the earth, he hung on as long as he could. It was altogether the most wofully thrilling sight that one could well imagine.

INTERVIEW WITH THE AERONAUT.

Your representative was the only newspaper man who saw the aeronaut and got his story of the occurrence. His name is Williams, being the man who performed at the Toronto Fair. He said, "Before going into the basket I told the men who were holding the balloon down when I shouted 'Let go,' to do so. I got in and shouted, and instantly felt the balloon rise. What was my horror, when I got clear of the crowd, to find a man hanging to the balloon 20 feet away from me. I shouted at him to let go, but he did not appear to heed me. He was looking down at the crowd, apparently unconcernedly. I shouted to him again; but again he seemed to take no notice of me. It flashed on me that he was deaf or mad. I really can't tell just what my thoughts were. Then I confess I was totally unnerved. I could not do anything to help. He was clinging to a half inch rope which encircles the balloon inside the canvas. I had made up my mind not to make my descent until I saw whether my companion would be able to keep his death grip of the rope. I knew that with our combined weights the balloon would soon begin to descend. Indeed, it was beginning to slow up when he let go. He went by me with a rush, and the balloon, relieved of his weight, shot up again. I watched his body descend fairly spellbound, and it was as much as I could do to carry out my own act. He never said a word nor cried out even when he dropped his hold. I could not see his face very well, but it appeared set and white. After shouting to him the second time I never spoke, but the two of us mounted speechlessly into the air. I cannot account for his act. I never had such a thing happen to me before.'

"Do you suppose he was sensible when he struck the earth?" I asked.

"He never knew what happened him. He would lose his senses before he got half the distance he fell. I reckon we were about nine hundred feet from the ground when he let go. I fell four hundred feet once before my parachute opened, and I was the next thing to unconscious when it opened and slowed up my descent."

"Will you go on with your act on Friday?"

"Oh, yes, I'll be all right by then, although this business shook me up pretty bad. It was terrible to be so near him and yet quite impossible for me to do anything to help him."

The affair caused great excitement, and nothing else is talked of on the streets to-night. An inquest will be held to-morrow morning. The protests of the Ministerial Association against fair attractions will now be thought by many to be justified by this event.

THE SMITTEN BUFFALONIANS.

The People Concealing Smallpox Patients From the Authorities.

A last (Thursday) night's Buffalo despatch says: One death from smallpox is reported from the Quarantine Hospital to-day. The victim was Mrs. Ida Abraham, aged 27. The health physicians yesterday found smallpox in a house occupied by two Polish families on the east side of the city. In one of the rooms of the building they discovered a woman, 28 years of age, with two children. The woman was in bed and had a severe attack of smallpox. Beside her was her babe, and although the little one has not come down with the disease, there is no hope of its escape. The woman must have been sick over a week, for the case is in an advanced stage. Neither she nor her children have been vaccinated. In the same house is a boy, aged 10 years, who has the disease in a milder form. He too has been sick a week and has not been vaccinated. These cases have been concealed and only the energetic measures instituted led to the discovery. No physician had been employed. The woman and boy and three children were taken to the pesthouse last night. In the family of Crier Elithrope, of the Supreme Court, a case developed this morning. A boarder in the house was taken ill. The physicians pronounced the case one of virulent smallpox, and the victim was removed to the Quarantine Hospital. Two more concealed cases were found on Shumway street this afternoon, a boy of 8 years and a man of 40. The latter is a bad case. The house to-house inspection has proved to be a wise measure, but it has proved to the physicians the existence of the disease to an extent not anticipated. The physicians had previously felt no alarm. They had gauged the extent of the disease by the cases reported to the Board of Health. They had no thought then that there might be cases that would not come to their attention, as there were no physicians in the city who would be so derelict of duty as to conceal them. The authorities had no idea that people would undertake to get through a siege of sickness such as small pox is without a physician, and thus have a means of concealing the case from the proper authorities, but such is evidently the case, and doubtless this one thing has much to do with the spread of the disease. In pursuance of this discovery the Board of Health lost no time in getting at that class of people who have no regard for public safety, and as a result of the house-to-house inspection some seventeen cases have been discovered where the existence of the disease was unknown.

Latest Scottish News.

The Helmsdale fishermen have met and passed this resolution: "That this meeting adopt the Plan of Campaign, and that the harbor dues collected be paid into the bank and kept there until satisfactory improvement be made in the Helmsdale harbor."

Ex-Provost A. Corner, Wick, died at his residence, Willowbank, the other day. He was one of the original members of the Wick Chamber of Commerce, founded in 1836, and held for over a quarter of a century a seat in the Town Council.

An event of uncommon occurrence happened at Stonehouse, Lanark-hire, recently. Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Hamilton, New street, celebrated their diamond wedding, having been married for the long period of 60 years. With the exception of eleven years spent in the neighboring parish of Lesmahagow, the old people have lived all their days at Stonehouse. Although both are in their 80th year, they are hale and hearty and pursue their daily avocations with as much spirit as if they had only seen half their years. They have brought up a family of twelve, eight of whom are living.

At a meeting of the Clyde Defence Committee on Sept. 13th, a report presented by the Joint-Conveners, Mr. John Burns and Sir Donald Matheson, was adopted. It expresses approval of the scheme of defence submitted by the Government, but proposes that in addition a first line of defence should be established by the erection of fortifications on Garroch Head and the Cumbraes.

Rev. Mr. Douglas, of the Abbey Parish, Arbroath, Forfarshire, at whom several shots were lately fired through his study window, has received a threatening letter, signed "Your Assassin," in which the writer intimates that "I yet will have your life before the year is gone."

The annual Argyllshire Gathering took place at Oban on Sept. 12th and was largely attended. Among the visitors were Prince Henry of Battenberg, Baron Von Pawel Rammingen and the Marquis of Lorne. A ball was held in the evening.

An archway erected at the foot of Blackford Hill, Edinburgh, in memory of the late Sir George Harrison, for some time Lord Provost of the city, was on Sept. 12th formally inaugurated by the Earl of Rosebery and handed over to the custody of the corporation.

Rev. J. M. Robinson, of Spring Hill, N. S., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Moncton Presbyterian Church as successor to Mr. Hogg, who went to Winnipeg.

Rev. E. W. Waits, of Chatham, N.B., has accepted a call to Knox Church, Owen Sound, and will take charge of the congregation on the 1st November.

Jay Gould pays his physician, Dr. Wm. Munn, $20,000 a year, and has contracted for his services for twenty years, or until the time of Mr. Gould's death.

—A philosopher has recently made the discovery that we are just as well off without the missing link as we would be if we had it, because if we had it there would no longer be a missing link.

MUCH MARRIED MR. BROWN.

The Polygamist Sentenced to Four Years and Six Months—Joy Among the Wives.

A Detroit (Mich.) despatch says: About fifteen of the thirty-three women who were married to James W. Brown, the champion bigamist, since 1883, confronted him in the Recorder's Court yesterday afternoon. The list of victims included Helen Brownlee and Anna Winters, of Chicago, who, with M. Hazel, Mary Benjamin and Nancy Robertson, were the only ones called upon to give evidence against Brown. The Benjamin woman was the prosecuting witness.

It was established that Brown's method was to advertise for a housekeeper, select as a victim the one from among the applicants who pleased him most and marry her as soon as possible. He would desert her after a few days. Five clergymen of this city certified to marrying Brown to as many different women, and the case against him was so clear that the prosecutor left it to the jury without argument. Brown testified in his own behalf and made a sorry mess of it, contradicting himself at every turn. He professed not to remember any of his dupes; asserted that he was only once married, and that his wife was dead, and that he had once been confined as a lunatic at New Orleans. Brown was pallid and looked like a sick man. During the trial Nancy Robertson's indignation could not be repressed, and she denounced Brown as a perfidious wretch. The jury agreed with her evidently, for they took but four minutes to find him guilty. Sentence was deferred so that they could further investigate Brown's doings.

A Detroit, Mich., despatch says: When James W. Brown, the convicted polygamist, was brought into the Recorder's Court this afternoon for sentence several of his numerous wives were present. Judge Gartner asked him the usual question, if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed. Brown answered that he had his say yesterday.

"As far as your case is concerned, Brown," then spoke up Judge Gartner, "you have been convicted of bigamy. You failed to remember anything about these numerous marriages, and it seems to me that a man of such poor memory as you is dangerous to the community. The statutes prescribe the penalty, but the court is left some discretion in the matter. Your physical condition seems deplorable, but it is more a matter for executive than judicial clemency. It is the sentence of the court that you be confined in the State Prison at Jackson for four years and six months."

The extreme penalty is only five years, and Judge Gartner took into consideration the six months Brown had spent in jail.

Immediately after the sentence three handsome brunettes, tall, slender and fashionably dressed, entered the County Auditor's office to draw $30 apiece for witness fees in Brown's trial. Two of them were Brown's wives—Mrs. Hagel and Mrs. Benjamin. The clerk, anxious to identify them, asked laconically, "Both Brown's wives?" The women looked at each other, giggled and assented, while the third, anxious not to get mixed in with the wives, shifted uneasily away.

"Well, it was pretty bad case, wasn't it?" queried the clerk, by way of showing a kindly interest.

"Yes," said Mrs. Hagel, the tallest and handsomest member of the Mormon family. "We were very much deceived in that old Brown," added Mrs. B. spitefully.

Later more of Brown's wives came in for their fees, and all expressed the liveliest satisfaction over his sentence.

A BANDANNA GIRL.

She Captures a Burglar Single Handed and Presents Him to the Police.

A Fort Wayne, Ind., despatch says: Miss Edith Hamilton, the 15-year-old daughter of Hon. Montgomery Hamilton, a leading banker and politician, is the heroine of the day. She has captured a burglar single handed and turned him over to the police. About 1 o'clock this morning Miss Edith awoke. Hearing somebody prowling around the house, she jumped out of bed, snatched a revolver which lay on the bureau and ran out into the hall, where she was confronted by a masked burglar nearly six feet tall. The plucky girl ordered the fellow to surrender, but with a savage word he advanced upon her, when she, quick as a flash, raised the pistol, and, aiming at the burglar's head, fired. This prompt action thoroughly cowed the man, and, although the bullet merely inflicted a slight wound on his forehead, he begged the girl not to shoot again. She kept the fellow covered with her pistol and called for help. The inmates of the house were too frightened to come to the rescue, but two police officers, who had heard the shot, appeared on the scene, and the girl turned her prisoner over to them. When out of range of the girl's revolver the burglar showed fight again, but was quickly overpowered. This morning Judge O'Rourke sentenced him to four years in the Penitentiary. His name is Martin E. Hillis, and was formerly employed in the machine shop of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

A Bridal Trip in a Balloon.

A North Easton (Mass.) despatch says: Professor James K. Allen, who made a balloon ascension from the fair grounds at Providence this afternoon, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Davis, who were married in the basket just before the ascension was made, landed in a cedar swamp in Easton last evening about 6 o'clock. The balloon dragged across the swamp for nearly two miles, the party being obliged to cling to the ropes above the basket to keep out of the water. They were finally rescued by the drag rope being caught and made fast to a tree. Mr. and Mrs. Davis will proceed on their bridal trip by rail, while Mr. Allen will make another ascension in the morning.

She Nearly Swallowed an Eel.

A New York despatch says: Miss Mamie Nolan, of Newark, has been in the habit of drinking water directly from the aqueduct by putting her mouth to the tap. While she was drinking the other day an eel about ten inches long passed through the faucet and went half-way down her throat. The eel was pulled from her throat and she fully recovered from her fright in an hour, but her throat is still sore.

EIGHT YEARS WITH A BROKEN BACK

Strange Case at Black Rock that Has Puzzled Physicians—A Wife's Devotion.

(Buffalo News.)

"It is one of the strangest cases on record; he has lain on a water bed for eight years with a broken back," was said by one who knew George West, who died at Black Rock on Monday.

"The devotion of his wife cheered him all through those years of pain, and it was her tender care that prolonged his life," was also said, and it was true.

Exactly eight years and six months before he died George West, a young, hearty, well-liked railroad man, stood on the top of an Erie car in the yard at Black Rock. He was employed by the road. By an accident for which another employee was to blame he was hurled from his place and was picked up insensible. He was carried home to his young wife and a physician summoned. The latter declared that West's back was broken, and that he could live but a few days at furthest. But West hung on to life. Dr. Marclay, who was called into the case, decided that the injured man could not live. He wrote to a famous New York surgeon, detailing the facts, and asking if there was anything that could be done.

"Nothing can be done; the man must die," was the reply of the skilled New York man.

A. P. Laning, the famous Buffalo lawyer, partner of Hon. D. H. McMillan and James Frazer Gluck, undertook to prosecute a claim for damages. For weeks and months West was expected to die, but he hung on with marvellous tenacity. The railroad people offered to settle, but were refused. Then Laning [illegible], and a settlement was made by Mrs. West receiving her husband's salary for two years. That started her in a little cigar and stationery business next to the Sherman House, beside the International Bridge. She made a living for herself and crippled husband, and has taken care of him all the time, although he was unable to be of the slightest service to himself. He lay on a rubber bag filled with water, and gradually wasted away. He had no children.

The prolongation of West's life has been a marvel to many physicians.

SOLD HIS WIFE FOR $50.

An Extraordinary Matrimonial Transaction Before a Hoboken Justice.

Amos Snyder, a baker, of North Bergen, N.J., on Monday caused the arrest of his wife, Julia Snyder, and his hired man, Charles Wilkins, on a charge of undue intimacy. Snyder married his wife about three years ago, and a year or more ago hired Wilkins to work in the bakery. It was not long before Mrs. Snyder began to show a strong liking for Wilkins. Snyder was not fully convinced that Wilkins was paying marked attention to his wife until Saturday last, when he accused his wife of being unfaithful to him, and a quarrel was the result. On Sunday, while Snyder was away from home in New York, his wife drove away from his house in a buggy in the direction of Guttenburg. When Snyder returned home he searched for his wife without success. On going to his bakery he discovered that the safe in his office had been opened and that $900 in cash had been extracted therefrom. On the counter was the following note in his wife's handwriting:

DEAR AMOS—My love for you has died since I saw Charlie. I have gone with him. JULIA.
P.S.—Have taken some money.

Snyder hurried to the office of Justice Seymour, in Hoboken, and swore out a warrant for the arrest of the eloping couple. When confronted by them in the court-room he offered to withdraw the complaint if his money were returned to him. His wife thereupon handed him over the cash which she had taken from the safe. Snyder then startled the court by offering to sell his wife to Wilkins for $50. Wilkins promptly accepted the offer and counted out $50 in bills to Snyder, which the latter pocketed with a serene smile and left the court-room. Wilkins and Mrs. Snyder went away together, and were last seen boarding a train for Pennsylvania.—New York Press.

Charles Dickens' Reportorial Methods.

It was my good fortune when a resident of England to form the acquaintance of the great master of novelists, Charles Dickens. I picked him up from the street just as he had been knocked down by one cab and was in danger of being run over by another. He was at the time, as he always was, a reporter. That night I tramped with him through the worst slums of London. He told me his business, and in some way we became friends, and often after that I accompanied him on his night walks. Many characters that I saw on these excursions have peered at me since then from the pages of his novels. One thing that impressed me about Dickens was that he never took notes. I never saw him with a pencil in his hand, nor did he seem to be paying any attention whatever to what was going on around him; yet in the newspaper articles that made up the complete volumes of "Sketches by Boz" I recognized that every scene, sound or incident of the trip had been indelibly impressed upon his wonderful mind.—Henry Manistre in Globe-Democrat.

Same Place; Different Girl.

A Boston artist declares that a newly-betrothed lover commissioned him to paint a certain secluded nook in the rocks on the shore because there he had declared his passion. The picture was painted, but before it was done the lover said to the artist: "Of course I will see you through on that picture, but my engagement is off, and, of course, it would be painfully suggestive to me. If you can sell it to somebody else I will take another picture and be extremely obliged besides." The painter assented to the agreement, but within a week his patron again presented himself. "It is all right," he announced joyously. "I'll take that picture." "Am I to congratulate you on the renewal of your engagement?" the artist asked. The other seemed a little confused, but quickly recovered his self-possession and grinned, as he said, "Well, not exactly. It was the same place: but the girl was different."

A veteran was relating his exploits to a crowd of boys, and mentioned having been in five engagements. "That's nothing!" broke in a little shaver. "My sister Sarah's been engaged eleven times."

ESPECIALLY FOR THE LADIES,

But the Sterner Sex May Find Pleasure in Reading.

Eccentricity of the Phonograph.

A curious fact revealed by the phonograph is that people generally do not know their own voices. The husband will recognize the wife's voice in a phonograph, and the wife will recognize the husband's, but neither will recognize their own speech. This must be mighty disappointing to the man who thinks himself a silvery-tongued orator.

Scene in a Shoe Shop.

She walked into a shoe store and said to the polite clerk: "You may show me a pair of walking-boots, No. 4. I used to wear 3s, but I go in for solid comfort now," says an exchange. The clerk tried the boots, but they would not go on. "Strange," she murmured; "it must be rheumatism. Try 4s, B width. I know I can swim in them, but my feet are so tender." While the clerk was getting them on she said: "I used to have a beautiful foot: not small, but such a good shape. I never had a small foot, but I wore 2½ sizes for years, until I walked so much and grew heavier." "Your foot is a peculiar shape; the instep is so high—that is why you require a large size," said the clerk, who had no fear of Ananias before his eyes. "I've heard," she said, "that the Venus dee Medeechy wears No. 5, and she is a model of true proportion." "Exactly," said the clerk, growing red in the face as he pulled and tugged to get them on. He had never heard of "dee Medeechy," but he was up to a trick or two himself. "After all," he said, "these are too large. You'll find the 4s just right." He was only gone a moment, but in that time he had erased a 5 E from the inside of a pair of shoes and substituted 4 B. "There, I thought it was strange," she said, when they were on and paid for; "why, those are just as easy as my old ones. I believe I could just as well have had 3s after all." And the young man without a conscience went back to his duties with the air of one well satisfied with himself.—New York Sun.

Jottings.

The autumn fashion will show among really well-dressed people a modification of the much-discussed "bustle," not the abandonment of it. If women would learn that being "well dressed" does not mean a fortune upon the back at one time, what a stride art and elegance would make! Diamond earrings with a tailor-made gown is a first-rate example of being badly dressed.

Sashes will be worn with almost all costumes and in every way—back, front, or at either side, to the taste of the wearer.

Miss Elizabeth Farsan was recently elected Principal of the largest public school in Chicago over a number of male competitors. She is a very popular lady, and the people living in the ward in which the school stands—the richest and most populous in the city—are delighted by the appointment.

Tartans in Style.

A New York correspondent writes: Sons of Scotia and daughters, too, will learn with pleasure that the coming winter brings with it a "rage" for the clan-tartans. They are shown everywhere. The Royal Stuart, the Gordon, with their bright colors, are thrown off against the sober but rich and handsome black and white of the MacPherson (Cluny), while the Mackenzie, the "Seventy-first," and the Campbell are all in demand. Little tots of children are all clad in kilted skirts, and very bright and attractive the costumes are. Rough materials, too, are popular, and a bright cardinal red in bonnets and ribbons is seen. Red cloaks are to be worn largely as wraps, the old "Connemara" shape coming up again.

Gossip Around the Work Basket.

Rich Mrs. Crocker has given $19,000 to the Young Women's Christian Association of San Francisco. This, presumably, is a fair specimen of a bonanza widow's mite—a mite which many a widow would think a mountain.

A new dinner-table wrinkle, according to the foreign gleaner in the New York Sun, is a dish of dark-colored jelly, in the centre of which is an electric light. The effect of its sudden illumination is said to be magnificent.

"The college hat, or mortar board," says the New York Sun, "is becoming fashionable for street wear by London women. Leather belts of great size and coarseness, with steel buckles, are also showing up."

Denial is made of the much-talked-of engagement of Joseph Chamberlain to Miss Endicott, who is said to be betrothed of "a young lawyer of Massachusetts."

The Comtesse de Paris has ordered 1,500 small gold roses to present to some of the most faithful adherents of her husband's family.

Pampas plumes sell at 5 cents each, and the farmers of Santa Barbara county clear more than $1,800 an acre raising them.

Of the fifteen students sent by the Government of Siam to receive professional training in England, four are young women.

A lady in Jersey City wears the bloomer costume in the street for the comfort of it.

Mrs. Lyman Beecher has given $80,000 to Baldwin (O.) University, which in turn pays her an annuity.

A Novelist's Arithmetic.

In Dickens' Christmas number, "Dr Marigold's Prescriptions," one of the tales, "To Be Taken in Water," describes the adventure of a clerk who was travelling through France in charge of "a quarter of a million" in specie. He had it "in two iron boxes, inclosed in leather to look like samples." The French porters seemed to have noticed that the boxes were heavy, but managed them well enough, two porters to each box. My copy of "Dr. Marigold" has a marginal annotation by an impatient reader. "Bosh! A quarter of a million in gold would weigh upward of two tons." The calculation does not seem to be quite accurate, but it would weigh about one ton seventeen hundred weight, avoirdupois. A thief who got at the boxes is described in the story as stopped in making his way out of a window with a carpet-bag half full of sovereigns. The annotator reckons again, from the description of the bag, that it must have weighed 500 pounds. One wonders that errors so easily noticeable escaped the sharp editorial eye of Charles Dickens.—Notes and Queries.

WEAR HATS ALL THE TIME.

A Curious Custom of Some Persians Not Attended with Baldness.

From time to time I have noticed theories setting forth the chief causes of baldness, such as abnormal heat from the head cover, and "constriction of the blood vessels of the head by tight hats." Prof. T. Wesley Mills holds that "the principal root of this trouble is in nervous strain.' All these theories may have something to do with the loss of hair. During several years' residence in Hong Kong, in my professional duties, I had to do with a goodly number of persons, representing a large variety of nationalities, and in my study of these people I found that many theories deduced from local experiences at home were, in some cases at least, hardly broad enough to cover all facts found at large in nature and bearing upon the specific points of investigation. Familiar with some of the popular theories as to the cause of baldness, I was surprised to find men who always wore a covering to their heads, and during business hours and who always when out of doors wore a very tight hat, were never bald and possessed a wonderfully strong, thick head of hair. I refer to the Parsees (Persians). There is a sacred, religious law among them that no man shall go with his head uncovered. When the Mohammedans invaded Persia, the major part of the native Persians who were not exterminated fled farther east into India, found protection and a welcome home among the Hindoos, a people of castes, and in order that these strangers should always be identified, also knowing that their religion obliged them to wear a head covering, a law was passed to compel all Parsees to wear a certain style of hat whenever exposed outside of their own private home. The hat prescribed is as tall as an American silk hat with no brim; it truly might be called a "stove-pipe." This hat is worn inclining backward on the head from 35 to 40 degrees, and, in order to keep it on its place, the brim is made to cling very close to the head; being so tight and so constantly worn that quite a deep depression is caused substantially around the head; it seemed as if the skull might be involved, but, not having the opportunity of examining one, I was not able to fully determine. Whenever this hat is removed, a skull cap immediately takes its place. In my professional duties these hats often had to be removed, and it appeared to me as a curious fact—if some of the popular theories were altogether true—that these people should never be bald. Therefore, I instituted a series of strict inquiries. Many of these gentlemen spoke English intelligently, also French, German, Persian and their local Hindoo dialect. Some of them kindly allowed an examination of their heads, and also assured me that they never knew one of their race that was bald.—Popular Science Monthly.

Rough on the Dudes.

The other night, says the New York Star, three dudes, dressed in the height of fashion, who were returning to their homes in Brooklyn, amused themselves by overturning ash barrels. Their actions were watched by an officer standing in the shade of a near-by tree. As they passed under the spreading branches of the tree the policeman came from his ambush, and, stopping the trio, said: "This is nice, gentlemanly conduct. No doubt to you it's rare fun. Now, if you want to avoid disgrace and the loss of $10 each you must come back with me and I'll show you what to do."

"Oh, only a little joke, old man," explained one of the dudes.

But the officer was obdurate and made the fellows march back to overturned barrel No. 1.

"Now," said the policeman, "place the barrel in its proper position, gather the ashes and rubbish and place them in the barrel."

"But surely you don't mean that," exclaimed one of the missing links in horror.

"Do what I say, or I'll arrest you," replied the officer.

With great reluctance the three took their first lesson in garbage gathering, and the same operation had to be performed until the four barrels which they had upset had been refilled. When this had been finished the officer allowed them to go home.

The Mystery of the Comb.

It would be curious to know what mystic meaning our forefathers attached to so simple an act as that of combing the hair. Yet we learn from old church history that the hair of the priest or Bishop was thus combed several times during divine service by one of the inferior clergy. The comb is mentioned as one of the essentials for use during a high mass when sung by a bishop, and both in English and foreign cathedrals they were reckoned among the costly possessions of the church. Some were made of ivory, some were carved, others gemmed with precious stones. Among the combs specially known to history are those of St. Neot, St. Dunstan, and Malchias. That of St. Thomas the Martyr of Canterbury is still to be seen in the Church of St. Sepulchre, at Thetford, and that of St. Cuthbert at Durham Cathedral. From sundry references in old legends to the use of the comb in divination, and from its appearance in combination with pagan emblems on rudely sculptured stones in various parts of Scotland, it seems probable that this was one of the objects of pagan veneration which early Christian teachers deem it prudent to adopt, investing it with some new significance.—The Century.

Queer Facts and Happenings.

Edith Birkham, of Racine, Wis., lost her life by falling out of bed.

Boys found a cracked demijohn in a cree near Rome, N.Y., inside of which was a sucker that was over a foot long and so large that it could not escape.

A Washington Territory man left $2,000 for all the delicacies of the season to be fed to his dog, while his old father was made heir to his watch and chain only.

The widow and daughter of old Dr. Wheaton, of Birmingham, N.Y., were attired at his funeral in white dresses, and wore bouquets of flowers, while the remains lay on a sofa covered by a many-colored robe.

While Andrew Lockwood was rowing across the reservoir below Andover, N.J., a three pound black bass jumped into his boat.

MATRIMONIAL.

A Brilliant Wedding in Scottish Upper Tendom.

The great event of the season in the southeast of Scotland has been the marriage of Miss Constance Nisbet Hamilton, the rich proprietress of Biel, Dirleton, Belhaven and Pencaitland, East Lothian, to Mr. Henry T. Ogilvy, son of Sir John Ogilvy Bart., of Inverquharity, Forfarshire. The ceremony took place in the private chapel at Biel House, without any bridesmaids, yet the whole elite of the district, as well as many from a distance, seemed to have turned out, though the hour fixed was an early one—8 a.30 m. Bishop Dowden officiated. Most of the guests left immediately afterwards, as the newly-married couple were not going on any extensive marriage tour, but intended passing the honeymoon at Biel. Though everything was thus gone about in the sensible manner which might have been expected of Miss Hamilton, her bridal dress might have excited the envy of ladies generally. She wore an extremely handsome dress of the richest ivory white velvet brocade, with long train. The petticoat was of ivory white satin, and was completely covered with valuable antique Brussels lace, which had been inherited from the late Lady Mary Nisbet Hamilton, the bride's mother. The bodice was fastened in front by five large diamond buttons or brooches, and had a high ruff and trimming of the same valuable lace. Her veil, which was of the same Brussels lace, was long, and was fastened back with large diamond stars; and in her hair she wore a spray of white hawthorn (the Ogilvy badge), myrtle and white heather. She also wore a ruby and diamond brooch, a triple horseshoe diamond brooch and two diamond rings, the gifts of the bridegroom; a hawthorn spray in diamonds, the gift of the brother and sisters of the bridegroom; and in her hair a diamond ornament, the gift of Sir John Ogilvy. In addition she wore a tiara of five diamond stars, and a diamond necklace, with cross and ear-rings: and wore rings and bracelets of the same valuable stones from her family jewels. She carried a beautiful bouquet, composed of white heather and myrtle. The marriage presents were very numerous and valuable.

A Good Kind of Face to Have.

Memory of events.—This is shown by a wide, full forehead in the centre.

Reasoning power.—A high, long and well defined nose and a broad face exhibits this great faculty.

Moral courage.—This faculty manifests itself by wide nostrils, short neck and eyes set directly in front.

Language.—This faculty is exhibited in many parts of the face, particularly by a large mouth and large, full eyes, opened wide.

Self-Esteem.—This faculty shows itself in a long and deep upper lip. Large self-esteem gives one dignity, self-control and perfect independence.

Firmness.—The presence of this faculty when very large, is indicated by a long, broad chin. Firmness is synonymous with willfulness, perseverance and stability.

Perception of character.—This is indicated by a long, high nose at the lower end or tip. This faculty is very useful, if not indispensible, to a Judge in the exercise of the functions of his office.

Powers of observation.—The situation of this faculty is in the face just above the nose, filling out the forehead to a level with the parts on each side of the nose. It is a faculty which enables one to concentrate the mind upon the subject being discussed.

Conscientiousness.—This is shown in the face by a square jaw, a bony chin, prominent cheek bones and a general squareness of the features of the entire face. To be conscientious means that one has a sense of justice, honesty of purpose, rectitude of character and moral courage.

The Champion Dove Story.

Ever since Noah's messenger hastened back to the friends who had shared with her the long seclusion caused by the worst storm on record, to show them the first signs she found of better weather coming, the dove has been considered a bird of good omen. The people of a church in Belfast report a singular coincidence last Sunday. Just as the pastor was reading the words: "I beheld the spirit descending as a dove out of heaven, and it abode upon Him," a beautiful dove fluttered in at the open door and alighted upon the railing of the back gallery. It next flew to the pulpit, and after resting a minute perched upon the speaker's head. Being brushed away the dove flew down beside the Bible, and finally, near the close of the sermon, flew out through the open door at which it had entered.—Lewiston Journal.

Too Much Modesty.

"John," she said, as she toyed with one of his coat buttons, "this is leap year, isn't it?" "Yes, Mamie," he answered, as he looked fondly down on her golden head, that was pillowed on his manly bosom. "This is the year when the proposing is done by the young ladies?" "Yes." "I hope you don't expect me to propose to you?" "Why, Mamie, dear, I never gave a thought—I—er—to—to—tell the truth, I've only known you for—that is to say—" "I'm glad you didn't expect me to propose. I'm not that kind, I hope. No, John, dearest, I couldn't be so immodest. I am going to let you do the proposing yourself in the old-fashioned way. The old-fashioned way is good enough for me." And the gentle maiden gave her lover a beaming smile; and yet the youth rejoiced that he had found such a treasure of modesty.

Knew the Youth.

Young Winks—I think I'll call on Miss De Puyster this evening. There's no one there.

Young Binks—How can you tell?

Winks—Her little brother is playing in the front yard. If there was any one there he'd be in the parlor back of the sofa.

Lieutenant-Governor's Proclamation.

The Ontario Gazette of to-day contains a proclamation raising the village of Forest, in the county of Lambton, and the village of Deseronto, in the county of Hastings, to the dignity of towns; also annexing the water lots to the town of Parkdale. The proclamations will go into effect on Jan. 1st, 1889.

MR. KERBY'S STRANGE DREAM,

In Which He Learns Particulars of His Mother's Death.

There are many who, while not believing in spiritualism, have a strong and abiding faith in presentiments, especially when the belief is actually forced upon them by demonstration. Such is Mr. Joseph Kerby, of Montreal, the representative of an English mining syndicate. He is of the old Kerby family of Brantford, it being his brother James who built the Kerby House in that city. Mr. Kerby was in Toronto a few days ago and in the course of conversation he told a remarkable story. In 1863, when the American war was at its height, he went south from Chicago to look after some cotton business. At Nashville, Tenn., he was captured by the Confederate forces as a spy and thrown into prison. After a few months there he was transferred to Libby Prison, and for some offence towards the officer in command was placed in the black hole with a single companion. One night his comrade in misery awoke and heard him sobbing, and waking him up, asked why he was crying. He said he had dreamt that his mother had died in Brantford, Canada, that night; and what particularly impressed him was that she had insisted upon dying upon a certain bed and in a certain room which she had never before used. Some weeks after this Mr. Kerby was released and several letters handed to him. Among them was a black bordered one from home. Before opening it he told the officers that he knew it would contain the announcement of his mother's death. Relating his dream he opened the letter, which fully bore out the strange presentiment, his mother having died the night in question. Mr. Kerby returned home; and before allowing any one to tell him the circumstances of his mother's decease, he related graphically the death bed scene, naming those who were present, including Dr. Reginald Henwood, who still practices in Brantford. The circumstances attending the death and those that he dreamt were alike in every particular.

New Hints for Home.

Do not amuse the children by letting them cut the pictures out of your Dore bible.

Indiscriminate giving is a bad thing. It is better to help pay the running expenses of a charitable organization than to give a piece of pie to an unworthy tramp who has a ruined digestion.

Never black your boots with stove polish and deal gently with your wife if she cleans her jewels with your tooth brush. This is an experience that is bound to come to man some time in life.

Be sure to have an elaborate method of opening your doors from the inside. This will keep burglars in the house until the police come, unless you argue too long with your wife as to whether it is the cat or a June-bug that you hear counting the silver in the dining-room.

A Very Obliging Editor.

The Port Hope Times man desires to be on perfectly familiar terms with his readers, as the annexed general invitation which appears in his paper will testify: Don't forget the editor when you have a news item. If your wife licks you, let us know of it, and we will set it right before the public. If you have company, tell us, if you are not ashamed of visitors. If a youngster arrives at your home, begging for raiment, buy a quarter's worth of cigars and come around, and if you are a cash subscriber we will furnish you a suitable name for him or her, as the circumstances will permit: and if you have a social gathering of a few of your friends, bring around a big cake, seven or eight pies and a bam.

Diabolical Crimes in Hungary.

Two fearful crimes are reported from Pesth. In one case a tailor, named Gnadig, poured through a funnel melted lead into the right ear of his sleeping wife. Finding she was not dead the wretch then proceeded to strangle her, but was interrupted by the arrival of the neighbors, who found the unfortunate woman still alive, but in a desperate condition. The murderer is still at large. The other case is that of a butcher, who fired a revolver at his brother-in-law, and, believing he was dead, went home and killed his victim's child, a baby 10 months old. He then attempted to commit suicide.

A Sad Case.

Artist (to pupil)—"That study is all out of drawing. It defies every law of composition, and has not a color ever seen in nature. Can't you see that for yourself?"

Pupil—"It looks all right to me."

"Well, I'll have to give you up. You will never be fit for anything but a member of a hanging committee."

The Last Man Who Ought to Complain.

Bald-headed Man.—Here, waiter, this is an infernal outrage. Here is a hair swimming around in the soup.

Waiter.—Well, don't make such a fuss about a trifle. Hair is what you need most, ain't it?

The Smart Small Boy Again.

Tom, 3 years old, who has a brother of 3 months, gave as a reason for the latter's good conduct: "Baby doesn't cry tears because he doesn't drink any water; he can't cry milk."

The Toronto Christian Institute, erected by Mr. Wm. Gooderham at a cost of $25,000, was formally opened last night.

—The Hamilton Powder Company have taken an action for $10,000 against the Guarantee Company of North America for the policy of insurance upon their cashier, Samuel Johnson, who committed suicide. Shortly after Johnson's death, it will be remembered, it transpired that he was a defaulter to the extent of about $5,000.

Gustav Freytag, the German novelist, prefers not to use the title of nobility which has been conferred upon him.

Wm. Keeler, a member of the Belleville fire brigade, who has repeatedly ill-used his wife, gave her a severe castigation last week, which resulted in the members of the fire department ostracizing him and striking his name from the roll. Mrs. Keeler returned to her parents in Tyendinaga, and it is reported that Keeler is endeavoring to effect a reconciliation.

SAD DOMESTIC STORY.

Woman Arrested for Killing her Husband—A Man in the Case this Time.

An Ottawa despatch says: Another tragedy is reported from Mattawa. It appears that a dispute took place between W. G. Gilmor, proprietor of the Union Hotel there, and his wife concerning a young man, Joseph St. Denis, who, Mr. Gilmor averred, was too intimate with Mrs. Gilmor. The result of the row was that Mrs. Gilmor threw a ginger ale bottle at her husband's head, cutting him badly. He died shortly afterwards, and the doctors testify that the effect of the blow was the cause of death. When Mrs. Gilmor was summoned during the night time to her dying husband's bedside St. Denis was in her room and escaped by the window. He testified at the examination which followed into the sad affair at Pembroke that he had been intimate with Mrs. Gilmor for the past year and had access to her room at any time. Judge Deacon gave him 24 hours to leave the town. Mrs. Gilmor has been arrested for manslaughter and lodged in Pembroke jail.

A Haristocrat.

Mr. Parvenue—That's all settled about them carriages, then; but look 'ere, the missis said I was to be sure and have a crest painted on 'em.

Coachbuilder—Oh, certainly, sir. What is your crest?

Mr. P.—Well, I—er—that is, I—er—I s'pose I've forgotten it: but that don't matter, do it? You can find me a crest, can't yer, if I pay for it?

Coachbuilder—Oh, yes, sir, by hall means. I've got a few 'ere as you could choose from, sir. 'Ere you are, sir; lions is popular, but helephants is very peculiar.—Fun.

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Put it to a Scientific Test.

"My dear," remarked a husband, as he struggled to pull of his boots, "I (hic) really think I've lost my mind.

"Well, John," responded his wife, anxiously, "why don't you have a microscopical examination made and find out for sure?"

At first a little, tickling cough.
'Tis nothing but a cold.
They say "'Twi l soon wear off
Alas, the story old!
The hectic cheek, the failing strength,
The grief that cannot save,
And life's wan flame goes out, at length,
In a consumptive's grave.

If persons would use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, when irritation of the lungs is indicated by a cough, it would be an easy matter to avert consumption. Be wise in time.

Noble Father.

He—I must break off my engagement, Violet.

She—Why should you do that?

He—Well, your father has failed; how can he support a son-in-law in the style in which I have lived?

She—Why, you goose, he failed on purpose to meet the extra expense.

It is not Disputed

That Nerviline, the new pain remedy, is a good article. Some indeed claim that the old fashioned preparations are just as good, but any sufferer can satisfy himself by expending ten cents on a sample bottle of Polson's Nerviline, that nothing sold can equal it for internal, local or external pains. Always speedy in effect, prompt and certain in every case. H. S. Webber, Orangeville, writes: "My customers speak very highly of Nerviline as a remedy for toothache and neuralgia." All druggists and country dealers sell Nerviline. Try it to-day.

An Old Time Wedding.

"My wife wore a white dress and a pair of white cotton gloves when we were married," said General Alger, of Michigan, the other day. "We took our wedding trip in a buggy from Grand Rapids to a little settlement called Grandville, about seven miles distant. I wore not even cotton gloves, and I'll tell you why: I didn't have money enough to buy 'em."

Too well known to need lengthy advertisements- Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Not Particular.

Dogvendor—You take this animal. I sells him for five dollars. That is dog-cheap.

Lady customer—Is he a particular breed?

"No'm he ain't a bit pertikeler. He'd just as leive go with you as me. So he wud."

Value of Advertisements.

"Do I believe in advertisements," said a prominent lawyer a day or two ago. "Well, rather; and in the hidden advertisement more than in any other. I remember, one day, reading a very interesting story, that ended in what I took to be a puff for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. I threw down the paper in a rage. Not a week after that I needed some medicine of that kind, and went and bought those same little pills." "Did I find them good?" "Why, yes, the best thing of the kind I ever saw, but that has nothing to do with the first question, and I only mention the joke on myself to show that advertising does pay."

Equal to the Occasion.

Irate wife—This is a nice time of night for you to be getting home!

Aggravating husband—Yesh, ver' nice. Beautiful moon (hic) light: no peramb'lators on street; everything (hic) nice'n quiet.

Heroic Treatment.

Patient—At times when I eat too much I suffer terribly. What would you recommend, doctor? Doctor—A stomach pump.

Old Lady—Ah, you bad boy! draggin' your little brother like that! S'pose you were to kill him! Bad Boy—Don't care got another indoors!

Five Decorative "Nevers."

Never permit a white marble mantel to disfigure an otherwise tasteful room. Cover it with a draped mantel board.

Never have a dark carpet and walls in a room that is deficient in light. Only apartments open to the outer light will stand gloomy tones in decoration.

Never have a carpet patterned with gigantic roses or other actual flowers that harmonize with nothing. The colors in a carpet should, in a great measure, complete the color and scheme adopted for the room.

Never put a piece of furniture into a room merely because it is pretty and will fill up. Every article should have its real or apparent use. As a general thing the necessary pieces will occupy all the space that should be allotted to furniture.

Never hang a picture from one nail. Aside from the mere question of safety, the use of two nails, the cord stretched across them so as to come down squarely to the corners of the frame, has a symmetrical effect, and makes the walls look very much more finished.—Home.

Cold Water and Cholera Infantum.

We endorse the following remarks of Dr. H. F. Hendrix on cholera infantum (says the "Monthly Bulletin" of the Iowa State Board of Health in the Weekly Medical Review. During the progress of the disease, and for some time before active symptoms manifest themselves, we have noticed the insatiable thirst of these little patients, and always noticed marked relief from giving them plenty of cold water. It seems strange that any one should deny a simple remedy like this so pleadingly demanded. Dr. Hendrix, moreover, claims that it is beneficial as a preventive. He says: "I feel it my duty to say (taking my own observation as a guide) that cholera infantum will not occur in any case where a plentiful supply of cold water is given at all times and on all occasions, night or day, whenever the little one desires it. And, further, I would like to impress upon the minds of those who have the care of children to lay aside any scruple of reserve they have in regard to giving cold water, and to give it freely. Those not able to let their wants be known should have it placed to their lips and let drink to their satisfaction."

Do Figures Lie?

Do figures lie? Let us see.

Two women had 30 chickens each, which they took to market. They agreed to divide equally the proceeds of their sale.

One sold her chickens two for $1, getting for 30 chickens $15.

The others sold hers three for $1, getting for her chickens $10.

This made $25 realized on the 60 chickens.

The merchant called to divide the money said:—

"You sold your 30 chickens two for $1, and you sold your 30 chickens three for $1. That makes 60 chickens at the rate of five for $2. Well, 5 into 60 goes 12 times—twice 12 is 24. That makes $24 your chickens brought."

But as shown above the women actually had $25 in their pockets. And yet the merchant's figures were right.

Do figures lie?—Spence's Paper.

Did Not Effect Him.

"This thing makes me tired!" exclaimed the farmer, when he caught his hired man sitting on the shady side of the haystack.

Mebbe it does," was the reply, "but it don't make me tired. It's the all-fired work that uses me up."

The M. W. Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of Canada, R. T. Walkem, Q. C., of Kingston, has ordered as a donation from Grand Lodge the sum of $200 to be forwarded to the Grand Lodge of Florida for the Masonic Relief Fund, gotten up to assist those of the brethren suffering from the yellow fever scourge in that State.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,003 at Detroit 1,300 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,316 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, S. H. COOK, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS generally

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

for us. Cash Furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address, C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N. Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U. S. in the Hide line, have sent their representatives to investigate Mr. Page's business, and after a thorough examination and comparison the Reporter gives him this endorsement

"We believe that to extent of right-weight raw materials [illegible] and earliest, Mr. Page sells the least of any competitor and that his present stock is the largest held by any house in this country."

And the Review says.

"After a most thorough investigation of Mr Page's business [illegible] same line, we have become fully satisfied that in his specialty, right-weight skins he is [illegible] the largest dealer in this country, and superiority of quality he is confessedly at the head."

QUERY. If Mr. Page's business is the largest in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more Skins than any of his competitors in the same line?

DUNL. 41 88.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

YOUR

Special Attention!

IS CALLED

TO THE

DECIDED BARGAINS

In Dress Goods, Mantlings, etc.,

—AT—

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

A beautiful range of plushes in the latest shades, at a surprisingly low figure.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES!

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots of the best manufacture at rock bottom prices. Button and Lace Boots in great variety at prices sure to suit you.

THE TOP PRICE PAID

For Butter and Eggs

A lot of choice Butter in Tubs or Rolls wanted by 1st November.

At Cash Price for Trade.

J. G. Anderson, SPROULE'S BLOCK.

Artemesia Exhibition.

Following is the prize list of the Artemesia fall show, held at Priceville on Tuesday, Oct. 2:

HORSES.

Span heavy draught horses, John McLean. Span general purpose horses, 1st. J. Graham, 2nd. A. Stewart sr. Span carriage horses, David Thompson, Wm. Stewart. Hack horse, Adam Muir, M. Riely. Brood mare, J. Knox, D. McMullan. Heavy draught 2 year old colt, John McLean, F. Cairns. 1 year old colt, J. Graham, D. McDonald. Spring colt, C. McKinnon, A. Ferguson. Gene al purpose 2 year old colt, H. McPherson, F. Cairns. 1 year old colt, C. McKinnon, M. Williams. Spring colt, D. Ferguson, J. McMillan.

CATTLE.

Durham bull, W. Fruke, T. A. Ferguson. Devon bull, R. Oliver, 1st and 2nd. Devon cow, R. Oliver, 1st and 2nd. Grade heifer, R. Oliver. Ayrshire bull, A. Cairns, 1st. and 2nd. Ayrshire cow, R. Oliver, A. Cairns. Grade cow, A. Ferguson, W. Watson, sr. Two year old heifer, R. Oliver, A. Ferguson. One year old heifer, A. Whitaker, 1st and 2nd. Heifer calf, A. McLeod, T. A. Ferguson. Yoke oxen, John McMillan. Yoke three year old steers, A. Whitaker. Yoke 2 year old steers, A. Whitaker. One year old steer, A. McLeod, T.A. Ferguson.

SHEEP.

Long wool ram lamb, R. Oliver, M. Ferguson. Aged ewes, R. Oliver, G. Swanston. Shearling ewes, R. Oliver, 1st and 2nd. Ewe lambs, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Leicester ram lamb, R. Oliver, R. Oliver. Pair aged Leicester ewes, R. Oliver, W. Meads. Shearling ewes, W. Meads. Ewe lambs, R. Oliver. Fine wool sheep, R. Oliver, 1st. and 2nd.

PIGS.

Berkshire boar, R. Oliver, T. A. Ferguson. Sow, A. McLean, T. A. Ferguson. Spring pigs, W. Ferguson, J. Oliver. Suffolk spring pigs, J. Graham.

POULTRY.

Pair of game, J. Brodie, J. Brodie. Black Hamburgs, T. H. Atkinson, R. Conkey. Golden Hamburg, W. Cooey, T. H. Atkinson. Silver Hamburgs, T. H. Atkinson, J. Cooey. Buff Cochins, J. Brodie, 1st and 2nd. Black Spanish, T. A. Ferguson, W. Cooey. Brahmas, J. Cooey, J. Brodie. Leghorn, W. Wilcox. T. H. Atkinson. Plymouth Rock, T. A. Ferguson, W. Watson, sr. Aylesbury ducks, D. McMullin, M. Ferguson. Other ducks, T. A. Ferguson, M. Ferguson. Turkeys, T. A. Ferguson, J. Cooey. Geese, M. Riley, D. McMullin.

GRAIN.

Fall wheat, Clawson, J. Brodie, J. Stewart. Fall wheat, other kind, M. Williamson, A. Stewart sr. Spring wheat, Rusian, J. Brodie. White Fyfe, J. Stewart, A. Stewart. Other kinds, J. Stewart, — Hardy. Barley J. Brodie, D. Thompson. Oats, white, J. Brodie, M. Ferguson. Oats, Black, J. Brodie, J. Cooey. Peas, small, J. Brodie, F. Cairns. Peas, large, J. Stewart, J. Brodie. Corn, W. Ferguson, J. Graham. Timothy seed, J. Brodie, W. Stewart. Col. Beans, J. Brodie, — Hardy.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.

Early rose potatoes, F. Cairns, W. Meads. Other kind. F. Cairns, J. McLean. Collection potatoes, D. Thompson, 2nd J. Brodie. Swede turnips, M. Williamson, D. Thompson. Other turnips, J. Graham, M. Williamson. Mangolds, W. McAuley, W. Ferguson. Beets, D. McMullin, W. McAuley. Cabbage, D. Thompson, A. O'Strander. Cauliflower, R. Oliver, T. Conkey. Potato onions, D. Thompson, W. Fruke. Top onions, D. Thompson, J. Brodie. Field carrots, J. Graham, T. A. Ferguson. Table carrots, W. McAuley, J. Graham. Pumpkins, D. McMullin, J. Aussum. Squashes, J. Lever, W. Ferguson. Celery, R. Oliver, J. Graham. Citrons, T. A. Ferguson, W. Ferguson. Tomatoes, T. A. Ferguson, J. Bentham. Col. vegetables, J. J. Graham, T. A. Ferguson. Parsnips, W. McAuley, R. Oliver.

FRUIT.

Winter apples, J. Graham, H. Matthewson. Fall do., D.G. McLean, J. Graham. Col. apples, J. Brodie, D. Thompson. Crab apples, J. Stewart, W. Meads. Plumbs, T. Conkey, R. Whitaker. Pears, W. Watson, A. McLeod. Grapes, J. Brodie, J. Graham.

FLOWERS.

Hand bouquet, Mrs. W. Wilcox, Mrs. J. Bentham. Table bouquet, Mrs. J. Wilcox, Mrs. J. Bentham. Col. house plants, Miss Brown.

DAIRY, ETC.

Honey in comb, J. Aussum, W. Watson. Honey strained, J. Watson, W. Watson. Roll butter, H. King, A. Stewart jr. Tub butter, H. King, W. Stewart. Home made cheese, G. Stewart. Maple syrup, J. Hazzard, W. Stewart. Maple sugar, J. Richardson, J. Hazzard. Set horse shoes, M. Riley. Men's calf boots, W. Conkey, T. Conkey. Men's kip boots, W. Conkey. Women's shoes, W. Conkey. Home Made full cloth, J. McMillan. Plain flannel, T. A. Ferguson. Woolen yarn, T. A. Ferguson, W. Stewart, Men's socks, Mrs. J. Bentham, Mrs. W. Wilcox. Woolen mits, Miss King, Mrs. Wilcox. Men's gloves, Mrs. Wilcox. Patch work quilt, Mrs. Wilcox. Other quilt, Mrs. J. Hazzard, Miss Stewart. 2 loaves bread, Mrs. King, Mrs. J. Oliver. Berlin wool work, raised, Mrs. Wilcox, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson. Col. of Berlin wool work, R. Conkey, Mrs. T. Ferguson. Hair flowers, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson. Gent's shirt, Mrs. J. Lever. Hooked mat, Mrs. W. Wilcox, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson. Crochet in cotton, Mrs. R. Conkey, Miss King. Fancy knitting in cotton, Miss Brodie, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson. Fancy knitting in wool, Mrs. Hazzard, Mrs. Wilcox. Braiding, cotton, Mrs. J. Lever, Miss Stewart. Tatting in cotton, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson. Breadmakers' yeast prize for bread, Mrs. J. Lever, Mrs. Mathewson. Sponge Cake, Mrs. T. A. Ferguson.

JUDGES.

Stock, Dr. Jamieson, D. McLeod. Grain, R. McGowan, Chas. McKinnon, Durham, and Mr. Hislop, of Artemesia. Ladies work, Mrs. Dr. Jamieson, Mrs. J. Woodland, Durham, and Mrs. Leitch, Flesherton.

DEAFNESS CURED.—A very interesting 132 page Illustrated Book on Deafness, Noises in the head. How they may be cured at your home, Post free 3d.—Address Dr. NICHOLSON, 30, St. John Street, Montreal.

A series of strange murders of dissolute women in Whitechappel, London, have occurred during the past few months. The victims were horribly mutilated, and the crimes have baffled detictives and police force alike. It is now decided to employ bloodhounds to assist in running the assassin to earth.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket, with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

A Physician

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

FLOUR, FLOUR!

STONE

FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Is prepared to do your Gristing on short notice and grinds on the old terms of every twelfth bushel. Seven cents per bag of two bushels for Chopping, done every day. The Little Mill is big in the estimation of the public.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

P. LOUCKS, Proprietor.

MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT,

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October, next, for the formation and construction of a Canal on the Canadian side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island; the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends of the canal: construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $30,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks; and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS—cheques will not be accepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works, at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888.

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 69 2nd west, Artemesia, two sows in pig—one aged and the other young, black, and black and white spotted. Information thankfully received as to their whereabouts.

W. C. PARKER.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 30 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy, good habits and clean character always succeed. We can give you good pay and steady work. Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont.

FARM for SALE

Being part of Lot No. 10 Con. 5, Euphrasia containing fifty acres. The above property situated about one-and-a-half miles from the village of Kimberley, all under cultivation an magnificent land.

Apply to
A ALDOUS
Kimberley P.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts

Supplement to The Advance, Oct. 11th. 1888.

GLENELG FALL EXHIBITION.

This Exhibition has steadily improved from year to year and the one held last week proved by all odds the best yet Notwithstanding the very unpropitious weather of the first day, which hindered many from bringing out what they had entered yet there was a fine exhibit. A superior lot of horses were shown in the various classes proving to a demonstration that this district is fast coming to the front in the breeding of horse flesh. Cattle, sheep and pigs were not so well represented yet there were some fine specimens in each class. The poultry show was the finest exhibit of any in the county; over 60 pens of fine birds were shown, and yet there is room space required in the poultry building. A very attractive and creditable exhibit was to be seen in the hall. Mallat & Sons fine display of stoves, of their own manufacture, attracted much attention and were justly admired. The show of fruits, roots and grain was indeed very fine, while the ladies department was well filled with articles of a high order. The fancy work by W. T. Jackman, of the STANDARD office, attracted a good share of attention and called forth numerous favorable comments. Johnny Dundas and others had on exhibition some fine paintings that were admired by all. The collection of photos. by J. Hamilton was fine and displays good taste in his line of business. As we give several prize lists which occupy much valuable space from week to week we are obliged to be very brief in this portion of our report. The officers of this exhibition have a right to the thanks of the community for the honorable and satisfactory manner in which they conducted the whole affair, and are also to be congratulated on the genuine success of the Show.

PRIZE LIST

HORSES.—Span heavy draught, Wm Walker, Wm McLoughry. Span general purpose, Wm Purvis, Samuel Davis Span carriage horses, Wm Henry, Wm Leggett Span of roadsters, Andrew Beattie, Wm Leggett Buggy horse, Dr. Sproule, Hugh Mercer Saddle horse, Robt Walker, Wm Douglass Brood mare, Thos Hill, Mr McAfee Spring colt, draught, Wm Brady 1st & 2nd Spring colt, general purpose, Mr McAfee, J A Halbert Spring colt roadster Wm Walker George Noble. Colt, two years general purpose, Wesley Bower, John Weber Colt one year, general purpose, Mr McAfee 1st & 2nd Colt, 1 year, draught, Wm Charlesworth Colt, 2 years, roadster Walter Taylor Joseph Beattie Colt, 1 year, roadster, Geo Noble, Wm McLoughry Speeding in ring, Jas W Sproule, Walter Taylor. Thoroughbred bull, J A Halbert Grade bull James Mercer Thoroughbred cow under 2 years, John Hutchinson Jas Bell. Pure bred cow Wm Henry Grade cow Jas Mercer, Wm Walker Thoroughbred heifer 2 years, Wm Henry Jas Mercer Grade heifer 2 years James Wilson Wm Walker Grade 1 year Wm Henry Wm Hall Spring calf thoroughbred Chas Fawcett Spring calf grade Wm Walker Walter Douglass Yoke oxen D Sproule, R McBride. Pair steers 2 years Wm Henry Pair steers 1 year Wm Henry Pair fat cattle Jerseyman S G Bennett

LONG WOOL SHEEP.—Aged ram, Joseph Shepherdson. Shearling ram, B Coleman. Shearling ewes Joseph Shepherdson 1st & 2nd Ram lamb B Coleman 1st & 2nd Pair ewes Joseph Shepherdson 1st & 2nd Ewe lambs Joseph Shepherdson 1st B Coleman

FINE WOOL SHEEP.—Aged Ram Jas Brooks Shearling ram John Dyas Shearling ewes Jas Brooks Ram lamb John Graham 1st & 2nd Ewes, John Brooks Ewe lambs John Graham 1st & 2nd

SWINE.—Boar over 1 year, B Coleman, Berkshire, Silas Ritledge R W Brisbin Sprinkles, B Coleman, Silas Ritledge

SHEEP.—Boar Jas Elliot Sow Alex Smith D McDuffe Sucking pigs Alex Smith Thos Brady

POULTRY.—Best rooster of any variety Jas Mercer W Hassett Jr Senr. White Leghorn rooster W Hassett 1st & 2nd White Leghorn hen W Hassett 1st & 2nd Golden penciled Hamburg rooster W J Cooey, Golden penciled Hamburgh hen W J Cooey 1st & 2nd Silver spangled rooster W J Cooey Jas Brisbin Silver spangled hen W J Cooey Game rooster, James Brisbin Game hen Jas Brisbin 1st & 2nd Plymouth Rock rooster, W J Cooey Jas Brisbin Plymouth Rock hen, B Coleman W J Cooey White Brahma rooster, B Coleman 1st & 2nd White Brahma hen, B Coleman 1st & 2nd Dark Brahma rooster, W Haskett B Coleman Dark Brahma hen W Haskett, B Coleman Buff Cochin rooster Jas Brooks Buff Cochin hen, W Haskett 1st & 2nd Spanish rooster Jas Mercer, Wm Douglass Spanish hen Jas Mercer W J Cooey Black Minorca rooster W Haskett Pair geese

Hugh Johnston, B Coleman. Pair Turkeys, R McBride. Wm Douglass, Pair ducks, Pekin, B Coleman 1st & 2nd. Pair ducks, small. Wm Douglass, B Coleman. Pair ducks, common, J A Halbert, W J Cooey.

GRAIN—Clawson wheat, R Bennett. Fall wheat, any other kind, Hugh Johnston, Wm. Douglass. Russian spring wheat, Jas. Brodie. Any other kind of spring wheat, Jas Brodie, W. J. Cooey Barley, Jas. Brodie 1st & 2nd. Large peases, Jas Brodie, Hugh Johnston. Small white peases, Jno Shears, Jas Brodie. White oats, Jas Brodie, James Mercer. Black oats, Wm. Norton, James Brodie. Timothy seed, Hugh Johnston, James Brodie. Six ears Indian corn, Wm. Norton, A Shell Beans, Edw Rutledge, Wm Norton.

ROOTS—Col potatoes, H Johnston. Rose potatoes, Wm Douglass, Joseph Beattie. Potatoes, other variety, R H Stinson. Joseph Beattie. Swede turnips, R Watson, Wm Norton. Turnips, other variety, Hugh Johnston, R Watson. Mangold Wurtzels, Wm Norton, Jas Nelson. Blood beets, R H Stinson, C Littlejohn. Turnip beets, Geo Noble. R H Stinson. Field carrots, red, John Graham, R Watson. Field carrots, white, R H Stinson, Jas Nelson. Early horn carrots, R McBride, Wm Haskett. Parsnips, R H Stinson, W Haskett. Celery, R D Biggar, Wm. Norton. Cauliflower, R D Biggar, William Norton. Cabbage, John Shears, R D Biggar. Red cabbage, Wm Norton, R D Biggar. Yellow Globe onions, Wm Douglass. Red tomatoes, J W Sproule, Wm Norton. Seed onions, Wm Norton Dutch set, R H Stinson. Onions, other variety, Wm Norton, Hugh Johnston. Salsify, W Haskett. John Graham. Squash, C Littlejohn, R Coleman. Pumpkins, G S Bowes, John Shears. Cucumbers, C Littlejohn, Geo Noble. Citrons, Wm Norton. Geo Noble. Water-melon, Wm Norton.

FRUIT—6 winter apples, J Shears, J Gilray. Six Greenings, John Weber, Andrew Beattie. Apples any other variety, C Littlejohn, John Weber. Crab apples, John Hewitt, D McDuffie. Pears, Dr Sproule, John Graham. White Grapes, Thomas Gilray, John Graham. Colored Grapes, Thomas McNeal, Jno Graham. Egg plums, Wm Norton, G S Bowes. White plums, Thos Davis, C Reynolds. Lombard plums, Jas Brodie, John Weber. Plums, other variety, Edw Rutledge, Wm Douglass. Butter, tub, Hugh Johnston, R H Stinson, Wm Sarjeant. Butter, rolls, John Hewitt, R H Stinson, Hugh Johnston. Cheese, factory, Thos Elliot 1st & 2d. Cheese, home made, Wm Norton. Bread, home made, Wm Sarjeant, S Halbert. Maple sugar, Wm Fleshier, C Littlejohn. Maple syrup, R H Stinson, Edward Rutledge. Strained honey, C Reynolds. Heaviest dozen eggs, John Weber, C Irwin.

MANUFACTURES—Buggy, G Noble, W McNally. Mens coarse boots, S Halbert, Alex Kay. Mens fine boots, S Halbert, Alex Kay. Pump, Wm Jackson. Panel door, Thos McNeal 1st & 2nd. Window sash, Thos McNeal 1st & 2nd. Tinware, Haskett Bros 1st & 2nd. Penmanship, Wm Dundas. Satinet, John Hewitt, R McBride. Fancy flannel, R H Stinson, Wm Norton. Plain flannel, R Watson, Wm Norton. Pair fulled blankets, Wm Norton. Horse blanket, John M Davis, R Wright.

LADIES' WORK—Berlin wool, raised, Wm Norton, Thos Gilray. Berlin wool, not raised, D. Sproule, J A Halbert. Collection wool work, Dr Sproule, R Watson. Crochet in wool, Wm Norton, Wm Dundas. Crochet in cotton, Thos Gilray, Wm Douglass. Embroidery in silk, Wm Dundas, B Wright. Embroidery in Cotton, Thos. Gilray, Wm. Norton. Darned net, B. Wright 1st & 2nd. Fancy knitting in wool, Wm Norton. Thos Gilray. Fancy knitting in cotton, Hugh Johnston, Wm Norton. Macrame lace, R Watson, Wm Norton. Braiding in cotton, Dr. Sproule. Thos Gilray. Braiding in wool, Wm Norton. Knitted or crochet counterpane, Hugh Johnston, Wm Norton. Fancy quilt, Wm Norton, Hugh Johnston. Log cabin quilt, Wm Norton, Wm Flesher. Patch work quilt, Wm Norton, Thos Gilray. Rag mat, Wm Dundas 1st & 2nd. Leather work, Thos Gilray. Gent's shirt, hand made, Wm Norton. Wax work, Thos Gilray. Five yards rag carpet, R S Rae, J W Sproule. Crazy patchwork, Wm Dundas, W T Jackman. Knitted lace, Wm Norton, Thos Davis. Arrasene work, B Wright, Wm Norton. Wood work on canvas, Thos McNea, Dr Sproule. Pair woollen mits, Wm Norton, Thos Davis. Pair mens socks, C Littlejohn, Hugh Johnston. Pair ladies' stockings, Wm Norton, C Littlejohn. Kensington painting, R Watson. Wm Hassett. Crayon drawing, Wm Dundas 1st & 2nd. Collection paintings, Wm Dundas 1st & 2nd. Collection photographs, J Hamilton 1st & 2nd. Bouquet of natural flower, G S Bowes, R D Biggar. Collection house plants, Wm Dundas 1st & 2nd. Cage of canaries, Thos McNea, Wm Hassett. Oil paintings, Wm Dundas 1st & 2nd.

SPECIAL PRIZES.—Lord Derby colt, by W C Pearce. Wm Brady. Pen sheep, by J G Anderson. Joseph Shepherdson. Herd cattle, by J E Marsh. Jas Mercer. Spring colt, by J E Marsh, Jas Mercer. Spring colt, Terror, by T Campbell, Geo Noble. Roadster spring colt, by J E Marsh, Geo Noble. 50 lbs. butter, by W J McFarland, Hugh Johnston. 25 lbs butter, by Wm Lucas, Hugh Johnston. Boy leading colt, by W A Brown, Wm Douglass. Fattest beast, by F Sarjeant. Wm Henry. Buggy horse, by Dr. Sproule. Hugh Mercer. Lady driver, by James W Sproule. Miss Lizzie. Driving horse, by Robt Matthew. Jas Sproule. Handwriting, boy under 15, by R D Biggar. Wm Douglass. Fancy dress, under 16, by C W Rutledge. Cheese MeNea. Bread made by Breadmaker, baking under 16, Hugh Johnston. Wm Norton. Carriage horses, under 16 hands, by Thos Jennings. Carriage horses over 16 hands, by Thos Jennings. Jas Sproule. Swede turnips, by W J Manley, R Watson. Parsnips, any other kind, by W J Manley, R Watson. Mangels, by R L Stephen, John Graham. Swede turnips, by R L Stephen, Hugh Johnston. White field carrots by R L Stephen, James Nelson. Dark Brahmas, by J W Cooey, W S Hassett.

JUDGES.

Horses—Mr. Holmes, V S., and J. Boyd and Duncan McLeod.
Cattle, Sheep and Pigs, Robert Oliver, Chas Moffat, Esq., and Wm. Foster.
Poultry, Chas Bellamy and John Plewes.
Grain, Fruit and Dairy, R. J. Sproule James Brackenridge and Mr. Anderson.
Roots, D. R. Ellis, R H Stinson and S Hill.
Ladies Work, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs Grandison, Miss Christie and Mrs. Stinson.
Implements—F. J. Spears and J. H. Heard.

—Markdale Standard.

FLESHI

"T

VOL. VIII, NO. 382.

THIS SPACE BELONGS TO RUSSELL
THE NOTED JEWELER.

Colts for Sale.

Mr. Arthur Johnston, of the Meaford Road, Vandeluer P.O. has three fine filly colts, rising two years old, which he desires to dispose of. Buyers will do well to inspect these animals.

A. JOHNSTON.

RAM LAMBS for SALE.

Five finely-bred Leicester Ram Lambs for sale. Any person desiring good breeding stock will do well by applying to

JAS. STEWART,
Kimberley P. O.

NOTICE.

SHINGLES constantly on hand and for sale cheap. Just put in first-class new Chopping Mill—now bring along your grain and get it chopped up in short order.

J. B SLOAN,
Eugenia.

FLESHERTON
Implement
Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Manshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,
Reapers,
Mowers,
Rakes,
Waggons,
Buggies,
Sleighs,
Cutters,
Fanning Mills,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,
Grain Drills,
Broad-cut Seeders,
Spring Tooth Harrows,
Iron Harrows,
Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Plows,
Scufflers,
Turnip Drills,
Land Rollers.

This Y
MYR
CUT and
SMOKING T
FINER THA
Se
T & in bron
EACH PLUG a

WANTED! At once agents for our goo ions, or salary and expen
reliible men. For term
address.
J. F. LEC

The Adv
$1 till Jan

THE MA
FLESHE
Carefully Corre
Flour .....
Fall Wheat .....
Spring Wheat .....
Barley.....
Oats .....
Peas .....
Butter.....
Eggs, fresh.....
Potatoes bush.....
Pork.....
Hay per ton.....
Hides .....
Wool.....
Sheepskins .....
Geese .....
Turkeys .....
Chickens per pair
Ducks per pair ...

HERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, OCT. 18, 1888. W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Dr. Scott, of Maxwell, has purchased the practice of Dr. Kerr of that village.

Wanted—fine dairy or roll butter for private orders, by M. Richardson & Co.

Remember, The Advance until Jan. 1, 1890 for only 81.

There are over 100 pupils attending the Flesherton public school.

A full attendance of the members is requested at the next regular meeting of Fountain Council, No. 146, R. T. of T.

Scarcely a day passes but some of our nimrods are away after the wary grouse and nimble hare. Their success, as a general thing, is indifferent.

Mrs. W. Irwin returned home last Thursday from her eight weeks' visit to friends in Detroit and Leamington.

Kimberley school report for September has been crowded out the past two weeks, and now it is too stale for publication. Therefore we apologize to Mr. Hewgill for its non-appearance.

The Flesherton Furniture Warerooms, J. E. Moore, proprietor, is the place to get bargains in house furnishings. Every line full up and prices low down. See their Walnut and Mahogany Bedroom suites.

The Owen Sound Times comes to hand this week in a new form—that of the popular eight page style. The improvement is a marked one, and the paper reflects much credit upon the new manager, Mr. J. Rutherford.

Every wife and mother in the country should know the great value of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, as a blood purifier. It gives tone, health, and strength, to the vital organs, corrects all irregularites, and expels impurities from the system. Young and old use it. Price $1.

"Joe" McConnell, of Messrs. Blakely & McConnell, Flesherton's popular butchers, has been laid up for about two weeks with bilious fever. We hope to see Joe's smiling face abroad again in a few days, and himself on the war-path after fat beeves.

A friend sends us from New York a copy of the Sunday World. This mammoth paper covers 36 pages, considerably larger than the pages of the Advance. The New York World is the most popular daily paper published in that great city of great newspapers. Mr. Pulitzer, the proprietor, is coining money from it.

Change of Business.

As will be noticed by our advertising columns, Mr. Geo. Blackburn, well and favorably known in this vicinity, has purchased the flour, feed and confectioney business of Mr. Stephen Spirit. Mr. Spirit intends going south for the benefit of his health.

Closed Out.

Mr. Clinc, who had been in business here for some months, held an auction sale of household and store goods last week, and shook the dust of the town off his feet. He returned, we believe, to his old home at Cobourg.

Auction Sale.

An unreserved auction sale will be held on the farm of Mr. W. T. McKee, Lot 38, Con. 4, Artemesia, on Wednesday, Oct. 24, when a large quantity of stock and farming implements will be disposed of. Terms—All sums under $5, cash; over that amount one year's credit.

Quid pro Quo.

The Flesherton Advance is agitating for a lockup in that Village. No one knows the moment one may be urgently needed, for the editor has taken to writing poetry.—Grey Review. There is no immediate danger of the Review man being incarcerated for anything he may write of a spicy nature.

Send a 2 cent stamp to Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass., for a set of attractive album cards.

Mantles, ulsters, Dolmanetts, everything new in ladies' jackets, a fine assortment at M. Richardson & Co's.

Miss Lou Armstrong returned home from Hamilton on Thursday, where she had been spending some time with relatives.

Several Fleshertonians went down to the Dundalk fall fair on Friday. The day was wet and disagreeable, and the show was not a great success, either in exhibits or attendance.

We notice by the prize list of the Collingwood G. N. W. show that Mrs. Beecroft, of this village, took ten prizes for flowers—five first and five second. How is that for our Flesherton florist?

Miss Maud Richardson has a choice stock of millinery for her customers this fall, and is kept busy.

Why suffer with that aching head when you may be cured with Ayer's Cathartic Pills?

A large lot of children's mantles and cloaks from 50 cents up. Remarkably cheap goods at M. Richardson & Co.

We are happy to announce to our readers that Mr. M. Richardson has kindly consented to write for the Advance a series of letters, descriptive of his late pleasant trip to the Old Country. Mr. Richardson's facile pen will undoubtedly construct something of an exceedingly interesting nature, the first instalment of which may be looked for next week.

The new overcoas shown this season at M. Richardson & Co's are calculated to defy the most rigorous cold. Men's ready made clothing at close prices.

Fair warning! Third and last call! In order to meet our own obligations we are compelled to press for settlement of outstanding accounts. To save cost and unpleasantness, please pay up at once.—unsettled claims will pass out of our hands Nov. 1st. J. E. Moore.

Steamer Explosion.

On Saturday last the boiler belonging to Mr. Jas. Sparling's steam thresher exploded on the farm of Mr. T. Gilbert. Our Meaford Road correspondent gives full particulars elsewhere.

Prizes for Flesherton.

Mr. J. H. Heard, of Flesherton, took seven prizes at the Proton show, held at Dundalk on Friday last for articles as follows: First for iron harrows, cutter, and lumber wagon; 2nd for democrat wagon and buggy; 1st prize for grapes, and 2nd for citrons. Mr. Heard took a large collection of apples along, but they were bruised in carriage else they would have taken prizes, too. The Dundalk Herald credits Proton with raising fine grapes. Considering that Mr. Heard's grapes were the only ones shown, the editor's jubilation falls very flat.

Anniversary Services.

The second anniversary of the dedication of the Flesherton Baptist Chapel was celebrated last Lord's Day, when sermons were preached by Rev. D. A. McGregor, B. A., of McMaster University. The morning's sermon was a masterly handling of some of the deepest truths concerning the Kingdom and Kingship of The Messiah, and dealt mainly with matters that are seldom touched by the ordinary run of the present day preaching. Persons walking in the light of the Kingdom could not fail to find in the discourse much that would be highly helpful and was in exact accord with their deepest yearnings. Persons not enjoying that Light would feel as the Athenians of old felt when first they listened to other parts of the same great theme. In the evening Professor McGregor gave a sermon that was characterized by refined expression of the simplest truths of the Gospel. Prof. McGregor also preached in Priceville in the afternoon to a large and appreciative audience.—com

Wanted, 10,000 bushels new barley till orders before close of navigation. Highest market prices for peas and oats paid by M. Richardson & Co.

Literary Notices.

The October Rural Canadian is to hand and is brimful, as usual, of helpful suggestions and information for the farmer.

That old and well-known family paper, the Farmer's Advocate, is happy and more than sustains its well-earned popularity. It publishes the prize lists of the Provincial and Industrial exhibitions.

The Canadian Horticulturist appears to improve with each number, and is winning for itself a place long filled by American publications, which it is superior to in every way for the Canadian fruitgrower, as it deals largely with Canadian subjects, and the fruits most suitable to our climate.

It was'nt the Kitchen Door.

A young lady who has been visiting at Dundalk tells us a very funny story about the editor of the Dundalk Herald, and we can't resist the temptation of making it public. The gentleman referred to responded to an invitation to be present at a private social, and after his arrival was exalted to the responsible position of waiter. A cellar door opened off the dining room, and the young gentleman, in making a bolt for the kitchen with an armful of dishes, mistook the cellar door for an entry to the cookery department. One version of the story is to the effect that he was carried home on a stretcher, and came out in a brand new suit next day. Another, that he crawled through the cellar window and escorted himself home by a back street. On this point deponent was not very clear. At any rate there was an accident of some kind. Possibly the details are not entirely correct, but if friend Spurr will furnish us with the true facts we will be most happy to make any amendations.

Illustrated Book on Deafness Sent free. How they may be cured at home. Post free 3d.—Address Dr. Nichol[illegible] St. John Street, Montreal.

COMPETITION

DEFIED!

Fine Gold and Silver Watches for Presentation or Personal use.

[illegible] & CO

AND SILVERWARE.

Quality and completeness of stock select from not equalled in Central Grey.

Sizes Complete in Gents' 18 K. Wedding Rings

No Catch Prices. Goods as represented

OR "CASH" REFUNDED.

Can do better for Customers—"Cash" or "Credit"—than any other jeweler in "Grey Co."

Watches carefully and promptly repaired.

JEWELER BROWN,

MARKDALE, ONT.

GS TO LL,
WELER.

This Year's
YRTLE
CUT and PLUG
OKING TOBACCO
FINER THAN EVER.
See
T & B
in bronze on
PLUG and PACKAGE.

TED! At once. Local and traveling nts for our goods. Liberal commission salray and expenses, to competent and men. For terms and full particulars.
J. F. LeCLAIRE, Nurseryman, Brighton, N. Y.

e Advance for
till Jan. 1, 1890.

E MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

fully Corrected Each Week.

.....	$5	00	to 5	58
heat	$1	05	to 1	10
Wheat	1	05		1 10
.....	0	45		0 60
....	0	30		0 31
.....	0	58		0 58
....	0	16		0 17
resh.....	0	16		0 16
es bush.....	0	75		0 75
.....	6	50		6 50
r ton.....	8	00		8 00
.....	4	50		5 50
.....		16		18
kins	0	50		1 00
.....	0	05		0 05
s	0	7		0 07
ns per pair	0	20		0 30
per pair	0	40		0 60

BELINDA: A BEAUTY

CHAPTER I.

THE WINE IN THE GRAPE-FLOWER.

Spain or Clapham?

A brand new Clapham villa, all dust, dulness, and decorum, with "Mr. Augustus Jones" upon the brand-new door-plate. A drawing-room, like one's life, oppressively stiff and uninteresting, dining-room to match, husband to match, everything to match! Fine Brussels carpets beneath one's feet; a sun possessing the warmth and cheerfulness of a farthing rush-light overhead. Servants to wait upon one and consume one's means; a brougham, perhaps, bearing the Jones coat-of-arms and liveries; indisputable respectability, indisputable appearance—value, how much of solid good to one's self?—well maintained. Amusement, pleasure, play, the quick-coursing blood, the jollity, the "go" of existence, nowhere.

So much for Clapham!

And Spain? Spain, just across the Pyrenees there—Spain, from whence the warm wind blows on Belinda's face at this moment—what of that alternative? An uninteresting husband to start with, so much in common has futurity's chances both; but not a stiff, not a dull one. A genial little human creature in the main is Maria Jose de Seballos, wine merchant and commission agent of Seville, unburdened, 'tis true, by superfluity of intellect, but light of step in waltz or cachuca, and singing tenor love songs passably; his swarthy fingers too be-ringed, his swarthy locks too bergamoted for the very finest taste; his diet overtending somewhat toward garlic; and still, if but by virtue of his Spanish picturesqueness, less vulgar far than Mr. Augustus Jones of Clapham. What would life be by his side?

In the first place, thinks Belinda, sagely, life, did one marry the little Sevillian, need not of necessity be passed at his side at all. Maria Jose would naturally have to look after his agency business, travel to distant countries for wine orders, take his pleasure, as Spanish gentlemen do, in club or cafe, leaving his wife free. Free—in a flat in a Seville street; no appearance to keep up; no respectability; a tiled floor instead of Brussels carpet beneath one's feet; not a hope of brougham or liveries this side of heaven—but free! The good warmth-giving sun of Spain overhead; a hundred sweet distractions of dance and tertulia to count the days by; bull-fights, theatres, and music for one's Sundays; enjoyment, in short, the rule, not the exception of life, and with only Maria Jose, who, after all, stands comparison with Mr. Augustus Jones right well, for drawback.

Belinda crosses her arms, shakes her head philosophically, yawns a little, then casts herself full length on the turf, in one of those attitudes of delicious southern laziness which Murillo's beggar children have made familiar to us, and, gazing up through the branches of the cork trees at the intense smalt-blue of the sky above, begins to meditate.

Sunburnt as a maize-field in June, unshackled bodily and mentally by rule as any young gitana who roams the mountains yonder, through what contradictory whim of fortune came Belinda O'Shea by this high-sounding name of hers?

A name reminding one irresistibly of the musk and millefleur of boudoirs, of Mr. Pope's verses, china teacups, rouge, pearl powder artifice! She will be 17 in a month or two, but possesses few of the theoretic charms assigned by poets and novel-writers to that age. Her hands and feet are disproportionably large for her slender limbs, her waist is straight but formless, her gait and gestures are masculine—no, not that either, to eyes that can read aright the girl is as full of potential womanly grace as the grape flower of wine; and still I dare not call her "feminine," as people of the north or of cities understand the word. She can play paume, the national Basque fives or rackets, with any gamin of her stature in St. Jean de Luz; in the excitement of the sport will show hot blood like her comrades—occasionally, indeed, say, at some disputed point of a set match, will be tempted into using a very mild gamin's expletive or two; she can row, she can swim, she can whistle. But through her great, dark eyes, poor, forsaken Belinda, the softest girlish soul looks out at you with pathetic incongruity, and though her vocabulary be not choice, she possesses Heaven's great gift to her sex, a distinctly, excellently feminine voice. Of her possible beauty at some future time we will not now speak. She is in the chrysalis or hobbledehoy stage, when you may any day see a skinny, sallow, ugly duckling of a girl turn into a pretty one, like a transformation in a Christmas piece. Eyes, mouth, feet, hands—all look too big for Belinda at present; and as to her raiment, her tattered frock, her undarned—no, I must really enter a little upon the antecedents of my heroine's life before I make known these details in all the disgraceful nakedness of fact to the public.

To begin with, the blood of earls and kings (Hibernian kings) runs in her veins. Her mother, the Lady Elizabeth Vansittart, fifth daughter of the Earl of Liskeard, at the romantic age of 41, fell in love with and married a certain fascinating Irish spendthrift, Major Cornelius O'Shea, whom she met accidentally at a Scarborough ball; endured the neglect, and worse than neglect, of her handsome husband, for the space of two years; then, happily for herself, poor soul, died, leaving Cornelius the father of one baby daughter, the Belinda of this little history.

Why Major O'Shea, an easy-tempered, easy-principled soldier of fortune, no longer himself in the freshest bloom of youth—why O'Shea in the first instance should have been at the pains to woo the elderly Lady Elizibeth no one could tell, except that she was Lady Elizabeth and that interest, that ignis fatuus of ruined men, might be supposed to lie dormant in the Earl, her father's family. Whatever his motives, whatever his matrimonial disappointments, the Major, even his best friends allowed, behaved himself creditably on his wife's death. Wore a band that all but covered his hat, swore never again to touch a card or dice box (nor broke his oath for three weeks); and wrote a letter full not only of pious, but well-worded sentiments to his father-in-law—from whom, despite many touching allusions to the infant pledge left behind by their sainted Elizabeth, he received, I must say, but a curt and pompous dozen lines in reply. Then, his duties as a widower discharged, Cornelius cast about him to see how he should best perform those of a father. The sum of £3,000, Lady Elizabeth's slender fortune, was settled inalienably on the child. "Me little one is not a pauper entirely," O'Shea would say, with tears in his good-looking Irish eyes. "If Providence in its wisdom should be pleased to sign my recall to-morrow, me angel Belinda would have her mother's fortune to stand between her and starvation." And so till she had reached the age of seven "me angel Belinda" was indifferently boarded, at the rate of about £40 a year, and no holidays in a Cork convent. Then O'Shea brought his face and lineage once more to the marriage market, on this occasion winning no faded scion of nobility, but the still blooming widow of a well-to-do London lawyer, and Belinda, for the first time since her birth, had to learn the meaning—bitterer than sweet, poor little mortal, in her case—of the word home.

Before she had been a week under the roof of her father and his new wife, the iron of cold neglect, sharper to a child's sensitive nature than any alternation of harshness and affection, had entered her soul.

The second Mrs. O'Shea was a woman whom all the ladies of her acquaintance called "sweet"—you know the kind of a human creature she must be? A blonde skin, the least in the world inclined to freckle, blonde hair, blonde eyelashes, eyes of a dove, voice of a dying zephyr. A sweet little woman, a dear little woman, an admirably well-dressed, and, what is more, a well-conducted little woman, but—not fond of children. Nothing could more beautifully befit her character and the occasion than her conduct toward her small stepdaughter. "I should never forgive myself if the poor darling grew up without regarding me as a mother," said Mrs. O'Shea, not wholly forgetful, perhaps, that the poor darling could call the Earl of Liskeard grandpapa. "And, though the Major is so sadly indifferent, on the most vital of all subjects, I feel it my duty to bring her at once under Protestant influences." But the Protestant influences established—a grim London nurse in a London back-nursery; the discovery made, too, that obdurate aristocratic connections were in no way to be softened through the child's agency—and Belinda, on the score of love, could scarce have fared worse had she been one of the gutter children whom she watched and envied, through the prison-bars of her window, down in the court below.

Had she been ornamental, the bolls of life might have broken differently for her; a rose-and-white flaxen-curled puppet sitting beside another rose-and-white flaxen-chignoned puppet in a brougham, being scarcely less attractive, though on the whole more troublesome, than a good breed of pug. But she was very far indeed from ornamental; a skinny, dark complexioned child, with over-big eyes looking wistfully from an over-small face, and hair cropped close to the head, coupe a rasoir, according to French fashion often adopted for the younger children in some Irish convents. And so, all fortuitous accidents working together and against her, Belinda was left to starve! Her small body nourished on the accustomed roast mutton and rice pudding of the English nursery, and soul—eager, fervent, hungry little soul that it was—left to starve.

She tried, impelled by the potent necessity of loving there was in her, to love her nurses. But Mrs. O'Shea's was a household in which, notwithstanding the sweetness of the mistress, the women servants shifted as perpetually as the characters in a pantomime. If Belinda loved a Sarah one month, she must perforce love a Mary the next, and then a new Sarah, and then a Hannah. She tried, casting longing eyes at them from her iron-bound prison-windows, to love the neighboring gutter children—ha-by gutter children, free to make the most of such grimy fractions of earth and sky as fate had yielded them! She tried—no; effort was not needed here; with all the might of her ardent, keenly-strung nature, Belinda, throughout those early years of isolation and neglect, loved her father.

Little enough she saw of him. O'Shea had come into a fortune of some thirty or forty thousand pounds by his second marriage, and was spending it like a man. (Like a monster! Mrs. O'Shea would declare piteously, when the inevitable day of reckoning had overtaken them. Would she ever have consented to a brougham and men servants and Sunday dinners—Sunday dinners with her principles—if she had known that Major O'Shea was a pauper, not worth the coat he was married in!) Occasionally, twice in three months, perhaps, the fancy would strike Cornelius to lounge, his pipe in his mouth, into the child's nursery for a game of romps. Occasionally, after entertaining some extra fine friends at dinner, perhaps he would bid the servants bring Miss O'Shea down to dessert, chiefly it would seem—but Belinda was happily indiscriminative—for the opportunity her presence afforded of airing his connection with the Earl of Liskeard's family. On a few blissful Sundays throughout the year he would take her out for a walk through the parks.

This was all—the sole approach to parental love that brightened Belinda's lonely child's life; and as years went on even this scant intercourse between O'Shea and his daughter lessened. Difficulties multiplied around the man; truths of many kinds dawned upon the poor pink-and-white fool whose substance he had wasted. Recriminations, long absences, cruel retrenchments of expenditure, falling off of fair weather friends, all followed in natural sequence. And then came the crash in earnest; Belinda's pittance their only certain support for the future! The house in May Fair must be exchanged for one in Bayswater, the house in Bayswater must give place to lodgings; the lodgings from "elegance," so called, must sink to respectability; respectability to eighteen shillings a week, no extras, and dirt and discomfort unlimited. Belinda, instead of roast mutton and rice pudding, must eat whatever cold scraps chanced to be over from yesterday's meals, and no pudding at all; instead of yawning over French verbs, or thrumming scales on the piano, must run errands, mend clothes, crimp chignons, plait false tresses, and generally make herself the milliner, lady's maid, and drudge of her stepmamma, Rose.

Barring the hair-dressing duties, which, seeing the strait to which they were reduced, goaded her to desperation, I should say the change of fortune affected the girl's spirits but lightly. Children of a certain age rather like catastrophes that cut them adrift from all old landmarks, so long at least as the catastrophes wear the gloss of newness. Belinda, by temperament, craved change, movement, action of any kind, and of these she had far more in Bohemia than in Belgravia. She had also more of her father! Not a very desirable acquisition, one would say, viewing matters with the eyes of reason; but Belinda, you see, viewed them with eyes of love—enormous difference.

Cornelius descended the ladder of life with a philosophic, gentlemanly grace, that added the last drop of bitterness to Mrs. O'Shea's cup. It was not the first experience of the kind, it must be remembered; and so long as abundant alcoholic resource fail not, 'tis curious with what ease men of his stamp get used to these little social vicissitudes. O'Shea had worn a threadbare coat, had frequented a tavern instead of a club, had drunk gin and water instead of claret and champagne, before this, and fell back into the old, well-greased groove of insolvency almost with a sense of relief.

Belinda, who could see no evil in what she loved, thought papa's resignation sublime!

His dress from shabbiness degenerated to something worse, his nose grew redder, his hours and his gait alike more uncertain. In Belinda's eyes he was still the best and dearest of fathers, the most incomparably long-suffering of husbands. "Rose must have her chignons crimped, must put on her pearl powder and her silk dresses, just as if we were rich, still," the girl would think with the blind injustice of her age, "while papa, poor papa, wears his oldest clothes and broken boots; yes, and will sing a song at times to his little girl, and be gay and light-hearted through it all." And the wisdom of the whole world would not have convinced her that there could be courage, of a kind, in Rose's crimped chignon and silk dresses, and cowardice—that worst cowardice which springs from the apathetic despair in her father's greasy coat and broken boots and gin-and-water joviality!

The truth was this: Cornelius knew that his last trick was made, Rose that she had the possibility of one still in her hand—a certain Uncle Robert, crusty, vulgar, rich, "living retired" in his own villa at Brompton. Very different would Belinda's story have turned out had this uncle chanced to be an aunt. The old lady never lived who could resist the blandishments of Cornelius O'Shea when he willed to fascinate. Upon the coarse, tough heart, the hardened, unbelieving ears of Uncle Robert, the Irishman's sentiments, repentance, touching allusions even to honor and high lineage were alike wasted. Rosie had chosen to throw herself away upon a scoundrel. Don't talk to him about birth; Uncle Robert called a man a gentleman who acted as a gentleman. Rosie, poor fool, had made her bed and must lie upon it—for Uncle Robert's language was no less coarse than his intelligence. Still, let her come to want, let the scoundrel of a husband decamp, take his worthless presence to any other country he chose, and keep there, and the door of Uncle Robert's house would never be closed against his sister's child. And as the old man had not another near relation upon the face of the earth, Mrs. Rose knew pretty well that, O'Shea's disappearance once compassed, not only would the door of Uncle Robert's house, but a fair chance for a place in Uncle Robert's will, stand open to her.

A last card, I repeat, was to be played by Mrs. O'Shea. She played it well—with that instinctive knowledge of male human nature that you will find in the very shallowest feminine souls. Uncle Robert was a democrat to the back bone; tittle-tattle from the bloated upper ten must consequently be distasteful to him, were it but as proof of his own radical theories; and Rose could prattle to him by the hour together about her lady's card debts, and his grace's peccadilloes, and her poor dear O'Shea's intimate connection with the aristocracy. Uncle Robert was as proud of his purse as any self-made man in England. Nothing swelled him with the righteous sense of solvency like the sight of another's pauperism; still for his niece to have appeared discreditably dressed before the servants, a poor relation in all the galling indecency of a merino gown or mended gloves, would have exasperated the old man beyond measure. So Rose took excellent care to do her pauperism genteelly. In the most scrupulously neat silk dress—"the last of all my pretty things, Uncle Robert. Oh, if you knew—can we poor women help being foolish?—if you knew how dreadful it is to one to give up the refinements of life!"—in the most becoming attire, I say, that women could wear, this simple creature would pay her humble, tearful conciliatory visits to the Brompton villa, and seldom return without a crisp piece of paper, never entirely empty-handed, to the bosom of her family.

At last, one fine spring morning, came an overture of direct reconciliation couched in the plainest possible language, from Uncle Robert's own lips. Let Major O'Shea betake himself to America, one of the colonies anywhere out of England that he chose, solemnly swearing to keep away during the space of two years at least, and Uncle Robert not only promised to receive back his niece to preside over his house and sit at the head of his table, but to pay O'Shea the sum of three hundred pounds before his departure. Enough, surely, to last, if the man had a man's heart within his breast, until such time as he could gain a decent independence for himself by work.

Cornelius was absent from home, that is to say, from their dingy lodgings, for the time being, when this occurred; had been absent more than a fortnight, Heaven knows on what mission—I believe he called it the Doncaster Spring Meeting to his wife and daughter. He returned late that same evening, rather more hiccoughing of speech than usual, and with just sixpence short for the payment of his cab-hire in his pocket.

Rosie broke the news of her uncle's proffered generosity as O'Shea sat drinking his hot gin-and-water after supper, Belinda mending a very torn stocking with very long stitches at his side.

"Of course it is impossible," sighed Mrs. O'Shea, with tears in her meek eyes. "I feel it a duty to mention the proposal, if only to show the Christian spirit of my relations; but of course such a separation would be impossible."

"Impossible, Rose!" sighed O'Shea, his sodden face brightening. Of so fine and discursive a nature was the creature's hopefulness, that the bare mention of three hundred pounds and of being rid of his domesticities sufficed to inspire him with the visions of a millionaire. "Who talks of impossible? Am I the man, d'ye think—is Cornelius O'Shea the man to let his own paltry feelings stand between his family and prosperity?"

And in less time than it takes me to write, husband and wife had made up their minds heroically to the sacrifice. The details were not difficult to agree upon. Cornelius would seek his fortune in America, "the best country on earth for a man of resolution and ability." Poor, semi-widowed Rose took refuge at Brompton. Belinda, with the hundred and twenty pounds a year derived from her mother's fortune, might be considered independent. She should be sent to some moderately expensive boarding-school for the next two years, the term of her father's banishment, and Uncle Robert had considerately said that she might look upon his house as her home during the midsummer and Christmas holidays.

Belinda independent, Cornelius put upon his legs and offered his freedom, and Rose restored to a pew in church, fine clothes, and livery servants. What a touch of the magician's wand was this!

Next day was Sunday. Major O'Shea dyed his whiskers, which he had suffered to grow gray under the cold shade of poverty, brushed up his coat, put on a pair of lavender gloves, and lounged away the afternoon in the park, his hat as rakishly set on his head, his whole air jaunty as in the palmiest days of his youth. Madame after duly attending morning service—for was it not her first duty, said Rosie, her eyes swimming, to offer thanksgiving for her own and her dear O'Shea's good fortune?—madame, after attending morning service, betook herself to Brompton, and employed the remainder of the day in talking over events and planning a thousand agreeable domestic comforts for herself with Uncle Robert. Belinda, poor little fool, cried herself white and sick with passionate grief. She did not want respectability, or boarding schools, or a home in the holidays. She wanted all she loved on earth, her worthless old father, and was to lose him.

"We really have very different ways of showing our affection," said Mrs. O'Shea, when she returned well dressed, blooming, full of hope in the future, and found the child crouched down, dinnerless, dirty, her face disfigured and swollen with tears, beside a fireless hearth. "I suppose I shall suffer, more than anyone else by your papa's absence, but I do what is right. I do not embitter the thorny path of duty still more to his feet"—Rosie had always a fine, florid style of metaphor of her own when she tried to talk grand—"by useless tears and lamentations."

From that night until the final separation, scarcely more than a week, Belinda kept her feelings better under control. She worked a little purse in secret, upon which you may be sure many a salt tear fell, put in it all her slender hoard of pocket money, and pushed it into her father's not unwilling hand on the day of his departure—instinct telling her what kind of gift would to Cornelius be the welcome token of filial love. When the supreme moment of parting had arrived, she clung to him, shivering, tearless, dumb; while Rosie, whose only feeling was one of cheerful relief, cried almost to the verge of unbecomingness, and uttered every imaginable wifely platitude about the heart-rending cruelty of the situation, and the dreadful, dreadful pain that her devotion to duty and to her husband's interests was costing her.

Then came the removal to Brompton; fine rosewood and mahogany, excellent dinners, city friends, Uncle Robert's vulgar, purse-proud talk—all, it would seem, very tasteful to Mrs. O'Shea. And then, less than a twelve month after Belinda felt the last kiss of her father's lips, came a New York paper, directed in a strange hand, to Uncle Robert, and containing the bald announcement of Cornelius O'Shea's death. The poor, little girl, away at a second-class Brighton boarding-school, was summoned home in haste; the blinds of the Brompton villa were drawn decently close for four days, and partially lowered on the fifth, or imaginary funeral day; Rosie, for the second time in her life, veiled her sorrow under the most bewitching weeds. Uncle Robert talked about the mysterious ways of Providence, kept the corners of his mouth well down before the servants, and ere a week was over had made a new will leaving every shilling he possessed at the unconditional disposal of his dear niece, Rose.

O'Shea, in short, in dying had committed by far the best action of his half century of life, and everybody in his house knew it. Everybody but Belinda! Nature has compensation for us all—gives a neglected little daughter to love, to mourn, even a Cornelius O'Shea. Fiercer than ever grew Belinda's rebellion now against Uncle Robert's smart furniture, dinners, butler, all of them bought, she would say, her dark eyes flashing fire through her tears, bought with papa's life. If they had not driven papa away from England he had not died, nor she been desolate! Let them send her away—anywhere on the face of the earth that was not Brompton. Yes, she would go to school abroad—to Boulogne, Berlin, as they chose. Only—pathetic stipulation for her age—let her remain away until she was old enough to see after herself in life, unaided, and let her have no holidays. And a charmingly opportune chance of gratifying the girl's perverse fancies was not long in presenting itself. Sedulously reading through the educational columns of the Times, Rose one morning, with a lighting of the step-maternal bosom, came upon the following:

RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR PARENTS AND GUARDIANS:

"A lady of literary attainments, socially unencumbered, and entertaining advanced ideas as to the higher culture and destinies of her sex, offers her society and influence to any young girl of good birth, for whom improvement by continental travel may be desired. Terms moderate, and paid invariably in advance. References exchanged."

By the next post, Mrs. O'Shea and the lady holding advanced ideas were in communication. They interviewed each other; they exchanged opinions on the destiny of the sex; they exchanged references. After some battling, the commercial part of the transaction was brought to a satisfactory close, and Belinda, sullenly submissive to anything that divided her from Rose, Brompton, and uncle Robert, made her next great step in life.

The name of her new preceptress (of whom more hereafter) was Burke, Miss Lydia Burke—a name not unknown to fame either in the speech-making or book-making world. And under, or often without this lady's care, Belinda's "culture" has been progressing up to the present time; no material change occurring meanwhile at Brompton save Uncle Robert's death, which took place about three months before the date at which this little history opens. Some smattering of languages the girl, drifting hither and thither over Europe, has picked up; some music and dancing of a vagrant kind; a good deal of premature acquaintance with human nature; life opened, I fear, at somewhat tattered pages of her class-book; neglect, not invariably the worst educator, for her master.

A socially unencumbered lady, bent on correcting the mistakes made by her sex during the past six thousand years, and with the higher destinies of the future of her soul, could scarcely have time to waste on the one unimportant unit immediately beneath her eyes. In few minds are broadness of vision and capacity for small details co-existent. The mind of Miss Lydia Burke was of the visionary or far-embracing order—an order quite beyond the wretched details of fawn dresses and darning needles. Nowton forgot his dinner hour; could a Miss Lydia Burke be expected to notice the holes?

But this brings me back exactly to the point at which a certain pride in my poor little heroine forced me into retrospection—the holes in Belinda's stockings.

CHAPTER II.

AMBROSIAL CASH.

It is but too obvious that they are a haphazard, unlawful pair. Belinda darns not, neither does she sew. Her clothes go uncounted to the washer-woman, and return or do not return as they list; by natural processes of selection, such as are of tougher fibre than their fellows survive and come together in the end, irrespective of any primitive differences in color or design. Of these stockings that she now wears, one being grey, the other brown, both ragged, it would indeed be hard to conjecture the original stock; nor is their incongruous effect lessened by a well-worn pair of the sandals of the country, espargottes, in Basque parlance, linen slippers, roughly embroidered in scarlet, and bound high above the instep by worsted sandals. Her frock is of rusty black, texture indescribable; her hat of unbleached coarse straw, so battered out of shape that one must see it on a human head to recognize it as a hat at all. And she wears her hair in plaits, tight, hideous plaits, tied together at the ends, according to the fashion of the Spanish peasants, by a piece of frayed-out, once green ribbon.

Spain or Clapham? Raising herself lazily from the sward—such mixtures of dust and lifeless stock as here in the south we dignify by the name of sward—Belinda, after several more yawns, draws forth from her ragged pocket a letter, written on sea-green English note-paper, that must certainly have cost the slender double postage, and in a characterless little boarding-school ladies' hand:

"My dearest Belinda."

"Dearest—for her to call me 'dearest!' when papa himself used to think 'my dear little girl' sufficient! But Rose must be a hypocrite, even in writing."

"You will be surprised, and I hope pleased, to hear that I am coming all the way to the south of France to see you. I am sure, when I look at St. Jean de Luz on the map, it quite takes my breath away. I have always had a horror of the Bay of Biscay, and can never sleep in the train as most people do, and then I am such a coward about strange beds! But of course Spencer will be with me, and as there have been several cases of smallpox close at hand, and I am so frightened about it, Dr. Pickney says the wisest thing I can do is to pack up my boxes and run. I have been vaccinated three times, and although the doctors say not, I think it always took a little. I do hope there is no smallpox about in the south. If you have not been vaccinated already, you might get it done as a precaution before I arrive. I trust, dear, you will find me looking pretty well. I am in mourning still, but of course slight, for poor Uncle Robert has been dead three months; indeed, the milliners scold me for wearing it any longer. But I consult feeling, not fashion, in such things, and what can be more becoming than pale lavender silk richly trimmed or a white Sultana polonaise edged with black velvet and a deep fringe! I wish I knew whether hats or bonnets were best style in foreign watering-places. I have written to 'The Queen' to ask, but I am afraid I shall not get the answer before I start. Nothing is seen in London but those large flat crowns, which never suited me; and the Dolly Vardens have got so dreadfully common; Really, as I often say to Spencer, dress is one long trial. Were it not for those I love, I would—but this is a subject on which I dare not trust myself to speak. My dearest Belinda, I shall have news to tell you when we meet, of the most deeply interesting nature, affecting the future of us both. I am glad you have made acquaintance with Augustus Jones. He is a prime favorite of mine—indeed, he will make me correspond with him—young men are so foolish—and, as I tell them all, an old woman like me! What you say about his 'vulgarity' is something ridiculous. How can it matter whether his father sold patent stoves or not? Has a young man money? How was his money made? is the question the world asks. I only hope he will be still at St. Jean de Luz when I arrive, which may be almost as soon as this letter. Present my compliments to our excellent friend, Miss Burke, and believe me your own affectionate mamma,

"Rose.

"P. S.—Augustus Jones has a villa at Clapham, elegantly furnished—everything in the first style! I have often dined there in his father's time with poor dear Uncle Robert. Augustus will be an excellent parti, I can assure you, Belinda, for any girl who may be fortunate enough to win him."

(To be Continued).

There is only one way to eat corn off a cob, and that is to take the ear in your hand. Holding the ear down with your foot and gnawing the corn off is tabooed in mannerly society.

When Jim was Dead.

When Jim was dead,
"Hit served him right," the nabors sed,
An' 'bused him for the life he'd led,
An' him a-lying thar at rest
With not a ro-e upon his breast!
An' menny cruel words they sed
When Jim was dead.

"Jes' killed hisself," "Too mean ter live,"
They didn't have one word ter give
Of comfort as they hovered near
An' gazed on Jim a-lying there!
"Thar ain't no use er talk," they sed.
"He's better dead!"

But suddenly the room growed still,
While God's white sunshine seemed ter fill
The dark place with a gleam of life,
An' o'er the dead she bent—Jim's wife!
An' with her lips c ose—close to his,
As tho' he knew an' felt the kiss,
She sobbed—a touchin' sight ter see—
"Ah! Jim was always good ter me!"

I tell you when that cum to light
It kinder set the dead man right;
An' round the weepin' woman they
Throwed kindly arms of love that day,
And mingled with their own they shed
The tenderest tears—when Jim was dead.

—F. L. Stanton.

Temperance Notes.

A committee of the French Senate reported recently that the drinking of spirits in France has assumed the proportions of "a social danger."

Statistics show 10,000 people are killed by whiskey where one is killed by a mad dog. What of it? Shoot the dog and license the sale of whiskey.—Religious Telescope.

Mrs. Hutchinson, a competent and most indefatigable worker in the W. C. T. Union of this city, expects to be present at most of the sessions of the National Woman's Christian Union, to be held in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, within a few days.

Colonel Coran, of the Bengal Artillery, says: "Abstinence agrees with Europeans in India. At one station, when drink was sold, I lost my men in scores. When drink was stopped, I didn't within the same time lose a single man."

Rev. David Davies, of the Regent's Park Chapel, in the annual sermon of the League at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, said: "Even in the celebrating of the Lord's Supper some £50 000 was spent every year by the churches; so that the reclaimed drunkard found at the Lord's table just the very same temptation that he used to find in the taproom! Could Satanic irony reach such a pitch as that? He thought it was worth the while of the Church of Christ to abstain from taking wines which were intoxicating at the Lord's Supper, so that there might be no temptation associated with the recollection of a finite love."

It is a notable fact that the fashionable Clyde watering places of Kilcreggan and Cove are practically placed under the Maine law. There is not a single licensed public house from one point to the other of this favored shore. The old natives will tell you of the time within living memory when the peninsula had six licensed houses one at "the Clachan," the cluster of quaint cottages round the corner at Rosneath, one at Cove, one at Kilcreggan, another at Colport, and still another at Muirahane, with a sixth at Rosneath ferry; and if all stories are true, these did not lack patrons. The changed condition of affairs is indicated by the remarkable fact that now there is only one licensed house on the entire peninsula, that being the inn at the Rosneath ferry. The Duke of Argyll from the outset made an express stipulation in all the feus on the Kilcreggan shore that none of them should be used for the erection of a public house, and this provision has been faithfully adhered to with the happiest results.

You would perhaps be interested to hear an item which is fresh. It comes from the testimony of the Church Missionary Intelligencer. In that deeply interesting periodical we have this statement made, that in 250 miles of coast line, that is in the tropical region of Africa, on the west coast, no less than twenty ships a year arrive there with a thousand tons of intoxicating drinks on each of them. Think of it—twenty thousand tons of intoxicating drinks every year poured in on that limited tract of country. One of the missionaries connected with the Church Missionary Society says: "If this thing is continued it is only a question of a few years for me and my people." There was a vessel connected with a South African company which took 25,000 cases of gin, and these were delivered to two factories alone, and the poor blacks part with valuable ivory, splendid skins, items of value of all kinds—what for, do you think? A case of Hollands! Now mark that. The cost of manufacture from the time he gets it is 2s. 9d. It contains twelve ordinary brandy size bottles, and it is mainly made up of oil of vitriol and other co mpounds that are a disgrace to be sold at all. It should be a crime for men to vend such things for their fellow-men to drink. But they do this, and get a hundred times, and often 200 or 300 times, the value of that with which they part. Think of dozens of these poor men, with little brain or will power, tearing open these cases, and draining the contents of the bottles until their brains are on fire, until they dance, laugh, roll over and foam at the mouth, and ultimately present such a hideous spectacle that if ever one had a picture of pandemonium you have it there. And that is being carried on to-day by the intelligent nation of which we form a part. I hope God will not grant this people prosperity again until we deal practically with this question. We have it on Scriptural authority that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap." That applies to a nation as well as to the individual, and we have been sending out for years a whole brood of unclean birds, and many of them are finding their way home to roost.—Henry Varley.

A Fine Compliment.

Husband Prof. Widehead paid you a very fine compliment after dinner last night, my dear.

Wife—Oh, did he? What did he say?

Husband—He said that you weren't handsome, but you were one of the most intelligent women he ever met.

Wife—Prof.—What's his name has received his last invitation from me.

"Witness, did you ever see the prisoner at the bar?" "Oh, yes; that's where I got acquainted with him."

—"Name the sacraments," said a local Sunday school teacher to a member of her infant class. "Baptism, confirmation and vaccination," was the prompt reply.

—A rolling-pin gathers on dough.

KILLED LIKE A PIG.

Further Particulars of the Juvenile Crime in Cape Breton.

The horrible story recently telegraphed from Cape Breton is confirmed by the North Sydney Herald which tells the following story: A dreadful homicide occurred at Cow Bay on Wednesday last. It appears from what we can learn that several young boys had been watching the killing of a pig. In some way this aroused their curiosity, and, as such sights sometimes do, it made a very strong impression upon the minds of the children. During the day they attempted to imitate the killing of the pig and bound one of the young fellows hand and foot and held him on the ground. An old rusty knife being the only instrument at hand it was tried with bad effects upon his throat, and an ugly wound made, from which the blood flowed freely. It is said they also inflicted a bad wound in his abdomen. The little fellow, who made as much resistance as he could, was unable to avoid being cut. He managed to escape, however, and was taken home, when he took sick and expired next day. His death was caused principally by blood poisoning, introduced by the rusty knife, making a gash in his throat. This is an extraordinary and particularly sad tragedy. The young people do not seem to realize the terrible nature of their deed.

Latest Scotch News.

On the 13th ult. the non-commissioned officers of Edinburgh garrison celebrated the sixth anniversary of the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, in which the Cameron Highlanders took part.

On the 17th ult., an elderly man named James Mackie, who resided at Roseburn Place, Murrayfield, Edinburgh, met his death in the Glen at Roslin. He had been walking with his wife along he bank of the river Esk and fell over the rock into the stream in the attempt to look over. He was picked up dead.

When the Queen visited Glasgow Cathedral in 1849 all the ministers of the city were accommodated with seats at the west door, where she was received by Principal Macfarlane. There are only six of these ministers now alive — Drs. Somerville, Smith, of Cathcart, Ramage, and Fergus Ferguson, and Messrs. David Russell and Robt. Bremner.

At a meeting of a sub-committee of Edinburgh Town Council held on the 18th ult., it was agreed to recommend that designs should be asked for the proposed statues to Wallace and Bruce, but that no premiums should be offered. The cost of the statues is to be about £3,000, and it is proposed to erect them somewhere on the south side of Princes street.

A recent visitor to the last resting place of Rob Roy writes: "I have just visited the old kirkyard at Balquhidder. I had on this and on a previous occasion to send to the village to get a person to point out the grave of Rob Roy and his wife Helen. English friends were with me on both occasions, and their remarks on the neglected condition of these graves brought the blush to my face. It is almost impossible to decipher the few words on one of the stones which would indicate to the tourist that he stood near such an interesting spot." Surely the Glasgow folk might do something to improve this condition of the Macgregor's grave.

Jottings of a Day.

Wareham, Mass., has a monument to the memory of a cat that lived to the good old age of 20 years and 2 months. It was not erected by public subscription.

What's a poor burglar going to do for a living if the women of the land get in the habit of going to bed with a loaded revolver within reach? Two or three cases have recently come to light where burglars have been shot and even captured by women.

Wilson Waddington, of Savin Rock, Conn., is said to be the largest landowner in the United States. He is believed to own over 2,000,000 acres of grazing land in New Mexico and elsewhere, and he has also made large investments in real estate in Western cities.

A new feature of picnics and lawn parties has broken out in England, suggested by the Prince of Wales. It consists of wheelbarrow races, only the conditions are that each gentleman shall take a lady in his wheelbarrow, and the two who come in first get a prize. This novelty may be expected to strike this country about next season.

Gen. William T. Sherman seems to have not the slightest fear of death, and talks of it sometimes in an off-hand way that is extremely weird. Not long after Sheridan's funeral Sherman was speaking to a friend of the many prominent officers of the late war who had died. "I shall have to hurry up," remarked Sherman, "and die pretty soon, or there will be nobody but militia to bury me."

What Ailed Hannah.

Fat Widow—Doctor, I want you to answer my questions candidly.

Doctor—Certainly, my dear madame.

Well, am I in love, or have I only got fatty degeneration of the heart?

To be Developed Later.

"So your old uncle is dead, Charley?"

"Yes, died yesterday."

"He was a very eccentric old fellow. Do you think he was altogether right in his head?"

"Well—er—I couldn't say, you know, until the will is read."

Cheap as Dirt.

"You charge a very high price for pulling teeth," said a real estate dealer to a dentist.

"Oh, I don't know about that," was the confident reply, "we only charge a dollar an acher."

During a recent visit of the Prince of Wales to Hungary he was much impressed with the magnificent mustaches worn by the coachmen of that country, and engaged one of the most distinguished looking to accompany him back to England. On arriving at Marlborough House the imported Jehu saw that all the other coachmen wore clean shaved faces, so he went to a barber and joined the beardless brigade. That evening he returned to Hungary upon request of the Prince.

One of the great needs of this country seems to be young women type-writers who won't get married.

ORANGES VERY SCARCE.

None of the Fruit Brought from Florida—High Prices Rule.

"Unless the yellow fever plague in the South shall be speedily subdued there will be very few Florida oranges in the market this winter," said a produce merchant today. "Although the orange trees in the great groves along the St. John and Indian Rivers are now bending to the ground under the weight of the ripening fruit, the fever has had such a terrifying effect on the people that enough help cannot be secured to gather the enormous crop, and oranges are rotting on the ground. As a matter of fact the fruit could not be shipped North now, even if the crop were properly gathered, for the quarantine restrictions are so rigid. Oranges were never so dear as they are now. Nearly all there are in the market are brought from Bermuda, and these are not very good in quality. They are selling for $5 a box and finding plenty of buyers, but when the Florida supply is in good condition the Bermuda variety can be had for $2 per box. No Florida oranges will be received so long as the Fruit Exchange at Jacksonville is closed, and that will not be open until the fever shall have been stamped out."

A Little of Everything.

Cremation is still illegal in France.

Boston was 258 years old on Monday.

The herring-sardine packers of Maine will cure and pack 550,000,000 herring this year.

The wife of a well-known Vienna banker lately displayed forty toilettes in twenty-one days in Carlsbad.

Mark Twain says that he has no difficulty in sustaining the role of M.A., but the part of PA often gives him a good deal of trouble.

Thieving is carried on in Chicago in full dress. The men who have been caught lately are stylishly dressed and wear silk hats of the latest pattern. But they are discovered as quickly as in any other disguise.

A new disease has broken out among the grapevines of the Santa Ana and San Gabriel valleys of California. It is termed the sapsour, and the cause of it no one knows. The vines begin to wither and in a short time die.

The following verse from the Iroquois Bible shows what a jaw-breaking language that dialect is: "Aontonseeke taousaiakos8athene nasatapon oni kari8anersaak serapon ikonnhetie nok eh nonk8ati aonsasonk8asarine tisnonkati ne Skennen."

A quarrel with a funny cause took place recently in water-submerged Augusta, Ga. A gentleman paid a negro $1 to carry him on his shoulders to the hotel, and a serious misunderstanding arose about the position the gentleman should occupy on his porter's shoulders.

A Bay City (Mich.) horse doctor stood talking to a friend the other day. The end of a bottle peeped out of the former's pocket. Along came a fellow looking for a drink. He spied the bottle and dexterously removed it from its hiding place. He took a big swallow and stopped with a jerk. It contained horse medicine made up of ammonia and other unpalatable liquids.

It is said that Alexander Dumas lives strictly by measure and weight. He rises at 6.30 in summer and 7 in winter. His first breakfast invariably consists of a glass of milk. The second, which he takes at noon, is a very plain meal. Dinner occurs exactly at 7 o'clock, and by 10 he is in bed. He walks three miles every day, and never works after 4 in the afternoon, and he is a strong and thoroughly healthy man.

An Austrian Pompeii has just been unearthed near Zara. Zara is the capital of the Austrian Province of Dalmatia. Thousands of coins of the Diocletian period and of other early times, rare specimens of Grecian and Roman sculpture and Byzantine architecture were discovered along the Dalmatian shores. Amphitheatres, temples, catacombs and other evidences of a busy and highly civilized community were unearthed.

An officer of a French regiment condemned several soldiers for breaches of discipline to run for three hours, carrying their rifles and full equipments. A corporal named Vallad, at the end of two hours, fell down exhausted. The sergeant wished to let him rest, but the superior officer insisted that he be made to get up and finish his task, saying that he should run until he dropped dead. The corporal got up and shot himself dead with his rifle.

A Very Old Fashion Revived.

The idea of "thumb rings," to which I alluded some little time ago, has become an established fact, and jewellers are showing broad bands of dull gold with a large jewel sunk deeply into them, designed to encircle that clumsy member, the thumb. The facts have been traced that Queen Elizabeth decorated her royal thumb with a ring, and the fashion revived during the reign of George II. Eccentricity is the keynote to jewelled ornaments, and the dainty woman who cannot bring her nerves into sufficient subjection to permit her wearing live, spider-like bugs as ornaments consoles herself with very realistic imitations. September Table Talk.

A Mixed Up Minister.

In an old Scottish Parish Church the minister was very deaf. One Sunday the precentor had to give out the intimations in the following order: New hymn books, baptisms, and other minor matters. But the precentor, commenced with the baptism first, saying: "There will be a public baptism here next Sunday, and parents will give in their names during the week." The minister, thinking he was intimating about the hymn books, said: "And parents who have not got them will kindly come to the vestry after this service. Small ones, 1d.; large ones, 2d.; red backed ones, 3d."

—The use of unusual words and foreign phrases is no more a proof of culture than the wearing of a flannel shirt is that a man does his own washing. Both are mere surface indications of what is possible.

"Have you paid any attention to the controversy about marriage as a failure."

"Yes, considerable. But marriage is a success."

"What makes you think so?"

"My wife's late uncle left her $10,000.

CURRENT TOPICS.

A WESTERN paper, in deprecating the statement that most criminals are illiterate, says that in Massachusetts nearly all forgeries are committed by well-educated men and women. How could an unlettered man commit a forgery?

MITRE square, in which the last of the murders of the Whitechapel butcher was committed, is but a few blocks distant from the Bank of England. It is in the very heart of the business quarter. The greatest wealth and the greatest poverty thus exist side by side in the British metropolis.

A WOMAN was bathing in Cork harbor when the tide carried her out beyond her depth. She was in great danger of drowning when Miss Murphy, daughter of Ald. Murphy, of Cork, sprang in and succeeded in dragging her on to a rock in the harbor. There the two were compelled to stay until some men on the cliffs saw them, and, swimming out, brought them safely to shore.

A NOVEL means of suicide has just been tried in Chicago. Mrs. C. J. Delon, a widow, is the inventor of the process. The other evening she committed suicide by running a rubber tube from an open gas jet to a sort of reservoir made by her bed clothing. When the reservoir was full of gas Mrs. Delon put her head under the bed clothes and was immediately overcome by the gas. She had been in poor health for some time.

THE "beauty" show at Spa, Belgium, appears not to have been a brilliant success. After a postponement there were only twenty competitors. Several girls, including one from Poland, were prevented from attending by their parents at the last moment. The prize of ten thousand francs, it is thought, will be secured by a Guadaloupe Creole named Smucaret. A Parisian and a Swede have also a fair chance.

IT is not generally known that Miss Harriet Fraser, the only survivor of the late Simon Fraser, the discoverer of British Columbia, is still living at St. Andrews, in Stormont County. Fraser began his memorable explorations in 1792, and died at St. Andrews in 1862. He was offered a knighthood for his services, but was forced to decline through stress of circumstances, and left his family quite poor. Sir John has been applied to for help to the last bearer of the honored name.

AMONGST the many startling disclosures with which scientific investigation has made us familiar, one of the most extravagant is the discovery according to which the nose is said to be gradually losing its power to discharge its traditional function in the case of the civilized people. When the sense of smell vanishes altogether—as, it is affirmed, will infallibly be the case one day—the organ itself is bound to follow its example sooner or later. It is, no doubt, a fact that the olfactory sense is much keener in the savage than in the civilized man, and it is reasonable to conclude that the more we progress in civilization the duller the sense will grow, and as nature never preserves useless organs, when the nose loses its power of smelling, the nose "must go."

Two young women coming towards Memphis, Tenn., from a town in Alabama were put off the train the other night at a small station outside the city on suspicion of being refugees from the plague-stricken district. Their trunks were pitched off after them. It was almost dark, and rain was falling heavily. They sought shelter in the only house near at hand, but were refused admittance. There was a number of white people and negroes in the place, but only one would approach them. He got them two chairs, and they sat out in the rain until they could induce a negro to take them into Memphis. They had to pay him five dollars. On the way in they were met by some men who threatened to arrest the negro if he did not take the women back. Their pleadings finally prevailed, and they were permitted to enter the city. This is only an instance of the discomfort and peril that spring from the dread of letting the yellow fever get within the limits of the southern towns.

THE London Daily Telegraph has wound up its long series of columns and columns of letters written in reply to the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" The paper has received 27,000 letters on the subject, and while most of them were bosh, the Telegraph's conclusions drawn from the lot probably voices fairly well the English idea. It says: "The consensus of letters is overwhelmingly strong against early marriages. Our law ought, we think, to forbid marriage to young men under 21 and to young women under 19. Among the working classes especially this would produce, we believe, an excellent effect. Then, also, it is clear to our mind that the law of divorce must be enlarged to permit dissolution of marriage for desertion, for lunacy, for confirmed inebriety, for conviction of disgraceful crimes, as likewise for established incompatibility of temper and temperament, such as a just and prudent judge would admit to be adequate. That the marriage service as it stands calls also for alteration has been abundantly demonstrated by these letters, and the sooner His Grace the Primate finishes with the Athanasian creed and turns his attention to passages in that service which shock young minds and disconcert older ones the better."

A Boston woman made the tour of Europe and came home and never even mentioned it to her most intimate friend. Dumb? Ah! You've struck it.

One of the last pension bills vetoed was that of an Indian woman, who claimed that her son and support was killed in the army. It was shown that he enlisted for bounty, deserted, died a natural death twenty years after, and that she had a husband.—Detroit Free Press

—It is easier to manage and marshal 100 men than to control one woman when her mind is set the other way.

It requires just double the power to propel a steamship twenty miles an hour that it does to drive the same vessel sixteen miles an hour.

—There is a policeman in Boston who has carried his club for fourteen years and has never struck anything but attitudes in all that time.

—Boys who think they know more than their fathers out to be encouraged to run away from home for a couple of weeks, in order to learn that pies do not grow on trees.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Monkey skin for muffs and trimmings will be more popular than ever.

The Empress of Austria, though a famous horsewoman, is rather nervous about horses she does not know.

A discussion of the Malthusian theory elicited the statement that clergymen, as a rule, have the largest families.

Ladies' maids can now be hired in New York by the evening or the hour. Some skilful dressers have a large number of clients.

Mrs. Humphrey Ward, author of "Robert Elsmere," is a slight woman with a colorless face, dark hair, large nose, and small but piercing black eyes.

The Duchess of Wellington is lame and has to use a crutch. She is considered beautiful and is very fond of birds, of which she has a large collection.

Guiletta Dionesi is a girl 10 years old. She plays the violin and interprets works of the greatest musicians in a way that arouses the wildest enthusiasm in Italy.

A bunch of flowers above the forehead is almost as much used to fasten bridal veils as the jewelled clasps so much affected in New York, and the fashion is really in much better taste.

Little Josef Hofmann says he is not much disappointed because he is not coming to America this year; "but," he adds, "I should like to see the pretty ladies again." The rogue!

The Virginia story-writer is still a celebrity; for as yet the killing frost has not fingered the quick-come flowers of her fame. Therefore the following description of the lady in question is of interest:

"Who," asks the Buffalo Express, "has heard of a woman cashier or clerk or private secretary embezzling her pockets full and skipping to Canada? It is about time that the superior honesty of the woman in business should be recognized and rewarded.

It seems now as if the reigning winter bonnet would match the lightest tint of the street frock or cloak, and would be trimmed with black velvet, with black strings. This style is very generally becoming, although rather sombre, and black "hulls" some of the new greens and some of the new reds completely.

The Chicago Tribune has been undertaking an inquiry on its on account as to the fate of divorced women, and states that 75 per cent. of these persons marry within a year. The inference is that re-marrying is the principal object for which divorces are generally sought and is an evil resulting from the too easy divorce laws.

According to the Boston Transcript, yellow is the color which seems to have revealed itself to the novelist of to-day, although some very pretty cream colored frocks are wandering through the pages of current fiction, and pretty Rose in "Robert Elsmere" has a multiplicity of frocks, each one exceedingly esthetic. After yellow will come green, probably, and then the red velvet and silk will return to the old familiar round.

Mrs. Amelie Rives-Chanler is a beautiful woman, and in that unique particular the stories floating about in regard to her are true. She has the kind of beauty that both men and women admire. A wealth of golden hair—the very shade that hair bleachers would give the world to copy—worn in a loose knot on the back of the neck and in fluffy pompadour curls in front; large brown eyes, the expressive kind, and, most unusual of all—that is, with blonde hair—the blackest and longest of lashes; eyebrows only a little darker than the hair, therefore Mrs. Chanler must always escape the accusation of dyeing hers; a fresh complexion which is enhanced instead of disfigured by the tiny mole on her right cheek, and teeth which even ivory cannot match. If smiles and a pleasant, cordial manner denote amiability, then Mrs. Chanler has that virtue, for in spite of having been deluged with interviews all day yesterday she submitted once more to a list of questions.

A Droll Appeal for a Holiday.

The following letter, says the Pioneer, has been received in a local office in India:—"Honoured Sir,—With every preponderance of due respects I humbly beg to state that by your honour's favour my wife begotten a girl five years ago, and when all hope vanished for a male child for the inheritance of my progenitor's names, I was got a son one year ago, and forasmuch it behoves all Hindus men to offer all male child to our deity for his future growth and prosper in after life when he gains his manhood. I beg your kind honour will allow me two months' leave to visit Jugernath's Shrine, which will cost very much moneys. Also by some opportuno I will make arrange for my daughter's matrimony, if not my caste brethern will not let me join in fellowship. For these latters expenditures 500 rupees will be required—namely, half to be given to bride's bridegroom, as is our customs. Now your honour if Congress promoters would manifestly do their duties trouble. No one making any arrange for poor to the country then why I give your honour men's hardships by which deleterious and abominable customs be abrogated as how can poor man pay such large sums for daughter's matrimony; moreover if he is not pay then he is made objectionable man and outcasted from all fellowship in caste. I therefore beg your kind honour will have consideration on my case and order Khazanchi to pay 25 rupees from my pay to B——D.——until my full some of 250 rupees I am borrow from him be discharged. For this kindness of act, I bless your honour and bless your honour's body will begotten 1 000 sons who will live to be Methusalehs and be vigorous, healthy and forcible as Goliath."

She Would Rule by Love.

Belva Lockwood, having visited the Capitol, at Washington, the other day, was plied with questions by several of her Congressional friends as to the course she would pursue if the fortunes of politics should place her in the Presidential chair. Finally, it is related, Mr. Morrow, of California, said: "But you couldn't be commander-in-chief of the armies. How would you arrange that?" Mrs Lockwood thereupon shook her finger archly at her questioner and replied sweetly: "I would dismiss the armies and rule by love."—Rochester Democrat.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, OCT. 18, 1888.

ON FALL SHOWS.

With the advent of fall shows it is a pertinent question to ask, what is their position at the present day? Are they deteriorating in excellence? Is the interest taken in them as keen as it was a few years ago? Do the large exhibitons tend to centralize the attention of the farmers upon them alone? To the first of these queries we would say: The position which the township fall show holds is that of a local competitive outlet for the enterprising farmer or manufacturer who aims to excel in his particular branch. It opens up a way whereby he can make the superiority of his wares known, locally, and commands for him the attention and emulation of his fellow workers. In this manner new varieties and a better class of grain and roots are introduced; a warmer degree of competition engendered, and the first-prize farmer has no difficulty in disposing of his merchandise at a considerably advanced figure over those who do not attempt to produce and show to the people a superior article. Query two. We do not think so. In some classes, such as implements and cattle, in this section at least, there may be a slight falling off. Yet taking everything into consideration, we do not note any diminution in the excellence of the general exhibits during the last twelve years; in fact there is a distinct improvment, most notable on fruit. Query three: We are loth to acknowledge that there does not appear to be quite the same interest taken that there was formerly. We do not maintain that this is caused by the attractions of large fairs, as some have held, but mainly to a sad spirit of jealous rivalry which is always the bane of any public or private undertaking where it shows itself; partly, and in fact largely to unjust or careless decisions on the part of judges and other small matters of neglect or partiality. These all tend to disgust exhibitors, as well as spectators. We hold that none but the most competent, consistent, and upright judges should be appointed for the purpose; and herein lies the great secret of success. In answering this query we have answered the fourth. The local show is a necessity, and should be fostered by our farmers. Its decadence would work an evil which, it will be hard to remedy, and if allowed to die, will injure the farmer more than he imagines.

The editor of the Dundalk Herald inflicts upon his readers a two-and-a half column editorial, dealing with a little private business venture which he had with a literary gentleman named Phillips. Mr. Phillips desired to write up the village of Dundalk in the same manner that Flesherton was written up in this paper last week, but Mr. Spurr did not see any material benefit to be derived from such an act, and eventually refused to have anything to do with Monsieur Phillips. In his long article the editor conveys the idea that this latter gentleman is a fraud of the deepest dye. Now we have nothing to say as to Mr. Phillips actions in Dundalk. All we can offer in rebuttal is this: Mr. Phillips came to us with the same offer that he made the Dundalk editor, and although we saw that it would not pay us financially, we thought it would be a good thing for the town and told him to go ahead. He treated us honorably and dealt in none of the underhanded scheming which Mr. Spurr accuses him of. And yet, for one reason simply, we are sorry that we had anything to do with Mr. Phillips, and that is this: We could have done better justice to the scheme ourselves; there was too much mechanical grinding out of sterotyped flattery in the articles, and they did not meet with our approval, nor cover properly the proposed ground of a descriptive portrayal of the business facilities of our favored village. This was the only fault we had to find with Mr. Phillips, and yet it is a very grave one—so grave that we would advise our brother publishers to discourage Mr. Phillips should he lay his scheme before them, as he is not really competent for the work. Neither is any stranger competent who drops into a town and attempts to write it up without any familiarity with the subject matter of which he has to deal.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

The shotguns were well tried on Monday, Oct. 1st, when a shooting match took place. Captains, James Lawrence and Wm. Stewart jr. led the battle. Captain Stewart was victorious. Marks as follows: Stewart 1.750, Lawrence 1.495. A grand supper was then partaken of at Burritt's hotel.

The trustees of the Methodist Church contemplate fencing the Church lot, building a shed and repairing the Church for convenience of the choir. We hope they will not be backward in pushing the work, as it is very necessary to have these things done.

Mr. Heman Hurlbert, who has been farming near Thornbury, is moving into the village.

Mr. T. Lewis of Toronto, also thinks the country village is better for his trade, and will move here shortly.

A number of the boys left here morning, Oct. 9th, for the winter months. We wish the boys "every success."

[We owe our esteemed correspondent an apology for the non-appearance of his letter last week. Something had to be sacrificed.—Ed Advance.]

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Dr. Kerr of this village has sold his practice to Dr. Scott. We are sorry to loose Dr. Kerr as he has been with us so long. Dr. Scott seems to be well liked wherever he has been.

Mr. and Mrs. Preston returned from their visit to their old home in Newboro' and vicinity.

W. Long returned the same week from his trip to Kingston. He is now very sick with intermittent fever, but we hope to soon see him around again.

Mr. James Sterling has been sick for some time. We hear he is slowly improving.

Mr Wm. Milne has sold his farm etc., and intends starting for Oregon very soon.

The Missionary service of the Methodist church was held on Sunday last. The Rev. Mr. Flint, of Ravenna, conducted the meeting. The meeting held on Tuesday evening was addressed by Mr. Flint, Mr. Roberts, of Meaford Road, and Mr. Leggott of Maxwell.

The services of the Methodist church are now held in the church near the parsonage. It having been decided to keep that one instead of the other.

Mr. C. M. Field of this village has opened up a tailor shop in Heathcote. We wish him every success there.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

On Wednesday, of last week, while Messrs. Warling and Walker were threshing with their steam thresher on the premises of Mr. Thomas Gilbert, the boiler exploded, badly frightening, but not seriously injuring any person. Mr. Warling was lacing the belt at the time, and received a slight blow with some of the flying debris. Portions of the boiler flew over the barn and other parts through it. Fire from the furnace flew all around, and set fire to the straw stack on the opposite side of barn from where the engine stood, but it was extinguished before getting any headway. The cause of the accident is unknown.

Hon. Jas. Patton, collector of Customs for the port of Toronto, died in his office of heart disease on Thursday evening last

A Handsome Present.

Subscribers to the Weekly Empire this year will receive a great sight more than value for their money. Each and every one will get a handsome bust of Canada's Premier, Sir John A. Mcdonald. It stands eleven inches high, and is an exceedingly faithful likeness of a man who has been one of the most remarkably successful politicians of our age. Aside from its political associations, it is a memento which should grace every Canadian home, irrespective of party. The Empire will please accept our thanks for a sample of the bust. Those who would care to examine the bust may do so at this office.

The Christian Test.

Sunday morning last Rev. J. W. Shilton read for his morning lesson Romans, the twelfth chapter. That is a chapter which may be studied to advantage by every professing Christain and those who make no such pretensions as well. We do not dare sit as judge upon our fellow men, but are constrained to believe that if the stature laid down by Paul in this chapter must be attained by every Christian, a large number of our old church members and officials are still in the Liliputian stage of development How many of them really obey that mandate, "Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath;" "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink!"

A Clever Capture.

News reached here on Monday, of a clever capture of a burglar at Holland Centre on Sunday morning. The facts appear as follows: A young man who was coming home very early on that morning observed a light in Price's store, and thinking that all was not right he quietly alarmed a number of the residents, when they surrounded the store and surprised the busy burglar in the act. He was handcuffed and taken to Owen Sound. Two of his pals, who were supposed to be watching outside, were engaged at the time in trying to burglarize another store in the vicinity and escaped. We have been unable to gather the name which the culprit gave, but he is a professional, and expressed great disgust at being collared in so small a hamlet, when he had always escaped in many large cities where he has plied his trade.

Markdale's Plum.

The respective committees of the township of Artemesia and village of Markdale, appointed to arrange financial matters between Artemesia and the newly incorporated village, met at Dr. Christoe's office, Flesherton, on Friday last. There were present on behalf of Artemesia the reeve, Dr. Christoe, and Mr. McArthur; the other member of committee not putting in an appearance. Mr. J. McFarland, reeve, and Wm. Brown, Esq., appeared for Markdale. The following settlement was arrived at, viz., Markdale to receive $128, being nearly four cents in the dollar of the total assets of the township, and is to receive at the same rate its proportion of non-resident taxes in Co. Treasures hands at time of its incorporation. It is also provided that in case the Township is entitled to any government grant at or before incorporation of Markdale, it is to receive its share at the same rate unless the amount be settled by government.

The Little Mill.

A mile and a half from Flesherton, in the romantic valley of the Boyne, stands "the little mill," a name which has been familiar in the surrounding country for many years. When first built by Mr. Plewes it was not the commodious building of to-day, hence its distinguishing title. It continued for some years to be the favorite resort of farmers with grain, as it had secured for itself an enviable name for honest tolls and excellent flour. Then it deteriorated to a certain extent until within the last year or so, when Mr. P. Loucks purchased it and proceeded at once to make it as popular as ever it was in the palmy days of years ago. Mr. Loucks is a first-class, conscientious miller, we believe, and the large business which he is working up denotes this fact clearly. Farmers come from many miles away, to prove the quality of flour turned out by "the little mill," and they always come again. We had the pleasure of examining thoroughly this ancient and historical mill one day last week, and Mr. Loucks, the gentlemanly proprietor, has our congratulations upon the successful business which he has worked up among the farming community. His advertisement will give you all the technical facts.

An extensive mail robbery was committed in Buffalo on Thursday night.

James F. Farley was found guilty of murder at Peterboro' Friday and was sentenced to be hanged on Nov. 8.

Over sixty people were killed by a collision on the Lehigh Valley railway on Wednesday night.

The greatly-feared smallpox epidemic is not likely to strike Toronto this year, as the patients in the hospital are rapidly recovering and no new cases have been reported Compulsory vaccination, however, is still continued.

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Came Astray.

Came to the premises of W. T. McKee, Lot 38 Con. 6, Artemesia, two steers, one black and the other red, 2 years old. The black one was found dead on the road near my premises. The red one is now at my place, and the owner may have same by proving property and paying expenses.

NOTICE.

Having disposed of my business to Mr. Geo. Blackburn, I desire to publicly express my thanks to the people of Flesherton and vicinity for their heartily support and patronage in the past, and would bespeak for them a continuation of the same to my successor.

STEPHEN SPIRIT.

Flesherton, Oct. 10, 1888

TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased the flour, feed and grocery business of Mr. Stephen Spirit, I would say that it will be my aim to cater to the public in a manner that will retain for the business the reputation which it has hitherto had for fair and satisfactory dealings with customers.

The public's servant.

GEO. BLACKBURN.

Flesherton, Oct. 16, 1888.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

GALOPS DIVISION.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for St. Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE 30TH DAY OF OCTOBER INSTANT, for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications, will be ready for examination at this office and at the Lock-Keepers house, Galops, on and after TUESDAY, THE 16TH DAY OF OCTOBER INSTANT, where forms of tender may be obtained by Contractors on personal application.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same, and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $6,000 MUST accompany the tender for the works.

The respective DEPOSITS RECEIPTS—cheques will not be excepted—must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted. The deposit receipts thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 11th October, 1888.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., Ont.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, J. G. Russel's

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M., J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.,

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

Head Office, 761 Yonge St., Toronto.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, Flesherton.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

Flesherton, Co. Grey.

DIVISION COURT CLERK COMMISSIONER, C.B.R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of Lands. Appointed for C.L.C. Co. and F.P.B.&S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any pary of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

FOR SALE.

Two very desirably located lots in the village of Flesherton. An excellent chance to secure a good site for a private residence.

Apply at once to GEO. KEEFER, Flesherton.

Or to J. GEO. KEEFER, Forest, Ont.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at the... P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot o

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

A Positive Cure. ✝ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8.

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation. Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✝ A Pleasant Cure.

HEATH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment.

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

And are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

The Effect of Alcohol on the System.

To the Editor of The Advance.

SIR,—At this advanced period of the nineteenth century, almost everyone has become thoroughly familiar with the different phases of the temperance question as presented by the vast army of ministers, temperance lecturers and such like who have been engaged in this laudable work for generations past. Yet, notwithstanding the fact, there is still much, that to a great number of your readers will prove quite new, and we hope interesting as well. It has been conceded on all sides, that intemperance is a great social evil. Men will tell you it is a social evil because it fills our jails and our prisons with its victims; because it converts the mild and loving parent into a veritable fiend; because it sows poverty and pauperism broadcast over the length and breadth of our land; Now sir, while these evils wrought through intemperance are momentous in the extreme, we consider them but trivial when compared with the great force it exerts in degenerating and obliterating those higher powers of intellect and physical organization for which the human family has been noted throughout the generations that are now lost in the decades of years.

We hold, that alcohol has a tendency and a very great one, to lessen the mental and physical powers of the individual addicted, to the use of it. And not only does it weaken the physical organization of the person immediately using it, but of the coming generations of which that individual may be progenitor. It has been thoroughly established by scientific men, that there is not an organ, or delicate nerve, or membrane, or fluid vessel, that it does not hurt by contact, or deteriorate if the contact be continued. The heart, the seat of man's vitality, is especially subjected to an excess of strain so long as any alcohol remains in the system. Alcohol contains no food whatever, it is never digested, neither indeed can be, so continues to injure and disturb the vital organs until elimination takes place However, this is but one of the least of the evils which is the outcome of the presence of alcohol in the system. The changes and deteriorations of structure and in the condition of the blood which takes place in consequence of the presence of alcohol are of a vastly more serious character. The whole surface of the body, and every organ, muscle, nerve, blood-vessel, and even the bones are enveloped in coverings of membrane. Besides serving as bandages to hold every structure together in perfect order, these membranes are the filters of the blood. Every portion of matter taken into the system has to pass through these filters or membranes, and by them are arranged throughout the system so as to build up and give strength and energy to the whole human structure. Nothing can pass through these membranes that is not in a state of aqueous solution, so the solid portions taken into the system as food, must be chemically changed in order to pass through these filters. Moreover these membranes in order to fulfil their proper functions, must be charged with water even to saturation. Alcohol absorbs water freely, and commences to do so as soon as taken into the system, and thus the natural supply of water is drawn from the membranes and the result is they become thickened and shrunken and are greatly reduced in functional powers. The pulse becomes weakened, there is a sense of weariness, and the victim feels the slightest exercise to be a laborious toil. Following up this course of reasoning, we see that alcohol must naturally cause a relaxation or paralysis of the minute blood-vessels. This causes the heart to beat more quickly, and as every beat of the heart tends to force the blood through the arteries, every vessel becomes dilated and is held in a state of unnatural relaxation and unnatural tension. If this tension is continued a change of diameters in these vessels takes place, and soon the whole web-work of blood, upon which the organs of the body are constructed, is deranged. As stimulation goes on, the heart becomes enlarged, its exquisite values are drawn out of their fine proportion, the orifices are dilated, the walls of the ventricles are thickened, and the result is the membranous envelops becomes cartilageous, and even bony. Nature tries still into assert herself, but try as she will, the wearied heart give up, and the man dies, a victim to alcoholic poisoning. True, death does not always overtake its victim in this way. Sometimes the brain, the liver, or the lungs may be first to yield to the ravages of intemperance, or indeed, as is frequently the case, apoplexy may end the unequal contest.

Now sir, let us look for a moment at the effect of alcohol upon the liver. It is a well established fact, that the liver has a remarkable capacity for holding active substances in its cellular parts. Alcohol finds its way there very promptly; and with the free drinker of ardent spirits, it is almost continually saturated with it This has the effect of retarding free secretion and the passage of fluids. The organ at first enlarges from the distension of its vessels and the thickening of its tissues Afterwards there follows a contraction of membrane, and a gradual shrinking of the whole mass of the organ in its cellular parts. When the liver has become a shrunken, hardened mass, dropsy in the lower extremities appears, and the case becomes absolutely hopeless. Passing from the physical to the mental we come to the higher and more appalling forms of disaster which spring from the drinking customs of society. It is clear, that a substance which attacks and injures every functional structure in the body, must seriously effect that delicate and wonderful piece of mechanism, the brain. The moment you disturb this organ, you disturb the mind. Hurt the hand, or the foot, or almost any other organ of the body, and yet thoughts may remain clear, and the intellect balanced: but touch the brain—congest its finer blood-vessels, thicken its delicate membranes and impare the quality of the nervous matter they inclose, and deterioration of brain-structure has commenced, which if not arrested may terminate in insanity. Now sir, seeing that alcohol helps time to produce the effects of age: and that it is the genius of degeneration; that is fraught with the most prevalent and direful results to the mental and physical structure, is it any wonder, that at this stage in our Worlds History we have a new political party looming up on the horizon, to the cry of "Prohibition, Total Prohibition." May they grow, and expand, and spread their influence until it shall shake our fair Dominion from circumference to centre: until this small twig shall become a mighty tree, spreading its branches from the Atlantic to the Pacific; from the Arctic to the International.

Yours,
MARIETTA.

HEARD'S
Carriage Works,
FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVean, 392 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1, six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Notice to Contractors.

TIME WORKS for the construction of the canal, above mentioned, advertised to be let on the 23rd of October next, are unavoidably postponed to the following dates.

Tenders will be received until

Wednesday, the 7th day of November next.

Plans and specifications will be ready for examination at this office and at Sault Ste. Marie on and after

Wednesday, the 24th day of October next.

By Order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 22nd September, 1888.

—NEW—

FALL GOODS!

—AT THE—

Central Store,

Priceville.

Having received our Fall Stock of Dry Goods we are in a position to offer the best value in the trade. Our stock is very complete, and having been selected with great care we have confidence in a quick discerning public that they can appreciate a well bought article.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Our new stock has arrived and comprises something good and serviceable for Men and Boys in fact

BOOTS THAT R BOOTS!

for every member of the household. Our

Teas, Sugars and General Groceries

still continue unapproachable. Our motto being good Goods and Low Prices. Come and see us.

Central Store, Priceville.

A. McCABE.

FLOUR, FLOUR!

STONE

FLOUR!

MR. P LOUCKS

Is prepared to do your Gristing on short notice and grinds on the old terms of every twelfth bushel. Seven cents per bag of two bushels for Chopping done every day. The Little Mill is big in the estimation of the public

Satisfaction is guaranteed.

P. LOUCKS, Proprietor

APPLES FOR SALE.

Choice apples for sale by
M. K. HAMMOND,
Postmaster Kimberley

WEEKLY EMPIRE

CANADA'S LEADING PAPER.

(Height, 11 inches.)

THE EMPIRE since its establishment has met with unprecedented success, and already stands in the proud position of Canada's Leading Journal: but, in order to place the WEEKLY EDITION in the hands of every Farmer in the Dominion this fall, the Publishers have had prepared a Handsome and Life-like Bust of

SIR JOHN MACDONALD.

To be given to every subscriber to the WEEKLY EMPIRE PAYING ONE YEAR IN ADVANCE.

ONLY $1 PER ANNUM.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

Address THE EMPIRE, Toronto

THE UNION PROPOSALS.

Senator Sherman on the Position of Canada and the States.

WHY HE FAVORS AMALGAMATION.

Closer Trade Relations Would Prevent Annexation.

OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE.

A New York Despatch says: The Sun's Washington special gives Senator Sherman's views on the Canadian question. The Senator said: Mr. Wiman has strong predilections for Commercial Union. I differ with him a good deal about it. I know of no case in history where Commercial Union has advanced political union. It was tried between this country and Canada twice and utterly failed. It was tried by the American colonies before the declaration of independence and utterly failed. It was not until they secured a political union under the name of a confederacy called the United States that they were able to make a stand against the parent country. Even that confederacy proved to be insufficient to secure Commercial Union, and so the United States formed a constitution, and then for the first time had a commercial and political union. Commercial Union followed political union. The Zollverein never promoted union in Germany. It promoted discord. There were treaties of all kinds between England and Scotland for centuries, but they never could unite those people until by accident the crowns of both countries fell upon one head. Therefore I think that these gentlemen, like my friend Butterworth, make a mistake when they look to Commercial Union as a road to political union. I think Commercial Union promotes points of difference, not points of union. From the scene of the fishery controversy clear to Vancouver's Island there are points of controversy that cannot be avoided by Commercial Union. The farmers of New York are in interest opposed to the farmers just opposite to them in Canada, although they are perfectly willing to unite with them. It is true, Commercial Union tends to increase trade, and yet political union is the only thing that can bring about absolute reciprocity of trade and communion of interests.

Do you think Canada is ready for political union now?

No, I suppose not. That can only come after long consideration. It cannot be hurried. In regard to negotiations I will say that no proposition has been made. The furthest anybody has ever proposed to go at this time is simply to express a willingness on the part of the United States to consider favorably political union. I make no secret or reserve as to my opinion of Canada. I have said for forty years that the political union of Canada and the United States was the inevitable destiny. When quite a young man I travelled in Canada, and last year I crossed the whole continent from Montreal to Vancouver, and know perhaps as much about it as any public man here.

Did you talk with politicians there?

I talked with members of Parliament. I dined with Sir Donald Smith at Montreal. I never saw Sir John Macdonald in Canada. I presume I have met him here, but I do not recall him. He is undoubtedly the great man of Canada. I think political union would be of mutual benefit to both countries, but of special benefit to Canada. The long boundary line of four thousand miles, half of which is an intangible line, and the other half water crossed daily by vessels of both countries, makes a union necessary or war inevitable. I do not say there is any feeling that would justify war, but the situation is much as it was between the Scotch and English. Wars grow out of trivial things. They do not grow out of emnities. They grow out of accidents. The line between Canada and the United States is incapable of fortification or defence, and custom houses are useless. As a matter of course any invading army would go around the forts. As for the custom houses. I know that a certain amount of smuggling is going on all the time. You cannot prevent it. I would not like to say what I know as having occurred. It is a matter of notoriety that they get liquors across the line. Now the trouble is less than ever, because our tariffs approximate. If you have exactly the same duty, the prices would be just the same, and nothing would be gained by smuggling. There are more than 1,000,000 native Canadians living in the United States, and citizens of the United States have more than $100,000,000 of capital invested in Canada. The similarity of the people in language, descent, habits and institutions make union easy and natural. The lines of commerce from Canada to this country are lines of longitude, not of latitude. The coal of Nova Scotia is shipped to New England and the anthracite of British Columbia is needed in California. Ohio sends her coal to Ontario cheaper than Nova Scotia or British Columbia can. The iron, copper, nickle, silver and lumber of Canada, north of the lakes, are more easily transported to populous regions like Chicago and Buffalo than in any other directions. They will not bear transportation to England, as the cost is too great. Canada wants our markets and the United States wants her natural resources. All the products of Manitoba and the Northwestern Territory naturally follow the valley into Minnesota and Dakota. It is a fight with nature to carry those products east or west over the mountains. The Maritime Provinces of Canada have their natural outlet and market in New England, which can furnish them capital and enterprise. The United States will find in these Provinces what the United States needs—a real nursery for seamen. The Provinces will fall heir to all the fisheries of New England without dispute or contention. I know of no Province or section but would gain largely by union, without losing any local advantage it now possesses.

What attitude would Great Britain pursue in case Canada wished to join us?

I think from a broad point of view England would get its compensating benefits. She has now practically renounced the allegiance of Canada. She recognizes the independence of Canada. It might be a great object for her to be relieved from the duty of defending and protecting the Dominion. Her commercial interests are not affected in the least, because Canada would use just as much of the British products as now, but they would be imported into our country. We are altogether, the largest consumers of British products. We are her best customer, and the union of Canada with the United States would only add to our trade with Great Britain. I am not in favor of union with Canada except by peaceful means, by making it the interest of both parties. I do not want to go to war to acquire territory. Territory acquired by war is worth nothing. What I would like to see is that the Provinces of Canada now organized in separate and distinct autonomies and having sufficient population should be represented in Congress, like our States. Then the jealousy and rivalry that now exist between Ontario and Quebec would disappear. We absorbed Louisiana with the French population. We took in Missouri with much of that population. We absorbed California with the Mexican-Spanish population, a more incongruous population than the French in Canada would be. The French-Canadians were friendly to this country at the time of the war of independence and they are now. Quebec would as readily adopt political union as Ontario.

Can there be any such thing as a partial acquisition of Canada, for instance of one of the Provinces?

I do not think Great Britain would consent to that. There would be greater difficulties to encounter by partial union than by a general union.

You are in opposition to the President on the Retaliatory Bill.

I am not in opposition to him. I differ with him. I think the retaliation measures probably will never be authorized and would never be put in force by the President if authorized, but the right of American fishermen to enter the ports of Nova Scotia and tranship their catch will always be insisted on, and every American of every party and every creed will think it is small and petty business to exclude the fishermen of America from entering Canadian ports, while we open our ports to all the nations of the world—black, white, barbarous and civilized—and Great Britain does the same. So long as that grievance exists it will lead to retaliation.

Is there a strong desire on the part of the United States for the peaceful acquisition of Canada and Mexico?

I do not think there is a very strong desire about it, but I think there is a willingness to agree to it. I think that expresses it. Senator Sherman further said: The public debt of Canada, $300 000,000, would not trouble us. Three years of the whiskey tax would pay it all.

JACK, THE RIPPER,

Threatening to Disembowel More Whitechapel Women.

A London cable says: Nothing that the newspapers can present to their readers receives any attention except the Whitechapel murders. Important political utterances which ordinarily would provoke general discussion are unread, and continental affairs of vital interest to England are thrust aside as of no consequence whatever. The police have adopted the theory that the letter and postal card signed "Jack, the Ripper," sent to the Central News a week ago Thursday, emanated from the actual murderer. Fac similes of the letter and card are posted in every police station and upon every dead wall, accompanied by a paragraph begging any person recognizing the writing to communicate with Gen. Sir Charles Warren, Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan police. The Central News received another communication from "Jack, the Ripper," Saturday afternoon, announcing his intention to commit more murders that night, and upon the strength of this the police have ordered every man on duty and are assisted by hundreds of amateur detectives. The reign of terror which has prevailed in the Whitechapel district during the past week still continues.

AN ODD WEDDING.

She Can't Speak Russian and Her Husband Can't Speak English.

A Detroit despatch says: The marriage of Baron Barthod Hoyningen Huene, first lieutenant of the Regiment of Chevaliers Guides of Her Majesty the Empress of Russia, to Miss Annie Lothrop, eldest daughter of George V. N. Lothrop, recently Minister to Russia, took place at St. Paul's Church last evening. The edifice was filled with the friends of the family. Following the ceremony Mrs. Lothrop held a brilliant reception.

Baron Huene is the descendant of a German family long settled in Russia. He is 30 years old. Miss Lothrop is very beautiful, and her father is one of Detroit's millionaires, besides being the leader of the Michigan bar. The betrothal only occurred a few weeks ago in London, and the young couple have been acquainted but a comparatively short time. The bride does not speak Russian nor the bridegroom English.

A Cradle for a Coffin.

Mrs. Ruth Hull, of Wallingford, whose greatest wish was to be buried in a coffin made from a cradle in which she was rocked when a babe, died Thursday afternoon at the age of 74. The coffin was made from the cradle two weeks ago and taken to her residence while she was confined to her bed. Since then she has had it kept in her room. She seemed to take much pleasure in it. It was her idea to have the coffin made a number of years ago and use it as a lounge. Her dying wish was that no funeral services be held nor any minister attend.

Thirty ostriches, which arrived at Marseilles from Algeria, were being placed in the train for Paris, when a man endeavored to pluck some feathers out of one of the "birds of the desert." He immediately received a kick from the ostrich which killed him on the spot.

Caution!—"I was gane to axe ye, Donald, if ye'd lend me a half-croon." 'Eh, mon; I've got but one lendin' half-croon, an' that's oot just at present."

THE WHITECHAPEL MURDERS.

Arrest of an American Charged with the Crimes—New York Mad Doctors Give Their Views on the Matter.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: An American, who refused to give his name or any account of himself, but who said that he had only recently arrived from New York, was arrested at 11 o'clock last night on suspicion of being the Whitechapel murderer. He is well dressed, rather tall, of slight build, and clean shaven. He accosted a woman in Whitechapel, and asked her to go with him, and threatened if she refused to "rip her up." The woman screamed and the man rushed to a cab. The police gave chase, seized the man, and took him to the Lemon Street Police Station, where he exclaimed to the inspector in charge: "Are you the boss? I guess I am in a pretty fix now." He was placed in a cell and will probably be charged to-morrow.

WHAT DR. HAMILTON THINKS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—New York has become a great whispering gallery since the latest news about the Whitechapel butcheries. These awful crimes are becoming the general topic of conversation. Lawyers, detectives, judges and doctors wrangle over theories. All agree in denouncing the London police.

"I can conceive of these crimes being one only by an insane person," said Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the well-known alienist, "and they were very probably committed by a man belonging to a class of insane persons known as piquers. It is a form of insanity manifested by a variety of impulsive desires to do mischief, such as to destroy property and cut and mutilate. With this condition is associated a homicidal tendency, and a state of sexual aberration."

"Assuming the murderer to be a madman, what is his probable mental condition now?"

"Oh, he is probably reading the news paper accounts of the murders and enjoying it, going all over the crimes again in his imagination. But he may belong to another class of lunatics who have awful spells of remorse, and who only kill when the impulse seizes them. He may suffer great mental anguish. There is another class of lunatics whose lust is excited by the personal peculiarities of their victims, who will be seized with a fury on seeing a woman with a peculiar kind of hair or a peculiar figure. In these Whitechapel cases there are strong signs of sexual aberration in the manner of mutilation. I think the murderer will do a great deal more killing. The more he gives way to his passion the more pleasure it is likely to give him. His mental condition at the time he sheds his victim's blood is one of extreme exhilaration."

"You have spoken as though you assumed the murderer to be a man; might it not have been a woman?"

"It is very, very improbable. Women who suffer from the form of insanity that the defilement of these bodies indicates do not commit homicide."

DR. SPITZKA'S THEORY.

Dr. Edward C. Spitzka, who is known far and wide as a tireless and advanced investigator of mental diseases, also believes that if the cabled stories of the Whitechapel murders are true, the murderer is probably a lunatic, and a man, not a woman.

"How do you suppose he manages to cut the throats and mutilate the trunks of these women without covering himself with blood, so as to make detection certain?"

"It could be done by making a sudden pass at the throat from behind, but it is a very difficult operation, requiring great practice. This man is probably educated, but I hardly think he is refined. That he knows something about surgery is, I think, pretty certain. The fact that he is able to slay his victims so quickly and effectively and to disembowel them in such a short time points in that direction. Then in all but one case he has removed the same organ from the body and taken it away with him. To find and cut out this organ would be a difficult thing for a layman. The madman probably has put these specimens in alcohol, and is thrilled with pleasure when he gloats over them or perhaps he has eaten them."

"What will be the probable effect of a continued exemption from detection upon the brute who is terrorizing Whitechapel? Will he grow bolder?"

"He may, and yet it is not impossible that he may suddenly subside and be heard of no more. He may become overgratified. He very likely has exhausted himself till he is capable of no other form of pleasure, and from too great indulgence may become even incapable of that. In Westphalia three or four years ago a man killed thirteen innocent country girls and defiled their bodies by mutilation to gratify the same extraordinary passion or fury that has in all likelihood inspired the Whitechapel crimes. They were all stabbed in the back in the same way. He suddenly ceased, and no one has ever discovered who he was. He was satiated."

Horace Davenport's $15.

"We have received to-day the biggest contribution to the yellow fever fund that has yet been made," said Secretary English, of the Mayor's office, last evening. "It was from Horace Davenport, of the Board of Trade, bootblack, who brought in $15 as his gift. The $15 represents his entire earnings for last week. Where is another gift that can equal it? No millionaire has done so generous an act as the lad who shines the shoes for millionaires. His is an act that will 'shine' long after he has laid away his brush and 'kit.'"—Chicago Tribune.

Swimming.

Albert Death is the name of a swimmer who recently undertook to beat time in a race from the Queen's Road Bridge, Dalston, to the locks in the canal, an unmeasured distance. Death swam in ordinary street attire, and this is what made the race interesting. He covered the distance, beating time nearly four minutes. He now offers to swim any man in the world, fully dressed. Death is 40 years old, and weighs 154 pounds.

Sugar barrels are no longer wasted. They are bought at second hand and broken up; the staves are then washed, packed in bundles and sent back to the West Indies at a profit, to be rehooped.

DASHED TO THE GROUND.

Over a Hundred People Injured at a Church Dedication—The Walls Give Way and a Temporary Floor Falls.

A Reading (Pa.) despatch says: Over 100 people injured is the record of an accident which took place yesterday afternoon during the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner-stone of the new St. Mary's Polish Catholic Church in this city. Previous to the ceremony of the corner-stone laying there was a street parade, participated in by all the Catholic societies of this city and adjoining places. Probably 7,000 people gathered at the site of the church in the afternoon to witness the ceremonies. About 1,000 were crowded on a temporary floor laid on the joists and walls of the edifice, which had been carried up one story. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, arrived in the morning and personally conducted the ceremony, assisted by the priests of the three Catholic churches here. After the corner-stone had been laid Father Libichi, pastor of the congregation, arose to speak, and had hardly commenced his remarks when the newly constructed walls gave way and one-fourth of the floor fell with an awful crash, precipitating 200 people to the ground a distance of from fifteen to eighteen feet. Men, women and children were thrown into a confused mass, with joists, brick, stone and mortar on top of them. The excitement was intense, but willing hands at once commenced the work of extricating the unfortunates, many of whom had to be carried out and placed in neighboring houses, where their injuries were attended to, and they were then removed to their homes or to the hospital. It was fully two hours before the wounded were all cared for. It is said that several children are still missing. Nine are very badly hurt and may die, and fourteen others had limbs broken. The remainder are not very seriously hurt.

REMARKABLE CAVE FOUND

Near Lake Mindemoya, on the Manitoulin Island.

A Providence Bay despatch says: On the 21st of September, as Rev. William Schroeder, of Carnarvon; Messrs. J. C. Evans, of Puslinch, and Daniel Hagey, of Woodstock, were fishing on Lake Mindemoya, the latter-named gentleman took a stroll on shore and discovered a cave 78 feet in length and 11 feet width, with an arched ceiling of sufficient height for standing room. There are also two beautiful domes, formed by some freak of nature, in the limestone rock. Two branch passages on the left of the entrance have since been found, one of them over 130 feet in length, which cannot be explored in an upright position. Several skeletons, in a fair state of preservation, were grouped near the entrance. One of the skulls had the appearance of having been perforated by a rifle bullet, others crushed by some blunt instrument. It has been learned that some of the present Indian population discovered this cave, with its silent inmates, over 30 years ago, but had no knowledge as to how the skeletons came there. None of the white settlers knew of it, and it is to them a source of wonder and astonishment. Nothing besides the skeletons was found except a broken arrow-head, a shell ornament and a large quantity of fish scales. It is situated on the farm of Martin Buck, second concession of the township of Carnarvon.

BEATEN TO DEATH.

A Woman, Horribly Abused, Dies From Her Injuries.

A St. John, N. B., despatch says: On Wednesday last Coroner Ross, of St. Andrews, held an inquest on the body of Mrs. John Naylor, who was beaten to death in her house, five miles from Clarendon Station, on the New Brunswick Railway. The finding of the jury was that deceased came to her death from blows inflicted by some persons unknown. Two men of a fishing party lodged at Naylor's on Friday night of last week, and while there they had several drinks. This is all that was known of the occurrence until the following Saturday afternoon, when the woman was found lying in an insensible condition a few yards from the house. She died on Sunday morning. It is alleged that the woman was indecently treated and so badly beaten that she died from the injuries received. The whole of her body when discovered was discolored, and tufts of hair from her head were found on the floor and in the bed. The neighbors have demanded an investigation and another inquiry will be had. The woman's husband was arrested this morning by the deputy-sheriff of St. Andrew's and is now in custody. He is believed to be in part responsible for the death of his wife.

Death is Painless.

The act of dying, it is now ascertained, is absolutely free from suffering; is really unconscious, insensibility always preceding it, says the "Forum" for October. Any anguish that may attend mortal illness ceases before the close, as thousands who have recovered, after hope had been surrendered, have borne witness. Sudden and violent death, shocking to the senses, may not be, probably is not, painful to the victim. Drowning, hanging, freezing, shooting, falling from a height, poisoning of many kinds, beget stupor or numbness of the nerves, which is incompatible with sensation. Persons who have met with such accidents, and survived them, testify to this. Records to the effect are numberless.

Customs Decisions.

The following decisions were rendered by the Board of Customs of the Dominion last month:

"Appleton's Railway Guide," 6c per lb. and 20 per cent.

Coffee and cream, sweetened, condensed in tins, 1½c per lb. and 35 per cent.

Cottolene, a substitute for lard, 2c. per lb.

Inland Printer, Chicago, 6c. per lb. and 2 per cent.

Leatheroide, a manufacture of paper, 35 per cent

Oxide of iron, dry, 20 per cent.

Painted cotton netting, an imitation of wire cloth, 5c. per square yard and 15 per cent.

Pearl collar buttons or studs, 25 per cent.

Tin foil labels, printed, 15c. per lb. and 25 per cent.

Tin whisk holders, lacquered, 25 per cent.

The growing utility of celluloid in the arts is having a marked effect in lowering the price of ivory, notwithstanding the yearly decrease in the output of the latter.

DR. MACKENZIE AS AN AUTHOR.

His New Book Certain to Create a Great Sensation.

A London cable says: Dr. Mackenzie is heavily handicapped. He has been absolutely debarred from obtaining any copies of official documents, while free access to them is allowed his adversaries. At the very last moment he was compelled by certain august personages to suppress the reproduction of an autograph statement of Emperor Frederick, which reflected on the conduct of Prof. Bergmann in the strongest possible language. The twenty illustrations which appear will doubtless excite a great deal of interest. The most important are the carefully prepared diagrams showing that Prof. Bergmann made a false passage. The various stages of the growth in the patient's throat are illustrated by wood cuts. The book may be roughly divided into a narrative of the medical controversy and statistics. In the first chapter is a graphic description of the first consultation at the Kron Prinz palais. The historical portion concludes with the death-bed scene. The second part will principally interest the medical profession. In the third, Dr. Mackenzie proves almost inevitably the fatal consequence of thyrotomy. In the ninth chapter is an eloquent sketch of the personal character of the Emperor. Dr. Mackenzie has labored under countless difficulties, but no medical work is ever likely to cause so profound a sensation. He dedicates it to no one, but has chosen the pungent motto from Shakspeare: "What trick, what device, what starting-hole canst thou find to hide thee from thy open and apparent shame?"

MURDEROUS TOOTH-PULLING.

Revolting Revelations at a Nova Scotia Inquest.

A Halifax (N S.) despatch says: The inquest on the body of Mrs. Wm. Selig, at Caledonia, Queen's county, shows that she died under revolting circumstances. She was in a delicate state of health, and had the whole of her teeth extracted by Dr. Andrews under the influence of ether. The woman's wrists were held by her husband while Dr. Andrews drew out her teeth. She struggled very hard before she went under the influence of the drug. When seven teeth had been pulled out she began to struggle and said: "I am awake now; don't take any more teeth out." Her husband let go his wife's hands, when Dr. Andrews said in an angry tone: "D—— it, hold her hands." The husband did so, and two or three more teeth were pulled out. Subsequently pieces of teeth were extracted from the gums. Mrs. Selig complained that her gums hurt her, and Dr. Andrews, after hesitating, gave her "something to ease the pain," by injecting a fluid into her arm with a needle, remarking at the time: "Why do I have it if I don't use it?" After that the woman said she felt sleepy, and Dr. Andrews said she'd be as bright as a button in the morning, and he went to bed. Mrs. Selig moaned piteously, soon became unconscious and died shortly after midnight.

A SAD FATE.

The Terrible Sufferings of a Young Man Crushed by a Tree.

A Montreal despatch says: A peculiarly sad case came under the notice of the Notre Dame Hospital authorities on Saturday week. Ovila Gauthier, a 23-year old man from Vaudreuil, was almost crushed by a pine tree falling upon him at Riviere des Lievres, 32 miles north of Le Ferme des Pins, near Buckingham, Que. His fellow-laborers picked him up, put him on an improvised litter and carried him 32 miles, camping in the woods during the night amid torrents of rain. At 10 o'clock on Monday morning they arrived at Le Ferme des Lievres, where a physician could not be got to dress the poor man's wounds. His agony was intense, but his friends could do absolutely nothing for him. Drenched by the rain, they had to proceed by the river in canoes, making two portages of considerable length. On Tuesday evening they finally reached Buckingham, where a physician attended to some of the injuries and others he pronounced already past a cure. They arrived here in the city on Wednesday evening and proceeded to Vaudreuil, where the young man's parents live. Finally, as the physicians there could not do anything for him, he was taken to Notre Dame Hospital on Friday morning, where it was found that gangrene had set in in one of his legs. The last rites of the Church were administered and the poor fellow is not expected to live.

FATALLY MANGLED BY THE CARS.

The Body Robbed by Brother Tramps, Who Decamp.

A Montreal despatch says: A horrible accident occurred on the C P R. yesterday morning by which a man whose name is at present unknown lost his life. Shortly after the Ottawa express for Montreal passed Lachute three men were noticed walking on the track. The engineer whistled and rang the bell. Two of the men left the track, but the third kept on walking, paying no attention to the danger signals. An endeavor was then made to stop the train, but too late, and the unfortunate man was run over and his head and one arm completely severed from his body. The train was running at the time forty miles an hour and could not be stopped for some distance. It was backed up to the scene of the tragedy, where the two companions of the victim was seen rifling the pockets of the deceased and had even removed the boots from his feet. On the approach of the train hands the pair made off into the woods. The remains of the unfortunate were gathered up and laid at the side of the track to be sent for and brought to Lachute later on. The deceased and his companions were evidently tramps.

The Obliging Editor.

Facetious Visitor in Newspaper office (to Editor)—May I use your brains a moment? Editor My brains? Visitor (smilingly picking up scissors)—Yes, sir. Only a moment. I want to— Editor (with great cordiality)—Certainly you may. Use them as long as you please. Always glad to furnish brains to a man who hasn't any.

There is only one sure way to stop a small boy from asking questions, and that way is not satisfactory if you have any further use for the boy.—Journal of Education.

THE BALLOON BURST.

How the Most Experienced Æronaut in the World Met His Death.

The coroner's inquiry into the death a few days ago in Essex, England, of the famous æronaut Simmons has brought out a singular feature of the accident by which he lost his life and his two companions were dangerously injured, and indicates a new danger in ballooning. The evidence shows that the accident, which followed an attempt to land, during which the anchor was caught in a toll, was caused by the bursting of the balloon. The silk was unusually large and correspondingly heavy, but it was not ripped with one large rent, as would have been the case had it caught on a tree, but was found torn into several distinct pieces. Besides this, the bursting was accompanied by a loud report, which was heard not only by those near by who were watching the balloon, but by persons a considerable distance away, who knew nothing of the balloon until afterward.

Mr. Simmons was an æronaut of thirty years' experience and this was his 495th ascension. When he landed from his last previous ascent a few days before an old lady said to him, "You men cannot have much care for your lives," and he replied: "I have made 494 ascents and I don't feel very much fear now."

The balloon was the Cosmo, one of the largest ever made, holding 62,000 feet of gas and capable of carrying 2,400 pounds. The basket was of iron wire network, instead of wicker. He carried a thirty-pound grapnel and ninety-one feet of rope—too light an anchor and too short a rope, some experts say. He went up about the middle of the afternoon with W. L. Field and Mr. Meyers, the latter of the South Kensington Natural History Museum, both of whom had made previous voyages. It was intended to cross the channel to France, but, darkness coming on, the party decided to descend for the night. The country was somewhat wooded, and two or three attempts were made to land, but each time ballast had to be thrown out and the balloon sent up again. A field that seemed fairly clear was at last chosen and the grapnel let out. It dragged through a field of wheat and then caught in a large tree. In an instant the huge balloon pulled up short, swung to the ground, and began to bump up and down, straining at the end of its tether. Simmons pulled desperately on the valve rope and shouted to Field to help him. Meyers held a bag of ballast awaiting an order to throw it out. Three times in scarcely more than as many seconds the great balloon bounded up and down, struggling frantically like some immense wild beast at the end of a long rope. Each time it sprung sixty feet in the air. As it rose the third time to that height there came a sudden report, the silk collapsed, and the car with the three men in it fell to the ground. Men from the fields running up found it battered into a shapeless wreck and its three late inmates unconscious. Simmons' skull was fractured and he had suffered other injuries. He died in three hours without regaining conciousness. Mr. Field had a simple fracture of the right thigh and a compound fracture of the left leg, besides innumerable bruises. Mr. Meyers had internal injuries, and was covered with bruises and cuts.

Æronauts can give no satisfactory explanation of the bursting of the balloon. It was undoubtedly caused by the sudden stoppage, but why the strain of a quantity of gas should become excessive on that account has not been explained. It is said that there is one similar case on record.—New York Sun.

Old Country Sports.

On the 13th ult. Mr. Alfred Nixon, of the Catford Cycling Club, London, started from Edinburgh at 12 noon to attempt to ride to London on a "Safety" bicycle in 48 hours. He accomplished the journey in two days eight hours.

The Comtesse de Paris has earned immortal fame at Strathtay, as the gillies and keepers declare that she is one of the finest shots ever seen on the "country-side."

An interesting book might be written about the laws relating to games and sports. They begin in the time of Richard II., when servants and laborers were enjoined to use bows and arrows on Sundays and holidays, and to leave all tennis, football, and other games called "coits, dice, casting of the stone, kails and other such importune games." If any one played such "unthrifty" games they were made liable to six days' imprisonment under Henry IV. Strange to say, "unlawful" games were allowed on Christmas Day. Here are the names of some of the unlawful games: Logetting in the fields, slide-thrift (otherwise called shove grost), bowling, coyting, closh-cayls, half-bowl, tennis, dicing table, carding, hand in and hand out, and queckboard.

At the championship angling competition on Loch Leven, Scotland, on the 11th ult., thirty-two clubs were represented and the takes were generally good. The position of champion was gained by Mr. Malcolm, Stirling, whose basket contained 17 trout, weighing 18 lb. 5 oz.

Evanescent.

Wife (tearfully)—Oh, dear, dear, I've lost that $10 bill you gave me.

Husband—Are you sure? I saw you have it in the dining room and in the parlor also.

Wife—When did you see it last?

Husband—I never saw it last, my dear. A $10 bill is one of the things that doesn't last very long in this house.

A Sure Cure.

Citizen—What are you doing with that man?

Policeman—I've just arrested him.

Citizen—But he's as deaf as a post.

Policeman—He'll get his hearing before the magistrate.

Grandpa—Well, Fred, you're an uncle now; you ought to be real proud over it. Little Fred—No, I oughtn't to. I ain't no uncle. Grandpa—Why not? Little Fred—'Cause I'm an aunt. The new baby's a girl.

KING JA-JA, of West Africa, is 52 years of age, and has only 200 wives. But for only one of his better halves, if such an expression can be allowed mathematically, has he any affection. She is the mother of his sons "Saturday" and "Sunday." "Saturday" is now at school in England.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

How the Ladies of New York are Dressing this Season—The Latest Way of Arranging the Hair.

A New York correspondent writes: The bustle must go! Can you imagine anything so delightful as to be able to sit on a chair away back in comfort, instead of resting one's self by sitting on the edge of the chair and bracing your shoulders against the back, causing backache, neckache and headache? Many of our best dressed ladies are discarding the bustle altogether. The effect in some cases is startling, and one is apt to remember one's school days, when our brothers compared us to a yard of pump water, and called us gawky. However, it is the fashion and quite the correct thing. I met a young lady on Broadway richly attired in a suit of sage green, plain underskirt of lighter shade, a directoire coat of the darker, long straight coat tails in the back, cut away in the front, a vest of heavy broche, white ground and pale damask roses, double-breasted; a long boa of cream lace was carelessly tied about the throat; a large hat of birds' breasts, wings and eagle's claw holding the rim against the crown, over a face, young and dashing, with a "I know I've left my bustle at home" kind of a look. She tripped along and many were the admiring eyes turned in her direction, although I heard a dude on the corner remark that "that girl was as flat as a pancake." A

NEW WAY OF DOING THE HAIR

since the bustle is being discarded is a la coiffure Josephine. Hair of medium length is now easily dressed; gather the hair up on the crown of the head, tie it firmly, curl the ends and pin all around the head closely, not quite to nape of neck; the bang must be pointed and narrow. It is very tedious to dress the hair in this style, but effective. Many ladies wear false curls pinned closely about their heads instead of curling their own hair; bands of steel, pearl beads or jet are worn with the coiffure. A new fad is the long cane, with silver and gold head, carried with the directoire costume and trimmed, like the little pugs waddling by the side of their mistress, with a bow of ribbon to match costume. New hosiery is displayed for the coming season in gorgeous colors. Wide stripes of delicate flesh tints and deep crimson are seen; in others checked effects are given in contrasting colors. The hosiery this season is anything but modest in colors, and the neat black hose will soon be a thing of the past. Sauntering up 5th avenue, I met a Montrealer, who came to this city not long since for the benefit of his friends—a lawyer, fair, with the air somewhat of a Sherbrooke street bank clerk; but, alas! the velvet coat had disappeared, and he was attired in the latest New York cut. The downy moustache was trimly curled and his legal highness stood gracefully poised against one of the pillars of the 5th Avenue Hotel, rolling his eyes and making frantic efforts to dissolve the head of his cane.

Big Boodle in Bets.

A regular betting cyclone has swept over the country.

North, East, South and West immense sums are staked on the elections.

If Mark Twin took his jumping frog to the Hoffman House he could get rich in an hour.

Meanwhile they are betting on a Jumping Cat that will take a leap in November.

Hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands put up every night on the Presidential result.

Old stagers say that such a gambling mania has never been heard of before.

More money will change hands on elections this year than on the turf.

And the strikes will swell immediately when bets are ripe on the battle for Mayor.

From the way citizens toss big wads of money about you'd think the whole town was populated with plumbers.

Bets of $10,000 in cold cash are chronic, and before the next week we'll see this doubled and trebled.

Billy Edwards, Captain Conner and Jim Peacock, who hold the stakes, look like Safety Deposit vaults.

There's no tariff on betting, excepting the loss of your vote if challenged; but nobody scares at that.

Whichever way the gift-edged cat jumps next month, plenty of doleful citizens will wear crape for the next year.—New York Telegram.

A Word With the Business Men.

If you want to be healthy you must eat regularly, as meat to-day will not serve you for to-morrow. To be well and hearty eat at every meal time—to be prosperous in business advertise regularly. Stop the one and you starve and die. Stop the other and your business takes consumption and dies also. Spasmodic advertising is like having a "feast and a famine"—more famine than feast as a rule—and is never satisfactory. To take out your card in dull times is like killing your horse because he is a little lame. It is in dull times the most advertising should be done and it is in dull times that advertising is the most effective, as more notice is taken of printers' ink then than at any other time.—Clothier and Furnisher.

"Let Us Both Be Thankful!"

A commercial traveller, who occupied the same compartment with a clergyman, asked him if he had ever heard that in Paris as often as a priest was hanged a donkey was hanged at the same time. The victim of the joke replied in his blandest manner: "Well, then, let us both be thankful that we are not in Paris."

Contradictory.

That was a contradictory sort of an effusion written by a discharged clerk to his former employers:

Sept. 1, 1888.

Roe & Doe.

GENTLEMEN: You are no gentlemen.
Respectfully yours, JOHN SMITH.
—Harper's Bazar.

Skidmore—There goes one of the most remarkable men of the present day. Hawkins—Indeed? What has he done? Skidmore—Began keeping a diary January 1st and didn't stop until last week.

Many a proud man who holds his head erect in the street hangs it in the horse car when there he sees a lady clinging to the strap.

—No man was ever scolded out of his sins.

INDIANA'S PULPIT PRODIGY.

Pascal Porter, in Roundabout and Knee Breeches, Preaching in Cincinnati.

The little church opposite Lincoln Park has had a sensation for the past week in the shape of a 12-year-old boy preacher. His name is Pascal Porter. His parents are plain farmers. His mother died eight months ago, and his father, an ordinary man, with no great amount of either sanctity or learning, but a plain, everyday man, travels with the gifted son. He sat in the tall pulpit behind the big Bible and crossed his hands and peered at the audience with the composure of a veteran. One of the silver-haired men introduced Mr. Johnson, over 60, to make a prayer; then hymns were sung, and the boy stepped forth with the assurance of a lawyer and the elegant composure of a society gentleman. The audience was composed for the most part of married women, who always love bright children and old men. The boy preacher wore a roundabout, a little white collar about his neck, knee-breeches and buttoned shoes. The idea of his preaching to silver-haired old men recalled the story of the 13-year-old Christ who entered the temple, but the old men went up and shook him warmly by the hand. And the lad greeted them with respect, yet not childishness. When the hymns had been sung and the organ ceased expectation was on tiptoe. The audience was hushed, and placing one hand on the pulpit the boy preacher announced as a text, "Lay Hold on Life." He had found the lines somewhere in the Bible. He noted the difference between the old and revised versions, then spoke of a life of pleasure, quoted a verse from Tennyson, talked about the radiant effulgence of a gay company. Then he contrasted the pleasures of sin with the pure joy of the Christian, but he didn't detail much of the pleasures of sin, so called, nor did it appear that the innocent boy knew very much about them. He declared the joy of the Christian was the child of hope. Then he drew a sort of picture, as he called it, of Christian life. Then he concluded with: "My prayer to God is that you shall all receive eternal life where there shall be no more parting," and the kid sat down behind the tall pulpit. He preaches next Sunday evening. He is a prodigy of memory. That he knows what he is talking about is questionable. His composure before an audience is remarkable. He has addressed 3,000. He does not hesitate for a word, and when he does it is the hesitation of a person who has learned his lesson well. He has been preaching 2½ years, and was born at Volga, near Jefferson, on November 6th, 1876. Prodigies among children are not uncommon. Dr. Watts wrote hymns when he was 4 years old. Pope, the poet, rhymed as a child, and Dryden, when a boy at school, won a prize for the best essay on the miracle of Christ at Cana by simply writing:

The modest water saw its God and blushed.

which was the great poet's way of expressing that the Saviour turned the water into wine. The father of this child says that his boy began preaching at Sunday School—got right up and talked on. At any rate the child is a curiosity.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Fresh from Vanity Fair.

Cashmere colors combined with black silk make an altogether novel combination, and will be stylish the coming season.

White costumes for the house are more and more popular, and are worn at all hours. The matinee gown is sometimes of white surah, although chudder cloth is preferred by those of moderate purse.

Black armure is combined with oriental silk, which includes all the rich, brilliant colors in a chaotic weaving. The petticoat is of the oriental silk, also the vest and trimming, which has the same coloring and is used as a finish to black silk costumes.

Metal trimmings are lavished on morning toilets for house wear this season. Cashmeres and soft woolens of any sort are trimmed in these fashionable passementeries. All soft demi-shades are worn for morning gowns in preference to the very delicate colors. Copper, old rose, gobelin blue and reseda are fashionable colors.

One of the new fabrics particularly appropriate for a tea gown is the double faced surah woven in two colors. The arrangement in a French model shows both sides of the silk in different parts of the costume. That it is a self-trimmed garment, saving the long lace fichu which is worn with it. Peach blow is a beautiful shaded yellow pink, which makes an exquisite tea gown, worn with a creamy lace boa which falls from the neck to the feet.

Amelie Rives Parodied.

A parody on "The Quick or the Dead," entitled "The Rock or the Rye," has been published in Mobile. Here is a sample of it: "There was a yawping wind a-howl that night, with no mist to moisten it; yet it cringed and whimpered, snored, and was hushed incessantly, as though wet to its skin with a blizzard. Agamema was deucedly cut up by her beauless walk from the grocery, and from finding thereat no letter from Rye; for she had expected him to write, remittingly. In the jim-jam lightning she saw her own profile clear cut athward the suave and complacent sky, like acids on litmus paper; and the dry, whitey-mauve sand swirled clutchingly about her massive feet in that wetless wind. And after what thunderous fashion those feet pounded warmbathward.—N. Y. Tribune.

Origin of a Fashion.

A charming French duchess, so the story goes, had given her promise to attend some festive ceremony at the Trouville casino. Being behind time, she put her gloves on while driving, and never discovered till she stood in the full blaze of the casino drawing room that with her black and white silk costume she had put on one white and one black glove. It appears that her maid had laid out two pairs of gloves for her to choose from, and that the duchess in her hurry had taken one of each pair. The mischief, however, could not be undone, and the odd result was that at the next fashionable assembly all the ladies at Trouville wore gloves of different colors.

Made That Himself.

"Where did young Browne get his money, papa?"

"From his uncle, old Sam Brown. He inherited everything he has in this world, except the final 'e' to his name."

SHE LOVES A BURGLAR.

Why Pretty Nellie Callahan Cursed Her Mother in Court.

In the month of July the dwellings of George E. Porter, No. 812 Fifth avenue; Henry Dreyfuss, No. 60 West 52nd street; William F. Bidall, No. 138 East 37th street; George E. Holt, No. 24 East 58th street, and Mr. Brady, No. 142 East 38th street, were robbed of over $10,000 worth of diamonds and jewellery.

Detective-Sergeants Vallely, Evanhoe and Murray, on August 3rd, arrested the burglars and found a portion of the stolen goods. The prisoners gave their names as John Donohue and Thomas Whittaker. Yesterday the burglars pleaded guilty to the five indictments of burglary before Recorder Smyth, and were remanded until this afternoon for sentence. Since Donohue's imprisonment in the Tombs he has been frequently visited by Nellie Callahan, a pretty brunette of 17 years, whom he had induced to run away from home a few days previous to his arrest. On September 14th, Mrs. Annie Callahan, No. 340 West 17th street, the girl's mother, secured a warrant for her daughter's arrest. It appears that the prisoners made use of Nellie by having her pawn the jewellery and supply them with money. A week ago Nellie called upon her mother. She was bedecked with jewels and defied her mother to interfere with her. Before Mrs. Callahan could summon an officer Nellie walked away. She was followed from the Tombs to the residence of Donohue's mother, where she was introduced as the burglar's sister. She was arrested. On searching her the detectives found in the bosom of her dress a letter from Donohue to her, in which he vowed eternal love, and wrote that he was glad to see that she would not forget him, although he was in prison. She was taken to Jefferson Market Court and Mrs. Callahan appeared against her. Nellie was defiant and said they could send her to prison, but she would never willingly go to the House of the Good Shepherd. She cursed her mother and tried to strike her. She was sent to the House of the Good Shepherd.—N. Y. Mail.

One of Jim's Jokes.

It would take a volume to record the many "good things" which the late James Fahey used to deliver spontaneously among his friends and newspaper associates—bright sayings and keen witticisms that would have added lustre to the humorous literature of the day had they but found their way into print, but which have perished with him, poor fellow! I remember one funny story that went the rounds of "the boys" at the time, and made every crowd roar to whom it was recounted. Jim, who was editing the Evening Canadian, was invited to a small affair at the Rossin, but failed to attend. Some of the fellows next day were telling him what a good time he had missed.

"I'm sorry, of course," said the genial Irishman, "but the fact is, boys, I really didn't have black clothes to go in. The only garment I could have donned, in contradistinction to my unstudied everyday attire, was an old ulster; and, as I didn't care to dress up in that ulster and make all the guests who didn't happen to have on ulsters feel jealous and bad, why, I ambled home and took to my bed. It is quite true I might have announced myself as the Man from Ulster, but it would have occasioned me too conspicuous and painful notoriety. My native instinct, you know, is to be humble and get in my two columns of stuff a day without any libel suits." T. —Grip.

A Queer Cat Story.

A correspondent of the Forest and Stream tells a story about a favorite cat that spends a good deal of her time in a cosy old arm-chair. Her owner last May put four hen eggs into the chair by way of seeing what puss would do with them in order to make her bed more comfortable. Strange as it may appear, puss took kindly to the eggs and in due time hatched four fine chickens. For weeks after the chickens were hatched she licked them all over every day with her tongue, caressed and fondled with them as much as if they had been her own kittens. Whenever the chickens strayed from the nursery she carried them back in her mouth as if they had been made of the finest of glass.

A Remarkable Wager Won.

A man won a wager in Washington a few days ago by lighting his cigar by the aid of a lump of ice. He took a piece of clear ice, about an inch thick, from the water cooler, whittled it into the shape of a disk, and with the palms of his hands melted its two sides convex, thus giving it the form of a double convex lens or burning glass. With it he focused the sun's rays on the end of his cigar, thus lighting the cigar. How many fires occur in this way that are said to be "involved in mystery?"

He Knew Women.

"So you're not coming to the school's picnic, Johnny," said Mr. Perkins.

"Yes, I am," said Johnny.

"Why, Johnny," exclaimed Mr. Perkins, "your mother said in my presence you could not go."

"Guess you don't know women!" said Johnny, scornfully; "wait till I've asked the fiftieth time."

A Modern Trust.

Would-be customer—Will you trust me for a few things for a couple of days?

Grocer—Come around in a couple of days and I will.

Would-be customer—But I will have the money then.

Grocer—Then is when I would trust you!

He Got a Demerit.

Professor of Chemistry—Gentlemen, I hold in my hand a vial of soda. What chemical shall I combine with it to produce a valuable article of commerce?

Goodsby (waking up)—Br-r-randy.—Judge.

Literal Construction.

Irate Father (to young Binks)—See here, young man! didn't I tell you never to enter my gate again?

Young Binks—Yes, sir; and I didn't. I clum over the fence.

—The most curious thing about a falsehood is that it can get over so much territory by simply lying around.

GUARDING HIS DEAD MASTER.

Hanged Himself and the Dog Had to be Shot Before the Body Was Removed.

The police had a savage fight this afternoon with a dog that stood guard over his dead master's body, and would not yield until fourteen bullets had been lodged in his body. Then the faithful animal fell dead beside the remains which he had guarded so well. The man, John Gynan, had committed suicide by hanging. He was a well-to-do bachelor, who lived alone at South Salem Point. His only companion was a big Newfoundland dog. When Gynan's body was discovered the dog was lying beneath, and the shoes showed where the dumb companion had tried to revive his master. While the policemen were cutting the dead man down the dog stood by with his eyes riveted on his master's face, but the moment they tried to remove the body he became ferocious. He bit both men until they were glad to beat a retreat. Then he caressed the dead man's face, whining piteously the while. The police tried to coax him away, but he showed his teeth every time they approached, and his savage growl warned them to keep their distance. The blockade continued for over an hour. Then one policeman fired two shots at the faithful brute. Then the dog plunged down the stairs to the door and again blocked the way, snapping at all who approached. He became so rabid that it became absolutely necessary to kill him. Fourteen bullets were fired at close range before he fell dead. Then the dead body of the master was carried over the inanimate form of the pet dog.—Salem (Mass.) Corr. New York Sun.

The Testimony

Of hundreds of druggists bear witness to the efficacy of Polson's Nerviline as the most potent pain remedy in the world for all kinds of pains. Nerviline is composed of newly discovered ingredients, and is equally good for internal or external use. Purchase a 10 cent sample bottle, and test it at once. T. R. Melville, Prescott, writes: "My customers who have used Nerviline speak highly of it, and I am satisfied it will take a leading place in the market before long." Try Polson's Nerviline for pains. Sold by druggists and country dealers everywhere.

Sufficient Evidence.

Young wife (gloomily)—Do you suppose our husbands really went fishing last Saturday?

Second young wife (confidently)—I am sure of it.

First young wife—They didn't bring home any fish.

Second young wife—That's my principal reason for believing they went fishing.

An Offensive Breath

is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he have any pride, but to those with whom he comes in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, but it has parted not only friends but lovers. Bad breath and catarrh are inseparable. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

A Lawyer Pops the Question.

Widow—But, my dear sir, what a gigantic bill of costs you have made for this short deed of conveyance.

Attorney—I merely wished to prove to you, madam, what a lucrative profession mine is, and what an excellent match I should make for you.

"Tis better not to be, than be unhappy," and no one can be happy whose system is deranged by poisonous secretions. Nearly all ills that flesh is heir to arise from torpid liver and derangement of the digestive organs. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets correct irregularities of the liver, prevent constipation and promote good health. Buy them off your druggists.

Took Him at His Word.

Visitor—Does your daughter play, Mr. Phirkin?

Father—Certainly she does, Mr. Younghead.

Visitor—I am glad of it, I adore music myself. A piece well excuted fairly carries me away.

Father—Jennie, give us a selection on the piano.—Life.

"Oh! where shall rest be found?"
The worn-out mother sighs:
Stockings to mend, and trousers to darn,
Dishes to wash, and butter to churn,
While my back feels to break, and head and heart burn,
And life is a constant friction.
The summer came and went,
The matron no longer sighs,
Elastic her step, and rounded her cheek,
Work seems but play, life is now sweet,
And the change was made in one short week,
By Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Positive remedy for those derangements, irregularities, and weakness so common to womankind.

A woman in Denver was so sensitive that when her husband called her a slouch she took poison and died. An average eastern woman would have simply replied: "You're another," and in ten minutes the storm would have been over.

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit, 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington, 1,215 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc., etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, S. H. COOK, Pres. N.Y. State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from

PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DUNL. 42 '88

DOING

BAKING

POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

YOUR

Special Attention!

IS CALLED

TO THE

DECIDED BARGAINS

In Dress Goods, Mantlings, etc.,

AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

A beautiful range of plushes in the latest shades, at a surprisingly low figure.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES!

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots of the best manufacture at rock bottom prices. Button and Lace Boots in great variety at prices sure to suit you.

THE TOP PRICE PAID

For Butter and Eggs

A lot of choice Butter in Tubs or Rolls wanted by 1st November.

At Cash Price for Trade.

J. G. Anderson, SPROULE'S BLOCK.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

Wiarton Echo: In August of last year Mr. Jas. Flett, of this place, advertised for a wagon-maker, a single man required. The advt. was answered by a R. M. Commings, of Markdale, who claimed he could fill the bill in every respect. He was engaged by Mr. Flatt and has been in his employ ever since until Saturday morning last when he took his departure out the back door to the station and has not been heard from since. Commings was a man of about 35 years of age, very dark complexion and not overly prepossessing in appearance, but through claiming to be rich and a single man he flitteed around among the young ladies and apparently unsettled as to which he would select to be his partner for life, as he could promise several to marry then at an early date, and some, we believe, he promised to wait a year or two for, and what the outcome would have been is hard to tell had not and incident occured on Wednesday of last week that stripped the mask from our swarthy masher and showed him up in his true colors. The incident was due to a gentleman from Markdale who was well acquainted with Commings who chanced to attend our fair and innocently gave the whole thing away, which was to the effect that the supposed rich young man was a very poor married one having a wife and a large family in Markdale. This knowledge was ruinous to Commings' chance to sky lark any more here and took the grand bounce which he at once got from his employer, with complacence. The fair ones who were broke up on the shape of the bronzed young man will not find his Commings and goings so frequent as before and that the latter is of more value to them than the former. Thus ends quite enough romance to make a dime novel.

A Blaze. About half past seven Tuesday evening fire burst out in the City Hotel stables. In a few minutes the whole building was envoloped in flames and in half an hour was reduced to ashes. It was with well directed efforts that W. J. McFarland's residence was saved as the woodshed adjoining extended close by the stable. The stallion, "Honest Tom," was rescued from the burning stable without injury. Cause of fire unknown. We have been unable to learn whether there is any insurance. Markdale Standard.

Joe Fletcher, a Toronto bigamist, was arrested in Owen Sound last Tuesday, by P. C Daley. His last victim is a Miss Campbell, late of Sydenham township, who is worth considerable money and property. Fletcher will likely get a long enough term of imprisonment to enable him to reflect a little on the evil of too much marriage and its results. [Chatsworth News.

One of the curiosities of the curious year 1888 has been shown us in the shape of ripe raspberries picked on Saturday last by Mr. R. Jamieson, 3rd line south. On the branch were ripe berries and a quantity of well-formed and good-sized green berries. Wednesday morning previous the ground was covered with snow to a depth of eight inches. [Mexford Mirror.

Orangeville pays its chief constable $100. We have a suspicion that the constable must be a Chinaman, or a retired millionaire with whom money is no object

The Stayner Sun says that they have had frost there every month since January, July excepted.

Thornbury Standard: The Euphrasia fall show was the best ever held in that township.

Markdale has a new jewelry store.

A good flow of gas has been struck in Collingwood.

FREE $85 solid GOLD WATCH Sold for $400 until lately. Best ONE watch in the world. Perfect time Keeper Warrants 5. Heavy Solid Gold Hunting Cases. Elegant and magnificent. Both ladies' and gents' sizes with works and cases of equal value ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one FREE. How is this possible? We answer—we want one person in each locality, to keep in their homes, and show to those who call, a complete line of our valuable and very useful HOUSEHOLD SAMPLES. These samples, as well as the watch, we send free, and after you have kept them in your home for 3 months and shown them to those who may have called, they become your own property. It is possible to make this great offer, sending the SOLID GOLD watch and COSTLY samples free, as the showing of the samples in any locality, always results in a large trade for us; after our samples have been in a locality for a month or two we usually get from $1000 to $5000 in trade from the surrounding country. This, the most wonderful offer ever known, is made in order that our samples may be placed at once where they can be seen, all over America. Write at once, and make sure of the chance. Reader it will be hardly any trouble for you to show the samples to those who may call at your house and your reward will be most satisfactory. A postal card on which to write us costs but 1 cent and after you know all, if you do not care to go further, why no harm is done. But if you do send your address at once, you can secure FREE one of the best solid gold watches in the world and our large line of COSTLY SAMPLES. We pay all express, freights, etc. Address GEO. STINSON & CO., Box 63, PORTLAND, MAINE.

J. E. MOORE,

Maker and dealer in

ALL KINDS OF

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

Durham Street,

Flesherton,

Special attention is called to our

FALL STOCK!

Which is now complete. For variety, quality and prices we are able to eclipse all former efforts. We are selling

BEDSTEADS

At from $2 each.

A really handsome Bedstead at $3.

WASHSTANDS

At from $1.50, and

B-U-R-E-A-U-S-!

At $6.

Making the whole furniture for a bedroom, including a chair, less than $10.

CHILDREN'S CRADLES, COTS, CRIBS,

In a number of styles and at equally low prices. In

BEDDING

We are making a specialty just now, by offering a good Spring Mattress at $1.50. Woven wire Mattresses at $2.50. Good quality of sea grass Mattress at $3.

Tables. Tables. Tables.

Kitchen and Dining Uables, Parlor and Sewing Tables, Lusic and Fancy Tables, in fact tables to suit every taste and for every conceivable purpose.

One New Karn Organ for Sale,

Very cheap. Agent for the celebrated

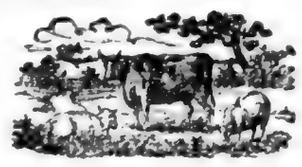
New Raymond

Sewing Machine, a number of which are to be seen at our showrpoms. Remember the place,

J. E. Moore,

Flesherton Furniture Warerooms, Durham Street. Flesherton.

Our Undertaking Department is A 1. Good hearse and good horses in connection. Charges very moderate.



MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT.

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

—AT—

Blakely & McConnell's.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber,

has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Bankhouse's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of all his old customers and as many new ones as have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber—not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb. 17th. WALTER BOOTH.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

SAULT Ste. MARIE CANAL.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the Sec. . . . and endorsed "Tenders for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, the 23rd day of October next, for the formation and construction of Canal on the Canada side of the river, through the Island of St. Mary.

The works will be let in two sections, one of which will embrace the formation of the canal through the island, the construction of locks, etc. The other, the deepening and widening of the channel way at both ends of the canal, construction of piers, etc.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications of the works, can be seen at this office on and after TUESDAY, the 9th day of October, next, where printed forms of tender can also be obtained. A like class of information, relative to the works, can be seen at the office of the Local Officer in the Town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms and be accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality and the nature of the material found in the trial pits.

In the case of firms, there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same; and further, a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $20,000 must accompany the tender for the canal and locks, and a BANK DEPOSIT RECEIPT for the sum of $7,500 must accompany the tender for the deepening and widening of the channel-way at both ends, piers, etc.

The respective DEPOSIT RECEIPTS cheques will not be accepted must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tenders.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 8th August, 1888

Strayed or Stolen.

From the premises of W. C. Parker, lot 62, 2nd west, Artemesia, two sows in pig - one aged and the other young, black, and black and white spotted. Information thankfully received as to their whereabouts.

W. C. PARKER.

SALESMEN WANTED for the New England Nurseries, established over 40 years. The old reliable nursery. Men with push, energy good habits and clean character always succeed We can give you good pay and steady work Write for terms to CHASE BROTHERS' COMPANY, Nurserymen, Colborne, Ont

FARM for SALE

Being part of Lot No. 10 Con. 5, Euphrasia containing fifty acres. The above property is situated about one-and-a-half miles from the village of Kimberley, all under cultivation on magnificent land.

Apply to
A. ALDOUS
Kimberley P.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VIII., NO. 383. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1888. W. H. THURSTON.

THIS SPACE BELONGS TO RUSSELL,
THE NOTED JEWELER.

Colts for Sale.

RAM LAMBS for SALE.

NOTICE.

This Year's
MYRTLE
CUT and PLUG
SMOKING TOBACCO
FINER THAN EVER.
T & B
In bronze on
EACH PLUG and PACKGAE.

FLESHERTON
Implement
Agency!

J. G. CARSON

Takes this opportunity to thank his many customers for their hearty patronage during the past 8 years and to ask their continued support in his new premises on R. Trimble's corner, opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton. The following is a list of the Implements I handle, all the manufacture of that famous and reliable old firm, Messrs. PATTERSON BROS., Woodstock, Ont.:

Binders,
Reapers,
Mowers,
Rakes,
Waggons,
Buggies,
Sleighs,
Cutters,
Fanning Mills,
Spring Tooth Cultivators,
Grain Drills,
Broad-cut Seeders,
Spring Tooth Harrows,
Iron Harrows,
Two-Furrow Gang Plow,
Plows,
Scufflers,
Turnip Drills,
Land Rollers.

The Advance for
$1 till Jan. 1, 1890.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$5	50	to 5	50
Fall Wheat	$1	10	to 1	15
Spring Wheat	1	10	1	15
Barley	0	50	0	65
Oats	0	34	0	35
Peas	0	58	0	60
Butter	0	17	0	18
Eggs, fresh	0	17	0	17
Potatoes bush	0	75	0	75
Pork	6	50	6	50
Hay per ton	8	00	8	00
Hides	4	50	5	50
Wool		16		18
Sheepskins	0	50	1	00
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	7	0	07
Chickens per pair	0	20	0	80
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	60

The Local News.

What is Happening in Our Own Vicinity.

Oh, these muddy roads!

Curling club members are now hitching up their suspenders, preparatory to the grand "scoop her oop."

Rev. Alexander Grant is expected to preach in Flesherton Baptist Chapel on Thanksgiving day, when there will also be a public tea. Particulars on bills later.

We want to know what is wrong with a lot of our correspondents this week? If you are dead, gentlemen, please send in your obituaries for next week's issue, and oblige!

Dr. Kerr, of Maxwell, called on us on Monday. The Dr. has disposed of his practice and intends leaving us in a few weeks for a foreign field. As yet he is undecided as to exactly where he will locate.

OYSTERS! Miss Hind desires to inform the public that she has fresh oysters, tea, coffee, pastry and confectionery for sale. Go and get a plate of luscious bivalves, and wash them down with a cup of Miss Hinds' delicious coffee. Strain's Block, next door to Russell's.

Rev. R. G. Anderson, late of Fyfe, Scotland, filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church here on Sunday afternoon last. Mr. Anderson has only been out from the old country about six weeks, and expresses himself as very much pleased with this country and its people. He says he would not care to return.

Flesherton had a pleasant visit from A. B. Fawcett, of the Streetsville Review, last week. He arrived on Friday and returned on Monday. Mr. Fawcett is a pleasant gentleman to meet, and we hope he will have a good time while he is with us.

The Meaford Standard remarks that [illegible]

Behold the Pedagogue.

The festive pedagogue is among us. He walketh abroad at night and assembleth together during the day in solemn conclave, debating among himself the best methods of doing several things, chiefest among which is the inflating of his salary and how to live on $250 a year. He looketh cheerful, he dresseth well, he has the run of the town, and knows how to appreciate his freedom as a true gentleman. Behold the Pedagogue!

It is useless to attempt the cure of any disorder, if the blood is allowed to remain impure. Neuralgia and rheumatism are traceable to a disordered condition of the blood, and in numberless cases have been cured by taking a few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

The experience of years furnishes the most convincing evidence that thousands of lives are annually saved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It speedily cures all affections of the throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs.

A Handsome Bag.

Mr. P. Munshaw went out shooting on Thursday last and returned in the evening with seven partridge and one woodcock—the best bag of the season. Peter is a shooter from Shootville.

A Letter Box Wanted.

A correspondent writing from Inistioge desires us to demand of the postmaster there that he insert a letter box in his postoffice for the convenience of the people. We make the demand. Give them a letter box Mr. Postmaster.

A Postmaster Dead.

Mr. Wesley Long, postmaster at Maxwell, died on Friday last of congestion of the lungs. He was buried on Monday. Mr. Long was sick but a short time. He has been postmaster at Maxwell for many years, and was universally liked in his public and private life.

Singing it Out.

Friend Routledge in exuberance of married bliss, as he was lately married, howls out this: "All goods by fortune's hand is given, a wife is a peculiar gift of heaven." Whether this praise or sarcasm we do not know, for some men's statements sometimes go to show, that, if we understood aright their drift, a woman is a blamed "peculiar" gift.

Accident to a Horse.

Rev. Mr. Wa[illegible] Flesh[illegible] with an unfortunate accident by the disabling of his horse. He [illegible]

Ghosts.

[illegible]

Singing Match.

[illegible]

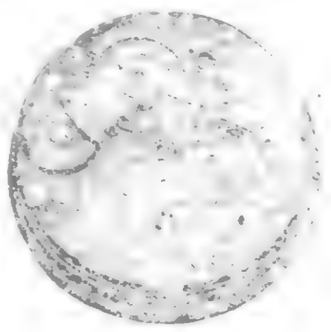
The School Teacher's Soliloquy.

[illegible]

Burglars in Grey.

A despatch [illegible] dated Oct. 20, says [illegible] a gang of professional operating in this [illegible] small villages. Scarce [illegible] that does not bring [illegible] place [illegible] plunder secure [illegible] here has just been [illegible] Vance, of Hepworth, [illegible] twelve miles from [illegible] last evening last his [illegible] entered and [illegible] two suits of clothes and two [illegible] stolen. Mr. Vance keeps [illegible] worth Station [illegible] 25c. [illegible] burglars stole [illegible] to [illegible] over $20 [illegible] Mr. [illegible]

Barber fixtures and business for sale. Apply to W. H. Bo[illegible] Flesherton. Severe illness.



COMPETITION
[illegible]
Fine Gilt and Glass
[illegible]
AND SILVER
Quality and Design selected from
Celtic Greek.
NEXT DOOR TO
[illegible] K. Wardlaw
No Catch Prices represented
OR [illegible]
Can do better for Customers—"Cash" or "Credit"—than any other jeweler on "Grey C[illegible]
Watches carefully and promptly repaired.
JEWELER BRO[illegible]
MARKDALE, ONT.

BORN.

BLAKELY.—At Maxwell, on Friday, Oct. 19th, the wife of Thos. A. Blakely, of a son.

Died.

LONG.—At Maxwell, on Friday, Oct. 19th, Wesley Long, postmaster at Maxwell, aged 54 years.

BELINDA: A BEAUTY

Belinda crushes the letter together contemptuously, flings it up twice or thrice, ball fashion, into the air, then thrusts it away, still in its crumpled state, out of sight, and lapses back into castle building.

"Spain or Clapham." Just as she has for the third time asked herself this fatal question, an Englishman in full afternoon Hyde Park dress emerges from the Hotel d'Isabella, about fifty yards distant from the little place or square where the girl is sitting, and espying her, approaches.

The new-comer is young, florid, not distinctly ill-looking as far as features go, but most distinctly vulgar. The way he wears his hat, his jewelry, his necktie—everything about the man is short—jars on your taste, you know not wherefore. And then he is mosquito bitten! And mosquito bites are not wont to improve the impression of the features, or to confer, even on worthier men than Mr. Jones, the air of distinction.

"Good-afternoon, Miss Belinda. Upon my word you have found out the only bit of shade in the place." Augustus attempts the drawl of the high-bred swell, as he has seen that personage depicted on the stage; not with very marked success.

Belinda pushes her ragged hat a little back from her forehead, stretches out her shabby sandaled feet in the dust, then, glancing up at Mr. Jones much as one small boy glances at another with whom he is inclined to quarrel, but whose strength he measures, begins to whistle.

"I thought yesterday you told me you meant to give up that—that slightly unfeminine accomplishment of yours," he remarks after a minute.

"And I," retorts the girl, "thought you promised never again to make use of that shocking 'Miss Belinda.' If you had pluck enough to say 'Belinda' outright I could bear it. But as you have not, and as you seem to think it necessary to call me something, do say 'Miss O'Shea.' You have no idea how caddish 'Miss Belinda' sounds."

The tomato hue extends itself over poor Mr. Jone's very ears and neck. "Oh! For the future, then it's to be 'Belinda' between us, is it? Only too happy on my part, I am sure. But I must ask one thing back."

He has taken a place beside her, after carefully selecting a comparatively clean patch of turf on which to deposit his Hyde Park splendor. "I must ask one thing back—that you always call me 'Augustus.'"

She looked at him through and through with fearless child's eyes. "'Augustus!' I hope you have brought me some maccaroons, Augustus? Augustus, try not to kick Costa when you think I am not looking. No, I could not. If I saw you every day till I died, and if I lived tobe a hundred years old, I could never call you 'Augustus.' I might do it once, she corrects herself, "half a dozen times even, if you bribed me handsomely; but from my heart, never."

"In other cases you don't appear to feel much shyness about doings," remarks Mr. Jones, cuttingly. "It seems to me that you call half the English and American fellows in the place by their Christian names."

"Ah, they are only boys," says Belinda, with a smile brimful of unconscious coquetry. "You would not have me 'mister' my chums—the fellows I play paume with—would you?"

"I would not have you play 'paume' as you call it, at all," replies the young man, in a tone of deliberate, half-tender patronage. "I like a dash of chic as well as any man." I am afraid poor Augustus pronounced it chick. "But it must be chic of the right kind, bong tong, and all that sort of thing. Now what—what should we think in England of a girl who would be seen playing fives, as you do, and in such company?"

"But then you must remember, I love it passionately," cried Belinda, "passionately to distraction! What do I care about being ladylike? If you could play, yourself, you would not be such a muff as to talk about 'tong'! Ah, the moment," cries the child clasping her graceful dark hands, "the moment when you are twenty all through the air—you know that game is to be made off your own schistera—you strike, you—but of course," breaking off, with mild pity for her hearer's ignorance, "of course it is no use talking paume to people who don't understand paume! Well, then comes the bolero. Surely you would allow me one now and then, Mr. Jones, just between the lights, you know, and under the shadow of the trees?"

"I don't mind the bolero, or fandango, or any other of the native cancans, provided they are danced by the right people," answers Mr. Jones with his drawl. "Quite the reverse. When one of these Basque peasant wenches has gone through her barbarous gesticulations, and brings me her tin cup for payment, I put my sous into it with all the pleasure in life."

Belinda's eyes flashed daggers at him. "I cannot imagine you giving a sou to any one on any occasion with pleasure," she exclaims with spiteful emphasis. "And you speak as you do because you know no better! You don't understand the peasants or their dances. You measure everything by your own Clapham tastes, sir! However, we will not argufy." The reader is asked to pardon this and other linguistic peculiarities on the part of Belinda. "I have my ideas, you yours, and no doubt Rose will back you up in them when she is here. You did not know, by the bye, that my mamma was coming to St. Jean de Luz, did you Mr. Jones?"

Mr. Jones hesitates.

"Rose corresponds with you, I know," cried Belinda, scanning his face. "Don't be ashamed of your little weakness, Mr. Jones. 'Young men are so foolish,' as Rose says. I can see you know, just as well as I do, that my step-mamma is coming to St. Jean de Luz."

"Well, yes, I know that Mrs. O'Shea is coming here, certainly," says Augustus, deliberation having shown him, perhaps, that to tell the truth for once costs nothing. "Indeed I had a few lines from her, written from Paris by to-day's post. I have her letter in my pocket," where, however, he has the discretion to let it rest. "As far as I can make out, we shall have the pleasure of seeing Mrs. O'Shea and Captain Temple arrive this evening."

Up rushes the crimson in a flood over Belinda's face. "Captain Temple! I don't know what you mean by Captain Temple!" she exclaims, suspecting what he means only too well, and coloring with hot shame over her own suspicions. "Rose is coming here alone with her maid, of course."

"Oh, of course!" repeats Augustus, with the slow-affected drawl that irritates Belinda to such desperation. "I don't for a moment mean that Mrs. O'Shea under these, or any other circumstances, would act otherwise than with the most lady-like propriety. Still, when one considers everything, Miss Belinda, there is no great wonder in Captain Temple happening to travel in the south of France just at the time when Mrs. O'Shea and her maid happen to cravel here too!"

His smile, his tone, a sudden scorching remembrance of certain lachrymose allusions in more than one of Rose's recent etters, bring Belinda from suspicion to ertainty.

"If I thought—if I could believe such a thing!" she exclaims, then stops short, both sunburnt fists tight, her lips set together like a small fury's.

"If you could believe that two people who loved each other in their youth—I conclude you have heard the romance story before this? if you could believe that two people who were in love with each other some dozen or more years ago, were fated to marry and be happy at last, what then? asks Augustus. "Mrs. O'Shea's marrying again would not interfere with your life much, as far as I can see."

"If Rose marries again, I swear never to speak her or to her husband while I live," cried Belinda, tempestuously. "I will not believe such disgraceful news until she tells me with her own lips; and I have not the very smallest curiosity in the matter. Is he dark or fair? Good heavens, are you dumb, Mr. Jones? What kind of man, I ask you, is this miserable Captain Temple?"

"Roger Temple is fair—yellow rather, all those Indians fellows are alike; shuts his eye at you as he speaks. I met him once or twice dining at your mamma's before I left town, and we had not two words to say to each other. I don't care for your 'haw-haw,' Dundreary army men," says Augustus. "Too much of the shop about them for my taste."

"Too much of what for your taste?" asked Belinda. With profound disdain. Ah, was not the only human being she ever loved of this same Dundreary army genius as Captain Temple!

"Too much of the shop—their shops. Too much patronage of other fellows whose line doesn't happen to be in ramroads and pipe-clay like their own."

"And I," says the girl, stoutly, "love soldiers, and if ever I marry anybody it shall be a soldier. How different you and are in everything—difference of the blood, I suppose! We O'Sheas are a fighting family. Two great-uncles of mine feel side by side across the hills there at Badajoz"—she indicates by a nod of her head the distant ridge of Spanish Pyreenes—"and my papa was a soldier, and though it happened he never came in for foreign service, did a great many brave acts, I can tell you, during the different riots and electioneerings in Ireland. Most likely you have no connection with the army, Mr. Jones?"

None, except a maternal uncle who was an army tailor, Mr. Jones might answer, if he had a mind to speak the truth. He waives the question adroitly enough, however, by returning to the matter in hand. "Well then, as you are so fond of the fighting profession, Miss O'Shea, you will have an additional reason for loving your new papa."

Belinda snatches up the schistera which lies at her side, and for a moment affairs look threatening. Not much more provocation evidently would it need to fire the war-like blood of the O'Shea's that runs in her veins.

"I—I was going to ask you to come down to Harrambour's," says Mr. Jones, springing up hastily to his feet. "Don't be angry with me, Belinda!" He can call her Belinda at the safe distance that separates them now. "And let us make all our differences up over some maccaroons."

Every man, says the cynic, has his price. Belinda's price, as a very short acquaintance has taught Mr. Jones, is maccaroons.

A child of seventeen, without a sou in the world for maccaroons, and an Augustus Jones, his pocket lined with British banknotes, ready to buy them for her! Does it require a very profound knowledge of human nature to foresee how things are likely to end—unless, indeed, some other actor, offering something sweeter than maccaroons, chance to cross the stage of Belinda's little life drama!

She hesitates, relents, and a minute later they have quitted the place, and are making their way down the principal street of the town toward the maccaroon shop. St. Jean de Luz is taking its wonted afternoon siesta at this hour. The awned balconies are deserted; the very churches, filled morning and evening to overflowing, with fans, prayer-books, and flirtations, are empty. A bullock-dray or two are to be seen in the market-place, the bullocks in their brown holland blouses patiently blinking, with bullock philosophy, at existence; the drivers asleep within the wine shops. A team of close-shorn Spanish mules stand, viciously whisking at the flies with their rat tails, in the shade; the muleteer, his face prone to mother earth, reposes beside them. Other living forms are there none, save an occasional half-broiled Murray-guided Briton, and five or six ghostly cur-dogs—the cur-dogs at St. Jean de Luz never sleep. It being low-water, the river-mouth and harbors are sending forth "liberal smells of all the sunburned South." The distant, mountain sides are absolutely painful to the eye in their shadeless ochre yellow. Heat, as if a very rain of fire, quivering, piercing, intolerable, is everywhere.

And Mr. Jones does not bear heat gracefully. By the time they reach the maccaroon shop Mr. Jones is in a state of evaporation made visible, and anathematizes the climate, pavement, scenery, people, in the very ugliest cockney vernacular, and with the ugliest cockney ignorance.

"He is horribly, horribly vulgar!" thinks Belinda, as she bites her maccaroons and glances from beneath her eyelashes at the dewy, blistered, mosquito-scarred face of her companion. "If maccaroons were only attainable through any other means!"

Which they are not. And the maccaroons are super-excellent, fresh made this morning; and after the maccaroons came a vanilla ice, and a chocolate cream, and more maccaroons! And then of so generous a temper is Augustus this afternoon—then they adjourn from the shop to the refreshing shade of the awning outside, and Belinda is told to call for whatever cooling drink she chooses while Mr. Jones (who holds the firmest English belief as to alcohol and a thermometer at a hundred and ten in the shade going well together) orders himself—oh, in what execrable French—a brandy and seltzer, and prepares to smoke a cigar at her side.

Mr. Jones smokes his cigar; Belinda sips her iced orangeade, Spanish fashion, through a barquilo, beside him; and so a drowsy hour glides away.

"And I must be off," says Belinda as the clocks of the town strike five. "We are all in for a match of paume as soon as the sun is off the upper Place."

"'We!' and who are 'we?'" asks Mr. Jones, with a tender smile. The brandy and seltzer had softened him—but, unfortunately, tender smiles lose half their effect when they are associated with mosquito bites!

"Oh, the usual party, Jack Alston, and Tom and me against the two Washingtons and Maurice la Ferte. Who will you back? You must not judge by what you saw last night. Jack Alston and I can beat the lot when we play our best."

"I should like to bet that you will let Mr. Jack Alston and his friends play their match without you." And now Augustus rises, now the mosquito-bitten face is affectionately, horribly near Belinda's. "I should like to think that you care just enough for me, Miss O'Shea, to give all these fellows up for once, if I ask you."

His tone is more earnest than Belinda has ever heard it yet, and she wavers, or appears to waver. The remembrance of maccaroons that are past, the hope of maccaroons that are to come; vanity gratified by a full-grown man, an Augustus Jones though he be, taking so deep an interest in her affairs—all these considerations, and perhaps something a little deeper than these, sway the girl, and she wavers, casts down her eyelashes, plays irresolutely with the strings of her schistera.

"You will promise me to play no more at that confounded game, either this evening or any other evening!" whispers Augustus with growing emphasis.

Another moment and Belinda will have committed herself—Heaven knows what compromising renunciations! But even as the words rise to her lips, an unexpected ally, against Mr. Jones and on the side of paume-playing, bolero-dancing, and all the other sweet unlawful pleasures of her vagabond life, appears on the scene.

"Costa, why Costa, old boy, where have you been all day? Down, sir, down. When will you learn that Mr. Jones does not value your attentions?"

Costa is a grand looking old Spanish hound, not altogether of purest breed, perhaps, but a noble brute despite the blot upon his escutcheon, possessing much of his nations grave dignity of demeanor, and a face brimful of fine dog intellect and feeling.

"Try not to be frightened, Mr. Jones," says Belinda, glancing maliciously at the expression of her admirer's face. "Perhaps he won't bite if you keep very quiet. Dogs know so well when people are afraid of them. Have you come for maccaroons, my old Costa, eh? You have, have you? Mr. Jones, Costa says he has come for maccaroons." It may be observed that Belinda has not a grain of false pride on the score of begging alms for her friends. "Costa has come for maccaroons, and I have not a single sou left in the world!"

She stoops down, and with one arm bent fondly round the old dog's neck, looks up, with the prettiest beseeching air imaginable, at Augustus Jones. But Jones buttons up his pockets. He is not altogether a miser, as different sections of the London world have practically learned; will spend money freely enough on riding horses, bracelets, opera stalls, churches that need snowy windows, philanthropic effort that publishes printed lists: on his vices, his virtues, his anything. But maccaroons for a dog! This absolute waste, this simple flinging of money for the sake of flinging it into the sea, Mr. Jones cannot stand. Looking upon the folly as a speculative investment, means to a possible end, 'twere different. "You desire to marry yourself, as you consider, well," could some voice whisper to him; "the ambition of your heart has been ever to wed your gold to aristocratic blood; and despairing of better chances, you would fain win the out-at-elbow little Arab, the granddaughter of the great Earl of Liskeard, for your wife. Humor her whims, even this present babyish one, if you would hope to succeed"—could Mr. Jones realize this as truth the maccaroons were Costa's. But he does not realize it. He is devoid alike of sympathy and of fact; qualities, both of them, springing from imagination, not reason; and goes no further than his own lights illume the path. He detests all dogs, detests Costa in particular, with the bitterest hatred, that which springs from fear. And as I have said, Mr. Jones buttons up his pockets.

"Maccaroons for Costa!" repeats Belinda, stretching out to him a little sun-burned palm. "Not like them? You should see whether he likes them! Try the experiment. Why, when Maria Jose was here, we gave him two francs' worth all at once, and he ate them up before you could say 'Jack Robinson.'"

"Did he, indeed" says Augustus, looking disgusted whether at the allusion to a rival, or at the vulgarity of Belinda, who shall say? "Then the only thing I can remark is, I am sorry Mr. Maria Jose had not better sense than to waste his money on such absurdity."

Quitting her hold on Costa, Belinda starts to her feet, and stands upright and determined before Augustus, her small child's face flaming red as any pomegranate flower. "Mr. Jones," she exclaims, "if I ask you to give Costa two francs' worth of maccaroons at this moment, do you mean to tell me you would not do it?"

"I should prefer giving the money to the first worthy object of commiseration who happens to pass along the street," Mr. Jones answers didactically

"Will you give Costa one franc's worth of maccaroons, now, this instant?"

"I—I never heard of feeding a dog on maccaroons; I think it a deuced ridiculous waste of money," stutters Jones, without offering to put his hand into his pocket. "I can be as liberal as most people, Miss Belinda, on the right occasion; but if I have a predilection, and a very strong one, too, it's against seeing good money wasted."

Belinda looks at him, from his mosquito-bitten forehead down to the tips of his Bond street boots: looks at him with those clear eyes of hers, not only up and down bodily, but morally through and through.

"Oh! I understand. I know now why Costa hated you from the first. Dogs are not such fools. If you have a predilection, you say, 'tis against seeing good money wasted. If I have a predilection, and a very strong one, too, 'tis for wasting it. Money—bah! what is money? So many dirty bits of silver stamped with this head or that, and good just for the quantity of sweet stuff it will bring you. To spend, to waste, to scatter money to the winds, is one of my predilections; paume-playing, bolero-dancing, liberty—sweet liberty—are the others! And I am no more likely to change in my opinions than you are in yours. Good-bye, Mr. Jones."

She turns on her heel, and swinging her schistera to and fro in a way to shock Mr. Jones' nicest susceptibilities, walks off; Costa, his head well erect, as though he felt himself master of the situation, at her side.

CHAPTER III.

LIGHT WEDDED, LIGHT WIDOWED.

St. Jean De Luz is awakening from its afternoon siesta; by the time, an hour later, that the Paris train arrives, every nook, every corner of the quaint little Basque town is full of life and color.

As six o'clock strikes a carriage draws up, with the extra flourishing of whips indicative of new arrivals to be fleeced, before the Grand Hotel Isabella. Waiters, chambermaids, mine host himself, all come out, salaaming, to secure their prey; and forth steps an elegant fool of the very first water—English, and of the sex whose helplessness is its charm—upon the pavement.

"Mes bagages—ou est mes bagages?" sighs a soft voice in that curious language known as French in suburban boarding-schools, but unintelligible south of the Channel. "Dix bagages, touts adresees, and a piece of blue ribbon on each. Dix, ten oh, would anybody make them understand! Dix." Holding up ten helpless lavender gloved fingers. "Really, Spencer, I think you might try and be of some little use."

At this appeal another elegant fool (but of second water—a cheap copy of the first flimsy glace silk instead of richest cord) steps languidly forth from the carriage. She too is admirably helpless, and she too speaks a tongue incomprehensible out of England; the polyglot smatter of advertising abigails who "talk three languages with ease, and are willing to undertake any duties, not menial, while on the Continent."

They address themselves to the host, to the waiters, to the coachman. Nobody understands them; they understand nobody. "If I had only be-spoken Belinda!" sighs the lady piteously. "If you had had the slightest consideration, Spencer, you might have reminded me to telegraph to Miss O'Shea."

The words have scarcely left her lips when a knot of little lads, English and French, shoulder their way along the street. At the word "Belinda," the foremost of the gang turns and nudges the boy who comes next. They all stop, they all stare; one of them gives a low meaning whistle across his shoulder, and in another second or two Belinda appears upon the scene, her battered hat more battered than when we saw her first, two hours ago; the flush of heat and victory on her brow, her espadrilles so kicked to pieces that how they kept upon her feet at all is miraculous. She passes along, whistling, forgetful of Mr. Jones and their quarrel, of Rose's letter and threatened arrival, forgetful of everything except the game of paume she has just played and won, when suddenly the elegant fool number one looks full into the girl's face and, electrified, recognizes her.

"What, Belinda, can that be you?"

"What, Rose, arrived already!"

"How dirty she is!" (mentally.)

"How painted she is!" (all but aloud.)

And then the ladies kiss; hugely to the entertainment of Belinda's comrades, who have certainly never beheld Miss O'Shea engaged in any of these feminine amenities.

"You—you have grown, I think," says Rose, scrutinizing with horror-stricken eyes the girl's ragged, dust-stained clothes, and remembering with all the shame of which her small soul is capable that the lady's maid scrutinizes them also. "And you are sunburnt—you are very sunburnt, Belinda."

"I should say I was, just! If you had been playing paume under such a sun as this, you would be sunburnt too. But where is your maid? You don't mean to say that you have travelled all the way from Brompton to St. Jean de Luz alone?"

Rose at this gives a side-glance at the gorgeous abigail, and whispers in Belinda's ear: "That is my maid, my dear, and the most helpless, the most unbearable creature in the world. Still, as I had her from Lady Harriet Howes—and a particular favor her ladyship made of it—I don't like to change. It's an immense thing" plaintively, "for one's maid to have lived in a good style of place, you know."

"I know!" repeats Belinda, with her mocking gamin laugh. "Yes, I am just the fellow to know about fine ladies and their maids, am I not! But do you mean to say, Rose, that you and that magnificently dressed young woman have travelled from one end of France to the other without getting run away with?"

"I—I have not been altogether without an escort," responds the widow, and blushes.

Belinda thinks she must have been wrong about the paint; not knowing that there are women who blush and paint too.

"I was fortunate enough in Paris to come across a very old and dear friend, who took me about a little, and then, somehow or other, I met with him again at Bordeaux. Curious coincidence, was it not?" laying her plump hand with girlish playfulness upon Belinda's slender arm. "But I have more curious things still to tell you when we are alone. Mes bagages." This to the dignified Basque coachman, who, with the air of a prince, his cap on his head, stands waiting to be paid. "Belinda, will you make that savage comprehend that I want my luggage? Ten large boxes, tell him, each with a blue ribbon, and—oh, the awful dog! Some one take the awful dog away!" Costa has been critically examining the new-comers, mistress and maid, and conveys his poor opinion of them to Belinda by a short, gruff bark. "I thought all the dogs in France had to be muzzled by law. Spencer, Spencer, get between me and that monster!"

It is long before Rose can be made to believe that her precious boxes will be brought up from the station like all other people's boxes, on the hotel omnibus. Then, when rooms have to be selected for her, arise new troubles. She must have a bed-room communicating with a drawing-room (and the drawing-room must have a balcony covered with flowers), a bed-room near some one else's in case of fire—a bed-room not too near some one else's in case of their talking in their sleep. And Spencer's must be on the same floor. And is there any way of ascertaining who slept in the rooms last? Will Belinda request the people of the house to swear that there has been no one here with the smallpox this summer?

"Swear? Why, a Basque will swear anything you ask him," cries the girl mischievously. "Of course people with smallpox have slept here this summer, as they have at every hotel in the place. What does it matter, Rose? You will be so mosquito-bitten, like our friend Augustus, by to-morrow morning that you won't recognize yourself in the glass. A touch of smallpox more or less cannot matter."

With which scanty consolation, Rose, the tears rising in her foolish frightened eyes, has to be contented.

She languishes away to a mirror, and taking off her veil, begins to dust her delicate rose-and-white face with her cambric handkerchief.

"I have grown quite an old woman, have I not?" She puts a smile on the corners of her lips, then turns and presents her face for the girl's admiration. "I dare say you would hardly have known me if you had met me, without warning, in the street. Now, tell me the honest truth, dear; I hate flattery."

Rose, at this present time of her mortal life, has approached as near as it is possible for a good-looking woman ever to do to her fortieth year. But, if there be truth in that delightful French adage that a woman is the age she looks, we may call her nine and twenty; of course I mean after her art labors are over for the day.

elinda examines her with eyes that would pierce all the enamel, all the rice powder in the world. "We none of us get younger, Rose; you no more than other people. But you look well in health. I am surprised to see you out of mourning," she adds, giving a cold glance at her step-mother's white-and-lilac finery. "Has your uncle Robert been dead six or eight weeks? I do not remember exactly."

"Eight weeks! Oh, Belinda dear, how thoughtless you are." Rose, to do her justice, feels far more amiably disposed toward Belinda than Belinda feels toward Rose. Life flows at its smoothest just at present with Cornelius O'Shea's widow. Dear Uncle Robert opportunely removed to a better world; his will all that could be desired by surviving relations; good looks within the reach of one's own industry still, and a lover, handsome, young, well-born, to crown all. How can Rose feel anything but amiable, especially now that she sees how unfortunately plain this poor little alien step-daughter of hers has grown up! "Uncle Robert has been dead more than three months, and I am only just in second mourning. The milliners tell me it's ridiculously deep, and indeed I remember seeing Lady Harriet wear scarlet six weeks after old Miss Howe's death; but I—I know what a friend I have lost! Of course I could not enter upon these delicate subjects in a letter, Belinda, but Uncle Robert has left me everything, unconditionally. Money, house, plate—everything. I only hope I may be guided!" says Rose, turning up her eyes, "guided to make a right use of what is intrusted to me."

Colder and harder grows the expression on Belinda's face. Can the girl forget by whose absence, whose death, Rose's good fortune was purchased?

"Oh, you are very lucky, Rose, very! But, somehow, I cannot find words just now to wish you joy. What are your future plans? Are you going to live in that big house at Brompton all alone?"

Mrs. O'Shea's eyes sink to the ground. "I—I have many things to talk to you about, Belinda, as I hinted in my letter. But when I have told all my little story I am sure you will feel for me in my position. The romance of two young lives!" murmurs Rose, modestly apologetic. "Love sacrificed to duty! A heart slowly breaking during a dozen years! Belinda, my dear girl, you have heard—you must have heard of Roger Temple?"

But not by a word or look will Belinda assist the widow's bashfulness, or help her forward in her confession. "I believe that I have heard of such a person somewhere," she answers, in a tone of the most freezing indifference. "Your friend, Mr. Jones, mentioned him, I think, Rose. But I pay so little attention to anything Mr. Jones says."

(To be Continued).

How to Soothe a Dying Man.

Nurses in hospitals are rather apt to lay too much stress on the advantages received by the patients and their duty of thankfulness; but still it is the poor soldier who suffers most from always having his causes to be grateful flung in his teeth. Witness the following story: Chaplain "So poor Hopkins is dead. I should have liked to speak to him once again and soothe his last moments; why didn't you call me?" Hospital orderly—"I didn't think you ought to be disturbed for 'Opkins, sir, so I just sooth'd him as best I could myself." Chaplain—"Why, what did you say to him?" Orderly—"'Opkins,' sez I, 'you're mortal bad.' 'I am,' sez 'e. 'Opkins,' sez I, 'I don't think you'll get better.' 'No,' sez 'e. 'Opkins,' sez I, 'you're going fast.' 'Yes,' sez 'e. 'Opkins,' sez I, 'I don't think you can hope to go to 'eaven.' 'I don't think I can,' sez 'e. 'Well, then, 'Opkins,' sez I, 'you'll go to 'ell.' 'I suppose so,' sez 'e. 'Opkins,' sez I, 'you ought to be werry grateful as there's a place perwided for you, and that you've got somewhere to go.' And I think 'e 'eard, sir, and then he died."—Hospital.

The wealthiest living Welshman is said to be G. W. Taylor, of Denbighshire, Wales. On his Austrian estate, which he sold recently, he realized the enormous sum of $21,000,000.

If the able women who are wasting too much time writing essays to prove that "marriage is a failure" were compelled to sit up all night attending to a sick, fretful and feverish baby, they would soon change their minds and declare that marriage howling success.—Scranton Truth.

Jamie's Comin' Hame to Me

(From the Dundee News.)

By the river sadly sitting,
Sat a maiden at her knitting,
While the sang birds fast were flitting
To their hame in yonder tree.
Sweet her silvery voice was ringing
Thro' the vale the echo bringing;
This the burden o' her singing:
Jamie's comin' hame to me.

Oh! the days are lang and dreary,
Ance sae happy and sae cheery,
And m' life is sad and weary
Sin' he gaed across the sea.
He has left me lonely, mourning,
Longing for his safe returning,
Love within my bosom burning;
But he's comin' hame to me.

Fast the summer leaves are dying
While the autumn winds are sighing,
And the ship is homeward prying;
Soon I will my laddie see—
See his face my cares beguiling,
Welcome him frae danger toiling,
Soon I hope to see him smiling;
Jamie's comin hame to me.

Oh the tenderness, the feeling,
Like angelic music stealing,
Oh! the love the face revealing,
As she sang her melody,
And the strain so sweetly flowing
Mingled with the soft winds blowing,
Singing 'mid the sunset glowing—
Jamie's comin hame to me.

Latest from Ireland.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson and his son are at present in county Clare.

Three Irishmen have been Prime Ministers of Victoria, Australia.

Mr. P. Mahoney, M.P., has presented Mrs. Gladstone with a Kerry heifer from the Irish Exhibition.

The new schools of the Christian Brothers, which have been erected at a cost of £6,000, were opened at Castlebar the other day.

Mr. Mitchell, Superintendent of the Great Southern & Western Railway, died very suddenly at Kilkee, on the 16th ult., while entering the sea to have a bath.

Rev. James White, of Carrickfergus, has been presented with a purse of £300 at the celebration of his jubilee. His church is one of the oldest in Ireland, having been organized in 1620.

A sad drowning accident, by which two little children, daughter of Mr. Stewart, Nun's Island, lost their lives, occurred recently at the Salmon Weir. They fell in opposite the jail, and when found life was extinct.

An old woman, named Bridget Manning, died on September 24th, in the Drogheda Union, of which she had been an inmate for some years past, leaving behind her the sum of £120. She had no known relatives.

A costly and handsome stained glass window has been erected in Rathgar Church, Dublin, "In loving memory of the Rev. Wm. Fleming Stevenson, D.D., first pastor of this church; ordained March 1st, 1860; died Sept. 16th, 1886."

Rev. Thomas Olden, vicar of Ballyclough, Mallow, under the title of "Holy Scriptures in Ireland One Thousand Years Ago," is about to publish a translation of an Irish commentary on St. Paul's epistles ascribed to the eighth century, and preserved in a manuscript at Wurtzburg.

Aughavana, the famous shooting lodge of Mr. Parnell, has been sold by him to the Government. The glen is one of the most historic spots in Ireland. It was there Lord DeWilton was defeated with much bloodshed by Feagh MacHugh O'Bryne, and some of the chief exploits during the Irish rising of 1798 were witnessed in the glen.

Eaten by an Alligator.

A horrible story was brought to the city to-day from Ossabaw Island. Three days ago half a dozen negro boys were swimming in Buckhead Creek. Marck Jackson, 18 years old, swam out beyond the others and was treading water when suddenly he gave a shriek, threw up his arms and disappeared. There was commotion in the water and the other boys hurried ashore. A few minutes after a 'gator's nose was seen for a moment sticking up above the water. Johnson's parents did not accept the 'gator story. They thought that the boy had the cramps and drowned. They got some of their neighbors to drag the creek. Several hours were spent in searching for the body, but it could not be found. Yesterday the boys found a suspicious spot on the bar, making out in the creek, and the sand had been terribly disturbed, but the tracks were too large for a turtle's. They began digging in the loose sand, and were horrified at uncovering a human body. When all the sand had been removed the trunk of the missing body was seen. The legs and arms were gone and the body was horribly mangled. It is the 'gator's habit to bury its food, and it is supposed the negro boy was samian's victim.—Savannah Special in the Macon Telegraph.

A Rat Steals $177.

A Brantford correspondent sends the following: Charles Tomlinson, night watchman at the Plewes mill, in Holmedale, had an extraordinary experience yesterday. He was doing some work at about 5 a.m., and took off his coat and vest, the latter containing a roll of bills to the value of $177. When he proceeded to put on his things again he discovered that the money had disappeared, and at once came to the conclusion that the rats, of which there were a number in the vicinity, must be responsible for the theft. Acting upon this impression, he searched high and low until 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when his diligence was rewarded by discovering the missing roll on a sill in the basement near a rat hole. The bills were somewhat gnawed, but otherwise they will prove just as serviceable as ever.

Conclusive Evidence

Myrtle—He's awfully attentive to her, you know.

Lily—How far has it gone?

Myrtle—Very far, I'm afraid. He held her prayer-book upside down at church yesterday, and I'm sure I heard him say "woman" instead of "amen."

—Rather a novelty has been introduced lately in the shape of a noiseless clock for sick rooms, the invention being coupled with a night-lamp. When the lamp is lighted the necessary diminution takes place by combustion. At other times a mechanical arrangement allows the water to drop in the regular fashion. The fluid escapes at a uniform rate and keeps both clock and lamp a-going.

LIFE IN MANITOBA.

The Freaks of the Frost and the Prospects of Settlers.

DELICIOUS PRAIRIE SCENERY.

A Country Without Rain From September Till Spring.

We have been favored with a perusal of an interesting letter written by Mr. James Aikenhead, the well-known Toronto wholesale merchant, who is now visiting in the neighborhood of Brandon. It was addressed to his son, Thos. E., and from it the following extracts are made:

As every thoughtful person in Ontario takes an interest more or less in the wheat crop of Manitoba, I suppose you would like me to say something on that subject. From all I could learn from farmers and storekeepers at Brandon, Griswold, Oak Lake and Virden, there will not be more than half the crop saved. The frost has not merely damaged the wheat this year, it has utterly destroyed it. The reason of that is that seeding time came two weeks later than usual, and the frost caught the grain in a state of development when it was not able to bear it, and the result was that there was scarcely anything at all in the ear. Other years frozen wheat could be sold for at least half price, or could be kept for seed for the coming season, as it answered just as well for that purpose as if it had not been frozen, or on a pinch you could make bread of the flour, which could well be used by parties that could not afford to be too particular. In my journeying to and from the above named places I have passed thousands and thousands of acres that the owners will never attempt to make any use whatever of. Many of the farmers have already burned their wheat; one can see fires in every direction; others, who do not intend to use that land next year, leave the crop standing to be removed when they have more leisure. The frost has been very erratic in its operations and no one can account for this. It has taken the country in sections. One man in Oak Lake told me he considered himself well off, he had only four acres frozen, but his brother, who owned the farm next to his, had not enough for seed for next year. The same way the party I am stopping with has not been damaged at all, and his brother, who only lives two miles away, has actually no wheat. Then again, some have had a part of their crop slightly damaged and the rest good; but cases of that kind appear to be very rare. Some parties tell you very philosophically that as a Province they will not be worse off than they were last year; that if half the crop is lost, still as much more will come in as did last year, for they are getting nearly or altogether twice as much for their wheat as they did last year. This will be very consoling to those who have lost half and will get as much for the balance as they got last year for double the quantity, but I don't see where the comfort comes in for the poor fellows who have little or no wheat. I think they at least will be very much worse off, whatever the Province may do.

When I came to this Province I had an idea, which I think is very prevalent in Ontario with parties who have never visited Manitoba, that is, that the prairie is one continual level, which soon becomes very monotonous. No idea could be more erroneous. About three miles from here you come to a chain of hills that extend for a great many more miles than I can tell or find out by inquiry, but I know by experience that a drive among these hills is one of the greatest pleasures that a man could possibly have. Get in a comfortable rig behind a good span of horses—if you have the ribbons in your own hand so much the better. At first you get up quite a nice little hill; as soon as you reach the top you see one a little higher and make your way to it to find that you have half a dozen to choose from, and you have to select one to bring you to a higher plane. At last you see one and you think that when you reach there you will surely be at the highest point of the ridge, but when you get there you find that hill top rises above hill top in every direction till at last you feel quite sure that you have got among the everlasting hills in more senses of the word than one. As you go darting along from hill to hill you feel the air very invigorating. It is that in all parts of this country, but I think there is an additional flavor about the air in the hills; it is delicious—you feel that you want to drink it in. When at last you have reached the top of the ridge the prospect in every direction is grand beyond description.

Another thing that takes very much away from the monotony is what are here called bluffs. They are patches of red willows, very stunted; never grow very high, and seldom reach three inches in diameter. It is not thought good to have many of them on a farm, but a few of them are very convenient near the house. The fowl are very fond of them, and delight to go off and find a place for themselves to build a nest. They also supply plenty of firewood, good enough for summer use, but not heavy enough for winter. If near the house they also afford a great amount of shelter from the stormy winds that blow. There are often swales in the centre of the bluffs. A swale is a natural hollow in the land. In the spring, when the snow melts, the swales are all full of water, and wild ducks on all of them. There are some very extensive swales. As the summer advances the small ones gradually dry up, and the wild geese and ducks flock in great numbers to the larger ones.

I will mention only one other break in on the monotony, that is, the ravines—you meet with them in almost every direction. When you come first to the edge of one and look down at the road you think it must be very dangerous to drive a span of horses down there and up again at the other side, but when you have gone through them a few times you get rid of that feeling. The ravines also have their uses at this season of the year, when all the small swales are dried up and the large ones are too far away. The farmers have to send the cattle to the ravines to drink. They have to go from the farm that I am stopping at present, but they have not to go far in any of the ravines till they come to hollows where there is plenty of water for the cattle. They have no fall rains in this country. They never expect to see rain, except it may be a passing shower, from the 1st of September till the following spring.

They have no barns here, all the wheat is stacked in the field when it is cut, four stacks forming a square with a space in the centre for the threshing machine to pass in. The machine is fed from four stacks. When the threshing is over the grain is brought to the granary to be winowed and sacked ready for market, and the straw is all burnt up. No value is set on wheat straw. A farmer keeps as much oat straw as he thinks he will require for bedding the cattle. If hay should run short in the spring the oat straw can be fed to the cattle, and it will keep them in some kind of condition till the hay comes in. But no use at all is found for wheat straw.

IT IS RIGHT TO KICK.

Better Do So Than Submit to Being Imposed Upon.

I have met the railroad hog a great many times, writes M. Quad in the Detroit Free Press. I never meet him without making a kick. He is growing scarcer every day, and I sometimes flatter myself that I have contributed to drive him out. When I left Toledo for Cincinnati the other day the train was crowded and people were standing up in every coach. In my car was a man occupying two seats. He had a bad looking head on him, and he cared so little our rights for that he did not look up from his book. There were five of us standing up, and I said to the group:

"Gentlemen, there are three seats for which we have paid. Let us take possession."

"He'll kick and raise a row."

"But we'll kick and raise a bigger one."

"Yes, but what's the use of quarrelling with a hog?"

"It is just such men as you who have made him a hog. You have allowed him to impose on you until he has come to think he owns the railroad."

Not one of the four would move. I went to the other end of the car, where three women were crushed into one seat, picked up a 12-year-old boy near by, and walked up to the hog and asked:

"Have you paid for four seats here?"

"That's my business!" he promptly replied.

"And mine and the public's."

I cleared the seat of his baggage, seated the woman and the boy, and then crowded in beside the hog. He made an awful row but it was useless. He was left with what he had paid for, and we got what our tickets called for. Let every passenger kick on the railroad hog, and he must go.

One day last spring there were 10 of us at a hotel table in Nashville. The soup was scorched and no one could eat it. Not a potato brought to us was done. The milk for the coffee had turned. I invited the others to go to the office with me and kick. They were drummers every one, but not one would go. When people speak of drummers as kickers they are way off. They will put up with more and do less complaining than any other class of men on earth. In the present case one of them spoke for all when he said:

"Yes, things are bad and ought to be righted, but we are here only for the meal and it won't pay us to kick."

I went out alone. The landlord was in the office, and I asked:

"How long since you were in the dining-room?"

"A week, I guess."

"You don't oversee the meals?"

"No."

"Well, please go to the head table and taste the milk, examine the potatoes and smell of the soup."

He departed at once. When he returned he was hopping mad. The head waiter was called out and dressed down, the head cook got nicely peeled, and the landlord shook my hand and said:

"That kick of yours will benefit this house $5,000. I had no idea things were running thus."

The natural inference with him was that as long as no one kicked everything must be going all right and everybody satisfied. A thousand men had no doubt gone away mad and injured his house.

A THIEF'S FATE.

Shot Dead While Trying to Bite Off a Young Woman's Finger.

An Indianapolis despatch says: Jesse Mason, who lives near the village of Stilesville, Hendricks county, was paid some money on Saturday. That night, about 8 o'clock, Logan York, of that neighborhood, with one of his associates, went to Mason's house and asked for matches. While Mason turned to get them York and his companion rushed into the room. Miss Mason came from the family room, and, taking in the situation, seized a chair, with which she attacked York. He seized her hands, put one of her fingers in his mouth and was biting it off when her brother, Oran Mason, ran to her assistance and, placing a shotgun over her shoulder, shot York in the face, instantly killing him. The other man escaped.

Is a Mormon Elder a Clergyman?

An Ottawa telegram says: An inquiry has been received by the Department of Justice from a resident at Wilberforce, Ont., as to whether or not a Mormon elder can legally celebrate marriage in this Province. The reply was that Chap. 131, R. S. Ontario, provided that a minister or clergyman of any religious denomination might legally solemnize marriage between two persons not otherwise incapacitated, the parties being licensed or the banns having been first duly published, and that it was a question of fact whether or not a Mormon elder was a minister or clergyman within the meaning of the statute.

A Terrible Life.

"I don't understand women," remarked a postman, "and"—after a pause—"I don't believe I want to, either."

"What's the matter?"

"If I hand a letter to a woman she looks at me severely and says: 'What! only one?' If I give her six she says: 'What! only six?' and if I had a hundred for her she would make the same remark. If I have only a paper to deliver—well, it's a terrible life to lead."

The Prince of Wales has discarded brown flannels this year for a gray suit.

Rev. Donald McGillivray was ordained as a missionary of the Presbyterian Church to China at St. James' Square Church Toronto, last night.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY

Lady Stanley has promised to visit the Ottawa convents shortly.

Counsel finished their argument in the suit against the Ontario Investment Association on Saturday.

The four Chinamen still continue to be the temporary wards of the Grand Trunk Railway at Niagara Falls.

A man named Dierch, second officer of the ship Sidderha, lying at Quebec, attempted suicide yesterday, but was rescued.

Thomas Demers, employed by Messrs. Breaky, lumber merchants, of Etchemin, Que., was killed on Friday by some cars which he was loading passing over him.

Mr. D. W. Newcombe, the postmaster of Yarmouth Centre, who was stricken with paralysis while stepping out of his buggy at his son's residence in St. Thomas, died on Saturday.

On Saturday Robert Swanton, barber, of St. Thomas, accused of the theft of $375 from Dan Coughlin, cattle buyer, and arrested on suspicion some days since, confessed his guilt.

A farmer named Peter T. McIntosh, who resides at Glen Falloch, in the Township of Charlottenburg, near Cornwall, was struck by a freight train on Friday night while walking along the track near Loney's Corners, and instantly killed.

Mr. Mung Koon, merchant, of Montreal, who was naturalized as a British subject in 1886, and has resided in Canada for five years, is very indignant because the United States authorities will not allow him to proceed to New York to attend to his business. He is anxious to test the case in the law courts if that is possible.

David Hill, of Strathroy, died on Friday night. His death was brought about by the exertions he had made in nursing and attending some of his friends who had been taken ill with diphtheria. Having been much weakened by his attention to them he administered some medicine to himself incautiously, which so prostrated him that he was unable to recover. He was buried at St. Marys this morning.

On Friday afternoon a quarrel occurred at Englishtown, near Port Hope, between Stephen Barkwell and Wm. Mitchell, a ship carpenter, who was digging in a potato patch belonging to Mrs. Nelson and to whom Barkwell had lent a rake. While asking for the rake angry words occurred between Barkwell and Mitchell, and the latter used his hoe, he says in self-defence, and inflicted ugly wounds on Barkwell's right hand. Mitchell was arrested.

Henry Morris and Charles Jarvis, two youths of London West, who had a good time a week ago with money belonging to the father of the latter, were before Judge Elliot Saturday afternoon on the charge of stealing money. The evidence was clear against them, and young Jarvis was sentenced to four years in the reformatory for the offence. Morris was allowed out under suspended sentence. He was accused of receiving the money, knowing it to have been stolen.

About 3 o'clock yesterday morning a number of citizens of Smith's Falls were alarmed by a loud report. It was thought by some that an earthquake had taken place, but investigation revealed the fact that the post-office had been robbed. Burglars forced an entrance through the iron door at the back of the building and completely ransacked the office safe, which was literally destroyed by the nitro-glycerine. About $500 worth of stamps, $40 to $50 cash, and two tin boxes containing Mayor Ferguson's (the postmaster) private papers are missing. The citizens turned out in large numbers yesterday and scoured the neighborhood without success.

Mr. Gladstone has found time to write an article entitled "Queen Elizabeth in Reaction and in Reform" for the November "Nineteenth Century."

Emperor William and King Humbert reviewed 33,000 troops at Camp Centocelle, Rome, on Saturday. Ten thousand spectators gathered to witness the review. Emperor William repeatedly expressed his admiration of the bearing of the men. He especially praised the manœuvres of the Bersagliere and mountain artillery.

Public concern about the Whitechapel murders, though no longer at white heat, is smouldering and ready to break out again in a panic if occasion offers. Not much has been gained by the coroner's inquest, and little that is either new or important is revealed. The police are still daily assailed for their inability to discover the murderer. Socialist leaders, notably those who cannot forget or forgive their defeat at Trafalgar square, are publishing elaborate attacks on the whole police system. The effort to drive Sir Charles Warren out of office is continued, with no visible result.

The German Emperor's visit to Rome interests the English, irritates the French, rouses the Italians to enthusiasm, and produces in Berlin that solid satisfaction which springs from the success of a great policy. Italy regards the Emperor as her guest. Yet he has gone from the Quirinal to the Vatican, only changing carriages by the way at the German Embassy, and the Pope has received him as cordially as the King. European journals do not push enterprise to the point of professing to state what passed at this memorable interview. There is, however, a general agreement that at Rome as at Vienna the young Emperor has shown unfailing tact in difficult positions.

Perhaps no incident in the history of the week has created so much amusement as the appearance of Sir William Harcourt in a new character, as an apostle of temperance and chairman of a temperance meeting. Sir Wilfrid Lawson claims the credit of converting him, but Sir William's movements have always been considered with reference to current politics. The temperance people were strong enough to force the Ministry to abandon the licensing clauses of last session's Local Government Bill. Sir William and his friends, finding themselves compelled to elect between the publicans and the teetotallers, have cast in their lot with Sir Wilfrid Lawson's United Kingdom Alliance.

J. H. Zehner, of East Saginaw, Mich., a poor man who during the summer kept a peanut and flower stand, has just drawn $5,000 in the New Orleans lottery.

Wm. Jarvis, aged 12 years, shot Pearl Kelly, aged 5, yesterday afternoon with a pistol at Waterloo, N.Y. The boy told the girl to stand off and see if he could shoot her eye out. The girl complied and he fired, the ball taking effect over her eye. She is dangerously injured, and the doctor thinks she cannot recover.

Al. Moore, a young man mixing in social circles and of good family (says an East Saginaw, Mich., despatch), employed in a drug store in Saginaw and latterly in a drug store on this side, while under the influence of morphine, it is supposed, remembered the combination of Mr. Bernep's safe, went there, opened it and took $60. He was arrested and bound over to the Circuit Court. In default of $500 bail he is in durance vile.

A. O. U. W.

Important Decision Regarding Liability of the Order.

A decision has been rendered in the Supreme Court of Iowa in the Ancient Order of United Workmen controversy. The case came from Clinton county, in that State, where Henry Bock was a member of Schiller Lodge. After the division in the Order in 1882, at which time Schiller Lodge remained with the State organization, Bock and several other members united in organizing a new lodge called Loyal Lodge. The Grand Lodge—National branch—refused to issue to him a new certificate without the surrender of the former one. Bock kept up his dues in both lodges until his death. The State Grand Lodge paid the full amount of the certificate held by his wife, taking up the receipted certificate. Like claim was then made upon the Loyal Grand Lodge, but payment was refused without the surrender of the certificate, which the claimant could not produce. Suit being brought, the District Court found for the defendant. The Supreme Court affirms the finding on the ground that Bock had only one contract of insurance, the full amount of which plaintiff has received.

Points to Young Writers.

There is a great deal in sending the article to the journal for which it isn't at all adapted.

Wait at least two days before you write to inquire why you haven't heard about the article.

When your article is finished, don't revise it. Above all, don't prune it; that might strengthen it, but it will also shorten it.

Write on paper foolscap size, or on wall paper if it is more handy. It creases so beautifully when you cram it into the envelope.

Use pale blue ink, and don't aim at legibility. If you have no blue ink, black ink that has been frozen and thawed out three or four times will do as well.

Should the editor, through dementia or the idotic fortuity of circumstances, accept your article, send him another right off. In fact, keep sending them. Load them in a gatling gun and make a target of him.

If you live near the publication office, don't send your MS., but take it yourself. Read it to the editor; read it boisterously, so that others within hearing may enjoy it. They may doubt the massiveness of your brain, but not the capacity of your lungs. Get into the editor's lap, if possible, walk all over him, figuratively speaking.

A Plausible Reason.

Jack—Say, Dick, why don't you marry that Miss Jones, if you esteem her so highly?

Dick—There are serious objections to such a step, Jack.

Jack—Objections? I am sure she is pretty enough, amiable, intelligent, of good family, and not without worldly inheritance. What possible objection can you have?

Dick—I s'pose I can tell you something in confidence and you won't repeat it?

Jack—Every time, old boy. What is it?

Dick—The objections were filed by Miss Jones.

The Season's Manly Sports.

Mrs. Scrubbins—Oh, dear! I'll be so glad when the hunting and fishing season is over. My husband is awfully fond of such manly sports, but he always overexerts himself.

Caller—I should think he would learn by experience.

"Well, he don't. He got back last night so tired he could hardly walk, and this morning he's upstairs with the awfulest headache and he can't eat a thing. Such a time as he must have had keeping out of the way of snakes. He thinks he sees 'em yet."

Mr. Levy-Lawson, proprietor of the London Daily Telegraph, is dead.

—The new hussar coat is very stylish, with its black silk passementeries docked with gold on the jacket fabric of deep blue or Russian-green cloth. Sometimes they are decorated with aiguillettes or tags, with gold or silver points. The peculiar style of these military coats consists in the superb fit of the shoulders, the majority of them being slightly wadded.

—Husband (on his return from business)—Why, my dear, what is the matter? You look ill. Wife (faintly)—Oh, John, I've just been reading an almanac, and I find I have twenty-seven diseases, any one of which may prove fatal.

Mr. G. W. Newcombe, Yarmouth Heights, lost $3,500 by the flight of Leslie, the Winnipeg Customs House officer, recently. Leslie was Mr. Newcombe's agent in the Northwest, and collected his rentals, etc. Before leaving for the land of the free, Leslie gathered in all rents and arrearages and fled with the funds.

Bride—Henry, do you know that you snore?" Bridegroom—No; do I? I'm very sorry to hear it. Bride (dryly)—So am I.

—Don't ridicule the poor man who supports ten or a dozen dogs. Perhaps that's the only way he has to keep pup.

Coal loses from 10 to 40 per cent. of its evaporative power if exposed to the effects of sunshine and rain.

The Prince of Wales and Crown Prince Rudolph have returned to Vienna.

Daniel Goulding, formerly a warder in Tullamore jail, was arrested yesterday, charged with having committed perjury at the inquest into the death of Mr. John Mandeville. Goulding deposed at the inquest that Mandeville had been ill-treated by himself and other warders under orders of the governor of the jail. Goulding was bailed.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Side Main Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON
THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1888.

EDUCATION V. CONCEPTION.

Since the organization of the Common School Law of Ontario in 1848-7, the tendency has ever been centralization in the Educational Department at Toronto all thought, will, and outward action so far as the public were concerned, their sole liberty in the matter being the production of pupils, and paying all monetary demands without murmuring. The enfeebling influence of the system in its early days of incipient tyranny in high places" exhibited itself in a very short period by the absence of parental action in overseeing their children's lessons preparatory for school. Parental power was ignored and their influence stultified. The teacher is now under ban, and the centre at Toronto think, act, and operate all the soulless automaton teachers in the Province. We don't disparage the teachers, but the system which has reduced a highly intellectual class of educationalists to such an abject condition of subserviency, all thinking done by the Central Committee.

True education tends to activity and liberty of thought, and promotes the growth of freedom and independence, combined with individuality of action. We highly approve of centralized power in the administration of public affairs, to take the initiative in any movement prototive of the public weal; provided always that such powers is the direct representative of the governed. Educational power should be so distributed that the central power would be merely the focus of the educational light of the nation; and any system which does not recognize this as a fundamental principle will produce intellectual slavery and a decline of national prestige. A school system, to be in harmony with British constitutional usage, should be towards decentralizing, by gradually remitting to the people their inherent educational rights so soon as they may become sufficiently educated to exercise those powers with even a tolerable degree of success. Let there be centralized light, but decentralized power; the more numerous the rays causing the central light, the brighter the illumination; while a centralizing power, whether representing a monarchy or self constituted oligarchy, is certain to produce mental darkness and intellectual imbecility.

The school system of Ontario has been lauded to a degree which its intrinsic merits do not justify; and as the intellectual demands of the people are shut out from the auditory of the junta at Toronto, there is little prospect for improvement, unless the electorate revolutionize the country at the polls. That noblest gift which God has bestowed upon man—Thought—is stifled into inaction, by both teachers and pupils; and the junta themselves give ample evidence of its utter absence in any higher sense than a love of self, their highest intellectual development being a nimble use of scissors, paste-pot and brush in the compilation of their semi-annual batch of school books. Thought is that principle which has elevated the British nation to the foremost ranks among the nations of the earth; and its decay in the ranks of the Yankee nation is the result of their inherent British principles becoming impregnated in their school system with a graft from the poisonous tree of Prussian despotism; and we, in turn, have borrowed from the Yankees. To-day they are unrepresented by a single statesman in their national councils. Such is the effect of education. Every Prussian boy can read and write, with a smattering of Latin, yet it leaves him a boy forever intellectually speaking. He is the creature of the state craft, and never allowed to think. Taking number as a data, the Chinese are the most universally educated people the sun shines on, and yet, as a people, they are abominable in private life, and vile in public life. Give us the British subject, ignorant though he may be of book learning and mental slavery, but governed by the unwritten statutes (Truth, Honor, and integrity of character) which pervades every British community, and one man is worth, in a national sense, a regiment of either Prussians or Chinese. Those who secured the peace of the world by their valor at the Nile, Trafalgar, Talavera, Vittoria, and Waterloo, were not likely to be heavily handicapped with book learning in the race of victory; neither need any Canadian look to other lands for movements of fame, while history records their deeds at Detroit, Queenston Heights, Lundy's Lane, and Stony Creek, the rank-and-file of whom were no doubt comparatively illiterate; but each man thought for himself, and of himself, and thus each individual became a pillar of the State.

The school system has latterly been sapping the foundation of our individuality and national independence of character, looking to governments and systems for aid in their performance of that which we should could and eventually must do for ourselves; and the government which usurps the right of the people to act for themselves in matters exclusively social, should be hurled from power ere they get the last link in their chain of tyranny welded. Governmental aid has a deteriorating effect upon those who receive it, and is subversive to the true end and aim of education. We are over governed politically as well as educationally, and the man who will effectually cauterize this loathsome ulcer on the body politic, will deserve well from posterity. Leave us free to develop ourselves, and improve our individual condition; for we have no faith in the value of legislation as a factor in the development of human character. As national progress is the sum of individual industry, energy, and uprightness, so is national decay the sum of lethargy, selfishness, and vice; hence it follows that if the present generations of Canadians would be patriotic and philanthropic, they will remove the obstacles that will otherwise hinder the rising generation from receiving an education in harmony with the decrees of the Higher Law

---

Hannah Boyd, a domestic in the employ of a gentleman in Thorold, has been arrested on suspicion of being one of the criminals who lately forwarded the poisoned candies to Galt, causing the death of one person. Miss Boyd has not a savory character, but whether she is connected with that heinous crime remains to be proven. Detectives have been working on the case for some time, and this is the first fruit of their labor. Detective Murray, who has the case in hand, is a light-haired, cool-headed detective, and the impression prevails in Toronto that he knows what he is doing. It is to be hoped he does, for these detectives do sometimes cause more trouble and loss to individual characters than could be counterbalanced by the bringing to justice of a score of criminals.

There are lively times in Winnipeg. The R. R. V. track laying has progressed so far that a crossing of the C. P. R. has been reached. The latter company deny the former the right of crossing their tracks. The matter is now sub judice, but the Manitoba government appear unwilling to wait for a decision, and it was thought that on Monday they would force a crossing. They had more than a hundred men upon the ground for that purpose. However, the C. P. R. had 200 men present, three engines ditched at the proposed crossing and a high fence built. The crossing has not yet been made, and it is not probable that it will be so long as the C. P. R. can fight matters in court. In face of the recent agreement between the C.P.R. Company and the Government, it is, to say the least, a rank injustice on the part of the former to fight the building of this railway; but necessity and monopolies know no law.

Editor Jeakins, of the Brussels Budget, who has been in jail for the last thirty days for contempt of Court, is once more at liberty. His case for libel, brought by the postmaster at Brussels, came off at Goderich last Friday, when the jury brought in a verdict of $1 against this redoubtable modern Don Quixote of the quill. Teaching school was his forte. He had better go back.

A New Apple Ladder.

We were shown the other day, at Hall's, a contrivance for picking apples which is a great improvement upon the old style of ladders generally used for that purpose. The accompanying rough cut will give a better idea of it than we could by words. The scantling, pointed at top, and the cross bar at bottom of ladder admit of placing it in any position, by having the round I per cent in a crotch of the tree and placing foot of ladder on the ground. The cross bar of which will prevent turning of the ladder. It is the invention of Mr. J. M. Thurston. Though rather late for the fall, the excellence of the contrivance will commend itself to fruit raisers, and they will have ample time to construct one for themselves this winter and have it in readiness for next year.

Teachers' Association.

The South Grey Teachers' Association is assembled here to-day and to-morrow, Thursday and Friday. This, Thursday evening, a musical entertainment will be given in the Town Hall by the band, Glee club, and school scholars, at which Dr. McLellan will give an interesting lecture on "English Literature and its value in Education." Short speeches will also be given by Mr. F. W. Merchant and Mr. Hagarty, of Mount Forest. The daily sessions of the Association will be held in the school house, and all will be open to the public "without money and without price." Be sure and attend this evening's entertainment, as it is free and will be instructive. The daily sessions will be: Thursday, 10 a. m. to 12 a. m., and 1.30 to 5 p. m. Friday, 9 to 12 a. m. and 1.30 to 4 p. m. Following is the program in detail:

Thursday, morning session—Opening exercises; enrollment of members and general business; appointment of General Committee; auditors' report; how to interest parents in school work, by Messrs. J. E. Smith and A. Gillispie. Afternoon session—President's address, Mr. C. Ramage; review lesson, with class, Messrs. W. Irwin and M. N. Clark; phonic readings, Mr. McLellan; music, Holt system, with class, Mr. C. J. Sproule and Misses Anderson and Porter, school games and amusements, Messrs. W. Blakeston and J. Kerr; arithmetic, (analytical reduction) to junior classes, Mr. Thos. Allan. Evening session—Dr. McLellan's lecture and entertainment in Town Hall.

Friday, morning session—Question drawer and reports of Committees, delegates' report, election of officers and general business; grammar as public school study, by Dr. McLellan. Afternoon session—Expedients in arithmetic; Messrs. Rundle and Oxenham; Character building, Inspector Campbell; Temperance, Messrs. Cowan and Clemes.

The Country Editor's Calendar.

January—Election month; Bring in cordwood.

February—Blockades and storms.

March—Spring lambs.

April—The first robin and Spring poets.

May—Get ready for fish stories. Sudden decline of the poet.

June—This is an off month. Farmers too busy to read the paper, and it don't make much difference whether it comes out or not.

July—Talk about the weather and new potatoes.

August—Barns burnt, accidents, excursions and tall grain stories.

September—Big potatoes, turnips and fall shows. Offer the paper for two years and a half for one dollar and get three new subscribers.

October Begin to talk about wood again as soon as first snow storm comes. Get some benevolent tailor to make overcoat for note at six months.

November Read up politics for winter campaign and lubricate your mouth and stomach.

December Spend the most of this month in prayer that some kind hearted Samaritan will present you with a Christmas turkey; attend every caucus, vestry and political meeting for all it is worth, as this is the only season in your year that is paid by the elect.

A Pleasant Gathering.

A pleasant social gathering was held which took place last Friday evening at the residence of Miss Dalmude, when members of the Presbyterian choir assembled to do honor to one of their number, Miss Annie Dalmude, who was about leaving us for several months visit to friends at a distance. The affair was somewhat of a surprise party to Miss Dalmude, to whom was read the following address, accompanied by the presentation of a beautiful album:

To Miss E. Dalmude, organist Presbyterian Church:

[illegible]

After the presentation a dainty luncheon was served, music indulged in, and altogether a happy time was spent. Miss Dalmude is a prime favorite among her fellow choristers, and many wishes for her happiness and speedy return accompanied her.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Bame, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes: [illegible]

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Richardson & Co's.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Swann's Block. Residence, J. G. Eastc[illegible]

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.

PRICE HILL.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

[illegible]

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office: Swann's Block
A. A. CHESLEY, B.A. Resident
Mr. FROST will be found at the [illegible]

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. Grey.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COUNTY NOTARY PUBLIC, &c.

Agent for the Dominion Savings & Investment Society. Money to loan at lowest rates. Office—Over McCallum's Store.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DALMUDE,
Flesherton

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE AGT, &c

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c. [illegible] and properly executed. Insurance in the best first class companies. Money to loan at lowest rates.

E. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn on short notice. Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive his prompt and careful attention at [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

Came Astray.

Came to the premises of W. T. McKee, Lot [illegible] Con 4, Artemesia, two steers, one black and the other red, 2 years old. The black one was found dead on the road near my premises. The red one is now at my place, and the owner may have same by proving property and paying expenses.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts

HEARD'S
Carriage Works,
FLESHERTON,
MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

—NEW—

FALL GOODS!

[illegible] Central Store, [illegible]

Pric[illegible]

BOOTS AND SHOES.

BOOTS THAT R[illegible] BOOTS!

[illegible]

Central Store, Priceville.

A. McCABE.

FLOUR, FLOUR,
STONE
FLOUR!

[illegible]

P. L[illegible]CKS, Proprietor

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.
GALOPS DIVISION.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED [illegible] under-signed and endorsed "Tender for St. Lawrence Canals," will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE [illegible] for the construction of two locks and the deepening and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications, will be ready for examination at this office and at the Lock-keeper's house, Galops, on and after [illegible] by Contractors on personal application.

In the case of firms there must be attached the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same, and further, a bank deposit receipt for the sum of [illegible] must accompany the tender for the works.

The respective deposit receipts [illegible] will not be cheques [illegible] must be endorsed over to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted. The deposit receipts thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

[illegible]

Department of Railways and Canals.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making. Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting—Cornwell's Improved Square fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture store.

Jennie McBride.

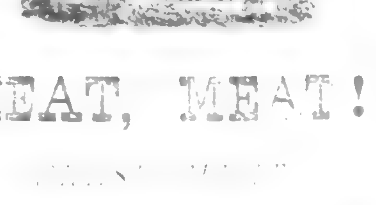
Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Notice to Contractors.

T[illegible]

Wednesday, the 7th day of November next.

Wednesday, the 24th day of October next.



MEAT, MEAT!

[illegible]

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

AT

Blakely & McConnell's.

FREE $85 solid GOLD WATCH Sold for $100 [illegible] Best $85 watch in the world. Perfect timekeeper. Warranted. Heavy Solid Gold Hunting Cases. [illegible] ladies and gents sizes with works and cases of equal value. ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one FREE. How is this possible? We answer—we want one person in each locality, to keep in their homes, and show to those who call, a complete line of our valuable and very useful HOUSEHOLD SAMPLES. These samples, as well as the watch, we send free, and after you have kept them in your home for 2 months and shown them to those who may have called, they become your own property; it is possible to make this great offer, sending the SOLID GOLD watch and COSTLY samples free, as the showing of the samples in any locality, always results in a large trade for us; after our samples have been in a locality for a month or two we usually get from $1000 to $5000 in trade from the surrounding country. This, the most wonderful offer ever known, is made in order that our samples may be placed at once where they can be seen, all over America. Write at once, and make sure of the chance. Reader it will be hardly any trouble for you to show the samples to those who may call at your home and your reward will be most satisfactory. A postal card on which to write us costs but 1 cent and after you know all, if you do not care to go further, why no harm is done. But if you do send your address at once, you can secure FREE one of the best solid gold watches in the world and our large line of COSTLY SAMPLES. We pay all express, freight, etc. Address GEO. STINSON & CO., Box 812, PORTLAND, MAINE.

SALESMEN WANTED [illegible]

[illegible] CHASE BROTHERS COMPANY [illegible]

FARM for SALE

[illegible]

APPLES FOR SALE.

[illegible]

NOTICE.

Having disposed of my business to Mr. Geo. Blackburn, I desire to publicly express my thanks to the people of Flesherton and vicinity for the [illegible] support accorded me in the past, and would bespeak for him a continuance of the same [illegible].

STEPHEN SPIRIT.

Flesherton, Oct. 16, 1888.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased the flour, feed and grocery business of Mr. Stephen Spirit I would say that it will be my aim to cater to the public in a manner that will retain for the business the reputation which it has hitherto had for fair and satisfactory dealings with customers.

The public's servant

GEO. BLACKBURN.

Flesherton, Oct. 16, 1888.

For Merrie England.

BY M. RICHARDSON.

MR. EDITOR—In compliance with your request I furnish some jottings of our recent travel. Though late, I trust it may not be uninteresting to some of your readers.

"AT LAST WE ARE OFF,"

I said to my wife, as we were comfortably seated in a C. P. R. train, and glided out of Flesherton Station on a summer evening, July 31st, on our way for Montreal, where we arrived next morning at 8.15. We found on arrival at the office of the Dominion S. S. Company that our friend, R. J. Sproule, who is agent for the company, and from whom we had purchased our passage, had already by letter and telegraph made the best provision for comfortable beths on board the Sarnia, which was to sail next morning. After inspecting our room, and taking a look over the vessel, we left our baggage, and being relieved of all anxiety on that [illegible] had the whole day before us in which to see Montreal. As one of the oldest and most populous cities in our Dominion it is worthy of more than a passing notice, but I recollect that other correspondence to The Advance this summer has brought it to your notice [illegible] in the future. We strolled through the city till wearied, then went on board the Sarnia and slept without rocking.

[illegible]

Early in the morning we were astir to watch the boat being towed out into the river, and soon heard the stroke of her engines, the rumble and splash of the screw, and the jumble of sounds which seemed in after days to have a weird rythm and to which we found ourselves unconsciously attaching strange words and meanings.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Station, [illegible]

[illegible] Square, the [illegible] is a green with [illegible] Facing [illegible]

[illegible] we could [illegible] and statuary, yet [illegible] a feeling akin to pity [illegible] and women of fine mien, with countenances indicating refinement and intelligence, as they finished their devotions walk up and kiss the toe of a huge dark statue of St. Joseph, seated on a pedestal with bared foot projecting conveniently for the osculatory performances, which seemed to close the devotions of many of the worshippers.

We dined at a French restaurant and survived, but we will take no such risks

[illegible]

Inisitoge.

Miss Pickwickweller of Toronto is the guest of Mrs. James Brown.

Mrs. William Reid, who has been seriously ill with Malaria fever, is speedily recovering under the superior skill of Dr. Griffin.

The farm and chattels of the late Mr. George Glazier were sold by public auction on the 16th.

Feversham.

[illegible]

Prot[illegible] Station.

[illegible]

[illegible] which such [illegible] every [illegible] the very [illegible] are made of human gull[illegible] have [illegible] that they cannot afford [illegible] time and strength [illegible] but must seek [illegible] work with [illegible] note, will always be welcome, and [illegible] myself [illegible] respectfully [illegible]

A CONSTANT READER.

[illegible] Montreal.

General News.

[illegible] has been one death from smallpox in Toronto.

M. de Lesseps says the Panama Canal will be open for traffic in July, 1890.

The steam barge City of Montreal, of Colborne, has been wrecked in Lake Superior.

The United States Congress adjourned on Saturday, after holding the longest session on record.

In the Brussels libel suit, Grant v. Jenkins, the jury at Goderich returned a verdict for the plaintiff of $1 damages.

A girl named Hannah Boyd was arrested at Thorold on Saturday by Detective Murray on the charge of being implicated in the Galt poisoning case.

Two steamers were sunk by collision in Christiana Bay and eighteen men drowned.

A despatch from Botenza, via Rome, says that ten cars of a train crowded with excursionists returning from the Naples fetes were crushed in a remote portion of that district by a landslide, consisting of about fifty metres of rock. The telegraph wire being broken by the fall of rock, help was delayed two hours. The scene that followed the disaster was horrible. Seventy injured passengers and ninety corpses have been taken from the wreck. There are still two cars buried beneath the rock, and it is certain that the list of the dead will be increased. The work of excavation continues.

Why You Feel

so weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be good with befouled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest vessels. Do you know that every drop, [illegible] two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and [illegible] the [illegible] of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the [illegible]

"The Life of the Body."

[illegible]

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands [illegible] Alterative and Blood Medicine. [illegible]

[illegible] C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: [illegible] past 25 years I [illegible] Ayer's Sarsaparilla [illegible]

[illegible]

Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: [illegible] Sarsaparilla [illegible]

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally [illegible] in all forms of Scrofula, [illegible] Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c., and as [illegible]

Spring and Family Medicine

[illegible] "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

sells." Prepared by

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

WEEKLY EMPIRE
CANADA'S LEADING PAPER.

(Height, [illegible] inches.)

THE EMPIRE since its establishment has met with unprecedented success, and already stands in the proud position of Canada's Leading Journal, but, in order to place the WEEKLY EDITION in the hands of every Farmer in the Dominion this fall, the Publishers have had prepared a Handsome and Life-like Bust of

SIR JOHN MACDONALD,

To be given to every subscriber to the WEEKLY EMPIRE PAYING ONE YEAR IN ADVANCE.

ONLY $1 PER ANNUM.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

Address THE EMPIRE, Toronto.

APPALLING DISASTER.

MANY PASSENGERS KILLED,

And Hundreds of Others Badly Wounded.

HEROISM OF A YOUNG LADY.

Fearful Sufferings of the Imprisoned Victims.

A despatch from Wilkesbarre says: The fifth division of the Father Matthew excursion train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, returning from Hazleton, was wrecked above Pennsylvania Haven last (Wednesday) night, and the cars piled in one shapeless mass. All the cars were crowded, and the fatalities will run into a woeful figure. All the physicians from Whitehaven and near by points are at the wreck, as are also all the Lehigh Valley officials from Wilkesbarre. The number killed is variously reported from 25 to 80 persons. The only information is from passengers on the Central Railroad trains, who report a horrible condition of affairs, the groans of the wounded being heard across the river where the tracks of the Central run. At the Wilkesbarre depot hundreds of people are gathered on the platform, many weeping for the safety of their friends, supposed to be on the wrecked train. Nothing further than this is known there.

Later—It was section No. 5 of the excursion which ran into section No. 4. The latter had lain at Whitehaven so as to be 10 minutes behind the preceding section. A flagman was put out for protection, but the engineer of section 5 did not see his signals it seems. The bodies of four children were taken from under the engine immediately after the wreck, and the other occupants of the cars had to be cut out through the windows and doors of the cars. The exact number of wounded cannot now be ascertained, but it may reach 150.

A. W. Wells, a prominent attorney and member of the Legislature, was fatally injured, while others barely escaped instant death. Among those seriously wounded are J. W. Stewart, secretary and treasurer of the Comstock Castle Stove works. Some say fully 500 people were hurt and this is probably true, but 150 will doubtless include all who were injured at all seriously.

The cars were smashed and broken and hurled off the track. The road lies close beside the Lehigh River, a steep embankment 60 feet high running down to the water. Several of the cars rolled down this, and others were crushed against the cutting on the other side.

The engineer jumped off just before they struck. The fireman was seriously injured. About sixty people are killed and as many wounded. Twenty-five bodies have been taken from the wreck. News is hard to get; there is no telegraph office at Mud Run.

The third section of the excursion train had stood on the track a few hundred yards from Mud Run waiting for sections ahead to get out of the way. A flagman, some say, had been sent back with a lantern to guard the train from the rear. Suddenly the passengers on the rear platform saw a train approach at a high rate of speed. Several of these passengers who saw the danger jumped and escaped. In an instant the flash of a headlight illuminated the interior of the ill-fated rear car. There was a frightful crash, and the engine plunged her full length into the crowded mass of humanity. The shock drove the rear car through the next one for two-thirds of its length, and the second car was forced into the third. Not a single person escaped from the rear car. The second was crowded with maimed and bleeding bodies, and the third car had but few passengers who escaped. The uninjured said that the shattered engine was pouring forth streams of scalding steam and water which hid from their eyes the fullest measure of the horrible scene, while its hissing sound deadened the shrieks and groans of those imprisoned in the wreck. Ghastly white faces peered into the windows to be greeted by faces far more ghastly. Some of the dead sat pinioned in their seats erect as in life, staring open-eyed, as if aware of

THE HORRIBLE SURROUNDINGS.

As the steam and smoke cleared from the rear car its awful sights were revealed. The timbers were crushed and wrenched, while on all sides hung mangled bodies and limbs. The few bodies which were not mangled were burned and scalded by the steam, and little remained in the car which bore human semblance. The Scranton Pioneer Corps who were on the train plied with zeal the broad axes which were meant for holiday occasions. They were, however, but little adapted to the work, and were soon rendered useless. In the meantime the windows of the car were smashed in, and brave men entered and released those least hurt or least entangled. In one case they found John Lynch, of Wilkesbarre,

HANGING FROM THE ROOF BY ONE LEG.

His cries brought friends, who, to relieve his suffering, stood upon the wreckage and held its weight upon their backs until he was released from his terrible position. A young lady was found caught by the lower limb. One of her limbs was quickly released, but the other could not be freed, and an unfortunate misdirected blow of an axe severed it from the body. She heroically bore her torture, and taking out her gold watch she handed it to an acquaintance as a gift to a friend at home. She was put on board one of the trains and given all possible care, but she could not survive her terrible injuries, and died in the arms of friends on board the car. To free the bodies in the rear car, the trainmen attached a locomotive to the wrecked engine and started to pull it from the wreck. The first movement of the shattered wreck brought from the wounded such awful cries of distress that the surrounding friends ordered the engineer to desist on pain of his life. They did not wish to see the mangled forms still further mutilated. The few houses about the spot were thrown open to the suffering and bonfires were lighted to aid the work of relief. It is not probable that the work will be completed before noon. The passengers gave many different accounts of some attributing it to the negligence of the flagman in not going back with the red light. Others say the fourth section which ran into the third had no air brakes.

THE PROBABLE CAUSE OF THE ACCIDENT,

After the news was received at the hospital confirming the worst fears the scenes at the depot were heartrending, indeed. Dr. Trimmer, from the wreck, reports that many of the injured were badly burned by gas coming from the engine stack. The killed, as far as can be learned, number 49.

A special despatch from Easton, Pa., says: The story of the disaster on the Lehigh Valley Railroad last night at Mud Run, as told by an official of the railroad is as follows: Eighty-seven car loads of people attended the parade at Hazelton from Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Carbondale and other places. There were eight sections of the train, and these followed passenger train No. 12, with orders to run ten minutes apart. These orders were also delivered to the telegraph operators at all signal stations. The seventh section came to Mud Run ahead of time, and was stopped until ten minutes expired. The danger signal was displayed at the station, and the rear brakesmen were sent back as an additional protection. Section No. 7 lay a short distance beyond the station. No. 8 came thundering along and the brakesman gave the engineer the signal. He failed to heed it and dashed by. The train plunged on, disregarded the signal at the station, and the awful disaster followed. The last train was filled with people from Carbondale. Three cars were telescoped. Half an hour after the accident Superintendent Goodwin left Bethlehem for the scene of the accident with a carload of physicians. A gentleman who has arrived from the scene says: The section of the train wrecked was made up of Jersey Central passenger cars, which are only shells or apologies for cars. Two of these were completely demolished, and the other two are next to worthless. Fifty-six persons are dead, and some of the forty persons injured will die. Some of the dead and injured have been sent to their homes at Scranton and Pleasant Valley, and the rest when I left were lying in the cars. The section that collided with the section that was standing above the station was drawn by two engines. The first engine ploughed through the last car in the train and partly through the next one above. Many of the dead and injured that were in these cars were found beneath, on top or alongside of the engine, some of them mangled beyond recognition. When I left the wreck had been cleared and trains were again running on time. Henry Cook was the engineer of the first engine and James Sharkey of the second. Cook leaped from his engine, and when I left could not be found. His fireman was severely but not dangerously injured. I was told that Sharkey said that when he saw the signal to stop he shut off steam. When he saw the danger signal on the target at the depot he reversed his lever, but Cook's engine continued using steam and pulled him into the wreck. Sharkey escaped injury. The story that some of the cars were thrown over the embankment is not true. From my knowledge of the strength of the cars I should say that if they had been Lehigh Valley cars instead of Jersey Central the accident would not have been so disastrous, and I doubt if more than three or four persons would have been killed. The distance from the end of the seventh section of the train to the spot where the brakesman stood giving this morning and found to be 1,000 feet the signal to the eighth section was measured. As the train was ascending a grade it could have been stopped in less than that distance. According to the investigation thus far made the company's rules and orders were complied with by the telegraph operator and the crew of the third section.

Two of the injured at the hospital here died this morning, and six or eight more will die. There are still a number of dead unidentified.

Mr. Jas. McGinly, Recorder of Deeds at Luzerne County, was on the section that ran into the preceding train. He said: I was in the second car from the engine and saw the train ahead of us. We were running at the rate of about fifteen miles an hour, I should judge. I realized that there would be a smash-up, but I could not help myself. It was impossible to get out of the car, and I did not think it would be serious any way. The crash was a terrible one, though none of us in the car in which I was seated were injured, nor were any of us thrown over the seats, but the scene that followed makes me shiver. I have heard and read thrilling accounts of railroad disasters, but never pictured in my mind anything like this. The horror of that moment cannot be expressed in words. We ran to the cars in which lay the injured people. One would say: "Oh! lift that iron and take me out. For God's sake help me." Another would exclaim: "My leg is fast, cut off my leg. Get an axe and cut it off." Others begged for help in various ways, and with the most piteous appeals. Every few minutes one of the poor victims would die. Some were being scalded by escaping steam, some were crushed to death, and some dying slowly of their awful injuries. To look on and be powerless to render aid was enough to drive a man mad. I hope I may never witness such a scene again.

At 6.30 last evening the funeral train arrived in Wilkesbarre, bearing fifty-seven dead bodies. They had been partially prepared for burial, and lay upon boards placed upon the backs of the seats in three passenger coaches. It was an awful sight indeed to look through the long coaches at the bodies, each covered with a white cloth. Here the form of a boy of 12 years and beside it that of a stalwart man. As the train drew up to the station it took a dozen policemen to keep back the frantic crowd of friends and relatives who had come from Scranton and Pleasant Valley to meet their dead. A special coach had been provided for these friends, but they insisted upon entering the car containing the dead and were only stopped by force and the efforts of five priests, who were on the train. One body was removed from the cars at Wilkesbarre. The train then continued on its way up the Delaware & Hudson road to Miner's Mills and Scranton. The people in the special coach again began to clamor for permission to enter the funeral car, but were again refused, it being alleged that no one had the keys. Several who were in search of missing friends became desperate and soon broke down the car doors and began a frantic search for their loved ones. Clothes were torn from the mangled and scalded bodies revealing the gay uniforms of St. Aloysius men, cadets and other members of societies. Those who knew their relatives were on board also flocked into the cars and began rearranging the attire or coverings of the corpses. Many were distorted and in horrible attitudes, and friends endeavored to lessen their frightful appearance. At Miner's Mills the train stopped to leave the body of James Flynn. No lights could be obtained and much of the work was done in partial darkness. It was as the train drew up at Pleasant Valley that the most heartrending scenes were enacted. Ropes had been stretched about the station and guards kept the immense throng back. The shrieks and screams of stricken friends and relatives were pitiful in the extreme. The first body carried out was that of Oscar Gibbons, 13 years of age, borne in the arms of his stalwart brother; then one after another forty-six white-sheeted bodies were carried out and given into the charge of friends. The shrieks and cries of the women and the hoarse shouts and imprecations of the men made a terrible scene. When all were out the train again pulled out to bear the remaining dead to Scranton, Minooka and points beyond.

Engineer Foote now says that he did not see any danger signal. As soon as he saw the train ahead he put on the air brakes, but the second engineer pushing him did not obey signals and kept up a full head of steam. This story is not believed, and the general impression is that Foote was asleep.

A PAIR OF THEM.

The Ontario Investment Association and the Superior Loan Company's Method of Doing Business.

A last (Friday) night's London despatch says: The evidence in the Ontario Investment case, now being heard in Chancery before Justice Ferguson, was concluded to-day. Mr. Osler's cross-examination of Mr. E. Nelles, the plaintiff, in regard to the status of the Superior Loan & Saving's Society, which had amalgamated with the Ontario Investment, showed that the former had done business very much on the same plan as had the latter. The Superior's total amount of stock aggregated $765,000, of which $402,850 was owned by the solicitor, W. W. Fitzgerald, subscribed for at 10 and 15 per cent. premium. What was required of the premium was paid either in cash or by loans from the company. Two thousand six hundred dollars had been advanced S. F. Peters on stock on which nothing had been paid, the society advancing a loan to pay the premium on the stock. Witness detailed several similar transactions.

Commenting upon these admissions, His Lordship said: "I may be very much in the dark, but I never heard of anything of this kind going on before—advancing loans on stock upon which nothing has been paid and providing the subscriber with the premium."

Mr. Osler. Ours is perhaps a big child, but I think they are pretty much twin in that respect.

Mr. Cassels—Yes, Siamese twins.

Mr. A. A. Booker was called for the defence and identified a list of the shareholders of the Superior at the time of the amalgamation. Several had since disposed of their stock. Dividends had been paid to the owners of permanent stock up to 1887 by the Ontario Investment. Several of the shareholders had since become irresponsible.

Mr. Osler put in the copy of the original writ and an order made by Judge Davis on June 14th, 1888, to make the Superior Company party to the suit as one of the defendants. It was then that the plaintiff began the attack on the act of amalgamation.

This closed the defence and Mr. Blake addressed the court on behalf of the plaintiff, questioning the power of the Ontario Investment Association to perform the act of amalgamation and contending that his client's consent to becoming a shareholder had been induced by fraud and misrepresentation. Mr. Blake spoke for over three hours.

The Prairie Province.

The convict who recently escaped from Manitoba penitentiary is the man Groesbach, who recently held up and robbed the Qu'Appelle mail. He had been employed to assist the chaplain at the penitentiary, and taking advantage of the opportunity which presented itself, helped himself to the parson's clothes and horse and rig and made for the boundary.

The town of Wapella had a narrow escape from destruction from a prairie fire.

Curry, one of Capt. Gauthier's fishing crew, claims he was robbed of $1,000 in a hotel at Selkirk on Tuesday night. The police are investigating.

Two lads named Coats and Lecapelaine, who left a few days ago with a rig belonging to a liveryman here, have been arrested as they were about entering the States.

The grading of the Portage extension will be completed on Tuesday next.

It is announced that the Regina & Long Lake Railroad will come into the possession of the Canadian Pacific Railway and be extended to Saskatchewan next year.

The public were greatly shocked to-day by the announcement that Alexander Taylor, proprietor of the well-known book and stationery store, had been shot through the body and conveyed to the hospital. The shooting occurred at Taylor's own residence, on McDermott street. How it occurred is not known, as Taylor refuses to give any particulars. He had been drinking to a considerable extent of late.

No Hard Times.

"Talk about the sad condition of the poor," said a monopolist, "I've been investigating of late on my own account and I find that the poor can purchase more for their money now than they could fifteen or twenty years ago. Why, a locomotive can be purchased for $10,000 now that would have cost $30,000 twenty years ago."—Cartoon.

The ingenuity of manufacturers has gone so far that not only is almost everything now made out of paper, but paper is now made out of almost everything.

ONE WAY OF DOING BUSINESS.

Affairs of the Ontario Investment Association—Losses of a Million and a Quarter—Fictitious Loan and Stock Transactions.

A last (Thursday) night's London, Ont., despatch says: The suit against the Ontario Investment Association occupied the attention of the Chancery Court to-day. Mr. Booker estimated the association's losses at about $1,250,000, which would have to be written off. At the time of the suspension the paid-up capital was $720,000. The currency debentures had been paid off in full and the sterling debentures were paid as they matured. He thought all claims would be met when the shareholders who were good paid up and that paid-up shareholders would get a dividend of 30 per cent. Mr. Booker described the transaction in connection with the Royal Exchange property, Chatham, which was bought by Mr. Charles Murray, then President, for $24,000, upon which the association loaned to him that amount without any security whatever at the time. It was not till a couple of years after that Murray, in consideration of the nominal sum of $1, executed a deed to Taylor and his successors in office.

John Hunter, post office clerk, and uncle of Henry Taylor's wife, gave evidence as to the $174,000 in loans which appeared against him on the books. He was surprised to hear of the amounts with which he had been credited with borrowing. He had had implicit confidence in the directorate of the association and was aware they were making use of his name, but not to the extent that had since been charged. The directors wanted to transfer the stock to him and realize on it in his name. Cronyn, Murray and Henry Taylor made the arrangement with him. He was not to receive a cent in return for his name, not even commission. When his signature was required to any of the transactions he had attached it without even reading what he was signing. The directors' motive in handing the stock to the witness was to improve the apparent status of the association as they considered "it would not look nice" owning so much stock.

Henry Taylor, in the course of his evidence, said a very large amount of the $815,000 purporting to be loaned on building society stock was really loaned upon the association's stock. He could not say why. From $200,000 to $300,000 was placed on the balance sheet as loaned on building society stock instead of as their own stock. It never occurred to witness that he had no right to loan upon their own stock. In regard to the John Hunter transactions, he said: "For the purpose of the business of the company we preferred to have them appear in the shape of a loan, as the company did not wish to appear as borrowing upon their own stock."

Mr. Blake—Did John Hunter purchase the stocks he was represented to own?

Witness—No.

Mr. Blake—Was he to pay any money for it?

Witness—No.

Mr. Blake—Was the entry a sham?

Witness—It was incorrect.

Mr. Blake—Answer my question. Was it a sham and a false statement?

Witness—Well, yes. Mr. Taylor further said the mortgages on Manitoba property were made to him as an individual. He knew the company had not the power to loan money on Manitoba property. They were applying for the power. Mr. Taylor admitted that in the lists of shareholders sent to the old country certain names were down for blocks of shares which were really owned by individuals. The parties referred to owned some shares.

Mr. Blake—And you did not object. You knew it was a falsehood, and yet you did not object.

Mr. Taylor said he probably knew of it.

THE DEAD ALIVE.

A Lawyer Supposed to Have Been Killed Is Alive and Well—Awkward Position of His Wife.

An Atchison, Kas., despatch says: Some excitement has been created in Atchison by the discovery that George W. Ocker, eight years ago an attorney at the Atchison bar, and who has been thought to be dead since that time, is alive and well in Colorado, enjoying a lucrative law practice under his right name. In the fall of 1880 Ocker disappeared, and his young wife was on the verge of insanity. Being penniless she could not institute a vigorous search for him. In January, 1881, the mangled remains of a man were found near the village of Monrovia, on the central branch of the Union Pacific railroad, and identified as those of Ocker. In time the supposed widow was wooed and won by a well-to-do farmer of Nomaha county, whom she married, and has borne several children. Now comes the blight. She was a wife when her second husband married her.

Don't Bandage Your Eyes.

The custom, prevalent among physician as well as the laity, of tightly bandaging or tying up the eye as soon as it becomes inflamed or sore is a bad one. The effect upon the eye is bad. It precludes the free access and beneficial effects of the cool air, and at the same time prevents or greatly retards the free egress of the hot tears and morbid secretions of the inflamed conjunctiva or cornea, or both. In those cases, too, where a foreign substance has got into the eye, the bandage (which is usually clapped on the first thing) presses the lids more closely against the ball and thus increases the pain and discomfort by augmenting the laceration, caused by the foreign body. This cannot fail to be harmful. In those cases where the light is painful it is my habit to adjust over the organ a neatly fitting shade, which, while it excludes the light, allows the free access of air.—Health.

A Hint to Farmers.

There is nothing more capable of drawing a mortgage off a farm than a team or two of good brood mares that are able to do as much one week with another as geldings and raise valuable colts each year besides. They will pay the rent or the taxes or the mortgage every time if you only handle them right.

Mr. Conway, of the Lachine Canal, has inspected the break in the Cornwall Canal, which he reports to be a very bad one, but he thinks it can be repaired in ten days.

JAMES FARLEY SENTENCED

To Be Hanged on the 8th November, But Strongly Recommended to Mercy.

A Peterboro' despatch says: Excitement was intense all day yesterday over the murder trial at the Assizes. It will be remembered that on Sunday, June 24th, James Farley, an employee of Howe's Circus Company, which was giving exhibitions here, shot an Indian named Simon Elijah, also one of the troupe. The shooting was the outcome of a drunken debauch and quarrel, which had extended all through the day, culminating about 4 o'clock in the afternoon in Farley deliberately shooting down his victim on the Market square. It is needless to detail the particulars of the crime. Both men had been drinking, and an old feud between them broke out afresh. They met on the Market square, some words, bantering on the part of the Indian and threatening on Farley's part, passed between them, and in the presence of several bystanders Farley drew a revolver and shot Simon Elijah. The Indian died a couple of days afterwards, and Farley was held for murder. Yesterday the case was tried, and the public interest was manifested by the eager crowds who attended the court-room. Mr. W. R Riddell, of Cobourg, conducted the prosecution, while Messrs. O'Meara and Burnham defended the prisoner. The prisoner is about 22 years of age and lived in Philadelphia. His father is here now, and attended the trial. After the evidence was taken and the counsel had made their addresses, His Lordship, Mr. Justice Street, delivered his charge, in which he did not attempt to paliate the crime, but rather charged against the prisoner, in whose conduct he could find no plea for clemency. The jury retired about 4 15, and in three-quarters of an hour returned with their verdict, which read, guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. His Lordship asked their reasons for the recommendation, and these being given—the inebriety of the parties and the fact that the Indian had threatened Farley—he proceeded to sentence the prisoner. Farley, when asked if he had anything to say, replied in an unsteady voice, asking leniency because of his poor father and mother. His Lordship said his duty was plainly before him, and he could do nothing else than pass the sentence of death upon the prisoner. He added, however, that he would forward the recommendation of mercy of the jury to the proper authorities for their consideration, but he could hold out no hope for the prisoner that it would be of any benefit to him. His sentence was that the prisoner be taken to the jail and there held until the 8th of November next, when he be hanged by the neck until dead, concluding with "and may God have mercy on your soul," to which Farley added a scarcely audible "Amen." The prisoner received the sentence with the same hopeless bearing he had maintained from the beginning. He watched the proceedings with interest, but his pale face wore a despondent look that only deepened somewhat when his doom was pronounced.

Latest Scottish News.

The widow of Alexander Morrison, shipowner, Stornoway, has left £1,000 for behoof of the poor of that town.

Decree of cessio has been granted against D. Macmurchy, ex-police sergeant, Oban. Donald says he has no assets, "unless it be his wife."

Rev. David Williamson, late parish minister of Assynt, Sutherlandshire, died at Tain on the 24th ult., at the advanced age of 89 years.

The recumbent marble figure of Montrose about to be placed in St. Giles' Church, Edinburgh, has been completed by Mr. Rhind, the sculptor.

Dr. Daniel Thwaites, of Barwhillanty, Castle Douglas, died there on the 21st ult. He was a brewer at Blackburn, where he amassed a fortune of two millions sterling.

Lady Dudley has insured her life for £100,000 for the benefit of her younger children. This forms a strong protest as well as a provision against the law of primogeniture.

The ministers of Arbirlot, Carmyllie, Monikie and Lochee have entered on the enjoyment of the bequest made by the late Fox Maule, Earl of Dalhousie, whereby an endowment of £200 a year is added to the emoluments of each.

On the 25th ult. a shooting affair of a rather mysterious character occurred at Prestwick. A young man named David Boyd, draper, Ayr, accidentally shot his sweetheart, Mary McAlpine, when out for a walk. He has been arrested.

When Sir John Sinclair was about to enter Parliament he was advised by a canny auld Scotch laird—a near neighbor of his—as to his line of conduct when he entered upon his duties, thus—"Be aye complainin', and be aye takin' and be aye sayin' ye hinna got enough."

The Lord Provost of Perth was on the 24th ult., in accordance with time honored custom, made the recipient from the municipality of a silver cradle, the official form of congratulation on an important domestic event occurring during His Lordship's tenure of office.

On the 25th ult. Professor Baldwin, the aeronaut, made a descent of 4,300 feet at Hamilton race course, Lanarkshire, Scotland, by means of a parachute. The folds of the parachute were not fully pressed open by the air, and but for a steering gear recently added to the machine he would have been killed.

In the death of Lord Craighill at Edinburgh on the 23rd ult., aged 71 years, the Bench of Scotland has lost one of its most upright, conscientious and painstaking judges. Next to that of the late Lord Deas there has no name been better known and, by a certain class, greater feared, than that of Lord Craighill for many years. His name was John Miller; was the son of a Glasgow merchant; was educated in the western metropolis, and was admitted to the Bar in 1842. In 1874 he was raised to the Bench, assuming the title of Lord Craighill, and on the death of his father-in-law, Lord Neaves, in 1876, he was made a Lord of Justiciary, in which office he was best known throughout Scotland.

—Bumptious Youth—I tell you what, grandmother, I'll never marry a girl who is not my inferior. Grandmother (severely)—Addison, do you want to marry an idiot?

The Lost Baby.

(By C. E. Jakeway, M.D., Orillia.)

Through the broad, old-fashioned kitchen, kicking up a rousing din,
Hushed the farmer's noisy children, when their weary mother called them in.
They'd been out upon the haystack, sliding down upon the hay,
Till the sun set and night's shadows chased away the light of day.
Just brimful of merry mischief, fairly boiling over with fun,
Round the chairs and tables romping, did they rush and shout and run.
And their merry peals of laughter echoed to the attic wide,
Then they tumbled down the cellar in a game of seek and hide.
"Goodness me!" the father shouted; "mother, can't you put those rogues to bed,
For their clatter and their racket is enough to split my head."
But the roguish little urchins said they'd be as good as good
While their grandma told a story—that was if she only would.
So the good old grandam kindly put her knitting needles down,
While her spec's she pushed above her brow near to her cap's quaint crown,
And, as o'er her age-dimmed features a bright ray of pleasure crossed,
Said she guessed she'd tell a story 'bout a boy that once was lost.
"He was such another mischief as my little Tommy here,
Always told in' after something just without a bit of fear
Now, one day, his ma was busy making pancakes for the tea,
When she sudden-like bethought her, 'Where can little Ted Hunt be?
I've not heard his merry laughter for ten minutes, I dee are—
Johnny, have you seen the baby in the barnyard anywhere?"
Johnny from the stable answered, 'Just a little while ago
He was chasin' the old rooster with the handle of a hoe.
And he told me he was going to the bush to have some fun—
"Guess I'll shoot some great big bearses wif yis hannel for a gun.
Then he ran off round the corner of the pig-pen over there,
But I'll look around and find him with his gun out here somewhere.
'Pon my word the gate is open, leadin' out into the wood:
P'raps he's gone out after 'bearses,' for you know he said he should.
'Harry, Johnny,' screamed the mother, 'go and find him if you can'
As with white and frightened features she herself the search began.
Round the barnyard, house and stable, up and down the stumpy lane,
Sought she for her precious baby, but her search was all in vain.
Then she blew the horn as loud as ever she could make it ring
Till the men came from the logging bee down by the mineral spring.
And they went in all directions, searching for the missing child,
While the father and the mother were with anguish almost wild.
'Mother,' said the father to her, 'will you go up [illegible]
Bring back both the lanterns with you, for it's fast becoming night.'
Off she ran with eager footsteps till she reached the shanty door,
There she stopped in blank amazement, for before her on the floor
Was the little lost one seated, playing with a pan of dough.
'Why my tot, where has you been to, yats yust what I wants to know'
I went seepin wif de piggies, an' I hided den from you,
And den when I went to find you, den I guess you hided too.
So I hied till I was seepy, den I seeped a hull lot more
Till I found de pan of nice stuff, and made pictures on de floor
Fondly did that loving mother press her darling to her breast,
Thanking God her little birdie had not wandered from its nest.
But the great, rough men on coming at her call from out the wood,
Laughed at mother's dough-daubed darling just as hard as e'er they could
There, the story's over, children, off to bed you'd better go!
Yes, your father was the lost one, and I found him 'mong the dough.

A Curious Wedding Invitation.

A novel wedding invitation announcing marriage of Charles A. Beaton, of Lansingburg, and Miss Ada Titcomb, was shown to a Troy (N.Y.) Press reporter on Saturday. It reads as follows:

WRITTEN INVITATION.

To .....

Friends,—I do most cordially invite you all to come to my house Monday evening, October 8th, 1888, at 7 p.m. Presents received until 3 p.m. on the day of the wedding. Come one, come all. Compliments of

CHARLES A. BEATON
and
MISS ADA TITCOMB.

The wedding is not likely to take place. It is said that when the prospective bride saw the wedding invitations she waxed exceedingly wroth, and Charley now fills the role of a discarded and disconsolate lover.

A Natural Apprehension.

Snifkins, a young travelling man of this city, is trying to learn the violin. The other evening he was working away with the most commendable industry when a tap sounded at the door of his room.

"Come in," he said, pausing in his wild endeavors.

The door opened and the Irish domestic put her head through the door.

"Oh, it's you, is it," she remarked in a relieved tone.

"Yes, it is I. What did you want?"

"Nothin'; only the missus sint me up to see if the baby wasn't up here tryin' to break yer fiddle."

The Views of King Alfred.

Not long ago in a public school examination an eccentric examiner demanded "What views would King Alfred take of universal suffrage, the conscription, and printed books, if he were living now?" The ingenuous pupil wrote in answer: "If King Alfred were still alive he would be too old to take any interest in anything."

What is Life Without Love.

Magistrate—Madam, your husband charges you with assault. Madam—Yes, your honor; I asked him if he would ever cease to love me, and he was so slow in answering that I hit him with a mop. I'm only a woman, your honor (tears), and a woman's life without love is a mere blight.

He Ruined the Custom.

Proprietor (to recently engaged waiter)—You will have to go; I can't keep you.

New Waiter—What's the matter?

Proprietor—Whenever a customer asks you if the fish is fresh you get red in the face. You'd break up the whole business in a short time.

Why She Went Home.

First Guest (at summer health resort)—You are going home early this season, Mrs. Caution.

Second Guest—Yes, I have to go for my health.

Charles Dickens said: "There is nothing so strong or safe, in any emergency of life, as the simple truth."

CURRENT TOPICS.

A CITIZEN of Brooklyn who is 70 years old, blind, in good health and the possessor of $1,500,000 in worldly gear, has married his cook. There is a great to do in consequence. A poor man might marry his cook without unfriendly criticism, but what right has $1,500,000 to marry a cook?

DR. COOPER, of Pittsburg, has invented a process which he expects will supersede embalming and cremation, being much less expensive than either. He subjects a dead body to hydraulic pressure, and condenses it into a small, solid block, like veined marble. The body of a full-grown man can, he claims, be reduced to a cube of twelve inches. Dr. Cooper exhibits a small cross, apparently of marble. "That," says he, "is the body of a child converted into a handsome ornament." The material is tasteless, odorless and seemingly imperishable. Cremation costs £10. Compression will cost only a fifth of that sum.

IF you cut down a tree in the month of its growth, and cut it right off at the butt and not trim it out any, in a few days that tree will be seasoned. "I do that," says an expert, "when we cut oak timber and leave the limbs on. When it is cut in June we find it seasoned in December, when we go to take up the winter's firewood. We find if it is cut when the sap is out of the wood it soon becomes sap-rotten. If you cut beech, poplar or birch for rails or posts, cut them in June or July and let them lie with their limbs on. You will have wood then that is not rotten. You will have fine poles out of the birches or poplars, for they will be seasoned."

A CONSTRUCTION detail that is gaining much popularity in some western cities is the bricking in of frame houses. The building is sided up with matched stuff, as if complete; then a brick face wall, four inches thick, is laid in contact with the exterior, tied on by spikes about every sixth course. A boy distributes them all around on top of the wall. They are laid in the mortar-bed ready and driven through into the siding until the heads are flush with the face of the wall, when the next courses are laid, and so on. The walls present the appearance of solid masonry, are durable, and, as they add to the warmth of the buildings, seem to present substantial recommendations, especially for severe climates.

POTTER PALMER, the Chicago millionaire, lives in a house that is said to be more like a castle than any other residence in Chicago. No two rooms are alike in style or finish. The house is built with a rotunda surmounted by a Moorish dome and all the doors open into a circular hall. The supporting pillars and the balustrades are made of polished marble. An elevator, panelled with plate-glass and upholstered in satin, carries the occupants of the house to the upper rooms. Mr. Palmer has two sons, lads of 12 and 14 years of age, who have their gymnasium, shooting-gallery and play-rooms in a house built specially for their use, and they are taught all the accomplishments as well as the manly arts.

A SPANISH merchant in Barcelona always goes to bed two or three days whenever he can be spared from his business, and laughs at those who spend their holidays on toilsome mountains. One of the hardest working women in England, who has conducted a large wholesale business for many years, retains an excellent nervous system at an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to the habit of taking one day a week in bed. There is no doubt whatever in the mind of any thoughtful physician that more rest of this sort would lessen nervous and many other derangements, caused by too much physical wear and tear. An hour at midday, too, on a couch or on a rug on the floor will do much.

LETTERS from the yellow fever region are all stopped when they reach the quarantine lines, says the Buffalo Courier. Each letter is put under a machine with a long arm attached, and this is provided with a dentated concern punctured at the ends. A powder of a detersive and germicide character is forced through the arms and down through each tooth. The arm comes down through each letter and from the apertures the disinfecting powder is blown. It permeates the letter or newspaper, as the case may be, and is believed to thoroughly destroy whatever chances of microbe existence there may possibly be conveyed. Some complaints have been heard as to the disfigurement of letters, but none as to the evidences of protection.

ACCORDING to a writer in the Liverpool Post what in past years has annoyed the Prince of Wales has been the slavish imitation of his dress affected by the mashers and dudes, more especially the latter, who are of American birth. Last year he took effectual means for putting a stop to this folly. Immediately on his arrival the old order of things prevailed. The cut of his coat, the pattern of his waistcoat, the shade of his necktie, were sedulously copied. Then a happy idea occurred to the Prince. He ordered from some unknown source a hideous suit of dirty, blanket-hued tweed. He put on a red shirt with a blue collar; wore a soft felt, low-crowned, cream-colored hat, with a band of orange ribbon, and thrust a blue silk handkerchief in his breast pocket. This, with tan shoes, completed a costume the like of which was never seen on land or sea. But it effected its purpose. The Prince had it all to himself, and this year he has no occasion to repeat the practical joke.

THE papers read this year at the Edinburgh meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute have been of more than common interest. They form a series of prose epics, describing the onward march of the iron and steel industry, and celebrating its splendid achievements past, present and to come. They tell us of new machines and new appliances, bringing with them the gift of new powers and more complete control over the stubborn fabrics with which the institute has to do. New metallic compounds have come into being in the progress of industrial art, some of them of great value, and offering advantages to which iron and steel of ordinary make can put in no claim. The main subject of jubilation in the present year has been the Forth bridge, now approaching completion. This bridge and its glories the institute appropriates as its own. It has only been by the advances made of late in the manufacture of iron and steel that the construction of such a work has been rendered possible. It stands, therefore, as concrete evidence, representing in itself the performances of brains and hands which have had no direct share in planning it or putting it together. It is the latest and greatest creation of triumphant metallurgic skill, combining and calling into requisition every resource which the progress of modern art has brought within reach of its designer, and which it is the office of the members of the Iron and Steel Institute to chronicle and to perfect.

A Case of Dysentery

The diet should be chiefly milk and lime water, uncooked beef juice, the whites of eggs and water, and light meat broths. No solid food should be allowed. Drinks lukewarm are most easily borne; cold fluids generally cause abdominal pain. Stimulants should only be administered by the advice of the physician; they are rarely needed excepting in the most desperate cases. When the thirst is excessive plain soda, barley water or gum arabic water are palatable and refreshing. During convalescence the diet is to be most carefully regulated, and when the patient begins on solid food he should indulge only in the white meat of fowls, delicate fish and very light puddings. The first step is to remove as early as possible all irritating matter from the bowels by a cathartic. To accomplish this there is no safer remedy than castor oil. If taken clear vomiting will very likely be induced. Therefore, it is best to have a druggist specially prepare it. He should make into an emulsion one ounce of castor oil, and to it add twenty-five drops of laudanum; that dose is for a full grown person. In many instances if this is taken within a few hours after the attack commences, and a proper diet is regularly adhered to, no other treatment will be needed. By the use of the oil the dysentery is converted into a simple diarrhœa, which soon disappears of itself. —Boston Journal of Health.

How Laughter Indicates Character.

It is unquestionably true that the many different varieties of laughter are indicative of particular tempers and characteristics. An eastern authority on the subject has carefully classified them, and a peculiar classification it is, too. It is based upon the sound of the vowel that prevails in the laugh. Thus persons who laugh in a broad Latin "A" are open-hearted, honest people, fond of noisy jocundity, but perhaps of voluble mood. Excessive jerking laughter, however, is an evidence of vulgarity. Those laughing in a dry "A" are respectable, but little expansive, and a hard lot of people. When the Latin "E" prevails there prevails also a phlegmatic, melancholy temper. Timorous, unsteady people, also those imbued with malignity, laugh in a kind of swelling "I." Laughter in "O" is the utterance of proud, bold, imperative, somewhat bantering people. Beware of those who laugh in "oo" (u). They are traitors, haters, scorners.—Kansas City Journal.

A Permissible Form.

Wife (piously)—Henry, I wish you wouldn't swear so.

Husband (shocked)—I don't swear, my dear.

Wife—Yes, you do; or just the same thing. You mustn't say 'by George,' or 'by Jove,' or 'by Ned,' or by anything.

Husband (submissively)—Not even buy new bonnet, love?

Then she was very, very sorry for her thoughtless reform movement, and, coming close to him, threw her arms about his neck and asked him to forgive her.

Too Much of a Dose.

Mrs. Minor—How did the doctor tell you to take the medicine, Mr. Minor?

Mr. Minor—He said at first that I should take a mouthful three times a day, and then he looked at me in a puzzled sort of way and said that after all he guessed it would be better to take only a wineglass full at a dose. What do you suppose made him change his mind?

Mrs. Minor—I can't imagine.

An Unlucky Day.

Lucretia wants to know "the lucky days to be married on." If your young man is addicted to the flowing bowl, Lucretia, and smokes cigarettes, and reads baseball news while his mother splits kindling wood take our word for it that any day from January the 1st to December 31st inclusive is a mighty unlucky day to be married on. —Drake's Magazine.

Hotel French.

Sarah Althea Hill, the wife of D. S. Terry, is out in a proclamation in the San Francisco press relative to her recent assault upon Justice Field. She signs herself "Mrs. D. S. Terry, nee Mrs. William Sharon." This is the first time that we ever heard of a woman who was born the wife of a male citizen. It is evident that Mrs. Terry has acquired the French language from reading hotel bills of fare.—New York World.

They Thought "Arms" meant Legs.

"Yes," said the general, "our Indian allies were helpful, although their lack of knowledge of the English language frequently gave rise to embarrassing situations. I remember particularly at the battle of Tippo-Tibati an alarm was sounded and I gave the order: "To arms!" and every mother's son of them mistook my meaning and took to their legs."—Christian Guardian.

The Root of the Trouble.

"Robert," said the father sternly, "don't let me ever hear of you going to the closet again for cake."

"It wasn't my fault, pa."

"Not your fault?"

"No; if ma hadn't told you you wouldn't have heard of it."

A Texas steer charging down a city street always prefers the chap who wears two watch chains, but the steers don't get loose often enough.—New York Telegram.

The New York Republicans have nominated Joel T. Erhardt for Mayor.

Rev. Mr. Freeman, a retired Episcopal clergyman, who has resided in London for some time past, died yesterday morning after an illness of considerable duration. He came to London from Chatham.

ALDERMANIC AMENITIES

The Vancouver Aldermen as Bad — Their Ontario Confreres.

Ald. Humphries claimed that the Board of Works had given permission to have the logs burned on the ground.

Ald. Oppenheimer—The Board never gave such permission.

Ald. Humphries—You keep still and wait until I get through, then you can talk. You have a habit of talking me down, but I won't have it.

Ald. Oppenheimer—Excuses must be made for Ald. Humphries as he is like a good many others; he has a few teeth out in front and ——

Ald. Humphries—Don't you call me a liar or I will crack your head.

Ald. Oppenheimer—The trouble with Ald. Humphries is that he has been out getting several toddies.

Ald. Humphries (advancing and greatly excited)—You are a liar a —— liar.

His Worship—Order, Ald. Humphries, or I shall have to order you out of the room.

Ald. Oppenheimer, continuing, said the Board of Works never gave instructions to have the logs piled in that manner or the brush burned.

It was moved, seconded and carried, That the City Engineer be provided with a horse and buggy.

The report was then adopted.—Daily Advertiser's Report of the Vancouver, B.C., Council.

Rev. C. A. Johnson's Suit.

This suit is brought by Rev. C. A. Johnson, editor of the British Lion, against the proprietors of the Queen's Hotel, Toronto. The defendants have filed their defence, which sets out that the plaintiff is a professional beggar; that they had not the accommodation at their hotel that he demanded; that he had no luggage and did not tender the proper charge, and that at the time of demanding entertainment he was not a traveller, and was not deprived of food and lodging while upon a journey. It further sets out that the Queen's holds itself out to the public as entertaining only people of wealth and refinement. That the plaintiff did not apply in good faith for accommodation, but for the purpose and with the expectation of being refused, or for the purpose of being entertained in social equality with a class of guests to which he did not belong. That the defendants would have been willing to entertain him had he applied properly and have submitted to the regulations of the hotel providing separate accommodation for persons of African blood.

The Great Inflammatory Remedy.

NERVILINE, the latest discovered pain remedy, may safely challenge the world for a substitute that will as speedily and promptly check inflammatory action. The highly penetrating properties of Nerviline make it never failing in all cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, cramps, pains in the back and side, headache, lumbago, etc. It possesses marked stimulating and counter irritant properties, and at once subdues all inflammatory action. Ormand & Walsh, druggists, Peterboro', write: "Our customers speak well of Nerviline." Nerviline may be tested at the small sum of 10 cents, as you can buy a sample bottle for that sum at any drug store. Large bottles 25 cents. Try Nerviline, the great internal and external pain cure. Sold by all druggists and country dealers.

—Is marriage a failure? One way to find out the truth of the matter is to observe the seedy looking and sour old bachelor. Is bachelorhood a success?

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

—Tailor-made bodices, English redingotes, much cut away at the hips, over Louis XIV. waistcoats, elegantly decorated, and French polonaises, artistically draped and adjusted, divide favor almost evenly this season.

No mortal yet has e'er forecast
The moment that shall be his last;
but Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have forever settled the question of a comfortable existence until that moment does arrive, and put to flight the melancholy forebodings of sufferers from biliousness, headache, indigestion, constipation and kindred ailments.

A Missionary's Chinese Bride.

A New York despatch says: The announcement is made that Rev. F. L. A. Pott and Miss S. N. Wong were married at Shanghai, China, last August. Mr. Pott is the son of James Pott, a merchant of this city, and the bride is a Chinese lady, the daughter of the late Kong Wong, who was prominent in the Episcopal Church's missionary work in China.

A Disgusted Witness.

A witness, in describing a certain event, said: "The person I saw at the head of the stairs was a man with one eye named Wilkins."

"What was the name of the other eye?" spitefully asked the opposing counsel.

The witness was disgusted with the levity of the audience.

Two Blooming Cheeks.

Masher—My dear Miss Rustic, you have the most blooming cheeks I have ever seen Let me congratulate you. Miss Rustic—Well, you have the most blooming cheek I have ever seen, but I can't congratulate you on the fact.—London Punch.

A large manufactory in New York, where nearly three thousand persons of all ages and both sexes are employed, is flooded with Republican high tariff literature, and every voter in the establishment is given to understand that the bosses want him to vote that way. The firm is a member of a trade combination or semi-trust arrangement, and needs high tariff to swell the profits.

HOW THE "JAPS" SLEEP.

Down on the Floor, With a Rolling-Pin for a Pillow.

A Yokohama letter says: The Japanese bed [illegible]ting. [illegible]mply a futon spread upon the matfuton over the on this and spread another wooden pillows and rest their heads upon is a thickly wadded re happy. A futon like our comfortable, and a quilt, exactly rangement such a bed is for the ry nice ar- The bed is easily made, and in the keeper. the futon is folded and put away in a cloing and the chamberwork is done. They wear no night dresses, but as every person, even in the poorest and humblest station, takes a hot bath once, and in the majority of cases twice, a day, there is nothing uncleanly in the wearing of the same dress at night which is worn in the day.

Effects of Climate.

We hear a great deal said about the beneficial effect upon invalids of the climate of Colorado and other western localities, but when a man changes his place of residence in the hope of improving his health without first trying Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, he makes a great mistake. In nine cases out of ten he might save his time and money. The great remedy owes its power over all affections of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh and even consumption, which is lung scrofula, to the simple fact that it purifies and enriches the blood and invigorates the debilitated system.

—"Why don't you believe in friendship?" asked one acquaintance of another. "Because it's like an umbrella that always turns inside out in stormy weather."

Sweet Flowers.

The fairest buds are often the first to wither, and the ravages of disease make havoc with the beauty, as well as the strength and happiness of the fair sex. The prevalent disorders among American women are those of a most distressing description. These "weaknesses," as they are suggestively termed, insidiously sap the health and the patient becomes pale and emaciated, the appetite grows fickle and feeble; she loses strength as the attacks increase in severity, and is in despair. There is relief for all such sufferers in Dr. Pierce's world-famed Favorite Prescription, which cures all "female complaints." Its use is followed by cessation of the "dragging-down" pains, return of appetite, and in due course, vigorous health.

Two Examples.

The Kindergarten: Teacher—Now, children, anything that crawls along the ground instead of walking is called a reptile. Can you give me an example of a reptile? Ina—A worm. Teacher—Yes, that will do. Can any one give me another example? (Long silence. Finally Peggy Bright speaks up.—I can, teacher. Teacher—Well, Peggy, what is it? Peggy Bright (triumphantly)—Nother worm.

The First Cousin of the Dude.

A St. Louis doctor has removed the brains from a dozen different frogs and healed the wound and let them go. They went off as if nothing had happened out of the usual, and it was plain that they had lost nothing of value.—Detroit Free Press.

According to letters of Queen Elizabeth lately published among the Hatfield papers her pet name for the Duke d'Alencon, to whom she was betrothed for ten years, was "the frog with the little fingers."

$120 PER MONTH FOR reliable men and women to work for us at their homes and among their neighbors. Respectable [illegible] and steady; salary [illegible] at the end of each month. Enclose $1.00 for [illegible] and we will furnish instructions etc. and see for yourselves. Write at once [illegible] ADO.

MERCHANTS, BUTCHERS AND TRADERS generally

We want a good MAN in your locality to pick up

CALF SKINS

for us. Cash Furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address, C. S. PAGE Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

The Shoe & Leather Reporter, N.Y., and Shoe & Leather Review, Chicago, the leading trade papers of the U.S. in the Hide line, have sent their representatives to investigate Mr. Page's business, and after a thorough examination and comparison the Reporter gives him this endorsement

"We believe that in extent of light-weight raw material collected and carried, Mr. Page holds the lead of any competitor and that his present stock is the largest held by any house in this country."

And the Review says:

"After a most thorough investigation of Mr Page's business as compared with others in same line, we have become fully satisfied that in his specialty, light-weight stock, he is unquestionably the largest dealer in this country, while in superiority of quality he is confessedly at the head."

QUERY: If Mr. Page's business is the largest in its line in the United States, is it not the best possible proof of his ability to pay highest prices? If he did not do so, would he naturally get more skins than any of his competitors in the same line?

MARVELOUS

MEMORY

DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,005 at Detroit 1,300 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN Judge GIBSON, Dr. BROWN, S. H. COOK, Prin. N.Y. State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 257 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DOMLE 43 88.

[illegible]'S BAKING POWDER THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

YOUR

Special Attention!

IS CALLED

TO THE

DECIDED BARGAINS

In Dress Goods, Mantlings, etc.,

AT

J. G. ANDERSON'S.

A beautiful range of plushes in the latest shades, at a surprisingly low figure.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES!

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots of the best manufacture at rock bottom prices. Button and Lace Boots in great variety at prices sure to suit you.

THE TOP PRICE PAID

For Butter and Eggs

A lot of choice Butter in Tubs or Rolls wanted by 1st November.

At Cash Price for Trade.

J. G. Anderson, SPROULE'S BLOCK.

COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

A Half Hour Among Our Exchanges.

Bread is 14 cents a loaf in Meaford.

John Smith, of Meaford, slid his finger into a planer. The planer slid it out on the other side.

Mr. M. McKinnon will take Mr. D. C. McMorris' place as editor of the Meaford Mirror.

The Grand Trunk is going to run but one train a day on the Walkerton and Wiarton branches, during the winter months, which the papers along these routes deplore exceedingly.

Collingwood Enterprise: A shooting match took place at Feversham on Thursday last, for an oyster Supper, between teams representing Collingwood and Osprey Townships. It was a close contest, Osprey winning by one point.

The editor of the Beeton World had a mammoth potato prdsented to him the other day. He straightway placed it on exhibition behind the bar of an hotel, and when anyone comes in to see the the wonder he pilots the way. Great head, Clawed. Big head.

Albert Hall, of this town, who was confined in the Guelph jail on a charge of rape, was bailed out on Thursday last, by order of the Chief Justice of Ontario, himself in $1500, his father, Willet Tanner and William Dickson, in $500 each. His trial will come off at the assizes on the 5th November. He arrived in town on last Friday.—[MtForest Rep.

Thornbury Standard: Messrs. T. Keast and G. Sheeres, who are enthusiastic admirers of fine fowl, saw an advertisement in a respectable American Stock Journal describing a new kind of fowl, called the Red Tops. Eggs were advertised at $6 a dozen, and the quality of the fowl described as very extraordinary. Mr. Keast sent for a dozen eggs, costing in all nearly $8. A hen covered them for over four weeks without results. The Eggs were discovered to be boiled.

The Chatsworth News, commenting on the burglary at Holland Center last week, says: The captured burgler was at first very communicative and stated that he heard and saw people outside at the window but thought they were his chums. He also stated that they knew all about where Mercer kept his cash box and that his pals had shoes with them so that the man who went inside carried no money for fear of detection. He seemed greatly disappointed at his companions not showing when they saw that he was in a fix and could not shoot without making a turn of himself. In a few minutes more, he said, he would have been into the safe, and his capture was most fortunate as Mr. Price had some $600 in it, which he will be careful not to leave there at night, or any other money in future. There is no doubt but that this is the same gang that has been going through the country for some time past and who burglarized Flesherton post office and Holland Center station, Walters Falls and other places within the last year. They are also the same gang, no doubt, that went through Prospect Isle post office last Friday night as they were seen here on Saturday afternoon, coming into the village from Owen Sound way about 5 o'clock. They drove an iron-gray horse in a top buggy; one of the fellows who escaped is a stout man with a heavy, dark moustach, full long face and a rather prominent Roman nose, and a sharpe look out should be kept for the remaining two. They have frequently been seen in this neighborhood and if a sharp look-out is kept for them there can be no great difficulty in capturing them, as they have driven the same rig for some time, which would lead to the opinion that the iron-gray horse and the rig they drive is either their own or that they are regular customers at some livery stable in this section of country.

An Owen Sound despatch says: It has been discovered from letters found in the trunk of the man found dead on the beach last week that his proper name was J. A. Turcotte, and it further appears that he had been in the employ of the Manitoba Government in connection with the Public Works department up to August. A letter was also found in his trunk bearing the address J. A. Turcotte, No. 6 Charlotte street, Winnipeg. It is an invitation to an overture at Government House, showing that the deceased was well known and respected in Winnipeg.

The Canadian Pacific has reduced its grain rates from Winnipeg.

BOOTS & SHOES!

I have a large stock on hand, suitable

For Fall Wear.

Men's and Boys' Long Boots,

Also a large variety of LADIES' AND CHILDRENS' WEAR. A lot o

Summer Goods Selling off Cheap.

WM. CLAYTON'S, - - FLESHERTON.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

A Positive Cure. ✢ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Many of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervousness, debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

Symptoms upon which No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, nervousness, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, dizziness, forgetfulness, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, confusion, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes unsuccessfully combated. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✢ A Pleasant Cure.

HEATH FOR ALL

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equa

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Jan 1, 1898

What It Is to be Forty.

To discover a sprinkle of gray in your beard,
And a thinness of crop where the upland is cleared;
To note how you take your slippers and gown,
And hug to the fire when you get home from town—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

To find that your shadow has portlier grown,
That your voice has a practical, business-like tone;
That your vision is tricky, which once was so bright,
And a hint of a wrinkle is coming to light—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

A sleigh ride, a party, a dance or a dine;
Why, of course, you'll be present, you never decline;
But, alas! there's no invite, you're not "young folk" you see;
You're no longer a peach, but a crab-apple tree—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

A daughter that grows like a lily, a queen,
And that blooms like a rose in a garden of green,
A dapper young clerk in an ice-cream saloon,
Both a dude and a dunce, is to carry off soon;
And a boy that is ten, and the pride of your eye,
Is caught smoking vile cigarettes on the sly—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

At twenty a man dreams of power and fame;
At thirty his fire has a soberer flame;
At forty his dreams and visions are o'er,
And he knows and he feels as he ne'er did before
That a man is a fool till he's forty.

Popular Science Revelations.

The pollen of the plane tree is said to produce an influenza precisely like hay fever and rose cold.

Professor Oser, of Vienna, has been experimenting with "condurango" bark as a tonic, and thinks it worthy a place in materia medica as a symptomatic remedy.

Disagreeable moisture of the hands may be overcome by rubbing the hands several times a day with the following mixture: Tincture of belladonna, half an ounce; eau de Cologne, four ounces.

French physicians report great success with the internal use of antiseptics in typhoid fever. According to this method of disinfecting the internal organization the disease runs a shorter course.

An English invention is the "centre-cycle," having four wheels a foot in diameter and a large wheel in the centre. With it the rider is enabled to go up hill as easily as to go forward on level ground.

According to Professor Ewing earthquake movement is not a shock at all, but a "wobbling" of the ground in all directions. A movement of the earth an inch and three-quarters is the greatest yet recorded by the instruments in Japan, while the movements are usually measured only in hundredths of an inch.

According to L'Industrie Parisienne a laundryman in the vicinity of Paris has discovered a very ingenious method of cleaning linen without soap. He uses no soap or lye, nor chlorine, but replaces these substances by boiled potatoes, with which he rubs the linen. This curious process, it appears, is much superior to those hitherto employed, and the worst soiled cotton, or silk, cleaned by this method, are made whiter than they could be by the use of an alkali.

An Electric Storm.

While off the banks of Newfoundland, the White Star steamship Adriatic, recently arrived in New York, encountered an electric storm. For three-quarters of an hour there was a very lively time, which was not fully appreciated, however, until the storm had passed over. There had been a heavy fog all the morning, with the wind from the south, and for some time before the storm it had been raining. Suddenly the air turned warm, and for three-quarters of an hour there was a remarkable display of lightning, with almost incessant thunder, which was peculiarly terrifying to the passengers. What startled the sailors most, however, was the unwonted warmth. It had been cold and raw all the morning, but as soon as the ship struck the storm the air was like a muggy day in midsummer. An officer on Saturday said that it seemed as though a pail of hot water had been dashed on the deck, as the rain splashed up on his hands. The vessel itself was not affected by the storm, but even the officers were apprehensive until it had passed over.

Result of Fast Travelling.

A correspondent of the London Times, writing on the subject of the daily race between the two fast English trains to the north, says: "There is one point of which I have seen no notice taken—the increased wear and tear mentally and bodily of the driver and stoker on these special trains. A friend of one of the drivers told me that he saw a marked effect on his apparent health. The driver told him his anxiety was greatly increased. On one occasion his stoker, who had gone along the engine to oil a valve, became paralyzed with fear, so that he could not move forward or backwards. The driver had to leave his place and follow his stoker and seize his hand, and so they regained their standing place. The distances run are so great and the pace so rapid that any oiling, etc., is done with increased risk. The force of the wind is so great that when the stoker creeps along the foot plate alongside the engine he has to hold by the rail like grim death, and has been carried off his feet."

Vindicating Himself.

"I hear you are going to marry again, Smith?" "Yes; the fact is I feel that I must, merely in self-vindication. Ever since I married my first wife, I have been known as Mrs. Smith's husband; but if I marry again, you know, my new wife will be forced to take a subordinate place in the family, and everybody will speak of her as Mrs. Smith's husband's wife. See?"—Boston Transcript.

A Suggestive Explanation.

"What's the matter, Johnny?" asked one of the neighbor's boys, as his companion came out of the alley gate; "ain't finished your dinner a'ready, have ye?" "Nop." "Didn't ye get any?" "Yep; but I didn't stay to finish it.'" "What made ye leave so soon?" "Well, I said something at the table, and everybody but pa laughed."

Wife—I mended the hole in your trousers pocket last night after you had gone to bed, John dear. Now am I not a thoughtful little wife? Husband, dubiously—Well, er-ye-es, you are thoughtful enough, my dear, but how the mischief did you discover that there was a hole in my trousers pocket?

CURRENT TOPICS.

A new rifle introduced in the British army has given some astonishing results, as, for instance, hitting a target 104 times out of 629 shots, at a distance of 2,800 yards, or something more than a mile and a half.

Statistics lately published in England show that the world has 700 Crœsuses worth $5,000,000 or over, of whom 200 reside in England, 100 in the United States, 100 in Germany, 75 in France, 50 in Russia, 50 in India and 125 in other countries.

A clergyman recently returned from a vacation spent in the North of Scotland says the summer nights are so short there that there is hardly two hours of darkness. At Inverness he was able to read at 11 o'clock at night without the aid of artificial light.

Though working newspaper men have been commingling at almost every hour of the day and night among the stricken yellow fever victims at Jacksonville, only four have been, so far, attacked by the scourge, and three of the four are sure of recovery.

The native Hawaiians are said to be disappearing very rapidly, and it will not be long before the race is extinct. Their language is still quite generally spoken, but as English is the language of the court the native dialect is bound to fall into decadence.

People who went to laugh at George Francis Train when he lectured in New York the other night for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers felt the tears coming into their eyes while he gave his reminiscences of the epidemic in New Orleans, that carried off his father, mother and three sisters.

Princess Sophie, the young sister of the German Emperor, and the prospective bride of Constantine, Duke of Sparta, the heir to the Greek throne, is not pretty, but attractive. She has a round, fresh face, and looks a little like her grandmother, Queen Victoria, and a good deal like her late father, Emperor Frederick.

The New York Times says that "the farm wife has been the drawer of water, the hewer of wood—in actual fact, very often—and the servant of all, even of the hired man; to cook, mend and wash for him, to wait upon him and to do all this at times for several of them." She is indeed a treasure, and cannot be too highly valued.

Professor Duns, in unveiling the bust of Hugh Miller in the Wallace monument, expressed the conviction that the appreciation of the grandeur of Miller's struggle against early hardships which characterized his life is more and more deepening, and so, too, in regard to his word as a literary man, a publicist and a man of science.

A commission of the British Association which has for some time past been discussing the matter of the liquor traffic among the native races has announced that in 1885 Holland sent to Africa 1,099,146 gallons of spirits and in 1886 the city of Boston alone sent 737,650 gallons of rum. Since 1883 Hamburg and Bremen have sent to Africa thirty million gallons of spirituous liquors.

Dr. Edward Pick, a celebrated English teacher of memory, has arrived at New York, where he will enter the field against Prof. Loisette. Dr. Pick says that the way to remember anything is to have it impress the mind strongly and pleasantly at first. We have our doubts about this. Many a man forgets an appointment to dine with a friend, but no man ever yet forgot the date set for his hanging.

Rosa Wiss, a young girl of Meridan, Miss., had 5 cents given her as a joke for a birthday present. She bought a yard of calico with it and made a sunbonnet, which she sold for 40 cents. This she invested in more calico, made it up, sold the garments and reinvested the capital until she had $10. With this she bought potatoes, planted them, paid for the cultivation of her crop, for gathering and carting to town, and made $50 clean profit.

Robert Garrett, the once envied heir to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, is dying of softening of the brain. His death is not far off, as the disease is making swift progress. Six powerful attendants are required to hold him when his violent attacks come, and then his blood-curdling shrieks frighten almost the whole village of Ringwood, N. J. It is now well understood that the peculiar financial freaks by which he attracted the attention of the country a year or so ago were the operations of a diseased mind.

Coffee is a handy and harmless disinfectant. Experiments have been made in Paris to prove this. A quantity of meat was hung up in a closed room until decomposed, and then a chafing-dish was introduced and 500 grammes of coffee thrown on the fire. In a few minutes the room was completely disinfected. In another room sulphuretted hydrogen and ammonia were developed, and ninety grammes of coffee destroyed the smell in about half a minute. It is also stated that coffee destroys the smell of musk, castoreum, and assafœtida.

It was in June, 1884, that the survivors of the Greely Arctic expedition were rescued and only now has Congress voted to those rescued men money-commutation of fuel and quarters and extra-duty pay. Lieut. Greely wears the star of a Brigadier, and Sergt. Brainard does credit to the modest shoulder-straps of a Second Lieutenant, but the recent passage of the relief bill is the first recognition that any of their comrades have had. Republics are not always ungrateful, but they are often exasperatingly slow.

A cable correspondent reports that hypnotism has, for the first time, become an instrument in the hands of French justice. A shoemaker named Pichereau, living in the town of Paimbœuf, had persistently denied a robbery of 200f., of which he was accused. The judge before whom he was tried went at once to a professional hypnotizer, who had the man's eyes blindfolded, much as if he was giving a public performance, and at last discovered the stolen money under an old stone wall. Thanks to the hypnotizer the shoemaker was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

Fuel oil will be used throughout the entire plant of the Wisconsin Glass Company, which will be operated by three different companies. E. A. Howard, of Chicago, who has charge of one end of the pipe line recently laid from Lima, O., to Chicago, says that it has not been officially determined to extend the line to Milwaukee, the consumption there not being great enough to warrant it. There is so large a demand for fuel oil in Northern Michigan and Wisconsin mines that the company intend to run a line of tank steamers to Duluth, Ashland and other lake ports.

A visitor to the Valley of the Yosemite in California, says that one important fact to be observed there, but which is never mentioned in the guidebooks and seldom in newspaper correspondence, is that the women visitors who explore the place to any extent do so on horseback and ride astride. The steeps are so abrupt that a woman who attempts them perched unnaturally on one side of a beast is sure to come to grief, and coming to grief on mountain trails where the precipices are a mile high is a matter of life and death. Women must either leave the glories of the Yosemite unseen or they must employ all the advantages which nature has given them. And really, when you come to think of it, why shouldn't women ride astride as well as men? Is there any reason against it except conventional custom? If there is any other reason, what is it? Among the Plains Indians and other equestrian peoples, women ride the same as men, and never think of riding any other way.

To-day's Church News.

Miss Delphine Baker is about to establish a Christian newspaper in Jerusalem.

Mr. Philip Phillips, "the singing pilgrim," has been giving three lectures in Glasgow, entitled "Around the World in a Chariot of Song."

The novel spectacle of lady missionaries preaching in the vernacular among the women was witnessed at the Ruth Jattra at Mahesh and Bullubpore, India.

Mrs. Sheridan Knowles has bequeathed $5,000 to Mr. Spurgeon's college, the same sum to his orphanage, and $500 to Ardbeg Chapel, Rothsay.

A letter has been received from Dr. J. F. Smith, Queen's College missionary to China, telling of his safe arrival at Che-Foo, North China.

Bishop Baldwin, of Huron, sails from Liverpool for Canada on the 25th instant, Mrs. Baldwin's health having been restored during her stay in Germany.

The Oban Times states that Mr. Macpherson, the minister of Inverary, is a strong advocate of land nationalization as the only effective solution of the land question.

George O. Barnes, the evangelist, has recently decided that Jehovah never intended the human race should make food of the animal kingdom, and has begun a crusade against beef eaters.

Rev. Walter Laidlaw, President of the Albany County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children at West Troy, N.Y., is a nephew of Rev. Dr. Laidlaw, of this city.

An illustration of Western dash and daring is found in the fact that the recent session of the Kansas Methodist Protestant Conference was held in a village in which there was but one Methodist Protestant family and no church of their own, and yet it was well entertained.

There is a worthy office-bearer in St. Andrew's Church, Woolwich, who is determined to teach the rising generation how to give. As he carries round the collection plate he supplies with pence the children who have not come prepared for the occasion.

The vicarage of Halifax, which is in the gift of the Crown, is now at the disposal of the Government. The income of the vicar of that famous Yorkshire town is £2,000 per annum, and he has in his gift over thirty livings, averaging over £300 a year each.

There is truth in the remark that a bag, if empty, hangs loosely by its string, but the more there is put in it the closer is the mouth drawn and the harder is it to get anything out. So, often, as men have more means to give, it is more difficult to obtain money from them.—Christian Inquirer.

The Mending of Marriage.

In an ideal state, when all the people were honorable, the marriage contract might perhaps be safely abandoned, and "unions of affection" substituted for it. But, as things are, the outcome of the proposed change would probably be one from which every person of pure mind would shrink in abhorrence. If this battle has really got to be fought, it is well that all who have regard for the sanctity of home life should take up their position without loss of time, and follow Miss Chapman in declaring that the State cannot afford, by giving too great facilities for divorce, to relieve the few who make unhappy marriages at the expense of the majority who make happy ones. It may well, however, institute such reforms of the marriage tie as she points out. In the matters of the guardianship of children, and of the conditions under which divorce is now granted, reason and common sense dictate that the woman should be given the same rights as the man. Marriages for money should be regarded as "relics of savagery." Children of both sexes should be brought up together, and fuller opportunities given for young people to know one another before betrothal. And in the religious service the woman's equality with, rather than her submission to, the man should be distinctly recognized.—Christian World.

Here to Stay.

Fashionable Wife (tugging at a string)—Mrs. Cleveland may succeed in doing away with the bustle, but there is one thing that has come to stay.

Husband (looking around from his shaving)—What is that?

Wife—The corset.

A prominent woman lawyer of Ohio is Miss Florence Cronise, of Tiffin. She has been in active practice for fifteen years, and has secured a competence and a large list of clients.

AN ANIMAL WITHOUT FEAR.

Lightning, Cyclone and the Iron Horse Defied by the Peccary.

Texas has within her borders a beast into whose narrow skull fear never enters. It is a peccary—the Havilinah of the Mexicans, the Dicotyles Torquatus of zoologists. Bravery is a notable attribute of man, and it was discovered in birds, beasts and fishes. I don't claim the quality for the brute I am about to describe, says a correspondent of the Detroit Free Press. I believe bravery cannot be said to exist in senses devoid of fear. I conceive that an appreciation of danger is a necessary menstrum to the nobler courage. It is not the man of dogged indifference I admire; it is the man who refuses to fly when duty bids him stand and though he fear death, fears dishonor more. Now, the peccary has no particle of fear on account of any show of odds, and appears to live only for the purpose of madly dying when opportunity offers. The game cock fights with heroic valor, but one sees in his swimming eyes when gaffed and bleeding in the pit glances of regret and nameless fear. The pachyderm of the Texas forest dies in "a matter of course" manner, as if he was meant to end that way and was glad of it. He looks up in the tree where the man sits who shot him (few men of experience ever shoot them from any other standpoint) and anon he holds up his cloven foot and glances at it. If the peccary regrets anything in the hour of dissolution it is that he was not made like a squirrel to climb. Texas and Pacific and Fort Worth and Denver city locomotive engineers often encounter droves of peccaries, as I suppose do all engineers who operate on the Western Texas railroads. No whistle is sounded to frighten them. The engineers know that peccaries cannot be frightened. The engine rushes into the midst of the drove, and those not killed outright die madly charging and biting at the wheels that crush them. A peccary is in all respects a hog. He looks, smells, tastes like a hog—and is a hog, but for a thing of indomitable courage of the lower type, for a hater of quenchless fury, and a fighter to the last throb of his heart, commend me to the fierce Dicotyles Torquatus, the indigenous Texas hog, a brute that would, if he could, while riding in the midst of a cyclone, bite at the zig-zag flashes of the death-dealing lightning.

The Rosy Girls of Norway.

The kitchen is the living room in a well-to-do farm house. I have walked into these frequently, and generally found the mothers putting the finishing touches to the pot when preparing a meal; and I could never tell which were the daughters of the house and which the servants. By the way, the latter are not ashamed of their calling, and when I have asked a pretty one if she were the daughter she says: "Oh, nein, I am a servant." Many of the women in the mountains and upper valleys are very comely—not beauties, but ruddy, rosy, plump and healthy specimens of femininity. If I should write verses I would not write them to "the girl with the raven locks" nor to "the red-haired girl," but just now would write a sonnet to "the sweet girl of the tow head." The women do their full share of the work of the land, but we have found the heavy labor is done by the men. The women reap and bind grain and rake and mow hay.—Correspondent of the Chicago Mail.

Equal to European Cheese.

The New York Journal of Commerce of last week (under heading of dairy reports) says: Mr. Valancey E. Fuller, of Oaklands Dairy, Hamilton, Ontario, has just sent to this city some samples of Cammembert cheese, fromage de Brie and other soft cheeses, which experts declare to be equal to those made in Europe. They were made from Mr. Fuller's celebrated herd of Jerseys, of which Mary Anne of St. Lambert is a prominent member. Mr. A. E. Whyland, of Thurber, Whyland & Co., owns a bull from the herd (St. Andrews of Orange) which is one of the finest specimens of the breed in the United States, having taken first prize at the Newburgh fair last year.

'He most lives who thinks the most.
Acts the noblest, feels the best,
And he whose heart beats quickest
Lives the longest, lives in one hour
More than in years do some whose
Fat blood sleeps as it slips along their veins.'

These lines describe that condition of perfect health which all men and women wish to enjoy. To be able to think clearly, to incline to do noble acts, to live long and joyously, we must be free from the domination of disease. By taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery we may, by purifying the blood, escape consumption, general debility, and weakness, and all blood and skin diseases, and verify the truth of poetry as well as fact.

In Great Trouble.

"Why, what is the matter?" asked a lady of a friend whose eyes were red from recent tears.

"Oh, I'm—boo-hoo—in such trouble!"

"What has happened? Something dreadful, I am sure."

"Yes; it was something d-dreadful."

"What is it? Has your husband been drinking harder than usual?"

"No, that's not it. He has signed the pledge, and he is so disagreeable when he is sober."

Geraniums Ten Feet High.

G. C. Clark of New Haven, has in his front yard a couple of rose geraniums 10 feet high. These plants were raised from slips in two years. He recently set them outdoors, as they had grown too tall for the rooms in the house. The rose geranium is the largest and fastest growing variety of the plant, but 10 feet is a remarkable height even for that species.

Doubtful Compliment.

Guest—I wish I had come here a week ago. Proprietor—Ah, that's very flattering to my hotel. "I don't know about that. What I mean is that I would have preferred to have eaten this fish then instead of now."

Question of Schools.

First mother—The school around the corner is a most excellent one. My boy does learn so fast.

Second mother—Oh, you're mistaken, utterly mistaken. It's a miserable school. My boy doesn't learn a thing.

REMARKABLE LONGEVITY.

A Family That Completely Eclipses That of the Hovers at Adolphustown.

An Adolphustown correspondent gives a remarkable case of longevity in connection with the U. E. Loyalist family of Hover, of that township. A gentleman favors us with another case even more remarkable. The persons referred to below are also of U. E. Loyalist stock, being descendants of the late Lewis and Miriam Davis, Sidney, who lived about two miles from the city of Belleville. Five of their children still survive, viz.: Cornelius Davis, born April 5th, 1800; John Davis, February 9th, 1802; Mrs. Dorland Clapp, January 10th, 1806; Mrs. Hester Morden, January 10th, 1808; and James Davis, December the 14th, 1810. The age of Cornelius Davis is, therefore, 88 years, 5 months and 22 days; John Davis, 86 years, 7 months, 19 days; Mrs. Dorland Clapp, 82 years, 8 months, 18 days; Mrs. Hester Morden, 80 years, 8 months, 18 days; and James Davis, 78 years, 9 months, 14 days. Their total age amount to 417 years, 4 months, giving an average of 83 years, 5 months and 18 days. Cornelius Davis lives in the front of Sidney, two miles from Belleville; John Davis in the 2nd concession of Thurlow; Mrs. Dorland Clapp, in the 4th concession of Thurlow; Mrs. Hester Morden has lived in Belleville all her life until very lately, but now lives with her son-in-law, Mr. Thomas Dickens, of Napanee. She is at present visiting her son, Mr. George Morden, in Deseronto, and is hale and active. James Davis resides in the State of Iowa. It is, indeed, very seldom that we find so many members of one family reaching such an advanced age.—Deseronto Tribune.

She Will Surely Find It.

"Bridget," said the head of the house, arrayed in evening dress. "I am unexpectedly called out for the evening, and I want you to see that your mistress gets this note as soon as she comes in, without fail."

"Yis, sorr," responded Bridget, "I'll have it in the pocket of the trousers ye've just taken off."

My love was like a lily fair
Low drooping in the sultry air
My heart was rent with grief and care.
I loved her well.

But lo! The wonder grows and grows.
My love's now like a blooming rose.
How bright her face with beauty glows,
I dare not tell.

The wandering bee would stop to sip
The nectar of her perfect lip.
'Twas Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription wrought the spell

Significant.

"Mamma, the quandary has come; Billings has proposed, and Toozle too." "What shall you do?" "I am at a loss, mamma. Toozle writes that he would surround me with every luxury and make his whole existence one sweet thraldom for a smile from me." "And Billings?" "He says he's very poor and has been working all his life and barely earned a subsistence." "Accept Billings, my child. Don't delay another instant. A man must be pretty well off before he has the courage to proclaim his poverty."

The Electric Light

Is a matter of small importance compared with other applications of electricity. By this agency Polsen's Nerviline is made to penetrate to the most remote nerve—every bone, muscle and ligament is made to feel its beneficial power. Nerviline is a wonderful remedy, pleasant to take, even by the youngest child, yet so powerfully far-reaching in its work that the most agonizing internal or external pain yields as if by magic. Neglect no longer to try Nerviline. Buy to-day a 10 cent trial bottle and be relieved from all pain. J. Wilson, druggist, Goderich, writes: "Nerviline gives good satisfaction." Sold by druggists and country dealers everywhere.

Perfectly Obvious.

The idea that people can be enriched by heavy and unnecessary taxation, that a man's condition can be improved by taxing him on all he wears, on all his wife and children wear, on all his tools and implements of industry, is an obvious absurdity.—Thurman's Acceptance.

The only reliable cure for catarrh is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Only a Shake.

"No, my man, I haven't anything for you," said a gentleman to a tramp with outstretched hand.

"Who asked for anything?" replied the tatterdemalion. "Don't you see I'm a politician? All I wanted was to shake."

The Ottawa Literary and Scientific Society yesterday presented the Governor-General with an address and secured his consent to act as patron of the society.

Mr. and Mrs. Jason were engaged in their usual evening debate. Said he, for a clincher, "Well, there's no use arguing with a woman or a jackass." "I wish I had known that at the start and saved my breath," said she.

MARVELOUS
MEMORY
DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Cure of mind wandering.
Any book learned in one reading.

Classes of 1,087 at Baltimore, 1,003 at Detroit 1,500 at Philadelphia, 1,113 at Washington 1,216 at Boston, large classes of Columbia Law students, at Yale, Wellesley, Oberlin, University of Penn., Michigan University, Chautauqua, etc. etc. Endorsed by Richard Proctor, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. Astor, Judah P. Benjamin Judge Gibson, Dr. Brown, E. H. Cook, Prin. N.Y State Normal College, etc. Taught by correspondence. Prospectus post free from
PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

DOM L 43 88

DOMINION
BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

W. H. THURSTON,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, NOV. 1, 1888.

"THE FAKIR."

The Dundalk Herald writhes under the short article which we devoted to it and the fakir two weeks ago, and expresses astonishment that we would uphold a man who dealt honorably with us, after having heard from the Herald that he was a fraud. While sorry that friend Spurr feels sore over our remarks, we cannot help but think that he is raising somewhat of a "tempest in a teapot," as the remarks we made were really not so severe or sarcastic as the Herald man appears to have taken them to be.

The press is a "fraternity," but not sufficiently so. That is irrelevant in this case, however. Mr. Phillips is a member of that fraternity, too, Mr. Spurr; he is entitled to gentlemanly consideration from his fellow members, and when he is "down" he is entitled to a helping hand to assist him to rise. That was the identical case in this instance. He was "down" in pocket and spirit when he struck Dundalk, and the citizens and paper gave him a kick by way of assistance. This is a kind of charity with which we have no sympathy. Mr. Phillips came to us and laid the exact facts of his treatment before us even as the Herald has given them, with the one exception of his having left his overcoat behind as security for board. Even this latter was no disgrace, friend Spurr—far from it! We helped him out, and had no great cause to regret it. You will please excuse us, Mr. Herald, if we cannot appreciate your kindness and astuteness in hopping onto a "fraud" before he has defrauded you. We never "lauded Mr. Phillips to the skies as a man of unpeachable character," nor yet unimpeachable character. We know enough of human nature to understand that a man will do things under certain pressure of circumstances that he would not otherwise do; yet in this instance we cannot see that he had done anything criminal or anything that would justly entitle him to the title of fakir, according to our interpretation of the term.

In conclusion we would thank the Herald for its batterdy smile. According to it we are progressing favorably, and although it may not be with the miraculous speed which has characterized the Herald editor's growth during the past short year, still it is a perceptible growth. But mark you, brother ego! We would prefer the chrysalis state of development, with the knowledge that we had wronged no man, to the batterdy stage, with an uneasy feeling of having done an injustice to a fellow being.

It now transpires that Hannah Boyd had nothing to do with the poisoning case, and she has been discharged from custody. Another case of detective smartness, although the officials claim to have elicited some information from her that may lead to the arrest of other parties—a flimsy tale to let themselves down easy.

The R. R. V. crossing at Winnipeg has not been made. The injunction still holds until adjudicated upon by the higher court.

S. G. Teachers' Convention.

A Large Attendance and a Pleasant Time.

On Thursday and Friday of last week the representatives of learning in South Grey assembled in Flesherton to commune among themselves and debate school matters. There were big and little teachers, lady and gentlemen teachers, good looking and homely teachers, young teachers and old. Our artist has selected two of the best looking for purpose of illustration, but offers as apology for the amateurish work the information that the cuts were dug out with a shoemaker's awl, which is not just the instrument for fine art engraving. If you recognize the pictures please don't give it away. The ladies were all dressed neatly, and most of the gentlemen.

The gentleman subject of our illustration may not have worn a hat of the latest fashion, but there was a big head under it, filled with the latest and most fashionable learning of the day. The outward appearance cannot, in all cases, be strictly maintained upon the pitiful salaries doled out to the majority of our teachers. Therefore, reader, do not be too hypercritical.

The first day's proceedings were devoted to reading minutes, appointment of committees. Mr. Reid read a paper on "How to interest parents in school work," which was discussed by Messrs. Gillespie, Glendenning and others. In the afternoon President Ramage read an address entitled "An Inquiry into the incentives used in schools." The principle incentives mentioned were praise, emulation, rewards, punishment, percentages and examinations. The secretary conducted a review lesson on the railways of Ontario. Messrs. Clark, Glendenning and others took part in the discussion. Mr. Sproule, having prepared a class in music, gave an exhibition showing proficiency made in the theory of music during the past few months. The class showed themselves familiar with the staff and ready in reading the hand signs used in the Holt and Tonic sol fa systems. A vote of thanks was presented to Mr. Sproule and class. Dr. McLellan introduced the subject of Educational Psychology. He defined Psychology to be "The science of the facts or phenomena of self." The Dr. was listened to with great interest. The nominating committee presented their report.

The evening meeting, held in the Town Hall, was well attended, the hall being uncomfortably full, and many were turned away. Flesherton band was in attendance and rendered selections in a manner that should cause Flesherton people to be prouder than ever of their musicians. The Glee Club was in good form and was loudly encored. A pleasing feature of the evening was the songs by a large class of school children. Much credit is reflected upon their instructor, Mr. Russell. M. Richardson, Esq., presided in his usual happy manner.

DR. MCLELLAN'S LECTURE

upon "English literature and its value in Education" was an interesting and eloquent appeal for the introduction of literature into our public schools. He claimed that our school system was the best on earth to-day, and he had examined many foreign systems; yet it was not without its defects; the most serious of which, in his opinion, appeared to be the comparative neglect of literature. Classical literature was not taught to the extent it was at one time. In his estimation this was nothing but right, as English literature is the grandest which the world ever produced, and the most applicable to our purpose; it was the noblest vehicle of human thought, and stronger far than hosts which go forth with battle flag unfurled. Youth was the time to develop a taste for the right kind of literature. He admitted that we could teach a good deal better than we are doing, and thought more time should be devoted to the teaching of mental arithmetic and less to geography. The young scholar's head was crammed too full of strange foreign names which were of no material benefit. When he was a boy he was crammed full of long names, which he had forgotten—and he was glad of it. He was in favor of music in schools, along with literature. He did not wish to become acquainted with the man who did not want music taught in the schools.

Our schools have not the appliances for teaching literature which they ought to have. It was a mistake to have excluded the library. Art is defined as a harmony—a unity—and literature was an art, characterized by a unity, and it harmonized. Art in its highest form is poetry. The perfect poem was the perfect expression of the perfect human mind. In this definition he was supported by Schiller. The characteristics were these: "In the image of God created he him." Man was given the power to know the truth, to love the beautiful, and almost to create. Poet from the Greek means creator. Worship meant a feeling of reverence or worship of the lord of the manor. These were characteristics of the perfect human mind. The lecturer gave a poetical example of the adaptation of the power of thought, proving that in that way the grandeur of expression and melody were fully brought out, quoting as a humorous example the young man who falls in love; his first act was to create an ideal and address it in a poetical form.

Our schools should teach literature, but they should teach the right kind and in the right direction. It would have a powerful influence. By it we could reach the heart of humanity. There was a time when physical force predominated. This was the intellectual age, and the lecturer believed there was a better age coming. The heart power should be developed. Man was not all brain—the heart should be cultivated as well as the intellect. We want such heart power developed that we would be willing to sacrifice ourselves for the good of others. This science did not teach. He (the lecturer) did not despise science, but the tendency was to neglect heart culture. Music was an important element in this. Martin Luther said that the devil hates music. The Dr. believed that when he heard a man denouncing music in schools the devil or one of his minions was not far away. He entered a strong plea for music in schools.

As to what books we should select for the study of literature, the Dr. said there were a hundred great writers placed in the temple of the immortals. Select from these. The tendency of to-day is to read trashy books. There were very few homes, whose libraries, if searched, would reveal the works of the masters. He would advise parents to educate from the earliest period, and inculcate a taste for that which is good. He did not find fault with good fiction, for fiction is akin to poetry. Among the trashy class he specified such writers as Mary Jane Holmes, Ouida, Rider Haggard, etc. Scott and Dickens were standard fiction writers. He likened the reader of bad fiction to the poor old man in Pilgrim's Progress a muck raker. He would make the mother master of the moral development of the child. That was the mother's profession, and the mother could redeem humanity. There was no grander mission than that of the mother's influence upon the child. He was sorry to say that it was not exerted to the extent which it should be, and the consequence was that there was too much left to be made in many cases in school. There was also a tendency to neglect a healthy development of the memory. Memory was a most important factor, and should be assisted with appeals to the child's imagination by the use of appropriate selections that would appeal to the heart, examples of which the lecturer gave; and patriotic and moral songs.

As to how he would teach literature, the Dr. said that the love of it was a germ in every human heart. There was one general rule, and that was that the teacher would have to love it himself. Whatever you love that you can teach well, and the pupils will learn to love what you love and hate what you hate. He warned the teachers against the danger of being too mechanical, and wound up a most instructive lecture with a translation of the beautiful thoughts contained in that little poem in our school book, "Where did you come from, baby dear?" The whole lecture was replete with sparkling gems of truth, presented in a manner that secured for the lecturer the sympathy and attentive hearing of his audience, from the smallest child to oldest listener.

Dr. Christoe and Rev. Mr. Watson moved a vote of thanks to the lecturer, which was responded to with much enthusiasm.

Friday morning's meeting opened with a reading by President Ramage, after which Rev. Mr. Watson led in prayer. Dr. McLellan concluded his subject of Psychology. Secretary Irwin then gave his report of the Provincial Teachers' Association. Mr. McArthur supplemented the remarks. Mr. Allan illustrated his methods of teaching reduction. In the afternoon, after adoption of delegates' report, Dr. McLellan spoke for over an hour upon phonic reading, illustrating the analytic and synthetic methods. The synthetic is the method practiced in the schools in Toronto. The committee on Reading Circles reported as follows: "Your committee appointed to consider the subject of reading circles would earnestly recommend the object for which they are instituted, and recommend that two districts be formed, with Durham and Flesherton as centres, to organize and decide what work or author they will first read and discuss, and also arrange for future meetings, election of officers, etc. The provisional president at Durham to be Mr. N. W. Campbell; at Flesherton, Mr. W. Irwin."

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year: President, W. Glendinning; first vice-president, Miss Elsie Inkster, second vice-president, C. J. Sproule; Secretary treasurer, W. Irwin; management, Messrs. McDonald and McArthur, and Misses Anderson, Drummond and Porter.

Mr. Hagarty, of Mount Forest, read a paper on Memory and Judgement in the teaching of English. The meeting then closed, to assemble at call.

The Pickering News man writes a very readable article on "How editors are made." We are not acquainted with Mr. Clark, but would like to be—would like to silently wring his hand and mingle our tears with his over mutual experiences, for we were brought up that way ourselves.

General News.

Mr. Isaac Cockburn's saw mill at Gravenhurst was burned Friday; loss about $20,000.

The Blood and Stoney Indians are indulging in hostilities in the vicinity of Morley, N. W. T.

The exploring expedition to the site of Babylon, sent out by the University of Pennsylvania, was wrecked near the Island of Patmos.

Parkdale voted in favor of annexation to Toronto Saturday by a majority of 126.

Hannah Boyd, the girl arrested in connection with the Galt poisoning case, has been remanded for a week. To a reporter, Detective Mat. Bowie declared his belief that Miss Boyd knew nothing of the matter, and that a man and two women, whose names he would not mention, were the guilty parties.

Since the above were in type the girl has been liberated.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. P. MARSHALL,

L. D. S., DENTIST,

Visits Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month.
Flesherton each trip on the day following.

TAKE NOTICE

THAT

G. H. BLACKBURN'S,

next door to M. Richardson & Co's, is the place to get your Flour, Feed and Provision.

All kinds of confectionery and biscuits, oysters and pickles in bulk. Oatmeal, cornmeal, cracked wheat, rolled oats, and everything usually kept in a first class provision store. Give us a call and you will be convinced.

Collingwood Collegiate Institute.

RE-OPENS JANUARY 7, 1889.

STAFF: W. Williams, B. A., English, French and German; J. F. Brethour, B.A., Classics; J. L. Cox, B. A., Mathematics; W. H. Stevens, B.A., Science; T. H. McGwil, B. A., Commercial. Record of 1887, Six matriculants, two first B's, nine first C's, (highest in the Province), twenty three seconds, twenty-one thirds, besides others at minor examinations. The school makes a specialty of teacher's work, and during the past eleven years has passed 80 firsts (9 A's, 6 B's, 73 C's), 29 seconds, 305 thirds; or a grand total of 839. It is also fully equipped for Junior Matriculation and Third professional examinations.

Session for announcement to

W. I. WILLIAMS, Principal

Collingwood, Oct. 25, 1888.

GEO. MITCHELL,

BANKER,

FLESHERTON.

DRAUGHTS BOUGHT AND SOLD.

Special Attention paid to the collection of Notes and Accounts, 2nd door North of Bank of [illegible].

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

[illegible] Street, block [illegible] of D. G. Ross.

Partnership.

E. F. HIXON, M.D.C.M. — J. G. HUTTON, M.D.C.M.

Physicians, Surgeons, &c., &c.,

PRICEVILLE.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, Monday in Hotel Dunlop each month. Teeth extracted without pain. Filled in the best styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, [illegible].

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. Grey.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for [illegible] Insurance Co. Appointed by C. L. C. of Ontario, Solicitor in Chancery, Notary Public, Issuer of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and correctly executed. Insurance effected in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

R. J. Sproule,

POSTMASTER, Flesherton, Commissioner in B. R., Licensed Auctioneer, Conveyancer, Appraiser and Money Lender. Real Estate and Insurance Agent. Deeds, Mortgages, Leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Auction Sales attended to in any part of the County. Money to loan at lowest rates of interest. Collections attended to with promptness and despatch. Charges low. Agent for the Dominion Steamship Company. Cheap tickets from Flesherton to Liverpool, Glasgow, London or any of the British Ports. Parties intending to visit England, Scotland or Ireland, will please ask rates before purchasing their tickets elsewhere.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton.

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Miscellaneous.

Came Astray.

Came to the premises of W. T. McKee, Lot 28 Con. 4, Artemesia, two steers, one black and the other red, 2 years old. The black one was found dead on the road near my premises. The red one is now at my place, and the owner may have same by proving property and paying expenses.

Try The Advance one year for $1 or six months for 50 cts.

HEARD'S Carriage Works,

FLESHERTON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Buggies, Spring Wagons, Lumber Wagons and Iron Harrows. Painting, Trimming and Repairing promptly attended to. Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Flesherton Carriage Works.

For Merrie England.

BY M. RICHARDSON.

Leaving the port of Montreal, we steamed down the St Lawrence, and as the morning mists cleared away, and the sun rose, we watched with constantly increasing interest the varied and ever-changing panorama on both shores of the river. For a long distance below Montreal its average width is about two miles, but widens out to ten miles in breadth at Lake St. Peter, which is some thirty miles long; then gradually contracting until we reach Quebec, distant 180 miles from Montreal. Along the whole distance the shores are dotted with hamlets, villages and towns, and we could not but remark the magnificence of the churches in every little place as compared with other buildings, the massive towers and tall spires, each surmounted with a cross, indicating power and predominence of the Catholic church in the province of Quebec.

The strong current of this mighty river enables outgoing vessels to make good time in the run to Quebec, where we arrived at 4 p.m. and dropped anchor. W... passed on our left the cove where Wolfe and his brave little army landed the night before the battle on the plains behind the city. Point Levi, on the opposite shore to Quebec, has grown wonderfully since I last saw it, and is now a large town with some very fine public buildings, and ferry boats are constantly plying between it and Quebec. The old city has a somewhat changed aspect since I was here. Dufferin Terrace has been built, a beautiful promenade along the river, and though on a lower level than the citadel yet overlooking the old town. Having obtained leave to go on shore I hailed a boat on the river, and although engaged at the time the owners promised to come back for us, and in a short time ... for our descent, which, with willing ... hands, and ropes, we easily accomplished. We had the boat to ourselves ... party ventured to leave the s... I gave my wife credit for ... share of ...

...

surprise and won for Britain the key to this country.

The Parliament buildings are comparatively new and of a very ornate style of architecture. We returned to our boat, as daylight was gone, and next morning proceeded on our way towards the ocean.

(To be Continued.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Living yet.

Miss Walker has been engaged by the Trustees to teach the school here for six months. The present teacher, Miss Ford, in going to attend the Normal school for a term, after which she will again resume her duties as teacher here.

The annual shooting match was held here on the 15th, with W. McCallum and W. Kells as Captains. Kell's side came out best by 30. The largest score was made by A. H...lly, on Mac's side, being 930. A bountiful supper was provided for the occasion by Mrs. C. Pritchard, the loosing side f...ting the bill.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

Miss Aggie G...ley who has been spending some weeks visiting friends here, has returned to Toronto.

Mr Walker Sloan cut his leg severely the other day with the adze, but he is able to be around again.

Mr. Clemes, the school teacher, spent Thursday and Friday at the Teachers' Convention, consequently no school, and the small boys took the opportunity of ranging the woods in search of squirrels, chipmunks, and other game.

Mr C. B. Sloan has just completed some important repairs on his flume preparatory to the seasons work.

Owing to the extremely unfavorable weather some farmers to the north of us have not finished harvest, and in general, work is rather backward.

Mr. John B... left last week for Serpent River, where he intends prosecuting his trade of shoemaking. We wish ...

...

Feversham.

...

The Milton Reformer last week contained a scathing editorial anent the disgraceful scenes witnessed on the streets of that town on fair day. It says there was more liquor sold on that day than ad sold "during the fairs in the six years of Scott Act." "Whiskey," says the Reformer, "reigned supreme, and the air was filled with shouts and curses of drunken men, fighting, staggering, rolling in the mud so that they looked like hogs in the mire." Truly a terrible picture and one, we trust, which will never be reproduced. —[Streetsville Review.

—NEW—

FALL GOODS!

—AT THE—

Central Store,

Priceville.

... a position to offer the best value in ... Our stock is ... complete ...

BOOTS AND SHOES.

... in fact

BOOTS THAT R BOOTS!

Teas, Sugars and General Groceries

... continue unapproached ... Low Prices ...

Central Store, Priceville.

A. McCABE.

FLOUR, FLOUR, STONE FLOUR!

MR. P. LOUCKS

is prepared to ... and grinds on the ... bushel. Seven cents per bag ... Chopping done every day ... in the estimation of the public. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

P. LOUCKS, Proprietor.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

GALOPS DIVISION.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for St. Lawrence Canals" will be received at this office until the arrival of the eastern and western mails on TUESDAY, THE ... DAY OF ... for the construction of two ... and enlargement of the upper entrance of the Galops Canal.

A map of the locality, together with plans and specifications, will be ... on and after TUESDAY ...

In the case of firms ... the actual signatures of the full name, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same ... accompany the tender for the works.

The respective deposit cheques will not be accepted ... Minister of Railways and Canals, and will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates ... on the terms stated ... The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

A. P. B...

Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, ... 1888.

DRESS AND MANTLE MAKING.

I wish to inform the ladies of Flesherton and vicinity that I am now prepared to do all kinds of Dress and Mantle Making.

Good fit guaranteed.

Your attention is especially called to my system of cutting- Cornwells Improved Self-fitting Chart—for which I am agent. Those desirous of learning to cut by this system can do so at moderate cost by applying to me.

Shop next door to J. E. Moore's Furniture Store.

Jennie McBride.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Notice to Contractors.

T... above mentioned advertised ... let on the ... of October next, are ...

Wednesday, the 7th day of November next.

Plans and specifications will be ready for examination at this office and at Sault Ste. Marie on and after Wednesday, the 24th day of October next.

...

MEAT, MEAT!

FRESH MEAT.

Nice Tender Meat

And Meat of all Kinds

...

Blakely & McConnell's.

SALESMEN WANTED

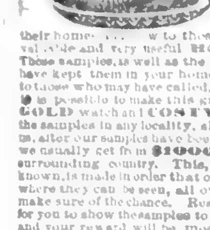
...

FARM for SALE

...

APPLES FOR SALE.

...



...solid GOLD WATCH ... sold for $100 ... Best ... watch in the world ... Gold Hunting Cases ... elegant and magnificent ... works and cases of equal value ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one FREE. How is this possible? We answer—we want one person in each locality, to keep in their homes, and show to those who call, a complete line of our valuable and very useful HOUSEHOLD SAMPLES. These samples, as well as the watch, we send free, and after you have kept them in your home for 2 months and shown them to those who may have called, they become your own property; it is possible to make this great offer, sending the SOLID GOLD watch and COSTLY samples free, as the showing of the samples in any locality, always results in a large trade for us; after our samples have been in a locality for a month or two we usually get from $1000 to $5000 in trade from the surrounding country. This, the most wonderful offer ever known, is made in order that our samples may be placed at once where they can be seen, all over America. Write at once, and make sure of the chance. Reader it will be hardly any trouble for you to show the samples to those who may call at your home and your reward will be most satisfactory. A postal card on which to write us costs but 1 cent and after you know all, if you do not care to go further, why no harm is done. But if you do send your address at once, you can secure FREE one of the best solid gold watches in the world and our large line of COSTLY SAMPLES. We pay all express, freight, etc. Address GEO. STINSON & CO., Box 812, PORTLAND, MAINE.

NOTICE.

Having disposed of my business to Mr Geo Blackburn, I desire to publicly express my thanks to the people of Flesherton and vicinity for their heartily support and patronage in the past, and I would bespeak from them a continuation of the same to my successor.

STEPHEN SPIRIT.

Flesherton, Oct. 16, 1888.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased the flour, feed and grocery business of Mr Stephen Spirit, I would say that it will be my aim to cater to the public in a manner that will retain for the business the reputation which it has hitherto had for fair and satisfactory dealings with customers.

The public's servants.

GEO. BLACKBURN.

Flesherton, Oct- 16, 1888.

J. E. MOORE,

Maker and dealer in

ALL KINDS OF

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

Durham Street,

Flesherton,

Special attention is called to our

FALL STOCK!

Which is now complete. For variety, quality and prices we are able to eclipse all former efforts. We are selling

BEDSTEADS

At from $2 each.

A really handsome Bedstead at $5.

WASHSTANDS

At from $1.50, and

B-U-R-E-A-U-S-!

At $6.

Making ... for a bedroom ... a chair ...

CHILDREN'S ...
CRADLES,
COTS,
CRIBS,

In a number of styles and at equally low prices. In

BEDDING

We are making a specialty just now, by offering a good Spring Mattress at $1.50. Woven wire Mattresses at $2.50. Good quality of sea grass Mattress at $3.

Tables. Tables. Tables.

Kitchen and Dining Tables, Parlor and Sewing Tables, Music and Fancy Tables, in fact tables to suit every taste and for every conceivable purpose.

One New Karn Organ for Sale,

Very cheap. A... the ...

New Raymond

Sewing Mac... a number of which are ... be seen at our show... Remember the place.

J. E. Moore,

Flesherton Furniture Warerooms, Durham Street, Flesherton.

Our Undertaking Department is A 1. Good hearse and good horses in connection. Charges moderate.

Nov 1, 1888

The Three Little Chairs.

They sat alone by the bright wood fire,
The gray-haired dame and the aged sire,
Dreaming of days gone by.
The tear-drop fell on each wrinkled cheek;
They both had thoughts they could not speak,
And each heart uttered a sigh.

For their sad and fearful eyes descried
Three little chairs placed side by side
Against the sitting room wall—
Old-fashioned enough as there they stood,
Their seats of flag and their frames of wood,
With their backs so high and tall.

Then the father shook his silvery head,
And with trembling voice he gently said:
"Mother, these empty chairs—
They bring us such sad thoughts to-night,
We'll put them forever out of sight
In the small dark room upstairs."

But she answered: "Father, not yet, not yet;
For I look at them and I forget
That the children are away.
The boys come back, and our Mary too,
With her apron on of checkered blue,
And sit here every day.

Johnny comes back from the billows deep;
Willie wakes from his battle-field sleep,
To say good-night to me.
Mary's a wife and mother no more,
But a tired child whose play is o'er,
And it comes to rest at my knee

So let them stand there, though empty now;
And every time when alone we bow
At the Father's throne to pray,
We'll ask to meet the children above,
In our Saviour's home of rest and love,
Where no child goeth away."

BELINDA: A BEAUTY

"Belinda, when we were both young—the day will come, I hope, child, when you will sympathize more with the trials and temptations of others—when we were both young, Roger Temple and I first met. And he cared for me."

Dead silence; the widow confused and stroking down the folds of her silk dress with her white fingers; Belinda's slip of a figure standing upright beside the window, her arms folded, her lips and eyes about as "sympathetic" as though they had been carved in granite.

"He cared for me—too much for his own peace—but duty stood between us, and we parted!" Of this the reader shall know more than by Rose's hazy utterances. "We parted. Fate was hard upon us both. And now—Belinda, must I say more?"

"Say everything, please, if you want me to understand you."

